The American public is reading a life of Christ voraciously and extensively and it is reading it to such an extent that it is listed regularly among the best sellers. The atheistic and turbulent Papini, long an acknowledged literary leader of Italy, has emerged from the wake of the war with a consuming and burning passion to glorify the life of the simple Nazarene. As one first picks up the book he is fascinated with the trenchant style of the author. Many passages of the book are expressed in such a forceful way that they remain impressed upon the memory. For instance, in the introduction when speaking of "the last anti-Christ" which is obviously Nietzsche, although unmentioned by name, he uses the following words: "Nor could he ever say in what way Christ, the true Christ of the gospels, opposed himself to life, he who wanted to make life higher and happy. And the poor syphilitic anti-Christ, when insanity was close upon him, signed his last letter, 'the Crucified One'."

This life of Christ continually belches forth such barn-yard language until it reaches its height in the description of the Scribes on page 369 where he said: "And elbow to elbow with them, the arrogant Scribes, blear-eyed and scrofulous, and their faces of an excremental yellow, piecers-together of lies, belching out pus and ink."

This sort of writing, because of its unusualness and because of its "kick," first fascinates and then wearies and finally nauseates as it turbulently and turgidly rushes on for 408 pages. Giovanni's big book is being read and will be read for the same reason that the latest scandal on the front page of the metropolitan daily is eagerly mopped up by the semi-respectable smut-hounds who revel in the sinister references to the "questionable."

There is no gainsaying the fact that the book is forceful and expressive. At the very start we read, for instance:

"It was not by chance that Christ was born in a stable. What is the world but an immense stable where men produce filth and wallow in it? Do they not daily change the most beautiful, the purest, the most divine things into excrements? Then, stretching themselves at full length on the piles of manure, they say they are 'enjoying life.' Upon this earthly pig-sty, where no decorations or perfumes can hide the odor of filth, Jesus appeared one night, born of a stainless virgin armed only with innocence."

As for the point of view of the writer, he is not concerned with a critical life of the Master; he simply accepts without any reservation or any consideration the face value of the four Gospels and tries to let us see the Son of Man as the friend of the poor, champion of the masses against the classes of ancient Judea. The Master of men goes to his cross because of the subtile appreciation of the religious leaders that his religion of purity, of love, and justice would cut the foundation from under the privileged classes and cause the materialistic civilization of the time to crumble like a house of cards. The sincerity and loneliness of the Master stands out by reason of its striking contrast with the dirty environment which Papini paints.

These Billy Sundayesque pen pictures of the life of the Master, reeking with our realism of the twentieth century social filth, are translations from the Italian, but you would hardly recognize it as translation, so skilfully is it done by Dorothy Canfield Fisher. It is one of the finest works of translation that has ever been produced and not a little of the success of the book is due to this fact.

(A discussion of this book from an opposite viewpoint appeared in a recent issue of THE BAPTIST. It is only fair to the reviewer and to our readers that this one should also appear.—The Editor.)

CHURCH FURNITURE
PEWS · PULPITS
CHANCEL FURNITURE
SUNDAY SCHOOL SEATING
American Seating Company
1069 Lytton Bldg.
CHICAGO
Branches in Principal Cities

If Some One Should Ask You About a Will
And when you make your own
Our Corporate Name is:
The American Baptist Home Mission Society
CHARLES L. WHITE, Executive Secretary
SAMUEL BRYANT, Treasurer
23 East Twenty-Sixth Street
New York, N. Y.

WE TYPEWRITE Sermons, lectures, stories manuscripts, letters, books, etc. Price 1 cent per line. Minimum charge $1. PRINT 500 Bond Letterheads 8½x11 and 500 envelopes $5. FORM LETTERS that look like typewritten, 30 lines, $4.50 per 1,000. Special prices on larger orders. Neat, accurate work. Prompt service. Satisfaction assured. Be sure to write in plain letters. Proceeds go to Christian work. Postage extra.
AMERICAN ADDRESSING CO.
Golden Rule Service
3147 S. Millard Avenue Chicago, Ill.

When Making Wills and Legacies
Remember
Our Corporate Name Is:
"WOMAN'S AMERICAN BAPTIST HOME MISSION SOCIETY"
Mrs. Mary E. Bloomer
Treasurer
276 Fifth Avenue, New York City

OUR MUSIC CORNER

CONDUCTED BY WILLIAM LESTER

More Slams at Singers

A couple of months ago I devoted this weekly page to a personal wail on the subject of potential church singers. This article was entitled "An Irritated Organist Speaks," and dealt with the weakness of our vocal educational system in producing such a pathetic flock of would-be operatic song birds, and in developing so few well-equipped, efficient, effective church singers. Soon after the appearance of the article in these columns, it was reprinted quite extensively, notably in the June issue of The Diapason which put the conclusions of this organist squarely before the jury of his colleagues, countrywide. During the past few weeks letters have come and comments have drifted back; none, so far, disputing either the pathetic condition of the church music forces, the neglect of its potentialities on the part of the teachers, and the short, near-sightedness and ignorance of the new generation of singers, or the danger to the continued growth of musical appreciation and the musical standard of the church music in this country in this false attitude and neglect.

I feel absolutely safe from contradiction when I again affirm that the vocal study here today is faced in the wrong direction. Opera, that false flicker of sentimental romance, is the goal for which almost the entire vocal fraternity is aiming. Those of us who are in any way conversant with the graft, deceit and pretense with which the operatic career is enwoven, with the small opportunity for real success it offers any native singer, and with the utter madness of producing such a surplusage of anxious aspirants for a field where not one in a thousand can ever hope for an opportunity or an opening, those of us who deal with the young singer owe it to him that we keep hammering home the facts in the case.

Opera never has been, is not now, and, (in my humble opinion) never will be the normal musical fare of the American nation. Rich men abetted by clever managers have poured out fortunes during the past half century; publicity of phenomenal power has been turned loose; the metropolitan papers and the musical magazines have furnished printed propaganda without end: and still grand opera, to the man in the street, is largely foreign language babbled to music by an orchestra, accompanied by marionette acting and punctuated by many loud noises, high in pitch! And yet we have virtually every prominent vocal teacher of my knowledge actively (what to me is the fatal mistake of the whole business!) specializing to the best of his ability in producing potential opera singers. Mark that: not efficient singers for the church service, not soloists for oratoria or concert singers of fine art and sincerity. No,—for that sort of thing takes much time, infinite patience, definite knowledge and constant application. Too much of our energy has been expended in futile aspirations. And there will not be much change for the better until we get away from this foolish coronation of the opera artist to the unnecessary belittlement of the concert and church singer. We need to hammer home the fact that opera-singing is not great because it is, per se, opera; neither is a church solo or duet or anthem, or a concert group of songs on a lower plane because it lacks the odor of garlic and the blare of trombones. The vehicle is of less import than the mastery of the material. We can well afford a few less opera stars if we can gain a few more efficient soloists for the church service and the concert platform.

A couple of notes which have come to me agree in the main with the statements above; but they throw out a challenge by saying: "True! but what can we do about it? It is easy to point out weaknesses and past mistakes! Can you suggest any constructive way to turn the tide in the other direction? How can we expect to get trained church singers if the teachers know next to nothing of the demands in this field! A singer who can erupt in hysterical spasms in 'One fine day,' or 'Vissi d' Arte' is not as a natural consequence thereby fitted to present 'He shall feed his flock' or sing 'The Lord is my shepherd.'"

This page is open for suggestions or constructive comments to meet this challenge. Next week I intend to describe how we have attempted to meet the situation in our own teaching. If anyone can suggest better ways, the field is clear.

---

The following figures are the summary of a questionnaire sent to churches regarding gain in membership, April 1, 1923: Of the 88 county churches, 11 reported a total gain of 197 for the past twelve months, making an average of 17.9; 77 unreported, gaining at same rate would be 1,378, making a total of 1,575 for 88; 7 reported a gain of 67 during Lent, making an average of 9; 81 unreported, gaining at same rate would be 729, making a total of 796 for 88; 9 reported 76 received by confession of faith, an average of 8; 10 reported 57 received by letter, an average of 5; 2 reported 8 received otherwise, an average of 4; 11 reported a total membership of 2,426, an average of 220 plus. Of the 105 city churches, 48 reported a total gain of 2,937 for the past 12 months, making an average of 61; 57 unreported, gaining at same rate would be 3,477, a total of 6,414 for 105 churches; 37 reported a gain of 1,433 during Lent, making an average of 37.7; 67 unreported, gaining at same rate would be 2,526, making a total of 3,959; 21 reported 627 received by confession of faith, making an average of 29; 20 reported 491 received by letter, making an average of 24; 5 reported 48 received otherwise, making an average of 9; 46 reported a total membership of 25,704, making an average of 558. If county and city churches gained according to the average of those reporting, the total gain for year preceding Easter was 7,989 members. The chances are that the figure should be considerably less, as it is not likely that the unreported churches made the same average gains as the churches reporting.

CROZER THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY

Seminary is located within thirteen miles of Philadelphia, to whose churches, libraries and art collections students have ready access. Near-by rural districts furnish opportunity for Christian work under the supervision of the department of Practical Theology.

Tuition and Room-rent free. Scholarships available to qualified students.

Seminary's relation to University of Pa. warrants offer of the following:

1. Regular Course for Preachers and Pastors, Seminary. Degree of B.D. or Diploma.

2. Course with emphasis on Religious Education. Seminary and University. Degrees B.D. and A.M.

3. Training for Advanced Scholarship. Seminary and University. Degrees Th.M or Ph.D.

For Catalog—

MILTON G. EVANS, LL.D., Pres., Chester, Pa.

EXTENSION COURSE

Seminary maintains a Correspondence department for men unable to take a course in residence. Cost, including books, $10 a year. Certificate on completion. Address—

ELI S. REINHOLD, A.M., Dir., Chester, Pa.

Lindenwood College

Fifty minutes from St. Louis

A college with 96 years of history for the cultural and spiritual development of young women. Two and four year courses leading to degrees. Liberal Arts, Vocational and Fine Arts departments, Courses in Home Economics, Business, Oratory.

School of Music of Unexcelled Merit

Christian training and emphasis on spiritual values. 114-acre campus. Outdoor sports including golf, hockey, tennis, gymnasium and swimming pool. For catalog, address

J. L. ROEMER, D.D., President

Box C-23 St. Charles, Mo.

Roemer Hall

PILLSBURY

Academy for Boys

Seventy miles from Minneapolis; large campus and seven modern buildings; military training, all athletics; high standards of scholarship and conduct; small classes insuring individual attention; terms reasonable; illustrated catalogue on request.

Milo B. Price, Principal

Box 397F Owatonna, Minnesota

THE BAPTIST INSTITUTE FOR CHRISTIAN WORKERS

Exceptional opportunity in Bible study, Religious Education and in Practical Methods. For catalogue write

J. MILNOR WILBUR, D.D.

1425 Snyder Ave. Philadelphia, Pa.

PIPE ORGANS

of any size or construction. Estimates cheerfully submitted. Also Reed Organs for Church or Home.

Electric Organ blowing outfits for organs of any make.

Write, stating which catalog is desired.

Hinners Organ Co., Pekin, Ill.

CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL

Ask for Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 10

ESTABLISHED 1858

THE C. S. BELL CO. HILLSBORO, OHIO

McSHANE BELL FOUNDRY CO

Baltimore, Md.

CHURCH, CHIME AND PEAL

BELLS Memorials a Specialty

Church News

(Continued from page 829)

offered his resignation. During his ministry 100 new members were received, a pipe organ installed, and the attendance increased. He will close his work next month and after a vacation period in the East will be available for new work.

The work at Colorado Avenue has been progressing under the leadership of the new pastor, Rev. J. T. Fosnight. He was married July 27 to Miss Gay at the Summit Street Church by Rev. C. E. Hall. Miss Gay for the past two years has been a worker at the Christian service house.

ILLINOIS

Rev. W. C. Rutherford has resigned at Waukegan to accept a call from Rockford.

The ordination of Mr. J. A. Wilson took place July 13 at the Milton Heights Church, Upper Alton. Drs. H. E. Truex and N. J. Hilton were moderators, and Rev. F. W. Johnston was clerk. Rev. S. D. McKenny preached the ordination sermon. Mr. Wilson is a junior at Shurtleff College and is the pastor of the Milton Heights Church.

The First Church, Joliet, is wide-awake and progressive. It has three missions, one in Forest Park, a suburb north of the city, one in Rockdale, an industrial suburb, and one among the Mexicans of the city, where a Spanish speaking pastor is on the field. Two vacation schools were conducted for two weeks. Besides the Sunday school held at the church, four others are maintained, three mission and another in the city. The church intends in the near future to erect a new edifice consisting of three units; the church proper, Sunday-school unit and a community center. The church recently called Rev. Raymond S. Carman of the State Street Church, Rockford. The evening subjects for the month were, "Evenings with Jesus."

IOWA

The First Church, Churdan, which was left pastorless owing to the resignation of Rev. A. C. Hageman, is desirous of obtaining a pastor as soon as possible.

Rev. Thomas Gibson, pastor of the church at Little Cedar, has accepted a call to the church at Harlan.

MISSOURI

Rev. F. P. Davidson has tendered his resignation, to become effective Sept. 1, as pastor of the church at Savannah after a ministry of nine years. He will probably be available for another pastorate.

INDIANA

The summer assembly will be held at Franklin, Aug. 11-19. Mornings will be given to study and afternoons to recreation. In the evening there will be lectures and music. The courses given will be of benefit to teachers, officers and young people, and all are urged to attend.

The First Church, Terre Haute, has secured the services of Mrs. S. C. Fulmer as church secretary and institutional director. She was formerly secretary of the First Church, Indianapolis, for four years, and was district representative of the Women's Home Mission Society for six years.

MICHIGAN

Rev. Charles R. Jones has been supplying the First Church, Sault Ste. Marie, during the vacation of its pastor, Rev. Thomas B. Marsh. The church recently purchased a new site costing $5,000. In an editorial, the Evening News praised the cooperation it had received from Pastor Marsh in securing news. The editorial was a reply to a resolution passed by the church expressing its appreciation of the service rendered by the paper in giving the church publicity.

Rocky Mountain States

WYOMING

Rev. B. F. Farrar recently resigned as pastor of the church at Wheatland to accept the work of the Basin-Burlington field. He is also supplying the church at Greybull Sunday evenings and is doing out-station work at Shell.

Rev. F. J. Fitch, who graduated this year from Colgate, has accepted the call of the church at Lander.

Emmanuel Church, Casper, is making plans to enlarge its building owing to the growing Sunday school and congregations.

MONTANA

Miss H. Mary Sundell, of the Women's Home Mission Society, was reappointed for the current year. The past year she spent with the mission churches at Valier, Glasgow and Stevensville.

The following are the dates of the annual associational meetings: Sept. 7-9, Musselshell Association, Anad; Sept. 11-12, Yellowstone Association, Billings; Sept. 13-14, Gallatin Association, Bozeman; Sept. 18-19, Silver Bow Association, First Church, Butte; Sept. 20-21, Bitter Root Association, Hamilton; Sept. 24-26, Flathead Association, Kalispell; Sept. 27-28, Teton Association, First Church, Great Falls.

Pacific Coast

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

After preaching to a large congregation at a union service July 8, Rev. George Lord, pastor of the First Church, Monrovia, passed away. He had been in ill health for some time. His former pastorates were in Ashtabula, Geneva and Lima, Ohio. He was beloved by both the church which he had served for eleven years and the community.

Iced Tea and Foreign Missions

In the cool comfort of your home is the tinkling and fragrant refreshment of iced tea. Half way around the world, in the countries from which your tea has come, there is thirst and longing and weariness. Look deep into your cooling glass and see what your tea leaves suggest to you.

CLARI-TEA of Vision, that Sees the Need.

500,000,000 women in the non-Christian world know not the refreshing presence of the Burden Bearer, the Great Physician, the Giver of the Water of Life.

But I Know It

HUMILI-TEA of Heart, that Wants to Serve.

35 young women, according to the Survey, should go this year to carry the message of hope to these thirsty millions. 8 young women only are under appointment and sailing this fall.

Who Hindered Others?

CHARI-TEA of Thought, that Loves Her Neighbor as Herself.

6 great areas comprise our Baptist neighborhood. The weary women in Japan, China, Africa, Philippine Islands, India and Europe, these are our neighbors.

How Neighborly Am I?

RAPIDI-TEA of Action, that Speeds the Gift.

$502,326.95 is the operating budget for the year 1923-24, maintaining the 25% cut of last year.
$474,202.95 is the accumulated deficit of the Society. These call for the loyal support of every Baptist and the payment of every New World Movement pledge in full this year.

Have I Paid Mine?

CHRISTIANI-TEA of Life that Makes us "Workers Together with Him."

75,000 Baptist women of the Northern Baptist Convention, living that life and earnestly at work with Him can give the abundant life to hopeless thousands in other lands.

What Service Will I Render?

A BLENDED TEA FOR A THIRSTY WORLD

$12,161,521.67 Is Needed This Year to Care for the Work of All Organizations Participating in the New World Movement.

Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society
276 FIFTH AVENUE NEW YORK CITY

THE GENERAL BOARD OF PROMOTION OF THE NORTHERN BAPTIST CONVENTION

BAP

Volume IV August 4, 1923 No. 27

The Baptist

University of Illinois Library
U-Champaign

Published Every Week by the Northern Baptist Convention

Courtesy Elgin Daily News

Class in Radio—Elgin, Ill., Baptist Vacation School

Fresh from the Field

Dr. Albert H. Gage, director of religious education in Chicago, delivered three addresses at the Iowa Baptist Sunday School Assembly, Iowa Falls, Ia., July 22.

Rev. Rex. C. A. Rexroad, pastor of a church in Spokane, has invited the men of his congregation during the hot weather to remove their coats during the service. He said that he would appear in the pulpit without a coat.

Rev. Orsen E. Mallory, at one time pastor of the Dewey Street Church, Worcester, Mass., died on his eighty-eighth birthday. He had been active in church work for more than half a century and had held pastorates in Westfield and Lowell.

The Fifth Church, Washington, D. C., Rev. John E. Briggs, pastor, has received 2000 members in the fourteen years of the pastorate. It supports two mission Sunday schools, with an enrolment of 2000, and five missionaries at home and abroad.

The city of Marseilles, France, is erecting a memorial stairway leading from a railway station, the cornerstone of which was recently laid. The monument was planned before the war, the events of which have added an incentive to its erection. The landings of the stairway will have commemorative columns and will be flanked by terraces and fountains.

A Scotch commission of seven members, appointed by an unofficial committee of churches in Scotland, is planning a six weeks' tour of this country for the purpose of investigating prohibition. It is expected that their report will have an effect in the Scottish local option elections in November and December.

A distinctly student conference under the auspices of the Young People's Religious Union was held the week beginning July 21 at the Isles of Shoals, New Hampshire. More than 250 men and women from fifty universities and colleges gathered to hear lectures and discussions on the student and religion.

The Baptist, Park Avenue Congregational and First Methodist churches of Arlington Heights, Mass., will unite in union services July 29-Sept. 2. On July 29 and Aug. 5 services will be held in the Baptist church, on Aug. 12 and 19 in the Methodist church, and Aug. 26 and Sept. 2 in the Congregational church. Rev. Reuben J. Davis is pastor of the Baptist church.

According to instructions from the pope, the famous coronation church of Saint Mathias will be closed until it has been reconsecrated because of its desecration through its use as the setting for a motion picture depicting the coronation of one of the Hapsburg kings. Permission was secured from the ecclesiastical authorities to use the church, and for one of the actors to wear the coronation robes of the archbishop. It was found that a wafer blessed by the pope had been sewed in the hem of the robe and the authorities would allow only a bishop to wear the garment. Bishop Vlascious acted the role which was so contrary to precedent, that the population stormed the building at night while the play was being filmed.

The First Church, Chickasha, Okla., is planning a large building program. The Home Mission Board of Atlanta, Ga., has loaned it $30,000, the largest amount ever granted any one church in Oklahoma from the board.

Dr. E. Y. Mullins of Louisville, Ky., has been elected president of the Baptist World Alliance by the third congress of the alliance, held at Stockholm, Sweden. Doctor Mullins is president of the Southern Baptist Theological seminary at Louisville, Ky., and of the Southern Baptist Convention.

Capt. G. E. T. Stevenson, chaplain corps, United States Navy, died July 16. He was one of the senior chaplains of the navy and previous to his appointment in 1907 had served in the Spanish-American War. Of his sixteen years in the navy, one-half was spent on sea or on foreign duty. He was a Baptist and was chaplain of the navy yard at Portsmouth, New Hampshire.

Funeral services of Dr. L. A. Crandall, conducted in each instance by Rev. C. W. Gilkey, were held in Hyde Park Church, Chicago, and Trinity Church, Minneapolis, on Sunday and Monday of last week. Mr. Gilkey accompanied Mrs. Crandall and three of the four children to Minneapolis where the members of the church Doctor Crandall served so many years exemplified their affection for him by many thoughtful deeds. The interment was in Lakewood Cemetery.

A twelve-day world boys' conference was held in June in Portschach, Austria. There were 1,000 delegates present from all parts of the world. Reports showed that Y. M. C. A. work for boys was being done in every corner of the globe. The official language of the conference, selected by a committee on which there was no Anglo-Saxon, was English. Enough money was pledged to pay six men for three years to extend the work. At the close of the conference the American delegates left by special train for Budapest and other cities in Hungary at the invitation of the Hungarian government.

The Federal Council of Churches has issued its year book edited by E. O. Watson. It contains a directory of religious bodies giving a full statement of history and doctrine; a statement concerning the organization, scope and work of the Council; a directory of interchurch bodies, governmental agencies and other organizations engaged in social service; a list of the names, rank, denominational affiliation, duties and achievements of chaplains in the army and navy. Forty-one pages are devoted to statistics and general information. The book is fully indexed, bound in cloth and sells for $1.50. Copies can be secured by addressing the Federal Council of Churches, 937 Woodward Building, Washington, D. C.

The National Council of Congregational Churches will meet Oct. 16-23 at Springfield, Mass. It is expected that 2,000 delegates will be present. In addition to the addresses which will be given, there will be important reports of various committees which have been making a close study of problems which confront the church. Among these are the commission on social service, the commission on evangelism and the commission on cooperation and federation. The denomination now has 6,000 churches and 5,600 ministers. There are 858,000 members or an average of 143 per church. During the past year 73,000 persons joined Congregational churches.

The Anglo-Catholic Congress opened in London, July 10. There were 16,000 delegates. The Bishop of London presided, assisted by the Bishop of Zanzibar, and the Bishop of the Russian Church in London.

Elbert H. Gary, chairman of the board of the United States Steel Corporation, has announced that the presidents of the subsidiary companies are to meet at once to discuss elimination of the twelve-hour day for which the corporation long has been criticized. Mr. Gary said he had called the meeting "to consider how and on what basis and when to begin to eliminate the twelve-hour day, it being our desire and intention to proceed as vigorously as possible."

The home of Samuel L. Clemens (Mark Twain) at Redding, Conn., was recently burned. The place was originally valued at $175,000 with the house representing a large part of this figure. It was unoccupied for many years after Mr. Clemens' death and was bought last December by Mrs. Margaret E. Givens of New York.

A home missions field day will be held in Rochester, N. Y., Dec. 7-10. The general plan will resemble the Foreign Missions World Conference which was held in Rochester last February, and was arranged by the Home Missions Council, representing forty-one denominational boards, in conference with the mission committee. It is expected that the pulpits of the city will be filled by out-of-town speakers Sunday, Dec. 9.

Milwaukee Baptists are already making plans for the entertainment of the Northern Baptist Convention next year. An executive committee of seven was recently appointed by Pres. Geo. L. Tifft of the Milwaukee Union. Mr. E. J. Steinberg, president of the Wisconsin state convention and a member of the executive committee of the Northern Convention, was elected chairman of the committee. Rev. Robert W. Shaw was elected permanent secretary. Other subcommittees are being created.

The following is a quotation from the Christian World, a London paper: "The board of managers of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society is to be commended for the firm stand it has taken against a demand recently made by the Fundamentalist League of New York. The fundamentalists have followed up their widespread charges of hetrodoxy against Baptist missionaries in the foreign field by asking for access to the files of the society in order to confirm or refute their accusation."

The Detroit Council of Churches is proud of its annual report. Figures showed that this is the second year in which the goal of 25,0000 new members has been exceeded. Charles E. Clark, treasurer, reported that the total amount received for the year was $37,766. Next year's officers are: Pres., Dean Warren L. Rogers; vice-pres., Fred W. Chamberlain, Wellington M. Logan, Howard C. Baldwin, W. H. Watson, Bishop Theodore S. Henderson; secy., A. H. Finn; treas., Charles E. Clark; counselor, T. T. Lette. It would pay every church to send for a copy of the annual report which has been printed in pamphlet form and contains reports of the committees on social service, religious education and church athletics.

The Baptist

Vol. IV Chicago, Ill., August 4, 1923 No. 27

THE BAPTIST, founded in 1919, is published every Saturday by the Northern Baptist Convention at 417 South Dearborn Street, Chicago, Illinois. Entered as second-class matter, February 4, 1920, at the post office at Chicago, Illinois, under the Act of March 3, 1879. Acceptance for mailing at special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized February 4, 1920.

Managing Editor: Edgar L. Killam

Committee on THE BAPTIST

EMORY W. HUNT, Chairman

CLARENCE A. BARBOUR HUGH A. HEATH

RATES: Single subscriptions, $2.50 a year; church clubs equal to 10 per cent of church membership, $2.00; single copies, 10 cents. In foreign countries the postage is $1.04 extra; in Canada, 52 cents extra. CHANGE OF ADDRESS: Both old and new addresses should be in our hands at least two weeks before the change is to go into effect. Always give key number as it appears on your label.

REMITTANCES: Should be made payable to THE BAPTIST. Acknowledgment made through change of label date. If check on local bank is sent, please add exchange.

SPECIAL: Renewal notice will be sent each subscriber previous to the date to which subscription is paid. Subscriber should give attention to notice by sending in renewal promptly, or, if paper is not desired for the coming year, should send in a discontinuance order.

ADVERTISING: Display: Rate per agate line, 30 cents; full page (420 agate lines), $125. No time or space discounts. Classified: 6 cents per word. Obituary notices: One hundred words free; 4 cents per word for additional. Cash to accompany order.

CORRESPONDENCE relating to subscriptions should be addressed to THE BAPTIST, Subscription Department, 417 South Dearborn Street, Chicago, Ill.

BRANCH OFFICES: The office of the state director of promotion in each state is an office of THE BAPTIST.

Table of Contents

| | Page |
|---|---|
| FRESH FROM THE FIELD | 834 |
| THE "AMERICA"—ANOTHER SHIP OF FELLOWSHIP, BY THE EDITOR | 836 |
| EDITORIAL | 837 |
| "WHY I KEEP ON PRAYING," BY HARRIS G. HALE | 840 |
| THE STORY OF THE VACATION SCHOOL, BY ALBERT H. GAGE | 842 |
| CORRELATED HANDWORK—HOW WE DID IT, BY W. G. TOWART | 843 |
| CHURCH VACATION SCHOOL ATTRACTIONS, BY MILLARD L. THOMAS | 844 |
| VACATION SCHOOLS, HERE, THERE AND EVERYWHERE | 845 |
| THE DAILY VACATION BIBLE SCHOOL MOVEMENT IN CHICAGO, BY EMERSON O. BRADSHAW | 849 |
| HOW TO DO PERSONAL WORK, BY ROLLIN H. WALKER | 850 |
| OPEN FORUM | 851 |
| YOUNG PEOPLE'S WORK | 852 |
| RELIGIOUS EDUCATION | 853 |
| THE CHIMNEY CORNER | 854 |
| OUR OWN FOLKS | 856 |
| OUR BOOK SHELF | 862 |
| OUR MUSIC CORNER | 863 |

Who's Who in Religious Education Work

This number features religious education as it is fostered in the daily vacation Bible school. There appear names of some of the leaders of the work—Thomas S. Young, the national director of vacation and week-day schools for the Baptists of the North; Albert H. Gage, director of religious education in the city of Chicago; W. G. Towart, experienced in vacation school work in New York City and Vermont, and who has had classes on this subject at Colgate, Newton, Ocean Park and at the Boston B. Y. P. U. Convention, and also many other workers in the field. This is the first time that THE BAPTIST has devoted an issue so largely to this work. It speaks well for the progress that has been made, for only big things are worth "featuring."

Killam's Kollum

Such Is Our Aim

"I am enjoying immensely the timely discussions in the columns of your (our—Editor) paper each week. I trust that THE BAPTIST shall ever increase in power and scope as a messenger to the Baptists of the Northern Convention."—Andrew Martin Smith.

"Reverend!"

There is a certain title
  Goes in and out me with;
Some people always greet me:
  "Howdy, Reverend Smith."

As just a common "Mister"
  I'd acknowledge kin and kith;
But I'd like to hit the man that says:
  "This is Reverend Smith."

If four things are distasteful,
  I'll offer you the fifth:
Just fancy some one told you
  Your name was Reverend Smith.

I don't object to "Doctor,"
  (Though my degree may be a myth),
But God forgive the thoughts I think
  When hailed as "Reverend Smith."
—C. M. Wilson in Christian Century.

We Live by Signs

Do you believe in signs? We do. We live by them, in fact, when they are of the sort that N. B. Dorman of Iowa Falls believes in. He says: "I would not miss a copy of THE BAPTIST for anything. Call on me every time my subscription is due. With the best denominational paper in the country we must give it our support if we want to keep it the best. Here is a little sign of my appreciation attached." The support is needed and, oh, for more signs!

"All Things Come to Him Who Waits"

"You are wrong again," writes a subscriber. (Again! Is it possible we have ever been so before?) "I did not overlook the subscription unintentionally. I was just waiting to be dunned. You ought to know by this time that it is my way with all my bills, and you would be surprised to learn how many I get out of paying by following that plan. You have heard of the chap who acquired a reputation for being an early riser, and after that could lie in bed all day without injuring that same 'rep.' 'That's me.' However, here's my check, and I hope hundreds of others who received your 'punch-up' will be as prompt." Here's hoping, too.

"The America"—Another Ship of Fellowship

BY THE EDITOR

SHIPS loaded with clothing and relief for the suffering have from time to time sailed to Europe since the war. They were "ships of fellowship." The "America," the official ship for the delegates from the Northern Baptist Convention, is as truly a "ship of fellowship." More than 150 delegates to the meeting of the Baptist World Alliance in Stockholm are aboard. Their great mission, like that of hundreds of delegates on other ships, is to become better acquainted with one another and with their brethren from all parts of the world.

Oceans and seas, it is said, are nature's method of separating us from the rest of the world. It should not be forgotten that these same oceans bind us to the rest of the world. Across these seas run great ocean boulevards over which not only commerce but Christian crusaders have gone for generations, backward and forward.

Seamen Missionaries

It is nothing short of marvelous, the part seamen played in the Christian program. Take for instance the case of our own Baptist work. It was a sea-captain, Calvin Tubbs, who brought word concerning the life, convictions, and work of Johann Gerhard Oncken, the "Father of Continental Baptists." The Foreign Society to which the message came reported the case to Prof. Sears of Hamilton and on April 22, 1834, in the Elbe in Germany he baptized Oncken and six other persons, one of whom was Mrs. Oncken. The next day he helped to constitute the First Baptist Church in Hamburg. The first Baptist missionary in Norway was Fredrik L. Rymker, a Danish sailor. He had been converted and baptized in the Mariner's Temple in New York and began his work in Norway in 1857. The Baptist work in the land toward which we are sailing was begun by sailors. G. W. Schroeder, a Swedish sea captain, was converted and joined the same church as Rymker in New York. In Gothenburg, Schroeder met another Christian sailor, Nilson by name. He was urged by Schroeder to make a careful study of his New Testament with the result that in the summer of 1847 he went to Hamburg where he was baptized, August 1, by Oncken and soon thereafter organized, with the help of a Copenhagen pastor, the First Baptist Church in Sweden, the seventy-fifth anniversary of which we celebrate this year. These are but a few cases which illustrate how backward and forward across the seas have played those influences which have had so large a part in determining the course of Christian history. They are the Vikings of our faith.

The Steam Ship "America"

It is a great ship. We are proud to be sailing under the stars and stripes on a ship owned and operated by the United States. The length of the boat is 687 feet, its beam 74 feet, its depth 52½ feet, its displacement 34,575 tons, its horsepower 17,500. These great engines require the service of 120 stokers and burn 280 tons of coal every twenty-four hours. This steady, sturdy craft before the war bore the name "Amerika." Its officers and crew are the embodiment of courtesy and helpfulness. Its passenger list is a replica of America. We confess that we are almost ashamed to mention its bountiful table. Suffice it to say that during the first six days at sea the editor gained five pounds and some others whose names could be mentioned refused to be weighed after the first day or two from port.

Sundays at Sea

The first Sunday at sea the ship's officers arranged the morning worship and the Episcopal service was used. In the evening a largely attended meeting was in charge of the Baptist delegates. Dr. A. W. Beaven, of Rochester, spoke on "The Church, the Pillar and Ground of Truth." It was a strong presentation of the claims of the Christian church to the loyalty and support of all good men. An offering of $100 was made for the widows and orphaned children of seamen.

The last Sunday service was a most remarkable meeting. It was in charge of Dr. Joseph Hazen of North Orange and the address was given by Dr. C. S. Miao of Shanghai. Doctor Miao has recently received from the University of Chicago his Ph.D. He gave in detail his experience as a boy and young man in a high-type Chinese home. His story and its conclusions are so unusual that we have asked him to give it to the readers of THE BAPTIST. It will appear as a feature in any early issue. One of our best-known women said as she came out of the meeting, "This is worth the whole trip." An offering amounting to $33 was taken for the cause presented last Sunday evening.

The Grand and Glorious Fourth

The Fourth of July was filled with events celebrating the great event marking our beginning as a nation. At ten o'clock in the morning there was a grand march led by the ship's band and by the only "real" American aboard, Mr. David Paddlety, a Kiowa Indian. There was a general assembly at the stern of the boat. President Clifton D. Gray of Bates College was made chairman. After singing the "Star Spangled Banner," prayer was offered by Rev. J. C. Byrne, a Catholic priest of New York, and the scripture was read by Rev. J. W. Dickens of Louisiana.

Aboard the ship was Mr. Charles Carroll, of Carrollton, Md., a direct descendent of the Charles Carroll who signed the Declaration of Independence. He presented a copy of this historic document to Mrs. Helen Barrett Montgomery who read it. The American Creed, based on the Declaration of Independence, was recited by Marie Jean and Robert Beaven of Rochester. Rev. M. G. Perry led in community singing and Rev. J. W. Babbitt of Newburgh, N. Y., a Presbyterian minister, gave a recitation, "Old Flag." The address was delivered by State Senator F. M. Davenport, of Utica, N. Y. It dealt with fundamental questions relating to the foundation and perpetuity of nations. Senator Davenport was introduced by Judge A. J. Talley of New York. The afternoon and evening were devoted to games and social events. The whole trip reminds one of college days, for there are between seventy-five and 100 college students aboard including members of the Harvard and Yale track teams bound for contests in England.

Worship and Conferences.

Through the courtesy of the ship's officers a parlor was set aside for the almost exclusive use of the Baptist delegates. Here each morning at 9 o'clock the greater part of the Baptist company met with such others as cared to join in worship. These meetings made a large contribution to the helpfulness of the voyage. They were all of a high type and spiritually stimulating.

There were addresses and conferences each afternoon and stereopticon addresses nearly every evening. Questions bearing on our own denominational program at home and abroad were up for friendly discussion. These conferences were informal. The personal interviews and friendly discussions in themselves were such that the trip would be justified on this account alone. There was unbroken fellowship throughout the journey. We believe this is a token of the spirit which will prevail in the great meetings in Stockholm.

More or Less Personal

If we were to print the list of delegates most of them would be familiar names in Baptist households. In fact they are so well known that is is hard to tell anything new about them. Here are some "scraps" of news picked up on the deck.

Secretary G. P. Mitchell of Iowa is now greeted as "Cap" Mitchell. He was much at home on the ship. One cool evening he wore his long overcoat and his cap could easily, in the gathering

(Continued on page 860)

Our Father's Work to Do

O Master Workman of the race,
Thou man of Galilee,
Who with the eyes of early youth
Eternal things did see,
We thank thee for thy boyhood faith
That shone Thy whole life through;
"Did ye not know it is my work
My Father's work to do?"

O Carpenter of Nazareth,
Builder of life divine,
Who shapest man to God's own law,
Thyself the fair design,
Build us a tower of Christlike height,
That we the land may view,
And see like thee our noblest work
Our Father's work to do.

O thou who dost the vision send
And gives to each his task,
And with the task sufficient strength,
Show us thy will, we ask;
Give us a conscience bold and good,
Give us a purpose true,
That it may be our highest joy
Our Father's work to do.

—Rev. Jay T. Stocking, in "Hymns for the Living Age."

The Baptist

A New Summer Utility

TWO important recent contributions which Baptists have made to Christian activity are the chapel-car idea, which puts a little church on railway wheels and sends it on its mission, like Philip the Evangelist going down to the road from Jerusalem to Gaza along "the way that is desert" spiritually; and the daily vacation Bible school. Both have been adopted widely among all denominations and are doing immense good.

But it is the latter which is newest and most startling in its achievements. All over our land and to some extent in other lands this unique combination of vacation and school, of religion and practical handiwork, of pastime and far-reaching purpose has been having its winning way with thousands of children in the early summer, as will be seen from this number of THE BAPTIST and from a multitude of other reports. It is a wonder-institution which to many people seems to have sprung up almost over night, though it is something like a score of years since a Baptist preacher first thought it out and then tried it out and then began its propagation. Church people are learning what it means, editors are becoming aware of it and great dailies make editorial comment on its excellent achievement; but its ultimate fame has been reached as the paragraphers have begun to make copy of it, poking their good-natured fun at it, professing sympathy with the "poor kids" in having a school thrust into their vacation, and intentionally confusing its initials, D. V. B. S., with those of a highly comfortable but distinctly unromantic summer garment for suffering man.

So far from being regarded as an infliction and an infringement on their vacation, the children—to use the expressive phrase of the man in the street—"just eat it up." And why should they not? It is decidedly a novel experience in the way of a school. It begins with bright but reverent devotional exercises and the learning by heart of passages from that Book to which our public schools owe everything and concede nothing. With a gifted leader splendid songs are beautifully sung, for a good song is not more difficult for children than sanctified doggerel. Then there is a fine young man, usually a college or seminary man on vacation, often with an athletic record, to captivate the fancy and win the affection of the boys. He can teach them yells for their own use with the regular college swing to them, he can talk and teach games and lead off in them at recreation period, and he can initiate the children into the mystery of handicrafts, which they will take up eagerly. Then, when they find that their teachers are devoted Christians preparing for a life of Christian service in our own or other lands, religion often becomes for the first time to these children a vital issue affecting themselves.

This vacation school is a boon to parents, especially to mothers to whom the long summer vacation is often a perplexing problem, not merely for the extra burden which the presence of the children at home puts upon her, but for the actual perils which the long period of idleness brings. This school takes the children for the comparatively brief period of the school's continuance and, for a part of the day, employs them in delightful and helpful ways; but it does far more than that. It leaves them with a permanent acquisition of knowledge and ability. The things that they have learned, the songs that they have sung, the plays, the arts and crafts at which they have made a beginning will be kept up by them and often form the beginning of a serious interest in valuable pursuits. And if there were no other results the giving to the child of some notion of directed play would be worth all of the trouble and expense of the vacation school. A keynote will be set by them for the whole summer, and not seldom for a whole life.

ORIGINALLY the vacation school was intended as a missionary expedient, designed chiefly to safeguard and interest the poorer children in the crowded districts of great cities. It did wonderful service in this way, for touching instances of little lives given their first glimpse of beauty and religion are related out of the experience of workers in these schools. A little child beaten first by her mother and then by the priest for attendance on the school but still unable to resist its attraction; another child of a drinking mother, the little one singing the song she learned at the vacation school, "Jesus loves me," until her mother at the washtub calls out, "Stop that noise!" The child mournfully goes to sit on the doorstep saying half to herself "It seems 'most as though nobody else did love me." The mother a little later speaks up roughly, "Go on and sing." The mother follows her child to the vacation school and then to church, a little later finding redemption and giving her little girl the love of a Christian home.

But it was found that in the average community, children from the poorer and from well-to-do homes almost equally enjoyed and profited by the vacation school; and most flourishing schools have been maintained by churches in aristocratic suburbs. A highly successful school along the same lines has been conducted throughout the year on a week-day evening. The largest vacation Bible school in the world is that of the Aiken Institute in Chicago's crowded West Side. How it must delight the great heart of Aunt Lizzie Aiken if she can look down upon it from heaven. Surely the church has found a splendid new utility in its vacation schools.

Leisure Time Determines Character

"THAT which a person does with his time while employed determines his bank account. That which he does with his leisure hours determines his character." The truth underlying this statement indicates the real value of a vacation school to a church. The character of children is determined by the use of vacation days. The church of all institutions must be concerned in providing for the children of the community the right kind of a vacation. With such a responsibility it is an absolute sin for any Christian church to close its doors during the summer vacation period.

Every parent knows that the children are happier and healthier during the regular routine of public school than during the free and easy days of summer when there is nothing to do. There will always be plenty of mischief for idle hands. There are always vicious men and women who delight to put evil into the mind and life of childhood.

One rainy day a taxi drove up to a beautiful home in a fine suburban community. A mother, after bidding goodbye to her two daughters, stepped into the taxi. The writer, knowing that these daughters were on their way to a vacation school, said, "Your girls seem so happy, where are they going?" "We have," she replied, "a vacation school in our town. My girls attend. This morning it was raining so I told them that they need not get up early, but they insisted upon getting up and going even if it did rain. This school is the grandest thing. Every day the girls tell me the stories which are told by the teachers. And they are making so many interesting things. I tell you, we mothers think this school just the grandest thing for our children."

In the vacation school much is made of worship, of story telling, of music, of Bible drills, of memorization, of hymns and scripture and of all kinds of hard work. The spirit of joy is well expressed by the motto of the school—"And they helped every one his neighbor. And every one said unto his brother, be of good cheer." Who can estimate the religious value of a school in a church teaching these things in an atmosphere of happiness that makes the children eager for each new day so that they can go to vacation school?

All the teachers are Christian men and women and young people, every one of whom loves children. If character is caught not taught, then the influence of kindly teachers upon the impressionable life of childhood is wonderful, "for a teacher teaches a little by what he says, more by what he does, and most by what he is."

Everything in the school is done in the name of religion and for the good of the child. Most schools are in a church building. Thus the children associate the church with their good times and learn that valuable lesson that true religion always makes people happy.

Schools are of two types, a local church school or a community school. Both types will probably continue. The local situation should be the deciding factor in determining whether a church will have its own school or whether it will cooperate with other churches in an interdenominational community school. As a rule the best results can be obtained in those churches which have resources in equipment and workers if a church should conduct its own school. Teachers can be secured more readily for such a school and the results can be conserved better. Such a school will continue year by year with its summer program.

The Minister

DR. CRANDALL was a minister from boyhood to the day he died. He was more than pastor, honorable though that title is. His life was an incarnation of service—a ministry. It was a ministry in the primary meaning of the word, for, without consciously thinking, he ever sought not to serve himself—he made himself less, that his influence might be the more. It is the life of such a minister as Lathan A. Crandall that gives power and dignity to the Christian ministry, that cannot but inspire young men to become ministers.

Such phrases and words as "taking orders," "the cloth," parson, clergy, and so on, give an entirely different idea of the ministry from that which stands out in the life and work of Doctor Crandall. His was a life of service, helpful, unselfish, wide-reaching service, as may be discovered in the story of his career which appears in another column. When he became the first editor of THE BAPTIST he sought to make the paper the helper of every good cause, not only within our own denomination, but throughout the religious world. The success THE BAPTIST has subsequently achieved is, in no small degree, due to the efforts he made to produce a Baptist journal that should be broadminded, charitable, just, representing the best spirit of the denomination, but above all that it should minister—should serve. His pastorates were a ministry, his writings were a ministry, his whole life a service.

But not only was Doctor Crandall's life work a service but his very spirit was a ministry. Once during a fishing trip the Indians named one of the company "Boss of the Party," but Doctor Crandall became "Sunny Day." He worked, he preached, he wrote in a spirit of good cheer, a spirit which made men want to be good, because he, the man they admired for his achievements, enjoyed the religion he preached and radiated that joy. He served his fellowmen, as he served his God, with a happy heart, a smiling face, and a ministering spirit.

A Page of Opinion

The Bible in the Schools

A BULLETIN of the Bureau of Education in Washington sums up the legal status and current practice of using the Bible in public schools. The discussion dates back to colonial days. Two years ago the state of Washington was the scene of a battle between the pros and cons, and during the last six months California has been the center of a controversy as to whether or not the King James version is a "sectarian" book which should be barred from the schools. There are ten states where the Bible may not be used in schools. With the exception of New York and Louisiana, all are in the West. Minnesota, Wisconsin and Illinois forbid it, and also Arizona and Nevada, Idaho and Washington. Whenever special attempts have been made to prevent the use of the Bible the controversy has largely hinged upon the meaning of the word "sectarian." The bureau's investigation shows that various states have constitutional or statutory provisions forbidding sectarian instruction. The purpose appears to have been a desire to check strictly denominational instruction. But these restrictions have furnished the basis for the claim that the Bible is in itself a sectarian work. This claim when submitted to the Supreme Courts in three different states was differently interpreted. Illinois upheld the sectarian theory, while Kentucky and Texas denied it.

As David Lloyd George Sees Question

ON every side we face questions which clearly indicate that the world is a neighborhood and that the neighbors are interested in neighborhood doings. Liquor on shipboard when foreign ships enter our ports has been seized. Some folks seem to be much excited. David Lloyd George speaking on the subject at a Sunday gathering said:

"We should keep cool. We must not get excited. It is not merely that America seeks to keep within her rights. We ought to extend a certain measure of sympathy to her in her difficulties. It is not a question of whether or not we are prohibitionists, but America is making a very bold experiment to deal with probably the greatest curse of modern civilization.

"She has tried other experiments. They have been only comparative successes and she has made up her mind with decision and courage to make such experiments as never have been made on this earth. Well, let us give her a fair chance.

"Let us be very frank. One of her greatest difficulties has been liquor which has been pouring in by surreptitious means from Europe. It is all very well for us to say this liquor is merely for our own sailors aboard ship. Fortunes have been made by smuggling liquor into the United States in defiance of a law that country passed by a greater majority than almost any great law ever passed in any country. Give her a fair trial.

"I do not say the experiment will be a success. It is just possible that America might have to modify it. But don't let us interfere with them. They are a people of more than 100,000,000, highly educated and progressive, and therefore it is in the interests of civilization that they should be allowed to have full time to test their efforts to solve the problem, which is just as much ours as theirs. If they succeed they will have the gratitude of the whole world. If they do not succeed they will find where the difficulties are and that would earn the gratitude of the world."

The Anglo-Catholic Congress

"THE Anglo-Catholic propagandists, encouraged and emboldened by success, are becoming somewhat reckless in the open avowal of their intention to undo the Reformation," says the British Weekly. "They will find, however, that they will have to deal, not merely with bishops, but with the great mass of lay Englishmen and women who will not be so readily won over to Romanism or the subtle imitation of it provided by the Anglo-Catholic movement. The Bishop of Peterborough, in a letter to the London Times, expressing goodwill towards the congress, bluntly said that Anglicans generally do not want such worship of Mary as some of the hymns printed for the occasion express." The Bishop of London has stated that he has arranged that two of the hymns to Mary shall not be sung at the congress.

All Serene

PRESIDENT HARDING'S release of the federal prisoners held for seditious public utterances during the time of the late war, has been received with remarkable calm by the gentlemen who are accustomed on the least occasion of alarm to prove their patriotism by eating great mouthfuls of fire. In this case they apparently cannot find the shadow of anything to be alarmed about. And fire-eating is not so impressive as once it was.—The Continent.

The Volstead Vigilantes

FROM the Memphis Commercial Appeal we learn that in New Orleans there has been organized the Volstead Vigilantes. The vigilantes are not setting themselves up as the law, but as sympathizers with the law. When they have reasonable grounds for belief that the law is being violated, their suspicions are communicated to the prohibition enforcement officers, who conduct investigations and make arrests if justified by the evidence. The guilt or innocence of the suspects will be determined by the Federal court. And Federal courts have the reputation of grinding so fine that the guilty always tremble when arraigned.

"Why I Keep on Praying"

Excerpts from a sermon preached in Leyden Congregational Church, Brookline, Massachusetts

By Harris G. Hale

HERE was a man who kept on praying.

We must grant that he kept on praying in the face of serious difficulties.

Look at some of the circumstances. We are not now concerned with Daniel's place in history. We might raise a good many puzzling questions on that subject. We are not now concerned with any critical questions of the text. We are concerned with the religious life of this man, and its noble persistence in the face of obstacles. His loyalty to prayer is a thrilling example.

His career had been one of remarkable success. As a foreigner he had climbed to great eminence. This he had done by the cleanness of his life. He had disciplined himself till his body was clean, his mind clear and his heart pure.

Now you see him coming under a new sovereign, Darius the Mede. This new monarch at once recognized his ability and value. He appointed a sort of cabinet of 120 leading men. At the head of the cabinet table sat this man Daniel.

Now begins political intrigue, a plot to overthrow him; just the sort of thing which has been in high places ever since men began to organize themselves into governments. Jealousy and thwarted ambition do their worst. These 120 men get together in a great conspiracy. They canvass Daniel's whole career in the attempt to find something against him.

But they failed.

An Aggravation

That very integrity which thwarted them, aggravated them. Nothing is so aggravating to corrupt political ambition as the integrity of a political opponent.

These 120 conspirators were very persistent men. They hit upon a device which they thought would work. Daniel's religion should be used against him. They induce Darius to issue an unalterable decree. No one shall be allowed to pray except to the king for thirty days. The decree goes forth.

How is Daniel affected by it?

There is one thing in life which he cannot get on without. That one thing is prayer. He must pray, and he will pray. No conspiracy,

> "Now when Daniel knew that the writing was signed, he went into his house; and his windows being open in his chamber toward Jerusalem, he kneeled upon his knees three times a day, and prayed, and gave thanks before his God, as he did aforetime."—Daniel 6:10.

no threat, no danger can keep him from it. Prayer is his life. It is his way of finding God. He therefore goes about his prayer life and his prayer habit as usual, undisturbed, unruffled, prepared for all possible consequences.

Suppose he had left off praying? What regard would you have for him today? Suppose his obstacles had interfered, what inspiration to religious men through all these intervening centuries would he have furnished?

Such questions shift our attention from Daniel to ourselves, and make us ask some questions about the men of today.

We of today have obstacles in the way of our prayer life and our prayer habit. What are they? Not law. I have yet to learn of any legislature which has passed a law preventing men from praying. Not political intrigue. Not physical danger. The obstacle in the way of the men of today is that they don't have time. They have time to attend to business? Yes. That is necessary. They have time for recreation and some pleasure? Yes. Without these they would not be fit. They have time for friendship? Yes. That is essential. They have time to read about current events? Yes. It is important to be able to talk about these. So people have time for the things which they consider important, essential, vital.

But there is no time to pray. The morning is so hurried. The evening is so crowded. It is impossible to get the family together for five minutes for the great act of worship. And so an institution which was the buttress of society is going to pieces: there is no time to pray.

This is pathetic, and the more so because people are so naive about it. If you ask them the reason, they tell you frankly, without hesitation and without shame, that they have no time to pray. Their minds are so occupied that they cannot fix them even for a few moments on the only enduring realities. They cannot stop to touch the hem of the garment of the Eternal, even when they know that the Eternal is passing by.

Too many people can look back to the time when they prayed more than they do now. Of Daniel it is said, "As he did aforetime." He kept on praying.

I want to give some simple reasons why we should keep on praying. The reasons which I give are only some of those which relate to the personal religious life.

I should keep on praying because I want things.

Speaking Out

Asking for things I want is praying. The question is not now whether I ought to have them. When I want a thing it is natural to ask for it. That is an abnormal child who does not ask for the things he wants. The normal child just speaks it right out.

There are advantages to the child in speaking it right out. It brings his want to the light, and sometimes as soon as he sees it he knows he does not want it half as much as he thought he did. It puts it into relation to the wants of other members of the family. He may see at once for himself that it is a selfish want and ought not to be gratified.

On the other hand, asking for it puts it clearly before him as an objective. An openly expressed desire is openly sought. He goes to work at once to realize it.

All these advantages hold good for prayer. It is just simply normal to ask God for things you want. Wants unexpressed either pine away or fester and become diseased. Speak them right out. That is prayer. Ask for anything you want. Expose your desire to the light by putting it before God. Maybe you will at once see it in a different light, and cease to want it. Maybe you will discover how selfish it is, and know that you ought not to have it. Maybe you will want it all the more and begin at once to go after it. At any rate, ask. That is the whole spirit of the New Testament. Out with it. Speak up and tell God what you want.

There are some things which you are sure to get if you ask for them. There are some prayers about which the question of getting an answer does not arise. The answer is certain. No one ever asked sincerely for forgiveness and did not get it. No one ever asked sincerely for a noble and holier spirit and did not get it. No one ever asked sincerely for a purer heart and did not get it.

I must keep on praying because I need some one to lean on.

You have sometimes seen an old person standing on the curb, watching the rushing traffic of the city street, waiting helplessly for a chance to get across, looking about for some kind person who will help. I often think how inconsiderate our modern city builders are of old people. Here is one who must have somebody to lean on.

You see children on their way to school, trying to get across the boulevard. Their little heads get confused so easily. They need some one to lean on.

You see a lame man struggling along on the slippery pavement with his crutches. He is having a hard time of it, and a dangerous. You may pass along quite indifferent, and let him take care of himself. Or you may go and kick the crutches out from under him. This is what a man does who makes light of another's faith. Or you may go to him and say, "Friend, you are having a hard time of it. Put your hand on my shoulder. Lean on me. Throw your whole weight on me."

Feeling the Need

Is any one so self-confident that he does not feel himself, at least at times, in the position of one of these? Is any one so fully self-reliant that he never realizes that he is like the old person, or the child, or the lame man with his crutches? Do you never feel the need of the Eternal Strength to lean on? Do you never crave the Eternal Friend to help?

When you pray the Eternal Friend comes right up to your side and says to you: "Just lean on me. Throw your whole weight on me. I will see you safely across."

I must keep on praying because I want that which is within me to correspond to that which is outside me. This old world of ours is full of beauty, full of majesty, full of mystery. However I approach it, I am filled with awe.

If I approach the universe through mathematics, I haven't gone far before I am told of infinity. I say to the mathematician, "Do you understand infinity?" He tells me, "No." "Do you mean that mathematics deals with facts which cannot be fathomed?" He tells me, "Yes."

If I approach the universe through astronomy, I am met at once by inestimable distances. There is a vastness which is overwhelming.

If I come to the world by the way of the microscope, I discover that there may be a hundred universes in a pin's point. If I come through biology, I am in the presence of an ultimate mystery—life. If I come through psychology, I am face to face with that strange, elusive fact, common to God and man, which we name personality.

This is the sort of world I live in. These are things which are always about me. It is all so vast, so majestic, so holy. The infinite is everywhere. I am in this world as the old prophet was in the temple. I see God, high and lifted up, and his train fills the temple.

I must have something within to correspond with all this. I want the infinite. I want the eternal. I need to feel the sweet mystery of life, the majestic sanctity of my own being.

I cannot do this without prayer. Prayer brings me to the borderland of the infinite which is within, and gives me a full view of the splendor of it. Prayer gives me sight of that eternity which is in my own soul, and the glory of it. Prayer brings God into my life, the same God who is in the world about me. Without prayer I cannot correspond with my environment. So I must keep on praying.

Yet there are those who pray less than they did aforetime, and so are losing God. Of them it must have been written:

"I remember, I remember
The fir-trees dark and high;
I used to think their slender tops
Were close against the sky.
It was a childish ignorance,
But now 'tis little joy
To know I'm further off from heaven
Than when I was a boy."

There is no need of getting further off from heaven as we go on. There is no need of having our heaven as far off even as the tops of the fir-trees. If we keep on praying, it will be within us.

I must keep on praying because Jesus taught his disciples to pray. That means all disciples, and I want to be included in that noble company.

Near the summit of the Mount of Olives is a church known as the Church of the Pater Noster. At one side is an open court surrounded by a cloister. I am glad it is open, so that the sunlight can get in, and the green things can grow there. Along the nine walls of this cloister on the four sides are tablets on which the Lord's Prayer is graven in thirty-two languages. This is the spot on which, tradition says, Jesus taught his disciples to pray. This is as good a place as any in which to appreciate the impressive fact. Jesus himself had been praying. The disciples had been deeply moved. They waited in reverence until he had finished. Then they turned to him: "Lord, teach us to pray." And he taught them. With them he included all disciples in all time. That prayer stands for the great fact that Jesus expects all disciples everywhere to pray.

An Essential

Your discipleship means constancy in prayer. Your discipleship means the habit of prayer. Your discipleship means the spirit of prayer. If your prayer-life has weakened, your discipleship is in serious danger. If you cannot find time to pray, it means that you cannot find time to be a disciple. If you have not the disposition to pray, you have not the disposition of a disciple. For this is fundamental. It is essential. It is vital.

I must keep on praying because I want things, and it is natural to ask for the things I want. I must keep on praying because I need some one to lean on. I must keep on praying to get the sweet sense of mystery and eternity into my soul. I must keep on praying because I want to be counted among the disciples of the Lord.

Let no obstacle stand in the way. Don't say you haven't time, when you have time for lesser things. Don't say that business crowds it out. This is your most important business. Don't say that pleasures intrude upon your life and will not give place. This should be and may be your highest joy.

Open the windows of your soul toward heaven by prayer. Let God come in as he always comes to the praying soul. Here is your strength. Here is your life. Keep on praying!

The Story of the Vacation School

By Albert H. Gage

MRS. W. A. Hawes of the Epiphany Baptist Church, New York City, became interested in the neglected children of the city streets in the summer. On July 12, 1899, she opened a school for the children. Of this experiment she writes, "The school opened the first day with an attendance of 114 boys and girls. So many children made it necessary to engage three rooms instead of one as planned. The session was held from nine-thirty to eleven-thirty each week day except Saturday."

The great value of this experiment was quickly recognized. Rev. Robert G. Boville, superintendent of the New York City Baptist Mission Society, saw the opportunity of the summer time in mission work in the great city. In 1901 he started similar schools in several mission centers. To Doctor Boville much credit for the early success of the movement is due. He conceived the idea of utilizing the idle church buildings in the summer time for boys and girls. He knew that they must have trained, consecrated and enthusiastic leadership. He turned to the colleges and theological schools to find in the Christian students of those institutions the very leadership needed.

Associated with Doctor Boville in the early days of the movement were such Baptist leaders as Dr. James A. Francis, Mrs. Mary L. Bishop, Dr. Edward Judson and Dr. Charles Sears. Mrs. Boville also put her cultured mind and her trained musical ability into the movement. To her much credit is due for the high standard of music which has characterized the vacation schools from the very beginning.

A New Name

These new schools had to have a new name because they were so entirely different from any other experiment either in the church or the public school. A name was chosen which described the school—"daily vacation Bible school." It was daily for each week day except Saturday during four to six weeks of the summer. It was held during the vacation period. Because held during the vacation time, it was different from either Sunday school or public school. Much is made of the joy element. There is free participation on the part of pupils. A program adapted to the various ages was worked out, giving large place to worship, to story telling and dramatization, to memory work, to hand work of various kinds and to outings and picnics. There was always a Bible story and later Bible drills and memory work were introduced. It was a school with scholars, with pupils and with a regular program of religious instruction.

In more recent years several of the leading denominations, including the Baptists, have adopted the name church vacation school, thus developing the plan of a church school with a Sunday session, a week-day session and a vacation session.

In 1906, Doctor Boville organized the International Association of Daily Vacation Bible Schools. This has been a good promoting organization and it has published several excellent manuals. Schools were started in the various cities of the country and local committees formed to carry on the work. The movement spread into Canada, then to the Philippines, to Japan and to China. It is now recognized by the missionaries as one of the most powerful agencies in foreign missionary work.

At first the schools were mostly in cities among foreign-speaking people and in the congested districts. As a means of Americanization no other movement has quite the opportunity that a good vacation school has. To reach the children with a religious message and through them to reach the home is both the aim and the actual accomplishment of these schools in hundreds of instances. An Italian mother said to the superintendent of a school "I thank you for what you have done for my two boys. I want them to be good Americans."

Vacation schools continued to grow slowly but steadily until about 1916. At that time the Baptists of the North through the American Baptist Publication Society included the vacation schools as part of the larger program of religious education. A national director was selected. Dr. W. Edward Raffety was the first Baptist director. He was succeeded by Charles A. McAlpine, who in turn was followed by Thomas S. Young, the present director. Each state and city director of religious education took the vacation school seriously and began to try out experiments and to promote the schools. Several strong self-supporting churches were induced to try a school. All sorts of excuses and objections were met. But in almost every case a vacation school succeeded in the strong self-supporting churches quite as well as among the foreigners or the poorer people of industrial neighborhoods. Then several suburban centers were tried. To the surprise of everybody, the very best suburban and residential centers proved to be ideal centers for vacation schools. Other experiments were made in the villages and even in the strictly rural communities—everywhere with equal success and enthusiasm. There is only one kind of a church where a school will not succeed and where it is not needed, and that is a church in a community where there are no boys and girls.

The Presbyterians undertook this work seriously about the same time that the Baptists did. These two denominations are at the present leaders in the movement. But each of the other denominations is seeing the value of the vacation school and is putting denominational promotion, literature and finance back of the movement.

An Awakening

Immediately following the war the country suddenly awakened to the fact of the wide-spread neglect of religious education. At once people began to say, "We must have more than the one hour on Sunday of the Sunday school. We must have week-day instruction." Leaders in the vacation school said, "This is week-day instruction at the very season of the year when the children are free from public school and free from all other kinds of lessons." At once hundreds of churches caught the idea and began putting on good schools as a part of the local program of religious education. At the same time some of the best trained and most practical men and women of the various denominations have worked hard to strengthen the curriculum, retaining the joy elements and the expressional activities, but correlating them and making a real program that has both religious and educational values.

One other factor has contributed to the very rapid growth of vacation schools during the past two summers. The International Sunday School Association has effected a merger with the Sunday School Council of Evangelical denominations. This splendid new organization, representative alike of both denominational interests and community effort, known as the International Sunday School Council of Religious Education is squarely back of the vacation school. The International Association of Daily Vacation Bible Schools has become an affiliated organization to this new council of religious education. Wherever there is a state, county or city organization of Sunday-school workers, this organization in its conventions, literature and promotion activities is pushing vacation school.

Thus recognized as a real factor in religious education, with the backing and promotion of all the denominations, and with the backing and cooperation of all organized Sunday-school associations, the vacation school is increasing with the rapidity of a prairie fire. The time is not far distant when every church will have a vacation school every summer as a regular part of its year's program. Last year Baptists had 1,000 schools enrolling at least 100,000 boys and girls. This year early reports indicate that there will be 1,500 schools with 150,000 enrolled.

The Pastor as Principal

THE pastor makes the best principal in many cases. Probably 50 per cent of all Baptist schools are conducted by the pastor himself. There is no service which a pastor can render to his church so important as that which he renders in the vacation school. He makes friends with the children. Through them he touches every one of their homes. He learns to include childhood in his program. He gets thoroughly acquainted with the teachers in his school. He gets into close touch with life. It humanizes him, increases his usefulness and makes him a better pastor of his people.

What an opportunity to teach the Bible through memorization, through stories and through Bible drills!

What an opportunity to bring children into the spirit and habit of real worship!

What an opportunity to win the love and friendship of the children!

What an opportunity to mould character in the character forming days of vacation!

What an opportunity for evangelism!

Correlated Hand Work—How We Did It

By W. G. Towart

THERE never was a time when the church vacation school movement has been received so sympathetically by Christian leaders everywhere as it is today. The movement has not only come to stay but is growing by leaps and bounds, because it is meeting a long-felt need in our religious educational program. There is still room for great development in its program. The new growth that came with the slogan in the 1917 Northern Baptist Convention,—"A school in every church"—opened up many new avenues for a better religious education program. Much can yet be accomplished by enriching the devotional period. A splendid piece of work in correlation of the program is being worked out. This need has always been felt even from the early days. Many conditions existed in these early days which made it almost impossible for full correlation, especially between what was known as the teaching part which included the devotional, musical, biblical and the other part usually designated as handwork. Among these conditions was the shortage of money which limited the teaching staff and made it necessary to find some kind of occupation where one teacher could handle a large group.

Better things are ahead. We have had time to work out the problem; we are beyond the experimental period; and we are receiving the support of the church financially as well as developing a fine corps of volunteer teachers. And yet there is much to be done on the work of correlation. There are those who have no place for expressional work as it is usually designated, and there are others who apparently overemphasize it. There ought to be a happy medium between these two extremes. While I have often stated that were it not for the positive religious values and the emphasis put on the distinct religious instruction, I would not feel justified in giving the movement the time and energy I do, yet I am a strong believer in the handwork. There is a joy element in it and I think we must never lose sight of the word "vacation" which implies or ought to imply something different from what is usually linked up in the thought of "school."

How shall we correlate the second period, or what is usually known as the handwork period? First we have the correlation with the lesson of the day. This furnishes a splendid opportunity to use methods and suggestions furnished in church school handwork taught in the summer assemblies and suggested in many helpful books, but for which there is little or no time on Sundays. In the second place, we may correlate the handwork with the spirit of the school and the spirit of religious education. Work well done is a distinct piece of religious education. In the account of the creation the repetition of "and God saw that it was good" emphasizes the fact that good work is distinctly religious.

This year a fine suggestion has been made in the Christmas tree project. The idea is to have the boys and girls plan a Christmas for one of our mission stations. They make toys and gifts suitable for the Christmas party and send them abroad. Another attempt at correlation produced the following plan: The expressional work was not directly tied up with the lessons though in spirit it actually was. A danger we must avoid is to cut out our own pattern and then try to put the child into it. Sometimes we will find we are attempting to fit a square peg into a round hole.

The work of the four weeks was divided as follows: 1. Something for self. 2. Something for the home. 3. Something for the community. 4. Something for the church.

Now there will be those who may criticize the plan as emphasizing the selfish side of the child in making something for self. Perhaps it does look so, but let us examine it. Every child likes to make something for self. It is a child instinct. Let us develop it along the right channels. The first thing we made was a toothbrush-holder. Is it worth while to emphasize the care of the teeth? Educational leaders believe it is. Almost unbelievable conditions have been recorded by statistics showing that lack of proper care of the teeth caused a big percentage of deficiency in public schools. While making a toothbrush-holder you can emphasize the importance of the care of the teeth and you have created an interest in caring for the teeth. If it is true, as stated, that the proper care of teeth among school children increases the efficiency and higher standards and it is also true that "your body is the temple of God," there can be no doubt that making a toothbrush-holder and creating an interest in the care of the teeth has a distinctive religious value. Our community today has a clinic in the public school building, made possible by public subscriptions and dentists in town giving their time and service because we believe in this sort of education. Under the second project, "Something for the home," various things were made for the home including simple things by the smaller boys and girls, as door-jambs, boxes to hold knives, forks and spoons, dusters, mats, etc. Two outstanding pieces were coat and hatracks and bookracks. With the first, the lesson of neatness was taught and emphasis placed on the helpfulness we might give mother by remembering where we put things. In making the bookrack, some of the best story books stood in the rack from which the boys had to take their measurements. A story from one of the books was told during the working hour which created an interest in good books. In this way opportunity was furnished for guiding the thinking and deciding the literary taste of the boys and girls. Surely the development of neatness, orderliness and the selection of right reading have a distinct religious value.

The third project, "something for the community," opened an interesting field. We decided upon building bird houses. This necessitates an interesting study. First we must know the kind of birds that inhabit our community, then we must know something of their habits. Certain birds select certain kinds of homes. We must know what that kind of home is like. So many people make any kind of a bird-house, stick it up anywhere and wonder why the birds never come near it. This project calls for study of the most interesting sort and furnishes fine opportunity for teaching love, care and protection of our feathered friends for whom we believe the Heavenly Father has great love when "not a sparrow falls to the ground without his notice." Isn't this of distinctive religious value?

CHURCH VACATION SCHOOL AT AIKEN INSTITUTE, CHICAGO—THE LARGEST IN THE WORLD

The fourth project was "something for the church." This not only furnished a climax for the season but also furnished a fine opportunity for cooperative work which is much needed today and it strictly biblical—"ye are workers together." The project was a library of the books of the Bible. The boys made a bookcase using three-eighths of an inch wood. The size of the case was twelve and one-half inches wide, eleven inches high and three inches deep. Two shelves were placed in the case. The case was stained a golden oak. Sixty-six blocks were made of half inch wood representing the sixty-six books of the Bible. Each block was three inches high by two and one-half inches wide. Twenty-two blocks rested on each shelf. The end of these blocks was covered with paper and the name of the book printed thereon. The color scheme used was as follows:

Five books of the law were covered with red paper; twelve books of history with orange paper; five books of poetry with yellow paper; five books of major prophets with green paper; twelve books of minor prophets with light blue paper; four books of the Gospels with white paper; one book of the Acts with dark blue paper; fourteen special letters with lavender paper; seven general letters with purple paper; one book of prophecy in gold paper.

While the boys were making the library, the girls were making a book to correspond. The cover was made of cardboard, nine and one-fourth inches by eleven and one-half inches, and this was covered with cretonne. Eyelets for the rings were put in by a shoemaker thus making it a loose-leaf book. A good bond paper was used for the leaves, the size being eight and one-half inches by eleven inches. Dennisons white linen gummed discs were used to protect the paper from tearing in the rings.

On the first page was printed "The Precious Bible" and underneath a picture of a Bible cut from a catalogue was printed "God's Holy Word." Only one side of each page was used. The third page has the following information:

The Bible.

The Bible is a library of sixty-six books.

It is divided into two divisions.

They are the Old Testament and the New Testament.

There are thirty-nine books in the Old Testament.

There are twenty-seven books in the New Testament.

The Old Testament is divided into five groups.

They are the five Books of Law,
the twelve Books of History,
the five Books of Poetry,
the five Books of Major Prophets,
the twelve Books of Minor Prophets.

The New Testament is divided into five groups.

They are the four Books of Biography called the Gospels,
the one Book of History,
the fourteen Special Letters,
the seven General Letters,
the one Book of Prophecy.

The fifth page had a picture of an ancient scroll and underneath it the following:

The Old Testament.

"The Old Testament is a story of God's dealings with his chosen people, Israel."

The following page had a strip of red paper pasted on it and the following was written in:

Group I
Five Books of Law.
Genesis,
Exodus,
Leviticus, Numbers,
Deuteronomy.

Five books were cut from the red paper, five inches by three inches. A piece of white was cut the same size. These were folded in the middle to represent a book and sewed with raffia. The name of the book was written on the outside. On the inside there was a brief account of the contents of the book, e. g. page 1, (white paper) Beginnings of History; page 2, Chapter 1-11, Creation—The Flood; page 3, Chapters 12-36, Abraham—his call—going to Canaan—giving choice to Lot—God's Covenant with him—Isaac-Esau-Jacob; page 4, Chapters 37-50, Joseph—his dreams—coat of many colors—sold in Egypt—kindness to his family. This book was pasted with the five others on the page in the large book. The same scheme was carried throughout this book.

Each boy and girl who participated in the project received a bookmark for his own Bible, which consisted of ribbons corresponding to the colors used in the color scheme. The religious educational value of this project is self-evident. This is only one of many projects which may not be tied up directly with the Bible lesson of the day, and yet fits in fully with the idea of religious education.

Bennington, Vt.

Church Vacation School Attractions

By Millard L. Thomas

I call attention to four natural and impressive attractions of church vacation school work. The first of these is the child. Sometimes Christians are professedly devoted to children and yet they have no love for children and no interest in them. Some years ago in a middle west city I was trying to get help for my wife. It was hard to do so because we had three children. It seemed the only way at that time that you could get a "maid," as we call them now, was to shoot or otherwise dispose of all the children in the household. I fear that people who consider themselves greatly devoted to the education of childhood may not be so drawn to the concrete object, the real child. In church vacation school work, however, we are attracted by the children themselves whether they are poor, rich, white, black, or yellow—only just children. It is a great thing to love the children of a community—all of them—and associate together for the entertainment and religious development of any and all such children. That is one of the superlative attractions of the church vacation school. There is no race prejudice among children. Our Saviour said "Except ye be converted and become as little children, ye shall in no wise enter into the kingdom of heaven." Now the children come by hundreds into the vacation schools. We cannot get enough teachers and workers to look after them. It takes more than theorists or "master" teachers; in fact, for this wonderful opportunity, real people are needed who at least metaphorically take the children in their arms and bring God's blessings to them.

In the world war, religious workers at the front were profoundly impressed with the spirit among our soldiers causing them to call one another "buddies." In the vacation school the devotion as co-workers is always found. One of the finest young women of our bay cities has yearned to return here because of the joy she had in working with others in the church vacation school. Christian work shows no more beautiful unselfishness anywhere in the world than among fellow workers in these vacation schools. Personally, I have never attended the closing exercises of a vacation school in the past six or seven years without tears of gratitude to God for the spirit of those who have worked together to make the cause a success. It is worth all it costs of time and energy to be associated with one's co-workers in church vacation schools. These men and women and boys and girls are a choice band among the Baptists. Blessings abide upon them every one.

A Means of Acquaintance

Perhaps the church vacation schools do more than any single enterprise among us to bring the churches of our denomination to know one another and work together. They are not held in this work by any over-head officialism, but simply through common interest in a Christian cause. Competition and criticism are allayed and Baptist churches come together with an esprit de corps that is natural and pervasive. I have never been opposed to union among Baptist churches and this gets it as sure as you are born. Moreover, the vacation school makes it easy for churches of different denominations to work together without any sneering or sacrificing or re-organization. They come together in vacation school work in the only way that the Christian world can ever cooperate, and that is for the purpose of putting across a given program of effort and usefulness among them. Nothing could be smoother and more attractive to individual churches of the same denomination or of different denominations than these vacation schools. They simply do the job.

Furthermore, not a thing stands in the way when a church vacation school heads for community work. It does not boss or bother anybody or make it necessary for various councils and conferences to be called to agree upon what shall be held, or given up by the different religious organizations of the community. The vacation school comes in, and, if the occasion demands a community school, the denominations in that community join forces and cooperate in the conduct of such a school. Then, when the school is over for the summer these churches of different denominations are there in the community to conserve the results and expand the work during the whole year. No monkey wrench has been thrown into the machinery and no fine spun theories have been left floating the air, but a large number of boys and girls who have never been in any church or Sunday school and whose parents who have never been friendly to organized Christianity, have been reached and left in full view of the churches of the community. I undertake to say that the church vacation school, in my opinion, is the best and most feasible form of community church work that we have ever seen. It wishes all other kinds of work most abundant success and asks that every vacationist, when he comes home for another year's work, shall take account of what has been done by devoted Christian people among the young in these schools during the vacation period and help to conserve and expand the results.

These are a few of the attractions that every worker in the church vacation school finds and enjoys.

Vacation Schools Here, There and Everywhere

"There is no work in the world that pays greater dividends"

A School with a Radio Department

By Eugene L. Exman

"AW, GEE, this is the only place we do go where we can have fun!" gloomily commented Johnny as the last of the coping saws and paint brushes were packed away to await next summer's school. And he was not the only one of the 200 boys and girls enrolled in the Elgin, Ill., D. V. B. S. to feel somewhat despondent on July twelfth, that last day.

The Elgin school was instigated and sponsored by the First Baptist Sunday school and the boys and girls met for the three weeks and a half period in the Baptist church. Seventeen Elgin churches were represented in the enrolment, however, and two of the other downtown churches cooperated in furnishing teachers and in meeting the expenses.

One interesting feature of the school was the presentation of prizes for the best Bible and craft work done by the children. These prizes consisted generally of $3 for first and $2 for second prize, and were given by business houses of the city. It happened that the Elgin Daily News offered two sets of prizes, and later, when the business manager of the Elgin Courier was approached, he rather disgruntedly remarked that the best seemed to have been taken. He was hastily reminded, though, that most emphasis was to be laid on the Bible note books in which the junior boys and girls were retelling the Bible stories told them and pasting pictures found to illustrate the stories.

"Put us down for ten dollars" was a rejoinder that made it possible to offer three prizes for Bible notebooks and to create an incentive for careful and accurate work.

Missionary thought had an important place in each day's program, and the children, by bringing their pennies, dimes, and quarters, contributed a sum which finally totaled more than $30. On the closing night of the school a beautiful evergreen tree was fittingly decorated, and in a very impressive service, the children grouped around the tree each placing one article there that had been made during their craft periods. These were later boxed and are now on their way to India to help make a joyful Christmas for some children who have not the privileges of a D. V. B. S.

One of the most interesting departments of the school was the radio department. Seventeen of the older boys were enrolled and their work was directed by Jack Graham, a high school senior, radio editor of the Daily News, and manager of broadcasting station WJAS. The cut of the radio class pictured on the cover page helps indicate the great fun the boys were finding in being able to construct their own radio sets.

Dr. Thomas S. Young, national director of vacation and week-day schools for the Baptists of the North, is one of the hardest working, one of the best loved and one of the most useful men in the denomination. He has brought to his task a deep interest in religious education and splendid preparation in schools of higher learning, in the pastorate and in the work as director of religious education for the state of Colorado. Pastors desiring the latest information on vacation schools or week-day instruction would do well to write Doctor Young, at 1701 Chestnut St., Philadelphia.

Vacation Schools in Iowa

THERE has been a great deal of interest and enthusiasm in church vacation schools all over the state. It is too early to know the exact number of schools but I am sure there will be a considerable increase. We are hoping for a 50 per cent increase, over that of last year. Many of them are yet in session. Nearly every day I am getting personal letters from pastors telling how well their schools are going There has been much better work done in all of these schools this year than last. I think it is due to the four intensive training schools which we put across the latter part of April. We have been able to introduce a goodly number of new schools this year, that is, in a large number of places that have not had one heretofore. In every instance, so far as I know, the proposition has been unanimously sold to the church and community. We are giving a large place to the C. V. S., at the summer assembly. Each day from nine to twelve there will be a church vacation school conducted on the ground. This, we feel, is the best way we can care for the children's program. In addition to this, Rev. Chas. Carmen will give a course for workers in church vacation school. This emphasis on C. V. S. at the assembly is evidence of the importance we place upon it in our state work. Next year we are expecting a large increase in the number of schools as well as marked progress in efficiency for we plan to put on intensive training schools on even a larger scale than this past year—Victor N. Witter, State Director.

Rockwell City

We have but a small school here which enrolled a total of twenty-eight pupils. The average attendance was about twenty-three. This was our first attempt. We were more than pleased with results. How much the parents appreciated the work is shown by the fact that they more than paid the expenses of the school and leave a balance in the treasury for next year. The points that especially appeal to the parents is the fact that we are teaching the children to memorize the Bible, old church hymns, teaching them the Bible in such a way that it sticks in their memory, how to live and work with others through handwork and also reverence for the flag and the nation. There is something about the school that is irresistible to the youngsters.

W. J. Robinson.

Worth a Year in Sunday School

With five teachers and five helpers, and an enrolment of sixty-seven the C. V. S. of the First Baptist Church of Northwood was a decided success. The boys and girls were enthusiastic from beginning to end. The nature of the C. V. S. program is such as to give the practical, well-rounded type of work necessary to make for interest and efficiency in religious education. We believe it has been worth a "year in Sunday school." The "object talk" each morning, the salute of the Christian and American flags, songs and memory work, the class stories and the handwork blended in such a way that the mornings slipped away in a profitable manner almost before the boys and girls had realized. Many felt as the senior deacon did who said, "Never before in my life have I seen anything like this." We are planning for a bigger and better C. V. S. next year.—HENRY L. RUST.

Vinton

As a means to the creation of a lively interest, engendering enthusiasm, and getting next to the youngsters, I commend the church vacation school. It also convinces the public that the church really means business. Our school—the first for this church—continued three weeks, and increased in interest and attendance steadily, in spite of berry and cherry picking affording the boys and girls a chance to earn some money. The average attendance was fifty-eight. The cost for books, reed, raffia and sundries, was $21.88. The pupils made an offering of a pint of pennies for vacation schools elsewhere. We used the first, second and fifth themes as given in "Stories for Young Americans" for the instruction period. The pastor was superintendent, and he had eight competent volunteer helpers. On the closing day a program was given in the evening—demonstrating the C. V. S.—and a display of craft work. Parents were surprised and pleased. The unanimous desire of the pupils was, "Oh, let's have this school all summer."—W. J. COULSTON.

Keota

The First Baptist Church of Keota, Iowa, is cooperating in a cummunity daily vacation Bible school. Miss Winnie Teeter of Martinsburg, Iowa, a former teacher here, has been engaged to superintend the school. The enrolment has reached the 200 mark with an average attendance of 150. The churches participating are the Baptist, Christian, Methodist, Presbyterian, and United Presbyterian. The public school building is being used for the sessions of the school. The school will be of three weeks' duration, closing July 20 .

Indianola

This is my second year's experience as director of a community church vacation school. It is an intensely interesting piece of work which brings profitable results both directly and indirectly upon the boys and girls, the homes and the churches. Our community as a whole is thinking in terms of the community rather than in terms of sectionalism. Bible school teachers and day school teachers heartily endorse the C. V. S. The program and methods commend themselves to our homes and churches. Workers in the school are enthusiastic. Boys and girls are already asking "Will we have a C. V. S. next year? We hope so. Patrons find a helpful reaction. The C. V. S. is to have a place in our yearly church program. We're for it.—J. O. WHITE.

Northern California

BY JESSIE HARRISON THOMAS

IN Northern California we have thirty-one vacation schools. Twenty-four are Baptist and seven are community or union schools. Eight schools have not sent in reports. Only four have reported in full. A number of them have not closed, so that it is difficult to get statistics, but in so far as we are able to get the fact there are 2,435 children enrolled.

We have schools among the Japanese, Chinese, Indians, Negroes, Russians, and, of course, our American people. In the combined schools there are about twenty-three nationalities and all creeds and no creeds. In the Japanese mission at Sacramento there are Chinese and other foreigners, and in the Chinese mission at Locke there are Japanese. These schools are a remarkable opportunity to make good American citizens of all children and to teach the word of God to all faiths.

In making his final report, Pastor L. J. Sawyer of Hamilton Square Church, San Francisco said that he "gave about twenty-five hours a day to the work," that "C. V. S. was a whole course to the helpers, an eye-opener to the church, and a big-sized lift for the pupils." The church paid the full expense and made a contribution to help such work in needy places. There were about twenty-five volunteer helpers. The principal only was paid. In the Alameda Church, Pastor L. I. Hansen and wife with all volunteer help conducted a successful school. No outside assistance was asked. In the Central Church, San Francisco, with the exception of one trained worker, the school was conducted by the members, and mainly by those who had been pupils in C. V. S. in former years. Likewise in Bethany Church, Oakland, many of the helpers received their training in their own C. V. S. The pastor of this church, Rev. L. W. Hendrickson, began making preparation for his school last winter. It was one of our great schools. Pastor Lundgren of the Swedish Church, San Francisco, was so pleased with the work that he says he will dream of it until time to begin again next year. At Eureka, Pastor E. E. Duley was his own principal and was mightily pleased with this opportunity which developed the church and advertised it in the community. And so we might go through the whole list of schools giving items of outstanding interest.

The fact is that pastors, teachers, workers, and all who have had part in the work feel that C. V. S. is one of the great opportunities for service real and lasting. Through it the children are taught, the community is reached, the church built up and Christ is glorified.

If

BY NORMAN F. TURNER

(With apologies to Rudyard Kipling)

IF you can hold your own when all around you
Are milling youngsters by the dozen and score
If you can breathe—as they and theirs surround you
And still have courage left to smile once more!
If you can come on time when no one else does
And stick it out until the last one's gone,
Then YOU can be Principal, whoever else is
And will have won a place RIGHT IN THE SUN!

If you can boss—and yet not be a "Nero"
If you can lead—and know that you are right,
If you can work—(let others play the hero)
And then go home and work some more 'til night.
If you can get response from 10-steen nations
Who come to C. V. S. to play and learn
If you can buckle to on war time rations
You've won a right that none can ever spurn.

If you can handle boys with all their cunning,
And girls—who have some funny antics too;
And help to keep all teachers up and coming,
With you yourself, not getting in a stew.
If you can teach deportment and behavior
And throw in Bible lore that isn't dry,
And sing and play to win the whole school's favor
Why, you're the one that ought to stay close by!

If you can stand the Supervisor calling,
As well as bringing other callers too,
If all you do of planning, pulling, hauling
Does not take too much spirit out of you;
Then we are sure you're almost superhuman,
And just the stuff that's needed in this fight
So put your whole soul in—you Man or Woman
And help these many children see the Light!

(Written for, and read at, the Banquet for C. V. S. workers of Northern California, in Melrose Baptist Church, July 9, 1923.)

A Dividend-Paying Work

BY ESTHER W. TURNER

OUT here on the Pacific Coast during the past seven years the strides in vacation school work have been remarkable. A few years ago a church that conducted a school was a curiosity. Now a church failing to care for its children in the vacation period is considered backward.

Since the newness of these schools has worn off this fact has become noticeable: when a school is put on for the first time in a church there is a marked enthusiasm among the children and workers; when a school has become a "steady" this enthusiasm is apt to wane in the case of the workers but wax in the case of the children. To keep up the interest of volunteer helpers is one of the problems confronting us. Just as the Sunday school has demonstrated its vital worth to the church so the vacation school year by year is proving its value in countless ways.

To illustrate: One small church has conducted a good live school for four successive summers. A revival last spring brought into church fellowship several young people whose first contact with the church was through the vacation school. And this same school has developed many excellent leaders as a direct result of the vacation school work. One busy mother was on hand every morning at nine o'clock with her two children at the above mentioned school. When asked how she arranged to come so early she replied, "I wouldn't miss the Bible work for anything, it helps me so much in my Sunday-school teaching."

The work of the vacation school appealed to another mother in such a way that she decided to act as principal. She had been a public school teacher and was then acting as church choir leader. So in spite of the fact that she had two little children and her own work to do she made the attempt backed by a few earnest mothers. For her first year she often had to do her leading with the baby in her arms but the children soon got used to this innovation. She eagerly attended any meetings or classes that promoted the work. Her third school, just closed, has been very successful, testified to by a crowded church on closing night.

A certain principal was conducting a large school in a foreign section of town and she hadn't a Protestant in the school; therefore she encountered trouble in Bible verse memorizing. A friend visited the school one day and saw her difficulty. Knowing what would appeal to the children she offered a generous reward to the one first learning all the verses assigned. Picnic day came which entailed a double car ride. The friend appeared at the station. Immediately she was assailed by a good-sized Irish Catholic girl who began demonstrating her right to the reward at once. For the remainder of the trip choice New Testament verses were poured into the friend's ear and each one had its reference properly attached.

One of our older pastors whose dignity is maintained by a short white beard believes vacation schools beat all organizations for race cooperation. While on his way to his school one day a little black boy ran up to him and slipped his hand in his saying, "You're my grandpa." Teachers find the children get the meaning of what is taught in their own way. A little foreign boy gave his verse this way: "Train up a child in the way he should go and when he is grown up he will know which way to go." In one of our negro schools a little fellow thus gave John 15:1, "I am the true vine and my daddy is the husbandman."

An experiment of getting our Baptist schools together for a demonstration was tried this year both in San Francisco and Oakland with decided success. Each school was given time on the program to put on some of its best work. Songs common to all were sung and splendid exhibitions of craft work were shown. Seeing the work thus grouped was an inspiration to the older ones and served as a means of comparison for the children.

Perhaps the most momentous gathering in connection with our vacation school work in Northern California was the banquet for pastors, principals and workers held one evening just before the schools closed at the Melrose Church, Oakland. The spirit that prevailed can best be summed up in one of our school yells:

"Good, better, best,
Never let it rest
Till your good is better
And your better best."

The constructive part of the program consisted in suggestions and criticisms from many of the leaders present regarding the past and future of the work. A reporter was present to conserve them. A committee will meet later to consider these suggestions carefully and submit them to the workers at large. It is evident that in order to do better and more effective work for the kingdom some of our present methods will need attention and adjustment.

Three-day intensive training schools held in various sections have proved helpful to workers, though experience shows they are far from adequate. It is proposed therefore that weekly sessions be held for fall and spring terms and the matter of training be more thoroughly gone into. By no means the least part of the work is the developing of our young folks in service. This should not be done in a haphazard way but by a well-conducted systematic course. Being trained for the work during the winter will hold them to the task of the summer more effectively.

One of the most telling conclusions arrived at by a principal handling his first school was that while conservation is important, expansion is equally so. To attain this the work must of necessity be carried on from one vacation school period to another.

George Herbert Betts has said, "The church has never yet taken religious education seriously." When it does we shall begin to see its money applied first to the work with children. It will esteem a properly equipped classroom of more value than a pipe organ and a trained paid leader of children of more worth to the progress of Christ's kingdom than a trained paid choir leader. The work with children entails much preparation and consecration but there is no work in the whole world that pays greater dividends.

INTENSIVE TRAINING SCHOOL, KALAMAZOO COLLEGE. PHOTO TAKEN MAY, 1923.

The Intensive Training Conference in the Colleges

ONE of the factors in the rapid growth of vacation schools among Baptist churches is the plan inaugurated by the Publication Society, through Dr. Thomas S. Young, of intensive training conferences in every Baptist college, theological seminary and training school for the purpose of preparing leaders for schools. In this way Doctor Young has been able to reach hundreds of Baptist young people in our colleges and institutes of higher learning. These have gone back to their home churches or into other communities and put on schools. This has been especially valuable to the young theological student. He begins to think in terms of childhood and service. After he has conducted or assisted in a school he is a better and bigger pastor.

Into these intensive training centers are brought pastors and interested workers from the surrounding district. From those who are prepared in this week of intensive training several are chosen by the state leaders to put on similar conferences of shorter duration in various districts or associations in the state. In this way trained leadership is provided for the schools. This trained leadership has made Baptist schools of such high grade that year by year the number of schools and the effectiveness of the schools increase.

In every Baptist summer assembly courses are now offered for workers in vacation schools. Each year this prepares hundreds of young people for leadership in their local churches.

One Hundred Yards of Gingham

By W. James Niven

WE began the first of June and continued throughout the month. It was my first experience, but I assure you a very profitable and happy one; and I have learned that the children themselves love it.

We had the various departments, not unlike those in any other school. The big thing was the teaching of the Bible. The children learned the twenty-third psalm, first psalm and a portion of John 14, the Beatitudes, the books of the Bible and ten other verses. We had a department of basketry, completing perhaps twenty baskets and mats; an art department, supervised by an artist, who taught the children to paint designs for wastepaper baskets, bottles, etc. Ten hammocks were completed; as many woven table mats. In the wood department the boys completed ten halltrees, hot plates, breadboards, wastepaper baskets, etc. We were fortunate in having two kindergarten teachers for the smaller children.

One of the interesting features of the school was the dressmaking department. The suggestion had been made before the school commenced that we have the girls make paper dresses. I thought why not something serviceable and then proceeded to visit one of the merchants of town, who was glad to give one hundred yards of the best gingham, and to the girl who completed the most perfect dress, he awarded material for a silk dress. Eighteen girls completed their garments. It was difficult to select the winner because of the uniform excellence of the work.

This department created such enthusiasm and met with such favor among the parents that I feel it will be continued in our daily vacation Bible school work at Rochester.

The total enrolment was 150, exclusive of teachers. The daily average for the four weeks was 105 plus. We had forty different teachers who assisted during the four weeks. At no session did we have less than nineteen; all voluntary service. We were very fortunate in having for calisthenics a young woman of our church who was assistant coach for the women of our state university. Each department was supervised by a competent leader.

One Sunday evening, we gave the pageant "Happy Land" by Albert H. Gage which introduced the daily vacation Bible school in action. Some things had to be omitted for lack of time, but after this display of the work of the mind and hand, our church is agreed that the daily vacation Bible school is an absolute necessity.

Rochester, Ind.

A Religious Festival for the Summer Time

By Frank G. Ward

THE deep-lying principles which are coming to the surface in the growth of the daily vacation Bible school may be roughly drafted in five paragraphs. (1) Were I in charge of a church I would be loath to take my vacation in the summer time; for this is the free time of the boys and girls; and, as Professor Patten tells us, it is in the leisure time that character in its wholeness is formed. As far as the young people are concerned the vacation period is the time when the church ought to be on its job; it is its opportunity. The privilege of the daily vacation Bible school is to steer these character forming days by utilizing the sense of freedom.

(2) The February bulletin of the City National Bank of New York gives two pages to an experiment in education at Horace Mann's old Antioch College in Ohio. Emphasis is put upon "self-imposed discipline in real situations." By and large our church schools and our public schools are not concerned with "real situations." In so far as this is true the pupils are not free to develop character in its wholeness. But the daily vacation Bible school is as free as the air in the parks to help the children to create their own "real situations," where right qualities of character may be developed.

(3) Purposeful activity is a third feature of the development of character in its wholeness. Much of the time in the ordinary schoolroom has to be given to learning things. But the daily vacation Bible school is relatively free from the "information bureau" limitations; it is free to furnish the activity which is the rock-bottom foundation for character making. Again, this activity must needs be purposeful. Mere "busy work" soon outgrows its attractions, even for the little folks. It taxes the ingenuity of a teacher to find the right way to give outlet to this craving,—for, what is a "real situation" with its chances for "purposeful activity" in one school might not meet the need of another at all. That is the successful daily vacation Bible school which is able to meet this demand.

(4) Social living together is a fourth feature of the daily vacation Bible school. Perhaps there is a call for more of the cooperative activity in these schools than has thus far been developed. "Self-imposed discipline" — to quote again from the Antioch College report— as children and young people shift back and forth and work together at common tasks is a method of character building which furnishes deep foundations against the social strains that we are fast coming to.

(5) Again, all of these features which make for wholeness of character are carried on under the sanction of religion. This means much. A Sunday-school picnic is more than a day in the woods—it is a religious festival; a church school camp is more than a two weeks in the open—it has a profoundly religious setting and it is permeated throughout with principles which have the trademark of Christian living. This is the heart of the daily vacation Bible school, to which it has always been true, and from which it must never depart.—(Excerpt of an address at a joint meeting of the Daily Vacation Bible School Commission and the Commission on Religious Education held in the interest of the Chicago daily vacation Bible school movement.)

Who Should Not Go to a Vacation School

THERE are four kinds of boys and girls who are not wanted in a vacation school. 1. Those who cannot keep a secret. 2. Those who will not make something for mother, sister or brother. 3. Those who do not like fun. 4. Those who will not stick to the end. All others can join.

What Does a Vacation School Do for a Church?

1. It renders service to childhood. Civilization does "march forward on the feet of little children." The church that neglects childhood is the biggest kind of a stupid organization. The most rapidly growing thing on earth is a child. A church that does something for a child will never be forgotten.

2. It trains a body of workers for service with children. Every year scores of teachers go from the vacation school into the teaching force of many Sunday schools. In addition to this, many regular teachers get new ideas of better ways of working with children.

3. It trains boys and girls to look forward to service in their church as workers and teachers. In Bloomington, Ind., out of a group of girls discovered by the vacation school, pastor Rollo C. Spur baptized eight and some of them have become teachers in the Sunday school.

4. It discovers new children for the church. It prepares those who are already in the church for the acceptance of Christ. It strengthens those who are Christians in the Jesus way of living.

5. It makes many new home contacts. After a vacation school a pastor or church visitor has an entrance into many new homes. What an opportunity!

6. It develops an interest and good will on the part of the community in that church.

7. It makes it easier for the church to improve its Sunday school and to start week-day religious instruction.

A Missionary Christmas Tree in July

By Charles Durden

AT a Baptist mission station in far-off Burma lives a Galesburg man named Leo W. Spring. A little while ago this missionary received a trunkful of vacation school material from home. It was the gift of the vacation school boys and girls of Galesburg, Ill.

What joy there was in gathering the contents of that trunk. There was first formed in the vacation school a mission study class of boys and girls who were already church members, and were chosen as the representatives of the various groups of the school. The rest of the school spent the same period in the study of the life of Christ. Under the leadership of an enthusiastic teacher, whose heart was full of the spirit of missions, these children were given a good course in world-wide work.

One evening a week for the vacation school period a missionary program was given. The church has two chapels or missions in the city, and one was held in each of these, with the closing evening in the home church.

The program was called by the attractive name of "A July Christmas Tree." The tree was there too, on a sweltering summer evening, the imitation snow itself well-nigh melted with the heat. The tree was decorated so that one could almost believe it was real Christmas. And the missionary himself, now on furlough, took the company on a real journey to Burma. The costumes of the missionary and his family, the songs in Burmese, the slides of the Board of Promotion, all combined to make it a real missionary night, and at the close the assembled people brought their vacation school gifts, and in the name of the Christ Child, and for the sake of the children of Burma, decorated the July Christmas tree with real gifts of love and devotion.

In different form, but with essentially the same idea, the plan was twice repeated. Three countries were studied during the school period, three countries were used in the evening Christmas tree socials, and the children established a link between their own school and the vacation school in that far-off station of Sandoway, Burma.

The plan lends itself to all sorts of variations. What more attractive than a Japanese evening on some spacious lawn? Let the Christmas tree be a growing evergreen, decorated with multi-colored lights. Let the program be one of pageantry and missionary recitations by the boys and girls of the vacation school. Even missionary stereopticon pictures can be used most effectively outdoors. Having announced the nature of the gifts beforehand, let these summer guests fill a substantial box to reach the far-off field by Christmas.

A lawn party, a porch party, an evening at the church, all gathered about the Christmas tree in mid-summer, it catches the imagination in the difficult days, besides making an excellent variation in the vacation school program, and teaching the boys and girls practical missionary work.

In West Virginia

By A. B. Withers

CHURCH Vacation School work has had little hold on the imagination of West Virginia Baptists until within the past three or four years. Gradually, however, our church people are awakening and there is now a delightful and growing interest in all sections of the state. Three years ago, we began holding training schools, one or two a year, lasting three to five days, to which our churches were urged to send their pastors and two or more delegates. This aroused some interest and encouraged the organization of ten or twelve schools.

This year, however, we have adopted a new plan. Instead of holding one or two training schools in as many different cities, we decided to put church vacation school work into all our institutes and our conventions. West Virginia Baptists have twenty-one Baptist Sunday-school and young people's conventions with two-day, five-session programs. We are urging all these to adopt a uniform program this year, which will include a whole afternoon devoted to vacation school work. There are addresses on "The Nature and Need of the Vacation School," "The Program of a Vacation School," a round-table discussion, and a craft work demonstration period. Nearly all our conventions have adopted this program. More than half of them have held their convention meeting, and the interest in this phase of religious education has been indeed very gratifying. More than one school has been organized, where such work was before utterly unknown, simply through the information given at these meetings. The number of our schools will be almost double that of last year.

The director has acted as a sort of superintendent's agency for schools needing paid superintendents, and he has placed several workers in charge of schools or as helpers in such schools.

We have been indeed fortunate in having the services this spring and summer of Miss Vivian Beard, a native of West Virginia, but who until recently has been in charge of vacation school work in Buffalo and other cities, having many schools under her supervision. The director makes engagements for her to go to churches, make a survey of work done and needed, and train the workers preparatory to launching their vacation school. Miss Beard has touched in this way already, a goodly number of churches and her work is bearing fruit.

In our assembly, which will be held Aug. 7-13 at Philippi, we are to have one whole period throughout the six days devoted to this and kindred phases of work, under the supervision of our national director, Doctor Young. In addition there will be craft work demonstration each afternoon.

In our Baptist girls' encampment at Alderson, Aug. 22-27, we are to have a similar program of work in charge of Mrs. Pearl Jones who has been studying religious education in the training school at Fort Worth, Tex.

With all this educational work, we ought to have a large increase in vacation schools next year.

Parkersburg.

A Rural School

IT is gratifying to know the good work done by Miss Balch during the two weeks of the Bible vacation school at Russell, Ill. I think her works will bear fruit many years hence, as the little boys and girls whom she taught will not soon forget the things sown in their lives by her.

Some of the folks here thought it would not be worth while to have the school this year as there were so many children gone out of the vicinity, but after the school was started we found out that we had a better average attendance than last year.

You find so many people who think they haven't the time to study about God and the development of the spiritual side of life and they need the children on the farms; I think it's a mighty good way to teach them that they ought to take time to study and teach and send their children where they might hear and learn the best things of life.

Miss Balch got into a home that has never had much to do with the church and the girl at home became so interested that she worked with Miss Balch and is still working with the children each Friday afternoon. I am rather looking forward to her becoming a member of the church. I am praying for her. Will you please pray for her?

We are wondering if it would be possible to have Miss Balch next year again. Anyway we are going to ask in plenty of time.

I think that there will never be any more opposition again toward the D. V. B. S. as they all realize as never before the great need of the school and the good it can do for all of us.

L. N. Oskins.

Russell, Illinois.

(Note: Miss Mary Balch, who taught this school, is a recent graduate of the Baptist Missionary Training School, Chicago. She goes to Wyoming to take up rural work.)

A D. V. B. S. Joy School

By James R. Shanks

OUR church vacation "joy school" ran for four weeks with fine success. I must tell you a little experience of yesterday. While talking enthusiastically about my school to a farmer friend he "'lowed" that the children were worked too hard in school and should have their summer free from school restraints. One of my boys came in at that moment looking for a box to make a tackle box from. I said "Kent, we do not have a hard school but a real joy school, do we?" He said—"You tell 'em." I felt that I had proved my point.

I wonder if our joy idea is original or borrowed. My memory is so slippery that I dare not say.

At present we have fifty-seven in the school and the average attendance is high.

Instead of closing in three weeks we ran the school four weeks. I wish we might go five and hope to do so next year.

I find that boys and girls have original ideas which they like to work out and which are of real educational value. We are to follow the plan in our basketry of letting those who can do so plan and shape their basket.

The plan of charging a small tuition fee is working well. It will help largely to meet the expenses of the school.

Our "joy school" closed with a great demonstration that captured the people. Our display of craft work was splendid. Besides many things on display we had seventy-eight reed baskets of all shapes and sizes, some of which were very artistic. Tackle boxes and auto trucks were popular with the boys.

Princeton, Ill.

The Daily Vacation Bible School Movement in Chicago

By Emerson O. Bradshaw

"CONTRARY to the fears of the fearful, it appealed to the children so thoroughly that on the first morning there was a crowd waiting at each door before the opening hour." These are the words of Dr. Robert G. Boville, the founder of the daily vacation Bible school. It was back in 1901 when four churches of New York City ventured to open their doors to the boys and girls daily for a period of six weeks. "It appealed to the children" the founder says. Here lies the secret of the success of a movement which is now scarcely a generation old and which ranks in importance with the school founded by Robert Raikes.

Will it work in Chicago, was the question asked in the early spring of 1907. This was at a luncheon meeting of the officers of the Chicago Church Federation. Doctor Boville was at this historic meeting. He told the story of long summer vacations, idle children, idle churches, dangerous thoroughfares, children by the thousand thronging the city streets and hundreds of idle students on vacation. He also cited the experience of the churches of New York. "If it works in New York it will work in Chicago," was the decision. So, true to the Chicago spirit, a committee was appointed and operations began. Four schools were organized and successfully operated the first season. They were all in industrial neighborhoods, for it was the social service appeal that gave the movement its start in all the large cities.

The old committee, which was first appointed by the Chicago Church Federation, later became known as the Daily Vacation Bible School Association—an independent organization. As the local denominational offices become more and more active in promoting schools, it became apparent to all that some kind of a federated plan would have to be worked out. This took place in 1917, when the old association ceased to exist and a completely federated committee was organized.

In 1920 the Daily Vacation Bible School Federation unanimously requested that the Chicago Church Federation permit its director of religious education to become the executive secretary of the D. V. B. S. Federation. A request was also made for office space for general headquarters and clerical help. All of these requests were granted by the board of trustees. For the first time in the history of the movement in Chicago a permanent year-around headquarters was established.

The new plan worked out so well and the cooperation of the denominations was so satisfactory that sentiment developed rapidly for a complete merger with the Chicago Church Federation. This took place early in 1922, when the Daily Vacation Bible School Federation unanimously requested that the board of trustees adopt it as the Daily Vacation Bible School Commission. Since the merger many of the old problems have disappeared and the movement has advanced with a new momentum.

The following table giving the gross enrolment from year to year speaks for itself.

| | 16 Seasons | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Year | Schools | Baptist | Enrolment |
| 1907 | 4 | | 919 |
| 1908 | 5 | | 976 |
| 1909 | 8 | | 2,307 |
| 1910 | 10 | | 1,967 |
| 1911 | 12 | | 2,708 |
| 1912 | 17 | | 3,650 |
| 1913 | 21 | | 4,285 |
| 1914 | 30 | | 5,385 |
| 1915 | 48 | | 9,818 |
| 1916 | 71 | | 12,011 |
| 1917 | 72 | 14 | 12,562 |
| 1918 | 75 | 24 | 13,088 |
| 1919 | 102 | 38 | 16,271 |
| 1920 | 164 | 48 | 21,400 |
| 1921 | 192 | 66 | 26,845 |
| 1922 | 200 | 77 | 29,460 |
| Total | 1,031 | 267 | 163,652 |

Chicago has never witnessed such a spirit of cooperation and such complete harmony among communities, denominations and churches as is now attending the advance of this movement. Each denomination promotes, supervises and finances the schools of its own constituency. The Daily Vacation Bible School Commission, which is constituted of officially appointed representatives of the cooperating denominations plans the program, conducts training conferences for teachers, operates a common store of materials and supplies, promotes and supervises the work in union schools and the smaller denominations, and promotes the work generally by means of publicity.

The Chicago plan is working out very satisfactorily, and there is every assurance that from year to year there will not only be an increase in the number of schools, but a corresponding increase in efficiency and effectiveness.

---

The report of the government owned and operated Swiss railways for 1922 shows a deficit of 45,513,697 Swiss francs, which is approximately $9,102,735. Passenger and freight rates in Switzerland are higher today than ever before.

How To Do Personal Work

By Rollin H. Walker

HUMILITY is the gateway of all success in religious work. Men are forever failing to do business in the way of getting individual men to espouse Jesus Christ and lead better lives, for the simple reason that they want to do things in big meetings and in a public and showy fashion. They are not willing to immerse their whole lives in the problems of a friend or neighbor. They feel that one man is not quite big enough to absorb their whole thought, and so they end by not getting any man. On the other hand, if a man will give himself utterly to the winning of one person, the way he does that one piece of work will be an inspiration for many others to do the same thing, and it will oftimes give him material and impetus for public work that will reach many men. But he must always begin with the individual and stay with him until he gets him across the line.

In this there is no need of a strained and unhealthy intensity. We should simply go at the work of winning our one man patiently, smilingly, wisely, prayerfully and persistently. We should utilize all the help of all our friends who may in any wise be able to exert a helpful influence upon him. In the course of time a very large proportion of men who find themselves the focus of general interest, will yield to the good influence and come over to the side of God. Let us have done with our paroxysm of discouragement about the failure of the church. Let us begin on the individual, and stay with him, and if there is to be any discouragement let it not be about empty churches, but rather about the hard-heartedness of the individual man toward the conspiracy of many good people in their sane and sensible efforts to win him over to discipleship for Jesus Christ.

But suppose we have centered upon the individual. Just what is our end and aim with him? It is to make him feel that God is centering his kindly and gracious thought upon him just as we are, the only difference being that the intensity of God's interest, and its sincerity, is greater just in proportion as God is greater than man. Once bring a man to see and to feel this truth, and everything else that is good will follow. The Son of man came to seek and to save that which was lost. A man does not have to go on a pilgrimage to find God, nor grope about vainly for something intangible and unreal. "The word is nigh thee, in thy mouth, and in thy heart: that is, the word of faith, which we preach: because if thou shalt confess with thy mouth Jesus as Lord, and shalt believe in thy heart that God raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved."

Now no man for one moment will believe this unless we present to him some example of the solicitude which we tell him God has for him. A God who is proclaimed from the public platform by a preacher who merely deals with men in masses, does not take hold of the conscience and the life of the individual. Jesus doubtless won many men by his public preaching, but it was only because those who heard him preach knew that the rest of his time was spent in personal ministration, and that he would be only too eager and glad to help them if they could just get near him. Our business, then, is to make men feel that Christ is near them and that they can touch the hem of his garment. And the only way we can do this is by constant, self-sacrificing, and very brave effort to touch personally and individually those with whom God brings us in contact.

How much wisdom this will take! How much sagacity! How much love! And especially with us in our extreme anxiety to be popular and not to seem queer, how much courage it will take! But if we will just center our lives upon winning the lost we need have no fear of becoming unhealthily religious. The unhealthily religious people are almost always those who are not in constant battle for the saving of aggressively bad people. They are the sheltered folk, apart from the rude shock of contact with sin. But men who are seeking to win outbreaking sinners are fairly forced to be human and natural in order to get any contact at all with them.

Let us be sure that our message is simple. Let us forever in constantly varying forms repeat the great fundamentals, such as God loves you and he expects you in return to love him and to express that love by service to your fellowmen. Everything else springs out of these simplicities. All the mystical experiences and all the theology that is necessary will naturally grow out of the thought that the kindly Christ who died for our sins represents how God feels toward us all the time,—and that therefore we must express our gratitude to him by exhibiting the same charity and mercy toward our fellow sinners.

Latest Notes from the Field

THIRTY vacation schools in Baptist churches in the Metropolitan area of New York City.

About 200 vacation schools in the Chicago area. The Baptists lead with more than seventy schools.

Detroit reports twenty-six schools in which thirty-five different Baptist churches cooperate. There are sixty-five schools of all denominations.

Pittsburgh has more than 100 schools. Baptists, as usual, are leading.

Kansas reports more than 100 per cent increase in the number of schools.

Michigan says, "The schools at some of our rural centers are a new experiment this year and the reports thus far are very favorable."

Indiana reports, "We believe we have 100 schools. Every report is brimming over with enthusiasm. Many pastors are finding themselves in this new work. The outlook is good for 10,000 pupils in Indiana this summer. We held twenty-four intensive training conferences in various parts of the state. We now have approximately 1,000 workers and teachers with experience in school work."

Rev. E. B. Fitch, pastor of the Baptist church at Ashtubula, Ohio, is general supervisor of the three vacation schools enrolling more than 400.

New Jersey Baptists had forty-four schools last year; seventy-five this year. Illinois will have at least a 50 per cent increase in the number of schools.

Wisconsin reports many new schools and deep interest.

The Open Forum

WHAT IS SCIENTIFIC EVOLUTION?

The article by Ellen A. Copp in the Open Forum of June 30, contains some interesting "food for thought." Its general purpose—to secure the right kind of teaching in our schools—is commendable and timely. The need for correct conceptions and definitions is important and great. Miss Copp accepts, as the definition of scientific evolution, that given fourteen years ago by a professor in the University of Wisconsin, "Evolution is the development of organic forms by the operation of the forces of nature without design" and comments thus: "The phrase 'without design' plainly denies a plan in nature's operations. It does not recognize a creator as having any part in the development of living beings. Scientific evolution adopts, as its fundamental principle the materialistic idea of the universe. . . . It denies the existence of spirit and rejects the idea of an infinite creator." She says "a Christian need not reject the theory of a directed, creative evolution . . . but this is not scientific evolution." Her position is like that of President Mullins of the Louisville Theological Seminary, who says that the evolution of the Christian "is in the strict sense not a theory of evolution."

It would seem to be fair to look to scientists for a definition of scientific facts or theories, as Miss Copp has done and as opponents of evolution are fond of doing, selecting such definitions as seem to confirm their views. But before adopting those definitions as the only correct ones, two important questions should be considered.

1. Has the scientist, in his definition, added to the facts, or to the hypothesis concerning the facts, a philosophy which is no essential part of the facts? The scientist deals with facts and their relations. When he begins to philosophize about the ultimate cause of all facts, though of course he has a right to do this, he is out of the sphere of strict science and such philosophical ideas should have no place in his definitions. Suppose a scientist should state the definition or law of gravitation thus: "Every body attracts every other body with a force, not divine, which varies, etc." We would say that the words "not divine" have no place in the definition, not because they are not true, but because the fact of gravitation is exactly the same whether they are true or not. So evolution, if true, is a fact that remains the same whether God has anything to do with it or not and its definition should not include any statement or implication as to the relation of the fact to a divine power or personality. Evolution is neither atheistic nor deistic. The fact of evolution is the same whether held by an atheist or by a Christian; the philosophy associated with the fact is different.

2. Another thing to be considered is the exact meaning which the scientist attaches to the language of his definition. It is not easy for most people to get the point of view of true science. There is a sense, for example, in which it is true that the operations of nature are without design. We personify nature, and as such we perceive that she works with a definite purpose in view. Nature, however, is not a person, but an aggregate of forces, and as such does not design anything any more than a screw machine designs to make screws. But just as the machine in its operation shows the design of its maker, so nature gives evidence of the design of its author. When a hen lays an egg, she has no design either to furnish food for man or to hatch a chick, but both designs of her Maker are manifest. Now the scientist deals with nature as an impersonal dynamic, while the theologian thinks of the personal Being who is its author. It may be that the teacher of science sometimes confines his teaching too much to the scientific viewpoint, so that his pupils lose sight of the personality which animates nature. A student ought not to get infidel ideas with the first bulb he examines. If he does, either the teaching is wrong or his faith rests upon a false basis. And when he recovers his faith, it will be found resting on a deeper and surer foundation than before.

It will be seen that I question Miss Copp's statement that "the theory of a directed or creative evolution . . . is not scientific evolution." Even Darwin recognized the creator in the evolutionary process. I have submitted the Wisconsin professor's definition quoted by Miss Copp to one of the leading biologists of today, a professor in one of the foremost universities of America. He cites with approval Joseph Le Conte's definition, "Evolution is the development of organic beings through the operation of the laws of nature by means of resident forces" which is substantially that given above except the phrase "without design." "But" he writes, "when the definition adds 'without design' it goes further than the facts will justify and much further than the leaders of biological science, whether in this country or in Europe, would be willing to go." He also says, "There has been no material change in the position of scientists respecting the question of design in nature during the past fourteen years, though I think it is true that there has been a tendency to return more and more to the view that there is an underlying design in all nature."

Our youth should by all means be taught the truth about religion, but this cannot be done by denying or withholding or misrepresenting the facts of nature.

—Geo. H. Felton.

Berea, Ky.

---

Magic

By Ralph M. Jones

THERE is a story somewhere about a peddler in old iron. He had found an old box covered with paint. He had given six and six pence for it. One day his curiosity was aroused by the uncommon thickness of the paint; there must have been a dozen coats in all. He took it forthwith to a certain Jew, Isaac Rubens, who called straightway for turpentine, and began to work at the box with a rag and a penknife. After arduous labor a corner of the box was uncovered, and Isaac Rubens marvelled at what he saw.

"This," said he, "is a Limoges box of the very finest period. It is copper inlaid with enamel. It is a most amazing find!"

As matters turned out the box which had been bought for a song was sold for a fortune.

I presume such things happen in real life as well as in fiction. Old iron boxes become Limoges wonder-boxes, just as pumpkins become golden chariots or limousines. But in the magic realm of education (which some refuse to regard as real life) such wonders are very common. Treasures buried out of sight become suddenly visible. Talents submerged in ignorance are splendidly uncovered. Gifts that might never have seen the light of day begin to glow and coruscate. That's what education does. It does not create talents any more than Isaac Rubens created that Limoges box, but it uncovers them and makes them shine and glow. It does more than that, I know, but it does that anyway.

Education is magic.

---

Isaac F. Marcosson, the well-known magazine writer, in a recent article in the Saturday Evening Post said: "One thing is certain; if prohibition went to a vote throughout the United States tomorrow it would carry. Prohibition is getting beyond the joke stage, and the joke will soon be on those well-known advocates of personal liberty."

Among the daily vacation Bible schools in New York is a school made possible by the generosity of gold star mothers. It was started by a mother who lost her only children, three sons, and who made a large donation. Several other gold star mothers became interested and made anonymous contributions. There are two branches, a city and country.

Young People's Work

Topic for August 19

How to Get On in Life. Deut. 8:1-18

There are very few people in the world who are not trying to "get on" in one way or another. Even the tramp and vagabond have their way of doing it. The question for most of us is: "How are we going to get on in the best possible way?" Just a few suggestions:

1. A true view of life. This is absolutely essential to success. In all probability the greater number of the ills of the world are due to sordid and unworthy conceptions of life. For some the great objective seems to be just pleasure, others education, others money-getting, others economic power, others political power, and so on. The eighth chapter of Deuteronomy calls us back to the very starting point of real living.

2. A proper attitude toward others. There are a good many people who feel down deep in their hearts that their attitude toward God is all right. They claim to be following Jesus, and yet they have not learned the meaning of the term "brother." Recently I took a long railway trip from Chicago to a distant city. I sat in the observation car wondering just how many people really contributed to my comfort and safety. A thunder storm had just cleared late in the evening, (after working hours.) I saw the track men bring out the little car and start off down the tracks. It was for my safety. There were the engineers, firemen, linemen, signal men, conductors, brakemen, porters, cooks, waiters, farmers, cattle men, etc. Probably between 500 and 1,000 people were directly concerned with my welfare. The question came back again and again—is my attitude toward these people what it ought to be?

3. A definite purpose. The driftwood on the river just moves on with the current. Maybe it will be cast aside and left to rot, or it may finally reach the ocean and be set adrift upon its great bosom. Such is the fate of a life without a definite purpose. Young people must find a satisfactory answer to the question, "What am I in this world for?" or "What shall I do with my life?" The heroes and heroines of the Bible are the people who loved and served to the very best of their abilities. The heroes and heroines of our great country are those who counted it a joy to serve their fellows, and who were willing to suffer in pursuit of a great ideal or life purpose.

4. A vital relationship to the Master of Men. The place of Jesus in history and in the life of his people does not have to be argued any more. There are thousands of men and women, who, though differing in their way of thinking about Jesus, acknowledge him as Saviour and Lord. They have come under the sway of his great personality and their lives have been changed. They have seen low ideals and base passions give way in his presence. Our achievements may not make the headlines of the morning newspapers and our fellows may not proclaim us an overwhelming success, but if down deep in our own souls there is a sense of rightness with him and a sense of fellowship with the unseen, let us take heart and be glad.

These pages are for all Baptist young people's organizations. Send news items on activities, organizations, plans and methods of work for publication in THE BAPTIST to James Asa White, General Secretary 143 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago.

Convention Impressions

The International B. Y. P. U. Convention has given me a broader view of the number of Baptist young people there are in North America. It has also given me some ideas how to conduct my own society.—LaVerne Jackson.

I have been impressed above all with the enthusiasm of this convention. We from Canada feel that in this coming together of all young people of America the ties of union between Canada and the United States will be strengthened more than ever before. This is like the parade of soldiers. All is enthusiasm. But the real test is on the battlefield when we must "go over the top." Our battlefield is our home town, when some of the glamour of this convention has passed. That will be the real test and may we too "go over the top" in making others long to serve "the attractive Christ."—Grace Perry.

Words cannot express my thanks to the Master for his affording me the opportunity of attending this convention. Oh, I pray that I may go back to Ohio and tell others about the wonderful Christ. —Lulu Swartz.

I have been impressed with the fact of so many young men and women thinking the business of the King so worth while they are willing to invest time and talents in its advancement.—Mabelle S. Mackay.

This convention has made me realize more fully than ever before that my "attractive Christ" has a place for me.—Hazel Stout.

The convention has shown me that I am fighting with one of the strongest and most aggressive armies of righteousness in the world.—Raymond Tucker.

This is my first B. Y. P. U. convention and I do not regret having attended. I believe more of the members of my society will attend next year after the inspiration awakened in those attending this year.—Grace B. Frearson.

My first B. Y. P. U. of A. convention. —but by the grace of God, not the last. —has brought to me a realization that only through cooperation of the northern, southern, and Canadian young people, can we accomplish what is intended we should.—Dewey M. Taft.

This convention has been a great inspiration to us and we intend to go back to Mt. Gilead, Ohio, and do more for our B. Y. P. U.—Bessie Beckley, Mildred Mozier, Julia Mozier.

The B. Y. P. U. of A. convention has taught me that one need not go to foreign lands to do real Christian service.

This convention, my first, has inspired me to go back with a greater zeal to do more for him and help others to see the great attractiveness of our Saviour and Lord.—Esther Olson.

It has been a great inspiration to me, and I have had a blessed fellowship with the young people.—May Thompson.

First Church, Jacksonville, Ill.

Since the first of the year our senior B. Y. P. U. has been testing out a new form of program that is meeting with popular favor. It is nothing more nor less than the program followed in college literary societies. How long it will hold good, one cannot tell, but it is a decided change from the old group system. The program committee outlines the programs for a period of six weeks. The order is opening song, first roll call prayer, scripture reading, song, select (scripture verse response), opening reading, special music, prepared article (written or oral), extempore address, business meeting, prepared article, critic's report, open meeting and discussion, second roll call, closing song, benediction.

The president is always the presiding officer and is seated at a table beside the secretary. The latter calls the numbers as they occur. Parliamentary requirements, such as addressing the chair when rising and other similar details, are rigidly enforced. All speakers come to the front and face the audience. Reading or clipping articles from the magazine Service is banned. All the addresses must be as nearly original as possible. The danger of being called on for an "extempore" or of being criticized by the critic has not diminished the attendance. The meetings are full of "pep" and the audience is kept on the tiptoe of expectancy. The beauty of it is that everybody is "on the job." To put more "go" into it the organization has just inaugurated an attendance contest, with twenty-three young men arrayed against twenty-one young women. The president, Paul Gard, is the brother of Wayne Gard, who two years ago went out from this society to teach in the Cushing High School at our Baptist College in Rangoon, Burma.

A. P. HOWELLS.

Religious Education

Church Vacation School Reports

By Thomas S. Young

1. First Baptist Church, Mendota, Ill.: The pastor, Rev. C. T. Goodsell, conducted the school for two weeks as an experiment. He was so fully satisfied that a five weeks' school has been decided upon for next summer. Opened with enrolment of fifty-five; closed with enrolment of sixty-six; average attendance, sixty. (This is a fine average.) Thirteen volunteer teachers.

2. First Baptist Church, Hoopeston, Ill., Rev. Lester Boyd, pastor: The pastor was a worker in this vacation school, with Mrs. P. P. Gannon as principal. Total enrolment was 91; average attendance sixty. Children pled for school to continue all summer. "A strong bond of fellowship and new understanding was created between pastor and pupils."

3. Bessemer Mission, Pueblo, Colo., Rev. Antonio Jumenez, pastor: The school was conducted by the Woman's Home Mission Society. It was assisted by the Publication Society, under Doctor Ripley. Principal of school, Alma B. Clifford. Total enrolment, 137. Average attendance, 79.

4. First Baptist Church, Sioux Falls, S. D., Rev. E. J. Chane, pastor: Total enrolment sixty-five. Average attendance, thirty-three.

5. Holmesburg Baptist Church, Philadelphia, Rev. A. Z. Myers, pastor: Community school. Opened with an enrolment of eighty-six. All volunteer teachers.

6. Baptist Church, Princeton, Ill., Rev. James Shanks, pastor: "We are having a fine church vacation joy school. I am insisting upon emphasis upon the joy and finding a hearty response in the children. This is the best piece of work I do throughout the year."

7. Jerseyville Baptist Church, Jerseyville, Ill., Rev. J. B. Favoright, pastor: "Our C. V. S. was a splendid success. Had our exhibit yesterday with a fine display. Had a stream of folks for nearly three hours. Sold $35 worth to pupils and some friends and incidentally woke up Jerseyville some.'"

Final reports for church vacation schools are just beginning to come in to the vacation school division headquarters, Philadelphia. The prospects for the summer are for a very large increase in the number of schools over any preceding year.

The Director of Religious Education for Northern California, Dr. M. L. Thomas, sent in the following report of vacation schools.

The First Church of Fresno, Rev. T. B. Frizelle, pastor, is carrying on a community school which has enrolled over 400. Each Sunday a department of this school visited one or more Sunday schools where a demonstration was given of the vacational school program. This is a fine idea.

Pastor Licklider, of the Memorial Church, Fresno, is carrying on a successful independent school.

The Fresno Chinese Mission, under the direction of Miss Purcell, of the Woman's Home Mission Society, has a successful vacation school.

Chico, in spite of the handicap of the illness of Pastor A. D. Berry, principal of the school, is meeting with good success.

From Camden, N. J., through Rev. C. R. Hensch, executive secretary, we have reports from two schools. The first week of the Italian Mission closed with an average attendance for the week of 112. Miss Zelda B. Waters, head worker of the center under the Woman's Home Mission Society, is principal.

Highland Mission. A vacation school is being conducted for the first time at Highland Mission. There is no organized church at this point. Considering the small constituency, the attendance of an average of fifty-seven for the first week is excellent.

International Sunday School Lesson for August 19

STEPHEN THE MARTYR
Lesson: Acts 6:1-8:3; 22:20
Golden Text: Romans 8:35

Introductory

The stoning of Stephen took place outside the walls of Jerusalem where he was taken after the charge against him at the regular meeting-place of the Sanhedrin in Jerusalem. The time was probably 36 to 37 A. D. during the interim following Pilate's deposition and before the appointment of another procurator.

The Lesson

Stephen, "full of grace and power, wrought great wonders and signs among the people." This is always likely to make enemies among a certain type of people. Stephen's persecution rose up from among those that were of the synagogue of the Libertines, the Cyrenians, the Alexandrians and of Cilicia and Asia. They revolted because they "were not able to withstand the wisdom, and the Spirit by which he spake." Then they went about stirring up the people against him, setting up false witnesses and suborning men to say they had heard him speak blasphemously against Moses and against God and that he said that "this Jesus of Nazareth shall destroy this place, and shall change the customs which Moses hath delivered unto us." Among these people contempt of Moses was equivalent to contempt of God and this was punishable by death. During his trial those who watched Stephen "saw his face as it had been the face of an angel." Stephen's defense aroused his enemies to fury so that "they gnashed on him with their teeth." But Stephen gave no heed to them for he "looked steadfastly into heaven and saw the glory of God." When he told of his vision they "rushed upon him with one accord; and they cast him out of the city and stoned him: and the witnesses laid down their garments at the feet of a young man named Saul." This is the first mention of the Saul who became Paul the apostle. Stephen's last words were those of his Master for whose sake he died, "Lord, lay not this sin to their charge."

Leading Thoughts

1. Calmness is the state of a Christian who walks with God. 2. Death of the body means little to those who live for the spirit. 3. "Blessed are they that are persecuted for righteousness' sake."

Harvest Time in Hungary

By Attila Csopjak

Hungary is an agricultural country, therefore the harvest is of great importance. The result of it shows the economical increase or decrease. The harvest time begins ordinarily the last days of June. But the spiritual harvest of the Baptist mission comes before that time. Baptisms are frequent occurrences in several places in the country, and often take place during the year. But in the villages in summer one gathers the fruit of the spiritual work of the winter. With the Whitsuntide holidays the baptisms begin and last many weeks. Our newspaper, the Peace Messenger, was often informed this year of baptisms in the whole land. Our preacher in one town one day baptized sixty-nine persons and in another town, fifty-nine in two days. The result of the four weeks after Whitsuntide was approximately 400 souls which makes 4 per cent of all our members. We now hope that the result of the whole year will be more than 12 per cent. It was the same last year. In the beginning of the year 1920, the number of Baptists in our little country was 7,000; at the end of 1922, about 10,000.

There is religious liberty in our land. The interest for the gospel is very great in several Catholic villages. In Allas, a neighboring town in Roumania, our brethren are persecuted. There are 6,000 Hungarian speaking Baptists but our newspapers and books did not have permission to pass the frontier. Notwithstanding this, the work of our mission showed progress. The little army now has a printing office and has newspapers which compensates for the deficiency.

The Chimney Corner

GOD hath so many ships upon the sea!
His are the merchantmen that carry treasure,
The men-of-war, all bannered gallantly,
The little fisher-boats and barks of pleasure.
On all the sea of time there is not one
That sailed without the glorious Name thereon.

So I, that sail in peril on the sea
With my beloved, whom yet the waves may cover,
Say, God hath more than angel's care of me
And larger share than I in friend or lover.
Why weep ye so, ye watchers on the land?
The deep is but the hollow of his hand.

—Carl Spencer.

The Little White Ships of the Inland Sea

This department is conducted by Miss Margaret T. Applegarth. Communications to her may be addressed in care of THE BAPTIST.

THE last of the little articles we have been printing about Japan will deal with the Baptist gospel ship, the Fukuin Maru of which we have all been so proud for the last twenty years, for it has been a dream come true. For Dr. R. A. Thomson it was who began to dream a dream of getting in touch with the million lonely unvisited islanders living in isolated hamlets tucked here and there in the folds of green hills. It was Mr. Robert Allan, of the Allan Steamship Line of Scotland, who made the dream a reality by giving to our Baptist Foreign Mission Board $15,000 for a gospel ship. It was Captain Luke Bickel who was peculiarly fitted for this unique missionary task by his training in the British Merchant Marine and later in the London City Mission, who was made captain of the new vessel.

In 1899 the little white ship began her maiden voyage. First months were anxious ones. The crew, by necessity a group of picked-up rather than picked men, were rough Japanese sailors who drank and gambled. They were not long in daily contact with a man of Captain Bickel's character before a change was noticeable. One after another the entire crew was converted and the men became an aid rather than a hindrance to the work which their captain was trying to do.

At first the strange ship met with opposition from the islanders who were rather proud of their independence and isolation. But the coldness soon thawed before the geniality of the captain and his wife and the insistent friendliness of their little son and daughter. Mr. Harrington has written an ideal biography "Captain Bickel Of The Inland Sea" showing the rare winsomeness of the tall captain—his letters to his children alone are little gems, while the actual work on the islands is a romance of the gospel magic. Towns that had signed documents swearing not to let the "Jesus Man" enter were flung wide open when the ship's flag appeared in port. All these towns were systematically and regularly visited; Christian libraries scattered freely, until today over 50,000 persons have regular preaching and over 3,500 are enrolled in fifty-two Sunday schools.

In 1917 the little white ship became a ship of mourning. The pioneer captain, the friend of the islanders, had been guided by the great Pilot into another wider sea without horizon. Stormy days followed, for Mr. Briggs who took up the captain's work with such courage and enthusiasm was called all too soon to the captain's side. Then Captain Bickel's son undertook the work for a time so that, in spite of the storms, the work has been carried on continually until today it is one of the most unique enterprises undertaken by Baptists anywhere in the world.

* * *

EACH man is the Captain of his Soul,
And each man his own Crew,
But the Pilot knows the Unknown Seas,
And He will bring us through.

So— Ho for the Pilot's orders,
Whatever course He makes!
For He sees beyond the sky-line,
And He never makes mistakes.

—JOHN OXENHAM.

INCIDENTS OF THE INLAND SEA

AN ignorant jinrikisha coolie named Ode San became converted at the age of sixty-seven and returned from the mainland to his native village to preach, as he said. Since he could not write, could read the Bible only by spelling out each word and spoke most crudely, Captain Bickel was somewhat dismayed at having him the first representative of Christianity in his town. Three months after his conversion, the captain received a card, saying "Come preach." He went and found an audience of 400 waiting for him.

How had Ode aroused this interest? He had gone to a house where a sick man lay and offered to help the wife in any way he could. He had drawn water and carried wood until the man was well. He had visited all the sick of the town and offered help in the same way, preaching by his kindly acts and simple words. When he announced a meeting, 400 of his townsmen responded. He has spoken personally to 58,000 people and has opened up four islands since his conversion, so now they call him "Pilgrim's Progress"!

A JAPANESE school principal was baptized and immediately lost his position. All work was refused him and his relatives and friends waited for him to reject his new belief in the face of poverty. They were dumbfounded when he returned to town after a short absence and began selling pencils and paper. Their jeering ceased immediately. He is now an honored and successful evangelist among his own people.

* * *

God's ships of treasure sail upon the sea
Of boundless love, of mercy infinite,
To change their course, retard their onward way,
Nor wind nor wave hath might.
Prayer is the tide for which the vessels wait
Ere they can come to port. And if it be
The tide is low, how then canst thou expect
The treasure ship to see?

The Young Reserves

The Pirate Party

BY PEGGY

UP here in the mountains where we are staying we have just had the loveliest party given for us, and I thought perhaps the other Young Reserves would like to read about it. It began, as lots of nice parties do begin, with a box of candy! For the young lady who gave the party had a box of candy given to her on her birthday, but it wasn't so much the candy that started the party as the box itself, for it was called a "Pleasure Island Box" and was decorated with pictures of terrible pirates counting gold ducats stored in deep barrels, while other pirates sailed over turquoise seas and brandished frightful swords. The candy in the box was wrapped in either gold or silver paper to represent hidden treasure, and was put in bags, exactly like booty taken on the high seas! It was all very exciting, and when the young lady promised to give a Pirate Party on the first rainy afternoon, we all fixed our eyes on the sky and for once in our lives wished it would rain. But it didn't, not for two solid weeks of fourteen days, until we began to be really most impatient, and the Young Lady finally agreed to have it anyway. I guess the farmers were glad that we didn't wait any longer, because it rained the next day!

Well, we certainly had fun. First there was a guessing game called "The Cruise of the Phantom Butterfly" to:

1. An island which never changes color?
2. An island which is always being newly discovered?
3. Another which offers frozen refreshments?
4. One which ought to interest young ladies?
5. An island which is the square of a square?
6. Another where only the "Four Hundred" are welcome?
7. An island where birds chirp?
8. An island full of small canned animals?
9. An island where it is always December twenty-fifth?
10. An island which is always angry?

You will probably want to guess these puzzles yourself, so the answers won't appear until next week; they are all real islands and we were glad we knew our geographies so well.

The second game was very mysterious—a big chart of an island called: "Pirate's Treasure Chart" with hidden treasures of precious stones and metals concealed here and there all over it, like this: 1. LODG. 2. VIRLES. 3. PROPEC. 4. CNIZ. 5. SLAPER. 6. MADISON. 7. BRUISE. 8. TEASZOP. 9. DARMSLEE. 10. MUNPTAIL. 11. THYSTEAMS. 12. QUOITSSURE. 13 ALCRO. 14. PRISSHAPE.

The game was to dig up the meanings of these curiously spelled words, and it didn't take Bill but one second to see that number one meant Gold. Can you guess the others?

I forgot to tell you what funny prizes we had, and what a search we had to discover them, for they were hidden all over the hotel room where we had the party, and we had to follow orders, climbing over trunks, under beds, around chairs, turning somersaults, etc., before we located the cunning little presents we were given. One of these made us all laugh and hold our breath, for it was the original Pleasure Island pirate candy box, only this time it was full of little candy "life-savers," which we had to fish up with a string and a bent hairpin before we could eat them. It looked so easy, but try it yourself some day!

The third game was written on a piece of paper cut out in the form of an old-fashioned frigate, with full sails and a high poop in the back. On the other side it read as follows:

"Ships Scuttled By Pirates in July, 1923"

1. A ship full of men and boys?
2. A ship full of comrades?
3. A ship full of people praying?
4. A ship full of lovers?
5. A ship full of people related to each other?
6. A ship full of men belonging to the same business firm?
7. A ship full of pupils?
8. A ship full of people with possessions?

We "scuttled" these ships more easily than we thought we could, for every word ended in the word ship.

Then after that we played all our favorite games. Pirate Francis suggested drawing "Head-Body-Legs" in sections, each pirate drawing a third without seeing the other part. Pirates Robert and Junior thought "Up Jenkins" the only sensible game, and we made the ceiling ring as we slapped our hands down on the table. As for me, being a girl, I liked "Twenty Questions," and so would everybody else except the supper bell rang just after we had had our own pirate refreshments, so the party broke up and the pirates returned to private life in the twinkling of an eye—very pleasant quiet individuals, I assure you!

Dear Young Reserves,

This is what happened to a boy I know. He went to the seashore with his father and he wanted to see a pirate. He knew all about pirates and hidden treasure and how to scuttle ships, and he thought that if it was anywhere it was by the seashore where pirates could be found. So one day when he saw an old fisherman down by the shore mending fish nets he went up and asked if he had ever seen a pirate, please!

"Sure!" said the fisherman, "I got one down to my shack. Want to see him, sonny!"

"Sonny" wasn't quite sure whether it was safe to see pirates too near to, but he thought he would run the risk, so he went with the old salt asking a million questions on the way: was the pirate old? Had he ever killed any one? Did he have ear-rings in his ears? Did he have a sword and everything? Did he swear? Now the fisherman said "no" to all the other questions, but to this last one he said a hearty "yes," for when they reached the shack, lo and behold the pirate turned out to be a—parrot! If you say the two words you will see how much alike they sound, but I doubt if you are as disappointed as that small boy was! Miss Applegarth thought maybe you would like to hear this true story from

Your grown up friend,
B. J. W.

B. Y. P. U. Convention Impressions

This is my first convention. I come from Joliet, where we have two pens. If we had the men attend this convention, Joliet could tear down the pens or give them to the city.—Fred Scheffler.

"I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me." This convention has helped me to realize the large number of Baptist young people who are trying to do this in our great country.—R. A. Lee, Swedish Baptist.

This has been my first convention but it was so wonderful and great and made me so enthused that I was greatly disappointed when I had to miss some of the meetings. I had the responsibility of bringing back to our superintendent some ideas to be used in our young people's society and I am sure that a very well-rounded talk was given which greatly helped me. I am now eagerly looking forward to next year and hoping that I may be able to go to Denver where I will attend every single meeting.

It has meant a wider vision—has caused me to strengthen my determination to serve, to renew my consecration, and made Jesus my Saviour more real to me than he has ever been before.—M. A. Woodward.

This convention has surely made us feel more deeply the attractiveness of Christ and his need of us. I hope we have that creative and contagious faith that is necessary to give it to others. I also hope that some of those who catch the faith will come to the B. Y. P. U. of A. convention next year to receive the inspiration that will be there. H. E. S.

My determination to follow my Lord, "the attractive Christ," to the completion of my Christian mission, has been given new life.—William Binkley.

This convention has given me a greater vision for Christian service and has brought me into a closer fellowship with "the attractive Christ."—Mildred Hasty.

This convention has meant a world of help and inspiration to me and I will try to make "the attractive Christ" more attractive to others.—Graeme Aldrich.

The Christ has a greater attraction for me as a result of the convention. I shall work more earnestly for Him.—Jennie Davis.

It has brought me closer to Christ.—Hazel Daniels.

This is the first B. Y. P. U. convention I have ever attended. I appreciate the wonderful opportunity it has given me for fellowship with Christian young people. It has been a wonderful inspiration to hear the addresses given by the best leaders of young people, chosen from an entire nation.—Robert M. Kinkaid.

During this convention I have come to realize, as never before, the world's great need of Christian young people and will put forth every effort possible to help those of my local society to see this need, too.—Velma Bushnell.

During this convention, in answer to our prayers, Christ has become the supreme attraction of our lives. Shall we not begin to pray now for his presence in power at our 1924 convention?—Thelma Williams.

As a member of a Baptist church I would have felt that I was not living up to my allegiance to him if I had not attended this convention. I shall endeavor to spread his light wherever I am.—A Massachusetts Christian Endeavorer.

Our Own Folks

Lathan A. Crandall

September 20, 1850—July 20, 1923

The passing of Doctor Crandall removes from among us one of the best known and most beloved of our denominational leaders. He was a true minister of the gospel of Jesus Christ. He served his churches, his denomination, his God, with faithfulness, efficiency, common-sense, and prophetic vision. He was a wise leader. He was an excellent writer. He was a true man. He was a dependable friend.

Lathan A. Crandall, son of Rev. John M. Crandall, was born in South Plymouth, Chenango County, N. Y., September 20, 1850. He was a country boy, trained by good parents in thrift, in the homely tasks of a modest home, loving the open spaces and the blue sky, mingling with other youth of a rural neighborhood and sharing in their sports and their duties. He was educated first in the country parsonage, then in one of those now-almost-forgotten "seminaries" which gave young people a vision. He prepared for college at Whitestown and Penn State College, and was graduated at Hillsdale College (Michigan) in the class of 1873. He entered the pastorate of a church at Mt. Pleasant, Wis., near Racine. Later he was pastor of the church at Fairport, N. Y. Feeling his need of better training for the ministry, he entered Rochester Theological Seminary having as a fellow-student Ernest D. Burton, now president of the University of Chicago. There followed pastorates at Owego, N. Y.; the Twenty-third St. Church, New York City; the Euclid Ave. Church, Cleveland; the Memorial Church, Chicago; Trinity Church, Minneapolis; and for the last few years at the Hyde Park Church, Chicago, as fellow-minister with Rev. Charles W. Gilkey. For over forty years Doctor Crandall led his people, in country parishes and in great cities, with such devotion, sympathy and kindliness, that he was never forgotten and always loved. He was respected and beloved by men and women; he was idolized by children. He was a leader of his people as well as a preacher of ability.

That quality of leadership which was exemplified and developed in his churches was early discovered by widening groups in denominational organizations which are ever seeking for such men as Lathan A. Crandall to guide and expand missionary and educational enterprises. For twenty years he was a member of the board of managers of the Foreign Mission Society. He was recording secretary of the Home Mission Society. He helped to bring into existence the Baptist World Alliance; was a member of the committee in London, in 1905, which produced its constitution and served as chairman of its American Executive until his death. He was for years a trustee of the Baptist Theological Union, the corporation having primary control of the Divinity School of the University of Chicago Upon removing to Minneapolis he was elected a trustee of Carlton College, Northfield, Minn., and, unless the writer is mistaken, a trustee of Pillsbury Academy. For years he was a trustee, too, of Frances Shimer Academy at Mt. Carroll, Ill. He was a lecturer at the Baptist Missionary Training School, and lecturer on colonial history in the university extension division of the University of Chicago.

At that notable period of Baptist history when years of advocacy of greater cooperation of missionary agencies and their better coordination had led to an insistent demand for a new and adequate organization of our denominational forces, Doctor Crandall, naturally and inevitably, became one of the leading spirits of that small but aggressive band which against opposition and misunderstanding made possible the formation of the Northern Baptist Convention. His wisdom, conciliatory advice, his good sense and his wide experience were invaluable in creating that great and greater-growing union of our denominational agencies.

"And what more shall I say? For the time would fail me to tell" of the committees of importance with perplexing problems to solve on which he served for many weary hours; of the miles he traveled on the King's business; of the funds he begged for the poor, the helpless, and the downtrodden; of the thousands of letters he wrote with his own hand to aid good causes and to extricate good men from bad situations. He spared not his strength or his time for every good cause which came to him for assistance.

LATHAN A. CRANDALL

One cannot but wonder how Doctor Crandall was able to perform so many public services, and perform them so well, without neglecting his regular round of pastoral duties, but he had well learned the formula. For years he was a regular-each-week editorial writer on The Standard. He was the editor-in-chief of THE BAPTIST during the first perplexing, strenuous year of its existence, a twelve-month filled with daily problems presented for solution with no precedents for guidance. He wrote one of the most charming books on outdoor life, "Days in the Open," a classic of its kind, besides the "Life of Henry L. Morehouse" at the request of the Home Mission Society. No autumn was quite complete which did not find in The Standard a description of the summer's quest for trout or bass.

Lathan A. Crandall was a Christian man. He won men to him. He influenced men to "follow after righteousness," young men and those of mature years. They believed in him and trusted him for he was true, honest, above hypocrisy, manly, a lover of nature, a golfer, a fisherman. He ever inspired confidence in men, women and children. His mind was open. His heart was "on his sleeve."

But last of all, and most of all, Lathan A. Crandall was a friend. Once admitted to the delightful fellowship of his intimate acquaintance, one knew one was there to stay. He was not one of the "slap-you-on-the-back" kind, who loudly proclaim admiration, and then fail to smile on a later day. He remained friendly. He was admirer and defender of his friends. He loved to do friendly deeds and to write friendly letters. In his going to be with the Lord whom he loved and served, he will find friends to greet him, for the friendships he inspired and cultivated cannot end with death, they are immortal.

One must not enter the sacred circle of Doctor Crandall's home—a home bright, happy, love-inspiring, and love-creating. He was twice married: to Mary Nichols in 1872 and, after her death, to the present Mrs. Crandall, (Nellie Hart) thirty years ago. Four children survive.

At the funeral held in the Hyde Park Church building on Sunday, July 22, a large company gathered. President Burton, a friend of over forty years, bore testimony to the power and value of his ministry, to his wise vision, his interest in people. Mr. Gilkey recited the significant facts of his long and useful public career of more than fifty years, and dwelt upon his beautiful, courageous spirit during the years at Hyde Park Church.

J. S. D.

Summer Conference in Porto Rico

By Herbert Ford

The fourth annual summer conference of the evangelical churches of Porto Rico (the Porto Rican Northfield) was held at San German, June 21-28. The program was of the usual high standard. We were blessed by the ministry of two speakers from outside the island, Dr. F. W. Burnham of the Disciples' Missionary Society, and Rev. C. S. Detweiler, superintendent of the work in Latin America for the Home Mission Society. The former was obliged to express himself through an interpreter, but his messages were appreciated. Mr. Detweiler, by reason of his long missionary experience in Spanish-speaking countries, was perfectly at home in the language of the people. To the profit of all, he gave a series of morning studies on Hebrews. Miss Manuela Gonzalez, teacher of the Bible in the Polytechnic Institute, gave a study on Jesus as a teacher.

The distinguishing characteristic of this year's conference was the strong missionary note. The opening address was given by Doctor Burnham, and consisted of a view of the march of the kingdom of God throughout the world. The address of the second evening was delivered by Rev. Angel Archilla who had just returned from an evangelistic tour of Venezuela, where he accompanied Evangelist Strachan.

The third night Mr. Detweiler added to the missionary enthusiasm by his message on the triumph of the evangel of Christ in Central America. An interesting event followed his address, which he closed by referring to a young Porto Rican who had offered himself as the first candidate for missionary service from Porto Rico to Central America. The audience demanded that the young man come to the platform, and Jose Delgado, the first Baptist student to complete the full educational requirements, modestly stepped forward and was greeted by the audience.

The Sunday night address was given by the Hon. Emilio del Toro, chief justice of the supreme court, who based his address on Fosdick's "The Meaning of Service," a book which Judge Toro had been using during the winter as a text for a class he had taught in the San Juan Y. M. C. A. The following night Rev. Agustin Arenales, now touring the American countries as the special representative of the Protestants of Spain, gave a stirring address on the gospel in his land. Tuesday night Doctor Burnham spoke again.

A pageant, commemorating the silver anniversary of the beginning of Protestant work on the island, was given the last night. It was written and directed by Miss Lydia Huber, the Baptist missionary from Santurce. The medical work was presented by Doctor Wycoff, a medical missionary, assisted by graduate nurses from the Presbyterian Hospital. Our Baptist colporter, P. A. Dieppa, did his work on the stage just as he does it daily. Pupils and teachers from the Polytechnic Institute, the Blanche Kellogg Girls' School and the Evangelical Seminary demonstrated the educational work.

Last, but not least, something should be said about the athletic and recreational features of which Mr. W. G. Coxhead and Mr. H. T. Hitch of the Y. M. C. A. were in charge. Special praise should be given to Dr. P. W. Drury, executive secretary of the Evangelical Union, who acted as general manager of the conference, and to Dr. J. W. Harris, president of Polytechnic Institute, where the conference was held.

Julius A. Johnson

Julius A. Johnson, a prominent Baptist layman of Chicago, died at the Presbyterian Hospital, on July 20, following an illness of more than five months. Mr. Johnson was born at Jackson Mich., March 10, 1858. He was the son of Rev. Julius E. Johnson, a chaplain during the Civil War, and Martha Farnum Johnson.

He was graduated from Wayland Academy, Beaver Dam, Wis., in 1875, and from Brown University in 1882, with the degree of M. A. by the university. He was a member of the Phi Beta Kappa and Delta Kappa Epsilon fraternities; also a member and ex-president of the Chicago Law Institute and a member of the Chicago, Illinois and American Bar associations. He was admitted to the bar in 1886 and practiced in South Dakota and Illinois, being at the time of his death senior member of the law firm of Johnson, Moran, Paltzer & O'Donnell. He served as county attorney of Cook County from 1889 to 1901. In private practice he specialized in corporation and taxation law, having been connected with many important cases in these fields.

Mr. Johnson was married in 1889 to Esther S. Boise, daughter of Professor Boise, of the old University of Chicago, a distinguished Greek scholar and author of textbooks on that language. He is survived by the widow, three brothers and a sister.

Mr. Johnson was for more than twenty years a member of the board of trustees of the Englewood Baptist Church and part of that time served as president of that board. For almost thirty years he had taught Class 17, the men's Bible class of that church. He was a trustee of the Baptist Theological Seminary of the University of Chicago, a trustee of Wayland Academy, an ex-president of the Chicago Baptist Social Union and a member of the Chicago Baptist Executive Council.

The funeral services, held at the Englewood Baptist Church Sunday afternoon, July 22, were largely attended. The Chicago Bar Association was represented by a committee of distinguished lawyers. The service was conducted by Smith Thomas Ford, D. D., of Wheaton, Ill. The floral tributes were many and beautiful, including pieces from the boards of trustees and deacons of the church, Class 17 and other organizations. Interment was at Ann Arbor, Mich.

Dr. Jacob G. Schurman at Shanghai College

The former president of Cornell University, Dr. Jacob G. Schurman, now United States Minister to China, recently gave an inspiring and interesting address to the students and faculty of Shanghai College. Pres. F. J. White, in introducing the speaker, referred to Doctor Schurman's noted interest in the Chinese people and said that he was not only the representative of the American Government to China but that he was also one who represents China to America. The speaker said he had taken pains to learn something about China by traveling far and wide through all its provinces.

"The young men and young women," continued Doctor Schurman, "who have the privilege of a higher education in China today are the elect of the world. There is much in the ancient religions of China and in her books of philosophy which is excellent. I am a constant student of them and I find material for inspiration and for spiritual stimulus. But in the religion of Jesus Christ there is additional truth which is referred to when Jesus said: 'I am come that you may have life and that you may have it more abundantly.' Christianity has to give China this more abundant life.

"If ever there was a time when China needed help from outside to develop her educational work, it is now. There is a vast work to be done in China to educate the 90 per cent of illiterates in a population which constitutes one-fourth of the population of the world. Both radicals and conservatives in China must feel thankful to those who are establishing schools here.

"As to curriculum, the old educational system of China had much in its favor. It consisted of training in the classics and was in some respects similar to the old time educational system of the West. It also had its limitation. It limited the horizon of its pupils to what was in the classics. It developed the power of memory and taught men to conserve the past. But it did almost nothing to train the faculties of observation and the powers of exactly recording these observations. That is what is most needed in China today.

"One of the best means of learning to observe and to record one's observations accurately is by the study of modern physical science. Whenever a teacher can stimulate a student to be self-creative so that he has the power not simply of imitating or of recalling but of creating a solution for some original problem, then he will really be in a position of helping his country."

Doctor Schurman quoted the words of a professor of philosophy who had been at Cornell University over twenty-five years and said that of all the students who had studied at Cornell the ablest one was a Chinese, now Doctor Hu Suh of Peking. This shows what the Chinese mind can become when it obtains western training.

"It is an old saying," continued Doctor Schurman, "that China needs leaders, men of initiative, for the salvation of the country, politically and otherwise. China's material industry needs men of education who are willing to do the common tasks. Leadership does not mean standing by and directing. So also leadership in political life does not necessarily mean holding office. What every democracy needs is enlightened public opinion among the rank and file of the business men, traders and agriculturists which would establish a stable and efficient government."

In closing Doctor Schurman said, "Keep in mind this high calling. Prepare yourselves to be leaders in whatever you undertake. Create a sound public opinion. Help your countrymen to become, not good Americans but good Chinese. I envy you your opportunity and your responsibility. May you realize both your opportunity and your responsibility."

Church News by States

Atlantic Coast

MAINE

After a pastorate of six years, Rev. Henry C. Speed has resigned from the First Church, Houlton, to become pastor of the church at Middletown, Conn. During his pastorate the church building was remodeled, additions built for Sunday school and social purposes and a large sum subscribed to the New World Movement.

Rev. Woodbury S. Stowell, the son of Rev. A. S. Stowell, was welcomed to the Sedgwick field, which furnishes an unusual opportunity for service.

Executive Secretary Irving B. Mower led the Maine delegation to Stockholm. It was his duty to convey special greetings voted by the Swedish Baptist Churches centering in New Sweden, Me.

MASSACHUSETTS

Three persons were recently baptized at the Central Church, Middleboro. The following ministers will supply the pulpit during the absence of the pastor: Revs. George F. Beecher, Otis W. Foye and C. P. Christopher. The pastor, Rev. Charles Raymond Chappell, will spend his vacation in New London, Conn,, and will preach at the First and Huntington Street churches, New London, and the First Church, Hempstead, N. Y.

CONNECTICUT

The First Church, Bridgeport, is making extensive improvements on its building, which will cost $6,000. A new lighting system will be installed, the organ enlarged and equipped with an electric motor, and the edifice entirely redecorated. During the absence of the pastor, Rev. Chas. A. Decker, the following ministers will supply the pulpit: Rev. W. C. Chappel, Geo. D. Adams, Donald B. MacQueen and Thos. Johnson Bolger.

NEW YORK

Sunday, July 22, Rev. Donald McIntyre of the First Church, Ingersoll, Ontario, supplied the pulpit of the Prospect Avenue Church, Buffalo, of which Rev. G. A. Leichliter is pastor.

WEST VIRGINIA

Some of the objectives adopted by the Temple, Charleston, for the following year are 200 new members, average attendance of 100 at prayer meeting, capacity attendance at both Sunday school and evening worship.

EASTERN PENNSYLVANIA

Rev. Will H. Houghton, pastor of the First Church, Norristown, has received a call to the pastorate of the First Church, Norfolk, Va. Mr. Houghton has been pastor of the First Church for nearly four years.

WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA

Under the leadership of Rev. T. W. Evans, the Sharpsburg Church is making a place for itself in the community. All departments of the church are in a promising condition. A new pipe-organ with chimes was recently installed. Plans are being made for an evangelistic campaign to be held the latter part of October. The church is especially to be congratulated for its progress as Sharpsburg is a Catholic industrial center.

Mississippi Valley

OHIO

Rev. E. Otheman Smith, pastor of the Tabernacle Church, Chillicothe, during August will supply the Covenant Church, Chicago, for the fourth time.

ILLINOIS

Dr. C. E. Beavers, an active member of the church at Barry, died July 18. He had served as deacon and teacher of a men's Bible class. Mr. Beavers also served three terms as mayor of Barry.

Rev. R. T. Gasaway of Joliet has accepted the call of the Carlinville Church.

The Antioch Church, which has been pastorless for some time, has called Rev. I. C. Lough for half time. Mr. Lough recently closed his work at Pierson.

Rev. Fred Crown of Detroit began his pastorate at Cornell July 1.

Rev. John W. Merrill, district superintendent, made a hurried trip through the Bloomington Association recently. The church at Danvers is now pastorless. It wants a strong resident pastor. The Towanda Church has called Rev. A. W. Fuller of El Paso for half time. The church at Pontiac is seeking a pastor. The churches at Lexington and Chenoa are repairing their buildings. The association will meet at Clinton, Sept. 4. Doctor Aitchison will be one of the speakers.

The heirs of the Ellen Myers estate bequeathed the First Church, Big Rock, $1,000. A resolution was recently passed by the church expressing its appreciation of the gift and its assurance of the careful handling of the money.

Rev. Orville Hendrickson has resigned as pastor of the Campbell Hill Church.

Dr. E. P. Brand, Rev. V. Colbert and the superintendent of the southern district recently took a trip visiting the historic places of interest in Baptist history. The most important of these were the home of Rev. James Lemen where the first Baptist church of Illinois was organized; the home of Rev. John M. Peck, where Rock Spring's Seminary, now Shurtleff College, was organized; Fountain Creek, where the first baptism took place; old Bethel, the oldest meeting house in the state; and New Design, where the first church building was erected.

Evangelist F. M. Dunk recently held a meeting with Rev. F. W. Johnston at Staunton. As a result, twelve persons were baptized and others joined the church by letter.

The White Hall Church remodeled its building at a cost of $20,000. Dedication exercises took place June 24-July 1. Among the speakers were Rev. L. H. Koehler, Dr. A. E. Peterson, Dr. E. P. Brand, Dr. F. A. Risner and Rev. N. J. Hilton. The church subscribed $1,000 over the amount necessary to complete the building.

A council was called recently by the Frankfort Heights Church to examine Orville Hendrickson. Rev. T. O. McMinn preached the ordination sermon. For the past year, Mr. Hendrickson has been pastor at Campbell Hill and Denmark.

The work at Bunker Hill is progressing under the leadership of Rev. J. J. Schuler. Two persons were recently baptized.

Evangelist J. N. Edmentsen of Mt. Vernon has been supplying the Grand Avenue Church, St. Louis, Mo., during the summer.

Rev. Norris L. Tibbetts, of Greenwich, N. Y., has accepted a call from the Hyde Park Church, Chicago, and will become one of its ministers Sept. 15. Mr. Tibbetts is a graduate of Harvard and of the Union Theological Seminary. He has been pastor of the Bottskill Church, Greenwich, for four years.

Rev. W. R. Yard, pastor of the First Church, DeKalb, has accepted a call to the First Church, Marshalltown, Ia., and will begin work on his new field Sept. 1. Mr. Yard has been pastor at DeKalb six years.

Summer Assembly

The fourth session of the summer assembly, held at Shurtleff College, Alton, came to a close Saturday noon, July 14. The attendance has increased from ninety-six in 1920 to 306 this year. Of these, 251 received certificates, having taken and handed in creditable notes on at least twenty of the lecture periods. Of this number, forty-two were second year students, and seventeen received credit for the third year's work.

Rev. Louis H. Koehler of Normal was director. Mr. Harold J. Howard of Mt. Vernon was recreational director. Special speakers for the week were Rev. C. C. Long, Drs. A. E. Peterson, Shailer Matthews and W. E. Raffety. Rev. Albert H. Gage was unable to attend because of the death of his father. Rev. Francis C. Stifler conducted the services on coronation night. Thirty-one young people pledged themselves to some form of life service.

Dr. Charles Durden gave courses on community mission service and Christian doctrine; Mrs. R. B. Favoright led a group in the discussion of the church school; Mr. Holmes gave two courses on the church school and the administration division; Rev. O. R. McKay conducted a class in the principles of religious education; Mr. Edwin Phelps led a class on the B. Y. P. U. organization; Dr. W. E. Raffety lectured on group psychology; Rev. F. C. Stifler taught a group on organizing the local church for missions and conducted the vesper services; Rev. W. R. Yard gave the Bible courses.

Special credit should be given President Potter and his office force, and the women of the Presbyterian and Baptist churches who served the meals.

MICHIGAN

The First Church, Kalamazoo, has contributed $37,239 to the New World Movement. In addition, large donations have been given to the new buildings and endowment of Kalamazoo College. During the ministry of Dr. E. W. Powell, 200 persons have been added to the membership. In the program which has been adopted by the church, the following goals were set: 200 additions to the membership, 150 attending prayer meeting, thirty in teacher training courses, 150 in the men's class, 100 subscribers to The Baptist and Missions, 100 personal workers in evangelism.

WISCONSIN

A council was called July 21 by the Danish Church of Camp Douglas for the purpose of examining Mr. Einer Jensen. Rev. I. Fredmund of Viborg, S. D., was elected moderator, and Rev. Arthur Woods of New Lisbon, clerk. Rev. Arthur Woods preached the ordination sermon.

Whether Baptists can afford to lose churches in strategic centers like county-seat towns, was one of the big questions which faced the state convention with reference to the Elkhorn Church. This question grew more acute after a survey revealed the fact that there were many people outside the membership of the church who could be recruited if they could be reached and put to work. The state convention and the Home Mission Society in cooperation with the dwindling membership decided to keep the church alive and make it a thriving institution in the community and denomination. As a result, Elkhorn was selected as a demonstration church by the country life department of the Home Mission Society. Four years have passed since that decision was made. The church building, which was in bad condition, has been repaired; a community house costing $20,000 has been erected and will soon be paid for; the membership has increased until it now numbers 140; there is a Sunday-school enrolment of 120; a B. Y. P. U. with a membership of thirty-three is doing promising work. The experiment was to cover a five-year period and according to indications the undertaking will more than justify itself before that time. The pastor, Rev. Ralph Mayo, also ministers to the Millard Church, seven miles away. This church now has sufficient equipment to carry out a successful program.

KANSAS

EVANGELIST WILLIAM S. DIXON, Wheaton, Ill., recently closed a two weeks' campaign with the First Church, Tribune.

THE FOLLOWING ARE THE DATES of the meetings of the associations: Aug. 21-23, Oberlin Association, Gem; Aug. 22-24, Wakeeney Association, Wakeeney; Aug. 22-24, Upper Solomon Association, Codell; Aug. 27-29, West Central Association, Dodge City; Aug. 28-30, Fall River Association, Hamilton; Aug. 30-31, Southwest Association, Elkhart; Sept. 4-5, Solomon Association, Beloit; Sept. 6-7, Jewell Association, Smith Center; Sept. 10-11, Republican Association, Belleville; Sept. 12-14, Miami Association, Centropolis; Sept. 17-19, Missouri River Association, Immanuel, K. C.; Sept. 19-21, Kansas River Association, Emporia; Sept. 24-26, Chicaskia Association, place not furnished; Sept. 27-28, Blue Valley Association, Marysville; Sept. 28-30, Northeast Association, place not furnished; Oct. 2-4, South Central Association, Goshen; Oct. 16-18, Convention, Wellington.

IOWA

Des Moines

Rev. J. A. Pettit recently moved from Chariton to Des Moines. He is to be a financial secretary in the field for Des Moines University. Two of his daughters will attend the university this fall.

The B. Y. P. U. organizations of the city, in cooperation with Des Moines University, entertained the Baptist C. E. delegates at a box dinner on the campus of the university July 7.

Rev. W. C. Deere of Cedar Falls was a visitor at the C. E. convention and at Des Moines University recently.

All of the pulpits in Des Moines were supplied by delegates at the C. E. convention Sunday, July 8. It was a great day in all the churches. W. J. Bryan spoke at the fair grounds to 35,000 people in the afternoon.

The ministers of Des Moines and their families held a picnic supper together in McHenry Park the 16. It was the occasion of the departure of Rev. H. R. Best, Forest Avenue Church, Mr. Holsaple ,anti-saloon director of Iowa, Mr. Merle Scott, Y. M. C. A. secretary of Des Moines, and Rev. A. V. Hart, Highland Park Christian Church. An unusual fellowship exists between these different church bodies in the city.

Among some of the speakers at the summer assembly are Douglas Haring, Miss Alice Brimson, Miss Myrtle Huckelberry, Miss Helen Hershey, Rev. J. L. Barton, Mr. Geo. E. Merrill, Revs. W. H. Thompson, J. W. Weddell, and Albert H. Gage, all from outside the state. Besides these, there will be a number of prominent leaders from Iowa. The assembly is held July 18-29.

Commencement at Des Moines

Commencement exercises at Des Moines University were held May 31-June 6. The events of the program, the spirit animating the entire week and the quality of the addresses delivered, are abundant proof that this university is assuming grown-up proportions.

While Des Moines is a standard college of liberal arts, it is a co-educational institution and is situated on the edge of a rapidly growing city of 150,000. Dean Raymond N. Carr of the conservatory of music has closed his second year with the university and the growth of the fine arts department has been unusual during that time. The conservatory has completed its most successful year.

The university gave Des Moines a treat in the festival of music on Thursday and Friday nights at the opening of commencement week. The commencement fete was held Saturday evening. Through the cooperation of the engineering department the campus was illuminated for the occasion.

Sunday, June 3, was baccalaureate day. President Million's subject was, "The Significance of Graduation." The last vespers program of the year was given in the afternoon. While it was held under the auspices of the student Christian associations, the

Loyalty Luncheons

UNDER THE

Women's Continuation Campaign

Oct. 15—Nov. 16

Do we care that Baptists in Europe are perishing of poverty, famine and persecution, that our churches are battling for their very life against fearful, overwhelming odds?

that there are not funds to send doctors, teachers, preachers enough to supply the demand of the awakening millions on the mission fields?

that millions of people in our own country are unchurched, 27,000,000 children without religious instruction, ignorant of the gospel of the love of Christ Jesus their Saviour?

Do we pray that the needs may be met to the full measure of our responsibility?

that the workers may be provided?

that the churches may be roused from indifference to purposeful action?

Do we give because we are asked by some one else?

because our church is pledged to support the denomination?

because life itself has become a prayer for the redemption of the world for which Jesus Christ died?

Care really
Pray earnestly
Give lovingly

that the first million dollars may be brought in at the time of the Loyalty Luncheons to be held throughout the Northern Baptist Convention territory.

BAPTIST WOMEN— DO WE REALLY CARE?

address was delivered by Dr. Howland, Hanson, professor of Bibical literature and director of religious life.

On Monday evening, the alumni banquet was held with the senior class as guests of honor. Hon. Charles E. Hunn, of the class of '89, president of the board of trustees of the university and one of the leading attorneys of Des Moines, was toastmaster. The address of the evening was delivered by Rev. M. R. Shipman of Trinity M. E. Church. President Million gave a summary of the financial progress of the university during the past two years and a brief statement of the present financial status. The ceremony of welding the link also occurred. A chain and anchor were given by an engineering class of Highland Park College many years ago. Each year the graduating class adds a link to the chain to symbolize the unbreakable connection between the alumnus and his alma mater. Hans Pederson, '16, state sanitary engineer, was the speaker.

The final meeting of the entire board of trustees was held the day preceding commencement. The board is planning as never before to develop a state-wide constituency in Iowa.

The outstanding address of the week was delivered Wednesday evening by Dr. Clarence A. Barbour, president of Rochester Theological Seminary. His subject was, "The Lure of the Undiscovered." The awarding of diplomas, the announcement of scholarship awards and other special honors closed the commencement exercises. After the close of the program the customary president's reception was held.

Want Ads

Wanted:—Pastor by Sept. 1 by Federated Church in Western Kansas. Church established in 1916; in good condition; practically only church in small city; agricultural community; splendid grade and high school; healthy climate; salary $1,800 and parsonage; full particulars upon inquiry. Address A. G. care BAPTIST.

Wanted:—A church by minister with ten years' special school training for the ministry; thirty years' experience in the pastorate; holds A. B. and B. D. degrees; sound in the faith as held by Baptists. Address L. D. care BAPTIST.

MOUNDS PARK Sanitarium, Midway Hospital, Merriam Park Hospital, Baptist Hospitals located in Saint Paul, maintain an efficient staff of surgeons and physicians, adequate nursing service and a thoroughly equipped surgery.

The
NORTHWESTERN BAPTIST HOSPITAL ASSOCIATION
GENERAL OFFICES
INDIAN MOUNDS PARK, SAINT PAUL

If Some One Should Ask You About a Will

And when you make your own
Our Corporate Name is:

The American Baptist Home Mission Society

CHARLES L. WHITE, Executive Secretary
SAMUEL BRYANT, Treasurer
23 East Twenty-Sixth Street
New York, N. Y.

Rocky Mountain States

COLORADO

FIVE PERSONS WERE RECENTLY ADDED to the membership of the First Church, Sterling. The church is cooperating with the other churches of the city in holding union services on the court house lawn Sunday evenings. The pastor, Rev. Emmanuel Payne, is in his sixth year of service.

ARIZONA

WHEN REV. LEE I. THAYER, who has labored among the Hopi and Navajo Indians for thirteen and a half years, resigned to become general missionary to the Mono Indians of California, Mr. R. E. L. Daniel, general superintendent of the reservation, presented him a purse containing $130. Rev. B. H. Stokely of Redlands, Cal., will succeed Mr. Thayer.

Pacific Coast

OREGON

HAROLD L. PROPPE was ordained July 6 at the First Church, Independence. President L. W. Riley was moderator, and Rev. J. C. Tibbits, clerk. Rev. W. T. Milliken preached the sermon. Mr. Proppe has been pastor of the church at Independence for three years.

WHEN PRESIDENT AND MRS. HARDING visited Portland, the stand from which the president viewed the patriotic parade was erected against the wall of the White Temple. Later, Dr. Thomas J. Villers, at the invitation of the city's committee, offered prayer to an audience of 30,000.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

THE ONTARIO CHURCH has a ninety-nine year lease on a two-acre tract in Cucamonga canyon, where a camp has been held for three years. The attendance has increased from twenty to fifty young people. On the program were Rev. R. E. Day of the First Church, Riverside; Prof. E. B. Van Osdel of Redlands University, and Rev. F. T. Barkman, who is working among the sailors at San Diego. The afternoons were devoted to recreation. This church is the first to put on an assembly for ten days for its young people. Rev. W. Earle Smith is pastor.

Obituary

GEORGE BENSON BEGLEY

George Benson Begley was born at Easton's Corners, Ontario, Canada, Sept. 5, 1854, died in Seattle, Wash., July 3, 1923, following an illness of five years. Funeral was conducted by his pastor, Dr. A. M. Bailey of the First Church, Seattle, of which Mr. Begley had been a member nearly twenty-two years. He was married July 31, 1881, his wife being the general director of the Woman's Home and Foreign Mission work in West Washington for thirteen years.

Mr. Begley believed drink was the enemy of man, business and society, and from early manhood fought it in every possible way. As editor of the local paper in the town in which he lived in Wisconsin, he was able, with a few of like mind, to secure local option in his township. At that time this great-hearted servant of God prophesied that the day would come when prohibition would be nation-wide. This prediction seemed utter folly even to his friends.

He was faithful in attendance, devoted and self-sacrificing in giving to his church and its enterprises; never missing prayer service or Bible class if permitted to attend, as well as the regular Sunday services, and was faithful and true to all his pastors. Mr. Begley was a lover of nature and took great delight in viewing the wondrous and varying beauty of Puget Sound and the Olympic Mountains, of which he had an unobstructed view from his home. Music and flowers were also his delight. As one thinks of the quiet worth of this splendid man of God, one thanks God for him and prays that many more may become, with God's help, like him.

He leaves to mourn his loss, besides a large circle of lodge, business and church friends, a brother, T. R. Begley of Missoula, Mont.; a sister, Mrs. E. J. Carpenter of Seattle; two sons, Neal H., of Seattle, and G. V., of Tennessee; and his wife and companion of nearly forty-two years.

ENNO S. UDEN

Enno S. Uden was born Aug. 19, 1850; died at his home, Hastings, Neb., May 23, 1923. In August, 1909, Mr. and Mrs. Uden moved from Glenville, Neb., to Hastings, where he immediately became connected with the First Church. He was made deacon and treasurer. He was a man of retiring nature and modest disposition. His character was one of sterling worth and absolute integrity. As a church member he was deeply interested in the advancement of Christ's kingdom. He gave liberally and at all times lived a devoted, consistent Christian life.

As a citizen he was loyal to all the institutions of his country, obedient to its laws, and a steadfast friend to law and order, often assisting and contributing to civic interests. As a business man, having engaged in the mercantile business, and as a banker, he was conservative and diligent, never seeking to profit by another man's loss. His services will be greatly missed in the church and community.

Of his immediate family, he leaves to mourn his loss his widow, one son, Lewis E. Uden, and two brothers. The funeral services were conducted by Dr. J. M. Wells, president of Grand Island College. Many personal friends and business interests were evidenced in the floral tribute.

MRS. SARAH M. GLEASON

Mrs. Sarah M. Gleason was born Oct. 26, 1842. She was baptized and received into the membership of the Mahomet Church, March 1, 1857. On Aug. 19, 1863, she was united in marriage to Rev. Stewart Franklin Gleason, one of the pioneer Baptist ministers of Illinois. Mr. Gleason was for many years secretary of the state board of missions, and served as pastor of the Mahomet Church for twenty-one years. He died Sept. 15, 1905.

Mrs. Gleason was the oldest member of the Mahomet Church and after her baptism she manifested a deep love for its services and had been very generous as a supporter of its various needs. She was patiently awaiting the call to come home to rest, which came as a dove of peace early in the morning of July 5, 1923.

The "America"

(Continued from page 836)

darkness, be mistaken for that of an officer. A gentleman approached him with questions about the boat. He answered promptly and with a tone of assurance. A moment later the man turned to Dr. C. L. White and said, "What is the captain's name?"

Mr. and Mrs. D. J. Pulliam of Colorado have been for years identified with our Baptist work. After the Stockholm meeting in addition to visits to the fields of Baptist work they will make a study of the sugar beet industry in various parts of Europe.

The delegates aboard the "America" want Dr. J. H. Franklin to know that they are not unmindful of the vast amount of work which he has done in arranging for their comfort and convenience. He will be presented at Stockholm with some little token of their appreciation.

On shipboard we found a good definition of a Baptist. We overheard Dr. John Snape of Oakland, Cal., say: "A Baptist is a cosmic democrat under no obligation to any other man to account for his faith with a creedal statement but willing always to give a reason for the hope that is within him to any man that asks it, provided he does not demand it."

In one of the conferences Dr. Curtis Lee Laws said that he had crossed the Atlantic nine times and that the present was the most enjoyable trip of all except that of one year ago which was his wedding trip and then he was sick all the way across. This statement was evidently made to offset an earlier remark to the effect that last winter he spent two months on a pleasure trip in the South at which time he left Mrs. Laws in New York.

Miss McVeigh with earnestness said "I have a new favorite Bible verse. It is to be found in Revelations 21:1—'There shall be no more sea.'"

We have earlier called attention to the unusual celebration on the Fourth of July. We wondered at such an outburst of patriotism until we discovered that a large part of the ceremony was in honor of the birthday anniversary of Mrs. M. Grant Edmands of Pasadena.

Mr. and Mrs. R. H. Ismon were in the party. Mr. Ismon, in addition to his duties as treasurer of the American Can Company, has a reputation as a first-class sermon taster. More than one preacher has become familiar with a certain yellow traveling bag. This bag was described in the Standard some years past. We understand that this same bag was carried to Peoria some months ago and soon thereafter Dr. Joseph Hazen became pastor at North Orange, N. J.

The Twenty-Ninth International Christian Endeavor Convention

A great deal of enthusisam was shown in Des Moines, Ia., on the morning of July 4 as the delegates gathered at the coliseum amid the flying of flags, banners and mottoes. Dr. Francis E. Clark, father of the organization, opened the convention. Prof. H. Augustine Smith, director of music, presented a pageant of the history of our country. More than 15,000 delegates were registered. The usual addresses of welcome were given by the mayor of the city, local pastors and others.

The address of President Clark was received with interest by the large audience. It is estimated that 300,000,000 persons have come under the influence of the Christian Endeavor within the past two years. It was emphasized that the organization was not for the purpose of practical Christianity and a united effort to enlist all young people in the great reforms of the time.

The general secretary, E. P. Gates, who, by the way, is a Baptist, reported 10,917 new members within the past two years. He reported that a number of denominations had united with the Christian Endeavor Society making a total of eighty participating denominations at the present time.

Wayne B. Wheeler, general counsel for the Anti-saloon League gave the address of the first day. He spoke of the necessity of supporting the eighteenth amendment to our constitution, and called upon the delegates to support President Harding in his endeavor to enforce the law. Another speaker for the enforcement of prohibition was Rev. Lionel Fletcher, the representative from England and Australia to the convention. William J. Bryan at the closing session Sunday afternoon at the fairgrounds, left the impression on the 35,000 people present that the country was dry and would never again return to its former traffic in the liquor business. It is evident that Mr. Bryan will not permit the democratic party to have a "wet" plank in its platform in the next election.

A number of new features were prominent, among them, the Temple of Fine Arts under the direction of H. Augustine Smith, and the pageant at the coliseum. Only delegates were permitted to hear the speakers at any time. However, loud sounding devices were used, so that crowds gathered on the streets and listened to the program that was going on within the coliseum. It was something new in religious gatherings. The parade that formed at the Capitol buildnig Sunday afternoon and marched down one of the main streets of the city, gave evidence of the fact that enthusiasm can enter into a meeting of delegates representing Christianity, as well as into a political campaign or a meeting of a fraternal body. Banners, flags, uniforms, all united to give the Christian Endeavor Society a new meaning to the thousands who watched the parade on the streets. The next convention will be held in Portland, Ore., in 1925.

Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society
(CORPORATE NAME)
ALICE M. HUDSON, Treasurer
276 Fifth Avenue New York City

DEDICATE A PART OF YOUR ESTATE TO GOD'S WORK
The legal corporate name of your Publication Society is
THE AMERICAN BAPTIST PUBLICATION SOCIETY
(Incorporated in Pennsylvania)
Reports of its Missionary and Educational activities can be secured from
The Annuity Department
1701-1703 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

Two Remarkable Achievements

The year 1922-23 will be remembered in Baptist history as a year of two remarkable achievements in the foreign mission enterprise of Northern Baptists.

1. It Was a Record Year in Evangelism

The statistical reports from the 10 mission fields showed that more than 17,000 converts were baptized upon their confession of faith in Jesus Christ. This is the largest total in a single year in the history of the Foreign Mission Society.

2. It Was a Year of Substantial Reduction in the Deficit

The deficit of the Foreign Mission Society which amounted to $914,000 at the beginning of the fiscal year was reduced to $661,000. This reduction was made possible through provision in the budget and through substantial savings in expenditures and was accomplished with a minimum of curtailment to the work of the missionaries.

Through your contribution you have had a share in these achievements. Your continued support is needed during the current fiscal year.

$12,161,521.67 Is Needed This Year to Care for the Work of All Organizations Participating in the New World Movement.

"PAY UP" not "CATCH UP"

American Baptist Foreign Mission Society
276 FIFTH AVENUE NEW YORK CITY

THE GENERAL BOARD OF PROMOTION OF THE NORTHERN BAPTIST CONVENTION

When Making Wills and Legacies
Remember
Our Corporate Name Is:
"WOMAN'S AMERICAN BAPTIST HOME MISSION SOCIETY"
Mrs. Mary E. Bloomer
Treasurer
276 Fifth Avenue, New York City

CROZER THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY

Seminary is located within thirteen miles of Philadelphia, to whose churches, libraries and art collections students have ready access. Near-by rural districts furnish opportunity for Christian work under the supervision of the department of Practical Theology.

Tuition and Room-rent free. Scholarships available to qualified students.

Seminary's relation to University of Pa. warrants offer of the following:

1. Regular Course for Preachers and Pastors. Seminary. Degree of B.D. or Diploma.
2. Course with emphasis on Religious Education. Seminary and University. Degrees B.D. and A.M.
3. Training for Advanced Scholarship. Seminary and University. Degrees Th.M or Ph.D.

For Catalog—
MILTON G. EVANS, LL.D., Pres., Chester, Pa.

EXTENSION COURSE

Seminary maintains a Correspondence department for men unable to take a course in residence. Cost, including books, $10 a year. Certificate on completion. Address—
ELI S. REINHOLD, A.M., Dir., Chester, Pa.

PILLSBURY

Academy for Boys

Seventy miles from Minneapolis; large campus and seven modern buildings; military training, all athletics; high standards of scholarship and conduct; small classes insuring individual attention; terms reasonable; illustrated catalogue on request.

Milo B. Price, Principal

Box 397F Owatonna, Minnesota

Gordon

Theological, Missionary, Religious-Educational College course of 4 years, college degree of Th.B. Graduate School of Theology, 3-year course, degree of B.D. An embodiment of the highest ideals of evangelical culture and unity.
NATHAN R. WOOD, President
Gordon College of Theology and Missions, Boston, Mass.

Frances Shimer School

For Girls and Young Women. 2 years College, 4 years Academy. Music, Art, Home Economics, Outdoor Sports. 9 Buildings. New College Dormitory. 35 acres. 71st year. Term opens September 12, 1923. For catalog address
Rev. Wm. P. McKee, Dean
Box 620, Mt. Carroll, Ill.

COOK ACADEMY

A boys' school under Christian influence, open to students of all religious beliefs. Academic and College Preparatory courses with training for business careers. Graduates admitted without examination by colleges admitting on certificate. Music advantages. A fine school spirit prevails and healthful sports are encouraged. Gymnasium. Athletic Field. Basketball court. For catalog address
The Principal, Box B, Montour Falls, N. Y.

Our Book Shelf

The Crowns of Christ, by Robert Stuart MacArthur. Philadelphia: Judson Press. $1.75.

The author of this collection of sermons needs no introduction to Baptist readers, so much was he "one of ours." His recent death makes the volume especially dear to the public whose love and admiration he has. The sermons appearing in "The Crowns of Christ" were selected by Doctor MacArthur himself as representative of his best work. This alone is all the commendation they need.

The New Poetry, an Anthology of Twentieth Century Verse in English, edited by Harriett Monroe and Alice Corbin Henderson. New York: Macmillan. $3.50. $3.50.

What is the new poetry and wherein does it differ from the old? The difference, says the introduction—and both the general introduction and the introduction to the present edition are treatises that will have careful reading—lies not merely in diction though deems, 'neaths, forsooths, etc., do not appear; the difference is one of form. There is a striving for a concrete realization of life, an ideal of simplicity and sincerity. "It looks out more eagerly than in. It becomes objective." There are lovely things to be found in this new poetry; rugged, virile things, and often a hard realism. The book is bound to give pleasure to lovers of true poetry, but there is to be found little substance therein for the spirit of man. He will not turn to it for comfort in times of sorrow or distress. While there is much to commend in the new poetry, the fault is that it seems, for the most part, to have lost sight of God.

The Faith that Overcomes the World. Studies in Spiritual Psychology. Macmillan Co. 1.25.

For the ends of this discussion, the author defines the "world" not as that evil object the master had in mind when he said, "I have overcome the world," but as that to which the Bible refers as the whole visible and moral universe realized and experienced through the senses. Nor does he identify faith with the conventional meaning of trust and confidence: he interprets it as a "dynamic consciousness realizing the reality of the unseen." We confess the definition is a little elusive to us at first reading: but the author explains and amplifies the terms as he proceeds. In that "world" he discovers the evils of fear, ignorance, failure, sin, sickness and death—all the exhaustless sources of the ills, miseries and sorrow of men. Then, a chapter, or discourse, is devoted to each one of those evils and "faith" is shown as overcoming and destroying them. The contents of the book are unusually well clothed in lucid expressions and crisp sentiments; the ideas are fresh, unique, and even inspiring. Every chapter or lecture hints at a splendid sermon that might wing out of it, showing new colors and uttering refreshing notes. We have laid the book aside "for further consideration and use."

As It Is in England, by Albert B. Osborne. New York: Robert M. McBride & Co.

"I have omitted London," says the author, "because it is too vast a subject to be combined with others, and I have made no reference to other cities because cities such as Liverpool and Manchester do not interest me. I have gone where best can be found those places that give England her individuality . . . the islands of the Channel . . . and Cornwall . . . the remoter villages." And so he takes the reader charmingly through the England which every traveler would know, but which so few come to know because it is not a part of guide-books. Mr. Osborne is an artist with words—there is a suspicion that he has been as well an artist with the brush. He exhibits the most delicate of pastels, as: "The color scheme of the world here is a pallid one. The dawn comes upon one unawares, unheralded by the flash of crimson or of gold; a dawn of pale, soft hues and a still earth and a sea that quietly holds the fragile opal tones of the sky. The land is in silvery grays and cold greens, unrelieved by yellow walls or roofs of red, and all day long there is a thin wash of white over the blue sky, which reflects in a chilly way upon the sea, except at times when a deeper blue comes up from the depths as they are stirred by the southwest wind." There are water colors and glowing canvasses as well. It is a delightful book to own.

"It Is to Laugh"

"For what is Rhode Island celebrated George?" asked the teacher. For a moment the child was silent, then replied, "Rhode Island is celebrated for being the only one of the United States that is the smallest."

---

Moses Junior—"Fader, a shentleman in de shop vants to know if dot all-vool unshrinkable shirt vill shrink?"

Moses Senior—"Does it fid him?"

"No; id is too big."

"Den it vill shrink!"—Continent.

---

Two little boys who had been naughty all day were told by their teacher that they must stay after school and write their names five hundred times. One of them began to watch the other unhappily. "Why don't you write, Tommy?" asked his teacher. Tommy burst into tears. "'Tisn't fair!" he said between his sobs. "His name's Lee and mine's Schluttermeyer!"

---

A well-known business man has a little daughter who has the making of a great financier in her.

One day her father called her to him. "My dear," said he, "a man this morning offered me this room full of gold if I would sell little brother. Now, that means gold enough to fill this room from wall to wall and from floor to ceiling. If I sell little brother for that sum I shall be able to buy everything in the world you want. Shall I sell him?"

"No, papa," answered the little girl promptly; and then, before her delighted father could embrace her for expressing so much unselfish affection, she went on, "Keep him till he's bigger. He'll be worth more then."

DES MOINES UNIVERSITY

JOHN W. MILLION, A. M., LL. D., President

A growing university in a progressive city of the Middle West—standard courses—best of advantages, including access to great libraries, lectures, music, and contact with people of world prominence.

Join in the endowment of this institution—your gift will be a genuine investment in youth for time and eternity.

Des Moines University, Box N, Highland Park, Des Moines, Iowa

OUR MUSIC CORNER

CONDUCTED BY WILLIAM LESTER

PRODUCING EFFICIENT CHURCH SINGERS.

In last week's issue this page was occupied by some reflections and statements about the status of the music of the church service, its deficiencies, its possibilities and the glaring need for precise and definite constructive teaching to eliminate the weaknesses. As I stated, the main defect lies in the fact that the main trend of the vocal pedagogical system is along the line of opera. Almost every young singer of any promise is taught to look upon church singing, and concert and oratorio work as being second-class, inferior to the high field of grand opera. And either consciously or otherwise, the entire viewpoint is colored to the point where the same student, laboring under this mistaken obsession, prefers to pose as a possible aspirant to the tinsel stage rather than to fit himself to be a capable church and concert artist!

All of us know the budding aspirant who throughout the high school period, and probably a few years later, has rendered yeoman service in the small-town choir, giving pleasure and inspiration to many and reaping the reward of genuine service. Comes the time when it is possible to realize a great ambition! The young singer goes to Chicago, New York or some other metropolitan center, and for a time is lost in the maze of studios and the wide eddies of the musical tide of such a place. Then, later on, the more or less finished product comes home—usually on a flying visit. The church choir is now patronized as a dull refuge for plodders, sacred songs and anthems are flat and dead, the songs by our own composers and couched in our own tongue are of an inferior grade—foreign-tongue arias and noisy shriekings in various and varied keys have supplanted the intelligible and appreciated simpler songs of yore. That the picture is not overdrawn, I know. Too many times have I seen this change come about under the tutelage of the foreign teacher, and, what is worse, the native teacher who has imbibed the attitude of the alien. We are producing too many mediocre would-be operatic aspirants, who are fitted for nothing else. It is high time we all realize that most of these failures, with the proper training and perspective could have been made capable, efficient church-singers and concert artists. It is entirely a matter of direction and curriculum.

In our own studio we are attempting to meet the problem in a sane way. We get no particular place by simply abusing present conditions. The first thing to do is to show the young student how the musical efficiency and habits of correctness necessary to the church singer are a splendid foundation for success in the less provident field of opera. The energy and drudgery entailed in developing necessary musicianship are not sidestepped by specialization in opera. And the average student can "cash in" more quickly if he will equip himself to meet the definite demands and openings in the church field, rather than to pursue exclusively the operatic will-o-the-wisp.

I think that, all things considered, our clientele of pupils differs little from that found in the other studios. The greater part are wide-awake young people, active, ambitious, and willing. Almost all have high school education or better. Analyzing the procession as we have handled it for the past fifteen years we can say that its biggest asset has been fine natural voice, enthusiasm and grit. On the debit side is ignorance of the English language, a poor acquaintance with the treasures of our literature, indefinite perspective of the artistic field, lack of technical knowledge and musicianship—all exaggerated by impatience.

During the past few years we have evolved a definite system to meet these liabilities. A repertoire class introduces the student to the riches of the song-literature, and affords an avenue for the definite study of musical history and appreciation. A regular series of public concerts gives the outlet and proving ground for the more theoretical work in the class, and also the means of acquiring poise and mastery of self when on a stage. An ensemble class teaches the students the requirements of efficient part-singing and makes them familiar with the technique of conducting as well as the fine things of the choral library.

Besides the private lessons in voice and piano, class lessons are held, four people per class, where opportunity is provided for discussion as to the psychology and application of vocal principles. A valuable side of the work is that of what we loosely call the theory class. In this is taught a thorough knowledge of harmony, counterpoint and musical form, together with applied analysis. This is expanded by practice in sight reading and solfeggio.

Last, but not least, is the church class. In this we study anthems, sacred solos, duets, etc.; the various church service lists are worked over; that great array of hymns universally used are learned. And that much-neglected field of responses and chants is industriously tilled. Actual practice is gained by special services in various churches to which we have access as well as in my own church.

We in no way attempt to hinder the pupil from studying opera roles. But we put that specialized field in its proper balance with the rest, not to the exclusion of everything else! If our pupils can go out from us with finer ideals than when they came, with better equipment to meet all the different problems which arise, with a sane balance based on accurate knowledge, and an increased flow of ambitious aspiration—then the game is worthwhile, and the artist can be depended upon to find his best field of usefulness.

---

The church at Wicklow, Canada, celebrated its one hundred twenty-fifth anniversary recently. The church was organized in 1798 under the leadership of Reuben Crandall, a boy eighteen years old, who went to Canada as a licensed preacher from Nine Partners, N. Y. He went on foot, crossed the St. Lawrence River near Prescott and traveled westward until he reached Cramahe and Haldimand townships. Rev. L. H. Coles is the present pastor of the Wicklow and Colborne churches.

WORLD'S GREATEST BIBLE CONFERENCE WINONA LAKE, IND.
August 17-26. 29th Year.
Foremost preachers, teachers and scholars of two continents will speak.
Drs. Hutton, Glasgow; Fletcher, London; Wishart, Wooster; Stone, Chicago; Bishops Hughes, Boston; Candler, Atlanta; Drs. Philpott, Chicago; Griffith-Thomas, Toronto; S. P. Long, Chicago; Landrith, Chicago; Robertson, Louisville; Morrison, Louisville; Goodchild, N. Y.; Kyle, Xenia.
Great Missionary Hour, Missionary speakers from all parts of the world.
Detailed Program Mailed Upon Request.
REV. J. C. BRECKENRIDGE, D. D. General Sec.
REV. W. E. BIEDERWOLF, D. D. Director

A Permanent Income
Life Annuities on One or Two Lives
On one life the rate of income varies from four to nine per cent a year, payable semi-annually.
On one or two lives the rate varies from four to eight and three-tenths per cent a year, payable semi-annually.
A survivorship agreement provides a permanent income for two lives.
For annuity booklet and samples of single and survivorship agreements, please address
CHARLES L. WHITE
23 East Twenty-Sixth Street
New York City
The American Baptist Home Mission Society

IT IS A BURNING SHAME
that so many churches are without sufficient insurance and not properly safeguarded against fire.

Baptist Department
Mutual Insurance Corporation furnishes protection AT COST
FIRE, LIGHTNING and WINDSTORM
No assessments; easy payments; profits to policyholders; legal reserve for protection of policyholders same as stock companies.
Parsonages, Homes and Personal Effects of Church Members also insured.
No agents. Deal direct.
National Mutual Church Insurance Co., 22 years old under same management. Address Henry P. Magill, Manager. 1509 Insurance Exchange Chicago, Ill.

Van Duzen Bells
formerly Van Duzen & Tift
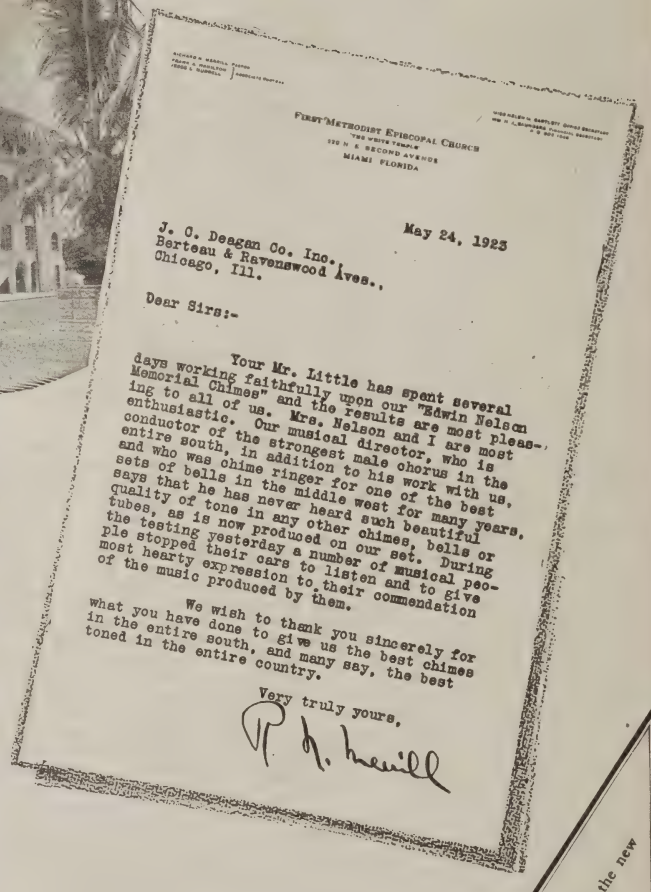
Guaranteed Genuine Bell Metal Bells made of Copper and Tin. Famous for full rich tones, volume and durability.
The E. W. Van Duzen Co.
Buckeye Bell Foundry
CINCINNATI, OHIO
Est. 1837 428-434 East Second St. Send for catalogue.

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS.
UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.
Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL
Ask for Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 10
ESTABLISHED 1858
THE C. S. BELL CO. HILLSBORO, OHIO



CHURCH FURNITURE
Pews, Pulpits, Chairs, Altars, Book Racks, Tables, Communion Ware—EVERYTHING. The finest furniture made. Direct from our factory to your church. Catalog free. DeMoulin Bros. & Co., Dpt 17 Greenville, Ill.

Chimes for your Church

Are now within easy reach

"The White Temple"
Miami, Florida

FIRST METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH
"THE WHITE TEMPLE"
100 N. E. SECOND AVENUE
MIAMI FLORIDA

May 24, 1923

J. C. Deagan Co. Inc.
Berteau & Ravenswood Aves.,
Chicago, Ill.

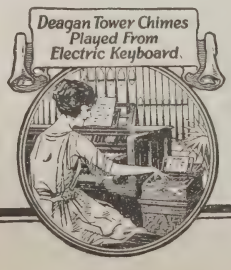
Dear Sirs:-

Your Mr. Little has spent several days working faithfully upon our "Edwin Nelson Memorial Chimes" and the results are most pleasing to all of us. Mrs. Nelson and I are most enthusiastic. Our musical director, who is conductor of the strongest male chorus in the entire south, in addition to his work with us, and who was chime ringer for one of the best sets of bells in the middle west for many years, says that he has never heard such beautiful quality of tone in any other chimes, bells or tubes, as is now produced on our set. During the testing yesterday a number of musical people stopped their cars to listen and to give most hearty expression to their commendation of the music produced by them.

We wish to thank you sincerely for what you have done to give us the best chimes in the entire south, and many say, the best toned in the entire country.

Very truly yours,

W. D. Merrill



DEAGAN Tower Chimes have revolutionized Chime building. They are electrically played—no tugging at ropes. Your organist plays rich melody on them and blends chime music into the services.

Daily use of chimes brings a spiritual awakening that means much to the prosperity of your church. They are truly a Memorial Sublime which lives through generations to come and for all time perpetuates the memory of both the donor and the loved one in whose memory and honor they are placed.

Deagan Chimes are superbly musical, stately, dignified, perfectly tuned and flawless in pitch. They are a blessing on the entire community.

Our new Community Memorial Plan will enable you to secure Deagan Tower Chimes for your church. Fill out and mail the coupon for particulars.

Complete sets
DEAGAN TOWER CHIMES
$5,000 to $10,000

J. C. Deagan Inc.

Established 1880

Deagan Bldg., 1783 Berteau Ave.
Chicago, U. S. A.

COUPON

J. C. DEAGAN, Inc., Chicago
Send full particulars of Deagan Tower Chimes and the new plan which will enable us to purchase them.

Name_____
Street_____
City_____ State_____
For Church_____ School_____

286.05
BAP

Volume IV August 11, 1923 No. 28

UNIVERSITY OF
AUG 11 1923

The Baptist

UNIV OF ILL LIBR
URBANA ILL

Published Every Week by the Northern Bap Convention

A Prayer

WE thank thee, O Christ, that thou didst come into the world to light man's way through it to the Holy City, and though the way lies through the Slough of Despond and hard by Doubting Castle, and up the steep Hill of Difficulty, yet he who suffered in Gethsemane still lives to help us, and the light of Calvary shines through dark days and starless nights and makes the way over the river Jordan bright and safe to the city of one song, where they sing only the songs of the redeemed.

Let no man unmake himself by blindness of unbelief. Heal the eyes of his understanding. May he stand in the sunny windows of God's love and truth and find this earth to be but one apartment of the great house of God and the vestibule of heaven. Amen.

—From "Prayers of John Wanamaker."

Fresh from the Field

Rev. M. F. Johnson has resigned the pastorate of the Rock Church, Middleboro, Mass. His future home will be with his daughter who lives in St. Paul.

The "Baptist Advance" reports the recent baptism of Mrs. Susan Pruitt, when she united with the Baptist church of Caesar, N. C., at the age of 103.

Rev. J. H. MacDonald has resigned the pastorate of the First Church, Wolfville, N. S., Canada, because of ill health.

The Baptist church of Shirley, Mass., after being closed for services for three years, has voted to turn its property over to the state convention.

During the vacation of Rev. George A. Lawson, the pulpit of Union Square Baptist Church, Somerville, Mass., will be supplied as follows: Aug. 12, Rev. Percy W. Back; Aug. 19, Rev. B. T. Livingstone; Aug. 26, Rev. I. P. Chadbourne; Sept. 2, Mr. Lewis Smith, the singing evangelist. The regular services continue during the summer. September 9 Mr. Lawson will begin his fifth year as pastor.

Rev. George L. Hibbard, senior pastor in the Worcester Baptist Associatian, Massachusetts, and for twelve years pastor of Newton Square Baptist Church, of Worcester, has resigned and accepted a call to the First Baptist Church, Bradford, N. H., the only church in Bradford and attended by people of all denominations.

Toronto, Ont., has been chosen by the Baptist World Alliance as its meeting place five years hence. The choice was made before final adjournment of the present congress after representatives of Washington, D. C., and Atlanta, Ga., had withdrawn in favor of the Canadian city.

Japanese students in Tokyo who are opposed to the use of liquor have formed a Students' Anti-Liquor Federation, and at a recent first meeting of the federation nine leading universities, colleges and schools of Tokyo were represented. Dr. M. Yanagisawa, who attended the International Education Conference in San Francisco as one of Japan's delegates, has accepted the presidency of the new federation.

The Holy Land Pilgrim and Tourist Society of America, 350 West 87th St., New York City, has been entrusted to take care of the practical side of a special tour to Jerusalem, arranged by Archbishop Panteleimon and other prominent Americans. A ship with accommodations for about 1,500 passengers will sail on Oct. 10 from New York to Jaffa, the port of Jerusalem, and back to New York in fifty days with stops at the Azores, Lisbon, Alexandria, Jaffa, Beyruth, Smyrna, Pyraeus and Naples.

The Quaker Mission in Poland is planning to erect a small model ophanage, agricultural and training school for child welfare workers. The government will provide both the land and buildings. The institution will be directed by an American or English welfare worker and will be conducted along modern lines. It is estimated that there are 300,000 orphans in Poland. The Junior American Red Cross will cooperate with the mission.

The First Church, Danville, Ky., will observe its hundredth anniversary Sept. 9. Former pastors have been asked to be present at the exercises.

Only 1,671 of the 170,000 active clergymen in the United States paid a tax on incomes in excess of $3,000 last year, while at the same time more than 21,000 lawyers and 20,000 doctors paid such a tax.

The Christian Temperance Society of China has been reorganized under the name of the Total Abstinence Society of China. A monthly magazine, the Awakening China will be published at a cost of 1 cent per copy.

Although President Roosevelt was a member of the Dutch Reformed Church, the Episcopalians of New York are erecting a church costing $125,000 in his memory at Forest Hills. The cornerstone was recently laid. A window in the tower will depict incidents in Roosevelt's life.

Anxiety

"Casting all your anxiety on him."
—1 Peter v. 7.

O soul of mine, how dull and slow thou art!
When God says "all," why shouldst thou read "a part"?
Cannot the One whose power the world upbears
Conduct in wisdom all his child's affairs?
Then close thy sleepless eyes and take thy rest
As trusting babe upon the mother's breast.
Rejoice the ocean bears thee and thy barque;
To love there is no problem and no dark.

—Elizabeth Cheney in British Weekly.

The Palestine Exploration Fund announces that subscriptions have been received sufficient to make it possible for excavations to be begun the coming fall on that portion of Jerusalem known as the City of David. Professor Macalister will be in charge of the work at its commencement. It is anticipated that discoveries will be made which will add much to what is at present known of the early life of the Israelites.

Rev. I. T. Jacobs recently resigned the pastorate of the Belmont Church, Roanoke, Va., to go to Wheeling, W. Va. In but three years at Roanoke there were received 563 new members; the Sunday-school increased from 745 to 1206; the missionary offerings grew from $2417 to $4280, and local expenses from $7017 to $11,525. A twelve-room parsonage has been built. Mr. Jacobs has the distinction of being the first pastor of the combined First and Temple churches which merged March 13, 1923 following the resignation of the late Dr. George E. Lockhart, pastor of the Baptist Temple. The consolidation was preceded by the resignation of Rev. A. D. Hilton, pastor of the First Church, who accepted a call from the First Church of Marietta, Ohio. The merger gives the First Church one of the largest congregations in the city.

As soon as a pastor is secured for the Royal Center Church, Ind., Rev. Arnold C. Westphal will assume his new duties as pastor of the Epiphany Church, Chicago.

The son of the former Philippine rebel leader, Emilio Aguinaldo, Jr., recently graduated from Phillips Andover Academy and will enter Annapolis in the fall.

A Christian reading club has been organized in Kumanato, Japan. Members pay five cents per month fee and thus are entitled to become regular readers.

The seven-year-old son of Dr. Frederic C. Spurr, the English preacher, was drowned July 14. A memorial service was held July 17. Both Mr. and Mrs. Spurr bore the shock bravely and attended the Alliance meetings in Stockholm.

The Cannon Street Memorial Church, Birmingham, England, is planning to erect a new building because of its enlarging work. The church, which was the first of the Baptist denomination in Birmingham, was organized in 1737.

Rev. J. M. Fowler, pastor of the Hebron and Brushy Fork churches, Ind., died suddenly at his home July 16. Funeral services were conducted by Rev. B. E. Antrobus assisted by Revs. W. T. Seyburn, F. D. McFadden, G. C. Mitchell and C. M. Dinsmore.

Mrs. Maud Howe Elliott, daughter of Julia Ward Howe, who married a British subject in Rome twenty-five years ago, is now an American citizen. She was recently naturalized under the act of Congress permitting American-born women who had married foreign subjects to regain citizenship.

The American Federation of Labor in a recent proclamation has requested that the Sunday before Labor Day be specially observed. It defines the goal of the labor movement as "a great union of expression in behalf of a higher, nobler life for the masses of our people—a consecration to the cause of human betterment, particularly in those things that lead to ethical and spiritual growth."

It is claimed by the Moody Bible Institute, Chicago, that it is the only educational institution in the world which includes a Jewish course in its curriculum. Instruction is provided in Yiddish, the modern Jewish dialect, as well as in ancient Jewish history. Rev. Solomon Birnbaum is the director. There are now three and a half times as many Jews in New York City as in Germany, as many in Chicago as in Great Britain, while the number in Philadelphia outnumbers all of France.

Chinese women who invest in industries, industrial banks or promote such enterprises, will be decorated with Phoenix medals. According to the regulations of the Chinese Ministry of Agriculture and Commerce there will be five classes: First class for those who invest $200,000 or more of their own money or raise $1,000,000 or more from others; second class for those who invest $100,000 or more or raise $500,000 or more; third class for those who invest $50,000 or more or raise $200,000 or more; fourth class for those who invest $10,000 or more or raise $50,000 or more; fifth class for those who invest $5,000 or more or raise $25,000 or more. These medals have in the center a green phoenix on a red disc with a golden margin, which is surrounded with four

(Continued on page 868)

The Baptist

Vol. IV Chicago, Ill., August 11, 1923 No. 28

THE BAPTIST, founded in 1919, is published every Saturday by the Northern Baptist Convention at 417 South Dearborn Street, Chicago, Illinois. Entered as second-class matter, February 4, 1920, at the post office at Chicago, Illinois, under the Act of March 3, 1879. Acceptance for mailing at special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized February 4, 1920.

Managing Editor: Edgar L. Killam

Committee on THE BAPTIST

EMORY W. HUNT, Chairman

CLARENCE A. BARBOUR HUGH A. HEATH

RATES: Single subscriptions, $2.50 a year; church clubs equal to 10 per cent of church membership, $2.00; single copies, 10 cents. In foreign countries the postage is $1.04 extra; in Canada, 52 cents extra. CHANGE OF ADDRESS: Both old and new addresses should be in our hands at least two weeks before the change is to go into effect. Always give key number as it appears on your label.

REMITTANCES: Should be made payable to THE BAPTIST. Acknowledgment made through change of label date. If check on local bank is sent, please add exchange.

SPECIAL: Renewal notice will be sent each subscriber previous to the date to which subscription is paid. Subscriber should give attention to notice by sending in renewal promptly, or, if paper is not desired for the coming year, should send in a discontinuance order.

ADVERTISING: Display: Rate per agate line, 30 cents; full page (420 agate lines), $125. No time or space discounts. Classified: 6 cents per word. Obituary notices: One hundred words free; 4 cents per word for additional. Cash to accompany order.

CORRESPONDENCE relating to subscriptions should be addressed to THE BAPTIST, Subscription Department, 417 South Dearborn Street, Chicago, Ill.

BRANCH OFFICES: The office of the state director of promotion in each state is an office of THE BAPTIST.

Table of Contents

| | Page |
|---|---|
| FRESH FROM THE FIELD | 866 |
| CHRISTIANITY'S WORK FOR THE WORLD'S BOYS, BY HOWARD B. GROSE | 868 |
| EDITORIAL | 869 |
| THE SUPREMACY OF JESUS, BY S. FRASER LANGFORD | 872 |
| THE PURPOSE OF THE LAYMEN'S COUNCIL, BY R. O. JASPERSON | 875 |
| A DEAD CHURCH OR A LIVE ONE, BY CLARENCE I. FORD | 876 |
| THE TOO MUCH PROMISED LAND, BY ELIZABETH TITZEL | 878 |
| EVIDENCE THAT GOD LIVES, BY ANDREW MARTIN SMITH | 880 |
| DIGNITY AT A DISCOUNT, BY W. H. MORSE | 881 |
| OPEN FORUM | 882 |
| RELIGIOUS EDUCATION | 883 |
| THE CHIMNEY CORNER | 884 |
| YOUNG PEOPLE'S WORK | 886 |
| OUR OWN FOLKS | 887 |
| THINGS AS THEY ARE, BY LIDA S. ASHMORE | 891 |
| OUR BOOK SHELF | 893 |
| OUR MUSIC CORNER | 895 |

Summer Sermons

You may take a vacation from church, but THE BAPTIST has no intention of abbetting its readers in taking a vacation from sermons. If the pastor is in Stockholm or back home to see the folks, or on a fishing trip, and no supply has been secured to take his place, there's nevertheless the weekly opportunity to sample a first-class sermon if you have THE BAPTIST. The pastor needs a rest from the regular routine of his work, but real heart-and-soul religion never takes a rest any more than a tree planted by a flowing stream takes a rest from developing. It draws minute by minute sustenance from the life-giving fountain and "its leaf does not wither."

Killam's Kollum

Count Your Blessings

If you were to pay your subscription to THE BAPTIST in German marks it would take 550,000 of them for an annual subscription. Think of the work involved in counting all that money. We will take your check for $2.50 for a full year's subscription to THE BAPTIST. To draw this check will take you but a moment and then you can take the rest of the time to count your blessings. These are worth more than German marks.

The Laymen Movement

"Actuated by the spirit of service and by a firm belief that the teachings, spirit and example of Jesus Christ can and should be made a part of the every-day lives of men"—thus reads the preamble to the statement of purpose of the National Council of Northern Baptist Laymen, of which R. O. Jasperson is executive secretary. The statement of purpose complete appears in this issue. Read it and the article accompanying it.

Tools of the Trade

"The man who does not make a business of his religion has a religious life of no force, and the man who does not make a religion of his business has a business life of no character."—Babcock. Do you know of any good lawyer who does not take a legal magazine? Or any physician who does not subscribe to a medical journal? Doesn't the up-and-coming storekeeper read his trade paper? Do you know of any progressive Baptist church that isn't placing big emphasis on subscribing for THE BAPTIST? You can't go very far without the tools of your trade.

Yes, "They Ought To"

Rev. John R. George, field missionary, has the right idea as to what will hold new converts to the Baptist belief. He writes: "I have just assisted a little church, Cloverland, Wash., in a three-day meeting. The church has received a number into its membership by baptism. I told these new converts that next to being baptized they ought now to subscribe for THE BAPTIST and Missions. I am therefore sending you five joint subscriptions at the combined rate, $3 per year." It is such a spirit as this that clinches the matter. Once the faith has been accepted, the members want to get in touch with denominational activities. There is no better means than that which Mr. George suggests.

Christianity's Work for the World's Boys

By Howard B. Grose

THE Lausanne Conference filled the most space in the papers, but it was not the most important conference in Europe this year. That place belongs to the second World Conference of Y. M. C. A. workers among boys, held at Portschach in the Austrian Alps. At Lausanne a treaty was finally signed by the Turks and the allied powers, securing a compromising peace for the Near East; a treaty satisfactory to no one save the Turks who won all they demanded, and giving no guarantee of safety for the Armenian refugees. At Portschach the future of civilization was under consideration, for in the right development of the world's boys all the issues, moral, social and religious, national and international, of peace and war, are involved. Lausanne marks a temporary truce between forces inherently hostile; Portschach dated a new era in organized effort for the physical, moral and spiritual betterment of universal boyhood and young manhood, and cemented ties that will make for international peace and good-will.

"The Boys' Workers Conference was a wonderful triumph," says Dr. John R. Mott. "We had present about 1,000 delegates from forty-eight countries. The work of the six commissions marked the taking of advance ground. The open forums and the ample opportunities for fellowship accomplished a great service in the binding together of the leaders of work with boys all over the world. Really creative work was done. The conference did not meet a day too soon so far as initiating processes for rehabilitating the shattered boy life of Europe is concerned."

No observer who has studied conditions in Europe at close range will question this statement. Nothing is more pathetic or prophetic of ill than this shattered boy life, submerged in a morass of immorality and hopelessness, its ideals dethroned and its ambitions annihilated. It was good, therefore, to gather the workers from all parts of the world together to take account of conditions and needs, to incite new hope in the most discouraged places by recounting the bright spots and the cumulative successes in the world field as a whole. Thus the strong imparted new courage and impulse to the weak, and a sense of solidarity brought support and inspiration not to be measured. There was a buoyancy of spirit at the close in marked contrast to the more somber mood at the opening of the conference, and the joyousness of brotherhood discovered and established in Christian faith was everywhere in evidence. The findings reflected the determination to advance with a comprehensive program for the boys of the entire world. Money was pledged to put six men in the field for three years to extend the work under direction of E. M. Robinson, of the American International Committee, who will remain at Geneva for this service.

No action of the conference, however, could exceed in value the reports of the commissions which had for three years or more been studying the boy life in all nations. For the first time in history it was possible to get a true and comprehensive picture of world boyhood conditions and needs; and in addition, a reliable account of the work that is being done in boys' behalf. These studies are intensely interesting, as they are at times distressingly enlightening. They disclose the astonishing amount and extent of the organized work of the Y. M. C. A. in its world outreach. An analysis of the reports will present many surprises. It is shown, for one thing, that boys are boys the world over, and are responsive to the same appeals and character-building influences. Church workers should secure the reports and findings from the Y. M. C. A. headquarters, 347 Madison Avenue, New York City, in order to understand the world problem and see the relation of the local churches and community to its solution.

The reports make clear how the Y. M. C. A. as an efficient arm of the church, has entered the doors into non-Christian lands opened by Christian missionaries, and given to thousands of boys the benefits of western civilization, how it has also been welcomed in lands where the people were not accustomed to associate the Christian church with social service. The association ideal of the fourfold development of the whole man, physical, mental, social and spiritual, from the moment when the adolescent takes his direction toward usefulness or destruction, has made a strong appeal. In some countries, notably China, the work has spread with astonishing rapidity. As for the general position of the Y. M. C. A. abroad, where its welfare work during and after the war gave it such favorable reception and opportunity, Doctor Mott says "Our work over here has certainly found itself, and is affecting profoundly the ideals and character-building processes of the new and of the reborn countries of Europe and the Near East."

The Portschach Conference with its motto "The hope of the world," meaning of course, the boy, sounded a note of hope for the world's boys that will reverberate through the nations. It sounded also a clarion call to every nation, church and Christian to dedicate time, thought and means to prepare the boyhood of today for the righteous manhood of tomorrow that shall abolish war and establish peace and brotherhood.

---

Fresh from the Field

(Continued from page 866)

white peonies with green leaves and golden stems. The first class medals will have eight pearls studded between the peonies; the second class, six; the third class, four; the fourth class, two; and the fifth class none. They will be awarded to women industrialists upon the recommendation of the general chambers of commerce.

The fourteenth National Sunday-school convention was recently held in Japan at the Reinanzaka Church, Tokyo. There were more than 200 delegates present representing 103 branch associations which would correspond to county or district associations in the United States. Since the world's Sunday-school convention, which was held in Tokyo in 1920, the Japanese have been able to finance their own national Sunday-school work.

Rev. Frank H. Levell of Bloomington, Ind., for the past three years alumni secretary of Indiana University, is planning to reenter the pastorate.

A memorial to Dr. J. B. Gambrell will be erected by the First Church, Saluda, N. C. The church has asked 50,000 Baptists in the Southern Convention to contribute $1.

Rev. B. A. Pugh, pastor of the Central Church, Muskogee, Okla., has received a call to the First Church, Jonesboro, Ark.

Services have been resumed in the church at Cochrane, Canada, after a six months' scourge of fever has passed. There were 1,000 cases in the town with 125 deaths. The church lost nine members. Rev. A. T. O. Marks is pastor.

Dr. Fridtjof Nansen, the Arctic explorer, will visit the United States and speak at the eighth annual meeting of the American Council of World Alliance to be held in Philadelphia, Nov. 13-15. Since the armistice Doctor Nansen has devoted most of his time to the humanitarian work of the League of Nations.

June 23, the cornerstone of the new $500,000 structure of the First Church, Knoxville, Tenn., was laid. Rev. F. F. Brown is pastor. The church, when completed, will probably be one of the finest Baptist churches in the South.

The National Association of Organists will meet Aug. 28-31 in the Eastman School of Music, Rochester, N. Y.

Rev. Rufus Keyser, pastor of the First Church, Stockton, Calif., was selected chaplain for the Y. M. C. A. boys, numbering about 100, who camped at Dorrington in the high Sierras. Before the camp closed, every boy accepted Christ as his personal Saviour. Many of them declared their purpose to devote their life to some form of Christian service.

The establishment of the first juvenile courts in Japan was recently reported in a Japanese paper. During the first three months of their existence, the two courts in Tokyo and Osaka have handled 1911 cases, of whom 1755 were boys and 156 were girls.

The Tokyo municipal statistical bureau has announced that there are 193,849 women working for their living in that city. Analysis shows that the largest number are women who have their own business such as stores and hotels.

Church leaders of the country will discuss international relations from the Christian point of view at a conference to be held at Chautauqua, N. Y., Aug. 20-24. The meeting will be under the auspices of the commission on international justice and goodwill of the Federal Council of Churches. Some of the speakers will be George W. Wickersham, Pres. Henry Noble MacCrackin of Vassar, Dr. Sidney L. Gulick, Dr. George R. Montgomery, Prof. Irving Fisher of Yale, Harry W. Holmes, Bishop Wilbur K. Thirkfield and Rev. Peter Ainslie.

The Baptist

The Summer Assembly

THE Chautauqua idea, developed something like a half-century ago by the late Bishop John H. Vincent of the Methodist Episcopal Church, long before he attained to episcopal dignity, has pretty thoroughly captured America. It is doubtless an outgrowth of the old-fashioned campmeeting, which still lingers in some parts of America, and that doubtless goes still farther back to the great outdoor gatherings where Whitefield and John Wesley stirred the souls of listening thousands and changed the character of Anglo-Saxon history; and still farther back to the great outdoor meetings which gave birth to the crusades with their seemingly futile yet tremendous consequences; and farther back still to the Jewish feast of tabernacles and the wilderness—assemblage of Israel which that feast commemorated. But indeed it may be traced to human tendencies reaching far outside of our own or any religion, to the tendency to revert for a little from the familiar routine of life to the forest and nature with its freedom and appeal to dim ancestral instincts sleeping within us.

The name Chautauqua is of course taken from the beautiful lake where Dr. Vincent's assembly gathered. The name was extended to apply to the circles and reading courses formed in communities throughout the land for the extension throughout the year of the impulses started at the Chautauqua summer assembly. More recently it has had a wide—perhaps its widest extension—in its application to a type of entertainment covering a week or less, wherein lyceum bureaus furnish speakers, singers and other entertainers, such as they had been and are still furnishing for courses extending throughout the year. It is really a marvellous thing. In many hundreds of communities, some of them small villages, a huge tent will be set up, large audiences, secured by a previous sale of tickets, will be gathered perhaps from a radius of many miles about, as is made possible by the automobile, and notable speakers and singers who could never otherwise be heard in these communities are brought to their doors. In addition to these developments of the Chautauqua idea it is significant that the original summer school itself by the New York lake was considered of sufficient importance for that great, if not the greatest, educational genius of America, Dr. William R. Harper, to accept the headship of it for years, while he was a university president.

But the direct offspring of the original Chautauqua is the summer assembly of today. After some years of uncertain success the assembly idea seems to be more firmly established than ever. The Sunday school, the young people's movement, the missionary education movement, and the organized denominational work for the training of the young people in its history, principles and methods, cooperate in these movements, as a rule, in the states which hold their separate assemblies, while certain centers, like Lake Geneva, Northfield and Silver Bay, are notable for their gatherings of students. In our own denominational state assemblies it has been found desirable to hold the assembly on the campus of the Baptist state college or academy. There is a campus with dormitories and assembly rooms otherwise unused in vacation, and many a recruit for a college course is gained, while the assembly is always the most fruitful source of volunteers for missionary and other distinctively Christian work. The occasion is utilized for the meeting of various committees, and for personal interviews, with unusual leisure and favorable surroundings, on all sorts of subjects. Setting-up conferences for all manner of commissions and committee work are more feasible here than anywhere else.

With their mornings devoted to studies and lectures of real value, yet under most inspiring natural conditions; with their afternoons of recreation and competitive games; with their evenings of popular entertainment; with the stunts, the fun, and the quiet talks of the closing hour about the campfire, religion is deconventionalized. Life purposes are formed and life gets itself a larger meaning. The assembly is a landmark in many a life.

The Summer Sag

HOW shall we be rid of the summer sag or slump in our giving? Theoretically, offerings to our great missionary work should be fairly even throughout the year, for expenses keep up and income should be regular. A yearly church budget of $12,000 or $1,200 should mean $1,000 or $100 a month paid in as promptly at the beginning as at the close of the fiscal year; in midsummer as in winter. However, a peculiar psychology affects the thing. Even in business and legal affairs some allowance must usually be made for human nature; collections are good at certain times and "slow" at others.

But in religious finance we enter the realm of the voluntary instead of the compulsory. At any rate, it is voluntary at its beginning, for no one is compelled to take upon himself the obligations of religion. But when he has once done so he assumes a higher than legal obligation. Just so in family life no one is compelled to enter the bonds of matrimony, but when he has done so his obligations under this new bond become higher and more imperative than ordinary business obligations.

And in religious finance we enter also into the realm of the emotions. All religion moves in the realm of the emotions, and properly so, though as with some other human instincts there is danger of their being overloaded. But it is emotion which gives to religious service its fire, its enthusiasm, its ability to achieve the unachievable. What great missionary offerings have been made under the stress of some crisis in the work! What heroic deeds are accomplished by a little band in a church-building enterprise!

But the religious pledge does not have the legal sanctions of a note at the bank. The giver of the latter knows that all the power of the law will be back of its collection, and the bank protects itself in advance by collateral or endorsements. But who ever knew of a missionary subscription being collected by legal process? Possibly such a subscription may have been collected from an estate whose other legatees sought to defeat the subscriber's wishes, but that is quite another matter.

The earlier months this year show, as usual, a pitiful shrinkage from their proportionate part of a year's giving. It has been so for a century, but the very largeness of the budgets these days makes it more difficult to catch up if one has once fallen behind. An amount that might be paid if given in regular weekly instalments may be almost impossible if neglected for a few weeks. The small boy remarked out of his bitter experience, "I don't see how anybody can comb his hair every day; I only comb mine once in six months and it nearly kills me then!"

Our church people do not realize what a sag it makes in the national treasury by the simple neglect of those going on vacation to provide for the regular upkeep of their offerings in their absence. This in the aggregate prevents the church treasurer from sending on the proper sum to the state director and the director from sending to national headquarters and the general treasurer from distributing to the missionary societies and they are unable to send the amounts so sorely needed by the missionaries all over the world.

The remedy is to consider Christ's work a preferred claim, as he indeed directs us to do, with the promise, divinely fulfilled throughout two thousand years, that all other needful things will be added unto us.

Shell-Shocked Humanity

An English writer in the July Atlantic, writing under the heading "Shock and Religion," takes the term shell-shock and the pitiable experience which it describes as applying in a wider sense to the world-wide tendencies, which no thoughtful person can have failed to notice, alike in the case of individuals and of masses and even of whole nations, to lose control of themselves and to be at the mercy of strange weaknesses, fears and reversions to barbarism. These tendencies have been especially manifest since the war, in its modern and frightful form, brought many soldiers to a general breakdown of self-control, not only through the trying experience of exposure to heavy gun-fire but from many other experiences which broke down the victim's morale and at times his sanity. It may be questioned, however, whether the world was not before the war verging upon the condition described and whether the war itself was not one effect, as well as a partial cause, of present conditions.

The writer of the article in question, himself for years a military officer, speaks of the fact that regiments well-officered and disciplined were largely immune to cases of shock, such as raw troops, imperfectly governed, suffered from so severely. He suggests that the cure for the widespread breakdown of morale in the world may similarly lie in the leadership and steadying influence of religion. His diagnosis seems indisputable and his remedy commendable until we come to examine what it is that he means by the term religion, and then it seems rather likely that he is himself furnishing an illustration of the symptoms he sets out to cure.

It may seem ungracious to pass so harsh a judgment upon so mild-mannered a writer and one with such amiable intentions, but a physician would be likely to feel some impatience with any one attempting to cure a case of corrosive poisoning by administering bread-pills and spring water. To the bewildered, sinning, suffering world in its hour of defeat he points, not to God, not to Christ, but to some vague "mother-world," which he identifies with God, "the two being inseparable." This of course is pantheism. He gives two reasons for our loving the world, "first because she is so lovable; and, second, because she loves us. And the grounds for saying this are, that whenever there is the slightest risk or chance of our having to leave the world, we realize how sweet and fair she is, and cling to her with all our might; and we find at the same time that she is clinging to us, folding us closely to her and striving to keep us with her." So, then, our fear of death is the foundation of our faith! He would have, as "even wild tribesmen on the Indian frontier have mullahs and bands, holy men and music to rouse the religious sentiment and fan it to fervent heat."

The trouble with all of this is that it represents a wide-spread tendency of the times—perhaps of all time—to abandon the definite promises of the Christian religion for nebulous mouthings which when examined resolve themselves into nothing. There appear to be many who adopt literally the sentiment which the humorist put into the mouth of Mrs. Partington, "I do so love to hear a populous minister dispense with the gospel!"

Nay, it is old mother-world herself who is suffering shell-shock and needs, O so woefully, a help outside of herself from him who made this world and all worlds. "God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble." It is Christ who says, "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest." "Lord, to whom shall we go? For thou hast the words of eternal life."

Our President

THE flags of a nation are at half mast. The hearts of a people are saddened by the realization of a great loss—for "our" president has gone from us. In a peculiar sense he was "ours," for he was a Baptist—a member of Calvary Church, Washington, D. C., under the ministry of W. S. Abernethy.

Through a life of service Warren G. Harding rose to greatness. His townspeople at Marion, Ohio, loved him—a worthy tribute to any man. To most of those of his own generation he was known as "Warren." And he loved the "homefolks." When he left the office of his newspaper the Star for his inauguration as President of the United States, he shook hands with every employee. It was such little unassuming kindnesses, so frequently manifested, that made the President so beloved a man.

At a most difficult time Warren G. Harding assumed the duties of President of the United States, and he performed a stupendous task. It was done quietly and without the blare of trumpets. He arose to opportunities offered him. He associated himself with political giants, but he was outshone by none of them. He was a constructive statesman, building always on a sure foundation. He was a man of vision, cherishing ever a picture of a world in harmony, with peace guaranteed by the mutual pledge of nations working together. He was brave, tolerant, fearless, forceful, clear-sighted, far-seeing, conservative, lovable. When history writes the record of his achievements there will be revealed the great and kindly soul of a great executive.

President Coolidge will maintain the policy of President Harding who, during their years of close association, has had his loyal admiration and support.

Expectancy and Achievement

WITHOUT expectation there is seldom any worthwhile achievement. This is practically true in every phase of life. It is particularly true of the spiritual life and of church affairs.

We were visiting a home where there were several healthy, normal children with all the propensities that go with such a state of childhood. These children responded to the leadership of their parents in a remarkable way, and when we probed the reason for the obedience the mother said, "That is simple; we have from the start raised our children with the expectation that they will do as we direct them to do." A successful teacher said the identical thing concerning the method he used to produce excellent results with a large and lively group of students.

The science of psychology teaches its students that same general principle. In fact, you will find it prevails in almost every sphere except in our local church life, where much of the spiritual upbuilding is done and must continue to be done under the plan of the Lord.

The average church membership is allowed today to do about as it pleases despite the teaching of God's Word and the covenant obligation of the church. Recently we heard a prominent church leader say that whenever the local body seriously undertook to build into the life of the membership an expectation of participation in worship, in service, in witnessing and in giving, it never failed to produce a marked advance in the productivity of the church and in the spiritual growth of the individual members.

As it now is, we have no sense of discipline among the members because we have never expected discipline from them. The church in its local work needs a sense of discipline in order to secure a goodly measure of achievement at home and abroad. Church leaders must themselves have a sense of discipline so that they may be able to produce achievement in their own lives as well as in the lives of those over whom they have been appointed as leaders. Our cause needs achievements in order to honor and serve our Lord and Master. Let us create the expectation of achievement and the Lord will lead us on to great victories.

Justice Taft Plays the Game

THE editorial written by ex-President Taft and published in the Philadelphia Public Ledger, shortly after the eighteenth amendment had been ratified, threw confusion into the ranks of the liquor dealers. Mr. Taft had not favored prohibition; but his editorial defended the amendment as the fundamental law of the land, which must be obeyed by all true citizens.

From that attitude Mr. Taft has never departed; and at the alumni luncheon at the latest Yale commencement his address was a vigorous plea for a return to the Anglo-Saxon principle of respect for law. Press reports state that Mr. Taft "referred particularly to prohibition, which, he said, had become important because it served as a test of the principle of observance of all law. Mr. Taft said prohibition has been legally adopted by a large majority and that there was not the slightest indication that the eighteenth amendment would be repealed. 'I was opposed to prohibition,' said the Chief Justice of the United States, 'but the vote was against me and those who felt as I did. Now that the law is there, I claim to play the game.'"

By what possible subterfuge can lesser lights in official America justify their connivance at bootlegging, their opposition to enforcement codes, their overt contempt for the prohibition laws; when America's supreme judicial authority, himself a former president, thus challenges his fellow-citizens to "play the game?" The law is there—and it must be respected and vindicated and enforced, or it must be ignored and defied and nullified. The game is on; who lines up to play for Old Glory? The eminent Chief Justice has framed a slogan for the crusade against lawlessness, well worth memorizing and sharing until it rings from the Statue of Liberty to Golden Gate: "Now that the law is there, I claim to play the game."

The Supremacy of Jesus

Hebrews 1:1-12

By S. Fraser Langford

WE are slow to believe that the book of Hebrews fulfilled its function when it was read in the ears of a group of Hebrews in the city of Jerusalem, who had been tempted to return to Judaism because they had been disappointed over the delay in the return of Christ. It has a heartening message for Christians of every age. A great purpose has prompted its writing for it was done to check faint-heartedness, change unbelief, and to prevent a relapse into apostasy. It is the summons of a battle leader to his fighting lines to hold fast under fire. And to do this he paints a picture of the peerless leader of man. You will remember in the poem on "Sheridan's Ride" how "the wave of defeat checked its way there because the sight of the leader compelled it to pause." And it may be that the portrayal of Christ in the opening chapters in the book of Hebrews will stiffen the courage of those who are thinking of laying down their arms, or of hauling down the flag, for in this book the Christ is shown as the overcoming one: as overcoming impurity by purging—1:3; as overcoming death by immortality—2:9; as overcoming defilement by sanctification—2:11; overcoming alienation by propitiation—3:17; as overcoming temptation by divine reenforcement—2:18. This is the wonderful Saviour whom the writer portrays, the one who meets every need, who stands every test and who endures every strain.

The Spirit of Sacrifice

There are reputed pictures of Christ, but it is questionable as to whether they are authentic. The description of Josephus is about as authentic as any. Jesus did not seem to be greatly concerned as to the perpetuation of his portrait, but he did seem to be concerned that we should remember his personality. He seemed to be more concerned that we should remember him as the Way, the Truth and the Life than that we should remember the color of his hair or his eyes, or his height. So, when the Greeks would see Jesus he gave them the central principle of his life—the spirit of sacrifice. And this portrayal of Jesus which is described in the book of Hebrews follows the same attitude. It is drawn for those who are faint-hearted because they had no visible priest or altar. It is drawn for those who would walk by sight and not by faith. The first picture presents him as

Supreme Above the Prophets

Heb. 1:1-3. God having of old time spoken unto the fathers in the prophets by divers manners, hath at the end of these days spoken unto us in his Son, whom he appointed heir of all things, through whom also he made the worlds; who being the effulgence of his glory, and the very image of his substance, and upholding all things by the work of his power, when he had made purification of sin, sat down on the right hand of the Majesty on high.

Some time ago it was my privilege to visit the Boston library, where the mural decorations of Edward A. Abbey are found, together with the picture of the prophets by Sargent. In this group one can see Isaiah's seraphic air, and as you look upon the group your conception of the strength and dignity of the prophets is greatly increased. The modern estimate of the towering strength of the Old Testament prophets is becoming increasingly manifest in the writings of the great thinkers of the day, for they conveyed to their times a prophetic message far in advance of their age. They were divinely inspired men who were blazing the trail toward God. Nathan was blazing a trail toward personal holiness when he dared to rebuke the king: Samuel was blazing the trail toward national righteousness when he asked Saul, "What meaneth this bleating of the sheep?" and Isaiah was blazing the trail toward the vision of the Messiah. All these men were great, but the greatness of Jesus is greater, for he had the brightness and the glory of God and the expressed image of his person; and it is he who upholds all things by the word of his power; and it is he who has purged us of our sins and who has now sat down at the right hand of the Majesty on high. Our second picture of Christ presents him as

Supreme Above the Angels

Heb. 1:4-7. Having become by so much better than the angels, as he hath inherited a more excellent name than they. For unto which of the angels said he at any time, Thou art my Son, This day have I begotten thee? And again, I will be to him a Father, And he shall be to me a Son? And when he again bringeth in the first born into the world he saith, And let all the angels of God worship him. And of the angels he saith, Who maketh his angels winds, and his ministers a flame of fire.

It would be hard to say what is the greatest thing that the angels have ever done. How glorious and majestic these ambassadors of God must be. It was a great thing when the angels stood in the door of Abraham's tent to warn him of the fate that was to overtake Sodom and Gomorrah. It was a great thing when the angels hastened Lot. It was a great thing when the angelic deliverer led Peter out of prison. It was a great moment in the life of Mary when the shining visitor from the skies said to her, "Fear not, Mary, for thou hast found favor with God. Behold, thou shalt conceive in thy womb and bring forth a son, and shall call his name Jesus. He shall be great and shall be called the Son of the Most High, and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David, and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end."

The Multitude of Angels

John exhausted the power of language in trying to describe the multitude of angels that stand around the throne. Rev. 7:9-12: "After these things I saw, and behold, a great multitude which no man could number, out of every nation and of all tribes and peoples and tongues, standing before the throne and before the Lamb, arrayed in white robes, and palms in their hands; and they cried with a great voice, saying, Salvation unto our God who sitteth on the throne, and unto the Lamb. And all the angels were standing round about the throne, and about the elders, and the four living creatures; and they fell before the throne on their faces, and worshipped God, saying, Amen: Blessing and glory, and wisdom, and thanksgiving, and honor, and power, and might be unto our God for ever and ever. Amen."

Perhaps their tribute of praise was the greatest thing they ever did, or ever will do. No wonder the great artist, Doré, loved to paint great circles of angels. Some one has said that the greatest thing that angels ever did was the giving of the law to Moses—that law which was ordained through angels (Gal. 3:19). But Christ is greater than the angels, for nothing that they ever did approaches what he did on Calvary's cross. It is no wonder that the angels bowed in worship before him. It is no wonder that the angels announced his birth. It is no wonder that the angels came and ministered unto him after the temptation in the wilderness, for he, the Son of God, was to perform the greatest deed that ever the world can know—the deed of dying for the sins of men, and the deed of rising from the dead. It was an angel who smote the army of Sennacherib, but it is Christ who smites the army ot Satan. It is no wonder, then, that we should hear these words, "Let all the angels of God worship him." The third picture presents Christ as

Supreme Above Kings

Heb. 1:8-9. But the Son of God he saith, Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever; and the scepter of uprightness is the scepter of thy kingdom. Thou hast loved righteousness, and hated iniquity; therefore God, thy God, hath anointed thee with the oil of gladness above thy fellows.

The spade of the excavator is uncovering the glory of many an ancient kingdom. Buildings of almost appalling magnificence are being revealed. The work of Carnarvon and Carter in the Valley of the Kings has shown us the throne of Tutankhamen, a throne which makes every modern throne look insignificant through its embellishments of gold. The throne of Attila was a throne of power. The throne of the Caesars was a throne of power. The throne of Napoleon represented more concentrated power than Europe had known for centuries; and yet Napoleon was compelled to admit that the throne of Jesus was a more enduring throne than his own. He reviewed the empires that had been founded and analyzed their foundations, saying, "Upon what did the creations of our genius depend? Upon force. Jesus, alone, founded his empire on love and to this day millions would die for him."

Daniel with prophetic vision saw the fading glories of successive kingdoms. "Thou, O king, sawest, and beheld a great image. This great image, whose brightness was excellent, stood before thee; and the form thereof was terrible. This image's head was of fine gold, his breast and his arms of silver, his belly and his thighs of brass, his legs of iron, his feet part of iron and part of clay. Thou sawest till that a stone was cut out without hands, which smote the image upon his feet that were of iron and clay, and brake them to pieces. Then was the iron, the clay, the brass, the silver, and the gold, broken to pieces together, and became like the chaff of the summer threshing floors; and the wind carried them away, that no place was found for them; and the stone that smote the image became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth." Dan. 2:31-35. He saw the gold head of the Chaldean Empire. The breast and arms of silver represented the Medo-Persian majesty and might. He saw the belly and thighs of brass, as a picture of Greek civilization. He saw the sturdy legs of iron, representing the Roman empire marching through the world. He saw also that the toes of the feet were part of iron and part of clay, prophetic of the Eastern and Western empire, and with prophetic vision he looked forth to those days when the God of heaven was to set up his kingdom which shall never be destroyed. He saw the stone that was cut out of the mountain without hand, break in pieces the iron, the brass, the clay, the silver and the gold. And he added, "the dream is certain and the interpretation is sure."

> "He that watereth shall be watered also himself." But the reverse is truth also. He that watereth not, shall be withered himself, and he that seeketh not shall himself be shut out of sight—shut into the perpetual prison-house. And that prison opens here as well as hereafter: he who is to be bound in heaven must first be bound on earth. That command to the strong angels, of which the rock-apostle is the image, "Take him, and bind him hand and foot, and cast him out," issues, in its measure, against the teacher, for every help withheld, and for every truth refused, and for every falsehood enforced; so that he is more strictly fettered the more he fetters, and farther outcast, as he more and more misleads, till at last the bars of the iron cage close upon him, and as "the golden opes, the iron shuts amain."—John Ruskin in "Sesame and Lilies."

And then John on the Isle of Patmos carried on the vision, which completed the revelation, describing that time when the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdoms of our God. No wonder that the writer to these discouraged Hebrews inspired their courage afresh, and inflamed their hearts with a high enthusiasm, as he described the throne of Christ that they had begun to serve. "Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever; a scepter of righteousness for a scepter of thy kingdom. Thou hast loved righteousness and hated iniquity, therefore God, even thy God has anointed thee with the oil of gladness above thy fellows." It is before this throne that all men must stand to give an answer for the deeds done in the flesh. Here the kings and the minions of the earth and the paupers and the profiteers must stand before him who is no respecter of persons, for he is appointed to be the judge of all the earth.

The last picture of Christ which the writer presents to that vacillating group of Hebrew Christians presents him as

Supreme Above the Universe

Hebrews 1:10-12. And thou, Lord, in the beginning didst lay the foundation of the earth, and the heavens are the works of thy hands: They shall perish; but thou continuest: And they all wax old as doth a garment; and as a mantle shalt thou roll them up, as a garment, and they shall be changed: But thou art the same, and the years shall not fail.

I can easily imagine that by this time these Hebrew Christians have lost the thought of retreat. Their hearts are now beating high with hope, and they are ready to follow on in the steps of the conquering Master of the universe, for so he is described in this closing picture. The heavens are described as the work of his hands. We must always think of the hands of the worker as greater than the things the worker makes. The universe is a cause for wonder and amazement, but the Christ who made it demands our adoration. David Thomas asks us to take the microscope with Lauwenhoeck and with him discover a thousand million animalculae whose united bulk will not exceed the size of a grain of sand, and all having a distinct formation with all the array of functions essential to life. Take the telescope and survey the Milky Way and you will see the central suns of a million systems, all larger than the solar economy to which our little planet belongs. Yes, it is a marvelous world, but it is a world of continuous change; it is a passing glory.

"Change and decay in all around I see,
O thou who changes not, abide with me."

George Lorimer while crossing the Atlantic one day was permitted to witness a scene which surpassed in beauty his fairest dreams. He describes it as follows:

"Clouds lay on the horizon verge dark and forbidding. The atmosphere was charged with moisture and the declining sun was veiled from sight. But as the good ship plowed her way, leaving behind her silver furrows, a rainbow suddenly appeared spanning the ocean, forming a radiant arch through which she drove as though impatient to pass through it to a calmer sea. As she advanced the golden gateway receded and still receded. Another bow was formed and yet another; the circle was evanescent, it came and it went. But as we turned with disappointment from the prow of the vessel, we beheld the sun as it shone in the west, resplendent, gorgeous fire as it has shone on weary mariners in the ages gone, and as it shall shine on the ages yet unborn. So the Son of Righteousness who radiates all will shine on forever. Rainbows perish, but suns endure."

When popes are laid away to rest solemn priests chant the lines, "Sic transit gloriae mundae"—"so pass the glories of this world." The Alps crumble, attrition wears them down; pyramids endure for centuries, but go at last. Steiner describes the broken columns of Greek temples "standing up like worn out teeth in the sunken gums of time." The very heavens shall be folded up like a vesture by the unseen hands of God and laid away, but Christ is the same for all the years and shall not fail—"Jesus Christ the same yesterday, today and forever." He was great in the beginning—great as a world builder; he was great in the mid-riff of history as the Redeemer; he will be great in his return, for he is coming as the King of Kings. No wonder that Christ is great, his throne endures—1:8.

His salvation is eternal—5:9.

His priesthood is unchangeable—7:24.

His redemption is everlasting—9:12.

His kingdom is unmovable—12:28.

His covenant endures—13:20.

"Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, today, and forever."

If Christ is supreme, then we must exalt him with more vigor and with greater self-abandon than we have ever known. We can exalt him as the solution of the world's economic woe. Never was there a more propitious time to set him forth as the solution of all our needs. Ellwood in his book, "The Reconstruction of Religion," says that many social thinkers of the present see that the world needs a rebirth of vital religion. But many of these fail to see that a foundation was made in religion and ethics by Jesus surer than the foundaiton laid by Copernicus in astronomy. They look for a new religion, but they need not do so.

Prayer

O CHRIST, our divine Lord, restore to thy people a conquering faith in thee; a deep and vital belief in thy redemptive work and an abandonment to thy glorious and gentle rule, so that in this time of the world's misery and travail, men may behold in the renewed life of thy church a new coming in power and great glory of the Son of God. Come to us Lord Jesus and make the desert rejoice and the wilderness to blossom as the rose.

—Frederic C. Spurr.

In the summer of 1914 Professor Ellwood heard a great social thinker say in London, "I saw no way out of the present crisis in our civilization unless there should perchance again arise a religious leader of the simplicity, dignity and exaltation of the character of Jesus of Nazareth, who could lead the nations to peace, justice and brotherhood." But Professor Ellwood told with much more insight into our social and moral problems, as well as into the nature of Christianity, how Henry C. Emory of Yale University has said, "We are told by some writers that the world is waiting in an agony of expectation for some great philosopher who shall bring to it the new message of salvation. If so, the world is wrong, for it has no message to bring from its manifold years save that had nineteen centuries ago from the profoundest of all social philosophers, the Man of Nazareth."

And we must exalt him as the one through whose leadership the swords will be beaten into plowshares and spears into pruning hooks.

David Lloyd George said, "Diplomacy has failed. The only thing that can save us is the religion of Jesus Christ." We must exalt him also as the Saviour from sin. Like John with a renewed insistence and emphasis, we must point to him and say to a sin-sick world, "Behold the Lamb of God, slain from the foundation of the world."

Dr. E. Benjamin Andrew described the battle of Sadowa, July 6, 1866: "When the pickets closed in the morning Von Moltke saluted King William and said, 'Today your majesty will win not only the battle, but the campaign." At noon it did not seem so. The troops of Frederick Charles were withering under hot Austrian artillery fire, the hottest fire of the century, save that at Gettysburg. It seemed that in a few minutes they must give way. Hark! What means this cheering? On the left new cannons boom and the Austrians' fire slackens. Von Moltke knows that the Crown Prince has arrived with fresh troops. He has stormed the height of Chlum. He enfilades the whole Austrian line. Benedict is beaten. On, on to Vienna, the war is ended."

Brethren, our war is not yet ended, but the reenforcements of heaven can be released for us if we but have a greater faith in our peerless leader and in his conquering power. It is not for us to despair in the delay of his coming, or the efficiency of the gospel to meet the needs of the world. It is for us to reaffirm our faith in that gospel and to proclaim it with a greater efficiency, and with a greater power than we have hitherto used. It is for us to seek the divine empowering before each day's battle, and to move forward in his name, conquering and to conquer in the name of the conqueror Christ.

Redlands, Calif.

The Purpose of the Laymen's Council

By R. O. Jasperson

AFTER reading the statement of purpose of the council, one is prompted to remark, "Very commendable aims, very, but how can this all be brought about?"

In the light of the apathy exhibited by large numbers of men who belong to the churches, this is a logical question, but a question that cannot be answered in a word nor in a day.

When the National Council of Northern Baptist Laymen counselled together concerning the tasks for which the organization was created it was evident that some statement was necessary, not that the adoption of such a statement in itself would solve the problems with which the council was confronted, but to lay down some sort of ground work upon which to plan its future efforts.

An Answer

The statement is not a creed, although there is an expression of belief in the first paragraph, a belief that Jesus taught certain practical principles which can be applied by men in their daily lives. It is not a platform. Platforms are used for a variety of purposes. Politicians often use them as something to "get in" on, like the platform of a street-car. Platforms may be used to stand on to reach after higher things.

The statement is exactly what it purports to be, nothing more, nothing less. It is an answer to the question, "What does the National Council aim to do?"

To arouse among laymen a desire to accept service is a task of formidable proportions. The quickening of the spiritual life of the churches may be said to have the elements of both cause and effect, for if men are brought to the point where they are willing and glad to assume tasks in the church the result is bound to be a quickening of the spiritual life in the church. And, on the other hand, a quickened spirituality in the churches is bound to result in more men asking for opportunities to serve.

Many of the tasks of the church, men's tasks, are now assumed by a faithful few. The tasks are many, but if they were passed around, each carrying a part of the burden, none of them would be heavy or difficult. When one man is obliged to assume a number of duties, the combined weight becomes heavy.

Fifty men each toting part of the load now borne by five men would not only relieve the five, but would be developing the forty-five for greater service.

What is meant by accepting service for the Master? There was once a group of men who resolved among themselves to go to their pastor and ask him for something to do. "What can we do?" they asked. "What is there for laymen such as we to help you or to promote the cause of Christ?"

"Well, it would be a fine thing," said the pastor, "if you men would come to prayer meeting and help make that a success. You know these meetings are poorly attended and men like you can help greatly by your presence and participation."

The men agreed that this was important and they attended prayer meeting and took part in the worship, but they were still unsatisfied. They felt the stirring of the Spirit in them and wished to undertake other tasks that would provide an outlet for the energy they felt within them.

The quickened spirituality in these men caused them to seek work for themselves that would be an expression of their having accepted service for the Master. Much of this same attitude is evident among Baptist laymen today. The determination to give vitality to the laymen's movement, to find out what there is for men to do and if possible, how to do it, is the spirit back of the laymen's movement.

Men are asking for work to do. In a sense, we have an unemployment situation. When unemployment in the business world looms large, congress acts. It becomes a matter of grave concern among statesmen. Unemployment spells calamity.

Unemployment in the Christian life is equally menacing. The words "mischief" and "idle hands" are as closely associated as any in the language.

In seeking to arouse among laymen a desire to take upon themselves tasks of the church, there is a twofold purpose. One is to increase the efficiency and effectiveness of work already under way and carried by a relatively few. The other is to enlist more men and thus render a service and add to the joy of those who are missing the exaltation and spiritual uplift that comes from taking definite tasks in the work of the kingdom. With more men at work, more tasks are possible.

In every church there is a group, usually a very small group of men who are doing most of the work. These men find it stimulating and satisfying or they would not continue year after year in the harness. A sense of duty alone would hardly hold these men continuously to their tasks. Duty alone carries men a long way, but tasks undertaken with no other motive than to still the voice of conscience, can hardly be carried to completion with the degree of success that follows when tasks were undertaken in a spirit of enthusiasm and devotion.

Work of the Kingdom

We speak of the work of the kingdom. The term kingdom is most expressive and creates at once a picture of what Christian work aims to bring to pass.

If the laymen's movement serves to translate into laymen's language the work of the kingdom it will serve a useful purpose. When men get together for the avowed purpose of promoting mutual goodwill and understanding in the name of him who taught brotherhood among men, they are promoting the cause of the kingdom. When they get together to buy a flivver for the pastor, or raise his salary, they are doing the work of the kingdom. When they resolve to get under the task of providing a new organ, or a new church edifice, or resolve to put some of the things they have learned in business into the raising of funds for missionary enterprises and for other similar undertakings to which the denomination is committed, they are advancing the cause of the kingdom.

The statement of purpose will help laymen to visualize some of the tasks before them. The National Council is devoting its energies toward providing suggestions for men's activities which will attract more men to the work. When the men already members of churches begin to enlist for active service, the tasks of the churches which now seem mountain high will be as molehills and the augmented man power will soon ask for greater tasks to test its strength.

Statement of Purpose

ACTUATED by the spirit of service and by a firm belief that the teachings, spirit and example of Jesus Christ can and should be made a part of the every-day lives of men, the National Council of Northern Baptist Laymen has for its goal and purpose:

1. To arouse among laymen a desire to accept service for the Master, and quicken the spirituality of the churches.
2. To show men how they may serve their local church, their state associations and the denomination.
3. To encourage men who are nominal church members to take upon themselves tasks for which they are especially fitted.
4. To seek especially recruits among our young men to enlist them for responsibilies of the future.
5. To stimulate a greater interest among men in the missionary enterprises of the denomination, in its educational undertakings, in its various activities, in its form of organization and its financial needs.
6. To study how to overcome the reluctance felt by many men in undertaking church work.
7. To encourage men to undertake works of practical Christianity in the name of the church in their own communities.
8. To encourage and aid existing organizations of Baptist laymen in every way possible.
9. To urge and aid in forming groups of laymen in every church where none now exists.
10. To create and mobilize a great and militant body of Baptist laymen who will "hold up the arms" of their pastors and by their lives and conduct give evidence that they have taken the Master into full partnership.

---

We live and love in little byways of truth and virtue, and not in the great highways of the exceeding broad commandments of God.—Jowett.

A Dead Church or a Live One

The annual sermon preached at the recent meeting of the Clear Lake Association of Northern California.

By Clarence I. Ford

YOU will notice that I have selected my text from a book in the Bible that not many people read and still fewer understand. It is true that this book is, on the whole, decidedly the most peculiar and difficult book in the scriptures, but with all the difficulties which you may experience as you go through the book, you cannot help getting many helpful messages if you will read a few of the opening chapters, for there you will find something on the very order of what we are going through with in the meetings of this association. Tomorrow and the next day a goodly portion of our time will be spent listening to the letters from the ten churches of the Clear Lake Association. The letters have, of course, been written by the various church clerks themselves, and, naturally, the best side of the churches will be mentioned. But I can't help wondering just what the messages would be if, instead of each church speaking for itself, we could receive and read a letter from Christ himself to the various churches of the Clear Lake Association. We find something very similar to that in the second and third chapters of Revelation, for we can read Christ's messages to the seven churches of Asia, or as we shall call them here, the Asiatic Association. This is the one and only instance we have on record of Christ sending out letters and special messages in quite this fashion to individual churches, and it certainly pays every man, woman or child who is the least bit interested in Christ and the church to read these messages, for we find that our Lord speaks plainly and does not in any way use the least bit of camouflage. He commends where commendation is deserved; he rebukes where rebuke is needed; he warns where warning is needed; and somehow as we read the message to this church and that, more than once we can hear a voice speaking within us and saying, "Thine is the church." Of course, it would be out of the question for us to think of considering the messages to all the various churches, but there is one message in particular which I should like to discuss, and that is the message to the church at Sardis, "I know thy work, that thou hast a name, that thou livest and thou art dead. . . ." If I were to ask you what you considered the duty of the shepherd you would doubtless say,

Shearing the Woolly Ones

"To feed the flock." That is true, but is that all? Certainly not. He should shear the woolly ones, skin the dead ones and warn them all of the dangers that are lurking all around. So let it be with my message to the churches of the Clear Lake Association. If you have grown woolly with wordliness, I'll have to shear you; if any of you are really dead, I'll have to skin you; but I hope I shall only need to warn you. So let us take a look once more at the message to this church at Sardis and see if we cannot profit by the mistakes that were there made.

You will notice first of all that the church had the reputation of being a live and flourishing church. It was undoubtedly the star church, from man's viewpoint, within the Asiatic Association. I can just imagine how from year to year when the representatives of this church came to the associational meeting they would always give in a glowing report of the things which the Sardis church was accomplishing. The church letter from Sardis probably had more to say than three or four other church letters put together, and the representatives of the other churches would sit up and take notice, and would say, "Oh, if we only had a church like that!" And men would shake the hand of the pastor or slap him on the back and say, "How do you do it? Our pastor can't do anything like that." I know just how they do, for I have been in associational meetings myself where one church would stand out superior to others, according to its letter, at least, and the other churches' representatives would go wild about it; and I don't suppose that human nature has changed very much in the last two millenniums. Therefore, I believe that such is the way they used to act about the Sardis church. So we see that this particular church had an enviable reputation; it could always get away with its glowing reports, its pastor was classed as a wonder, its members congratulated themselves on belonging to such a promising church; and no doubt they believed themselves that the church was on the boom; and yet the Lord, who alone is capable of passing the true judgment, said to this church, "You're dead! What little life there is left in any way is almost gone. Watch your step or you'll be in your grave before you know it."

> Text: "And to the angel of the church in Sardis write: These things saith he that hath the seven Spirits of God, and the seven stars, I know thy works, and thou hast a name that thou livest, and thou art dead."—(R. V.)

Now, how in all this world can a church, with such a reputation as the Sardis church had, ever be given such a judgment as the one pronounced here? Well in just about the same way as any other church can do so today—by overemphasizing the machinery of the church and the outward appearance of things, and neglecting those inward forces affecting the heart and soul. There is all too great a tendency today to judge a church largely by the equipment which it possesses. This is a day of great building enterprises. The old-time one-room building is rapidly being discarded, and large, beautiful, artistic structures are being put up instead. All of this is good and I would not for one moment stand in the way of that which would add to the efficiency of a church. I know from experience that when several Sunday-school classes meet in one room there is bound to be more or less confusion. Therefore, I like to see a church which has sufficient energy to erect a first-class building. I believe that no one should ever think of dedicating and consecrating to the work of the Lord a building which is less beautiful and less efficient than the home in which they live, although I must admit that I have seen that very thing more than once.

I also believe in having good music in the service. I believe that music was the very first form of worship; and, in order to help out the music, a good piano or pipe organ is a valuable asset. I have heard the pipe organ severely criticised. I heard one man say that it reminded him of about forty fog-horns. But to me, it adds greatly to the spirit of the worship. I believe also in a trained and efficient choir, with special music at all services. The hearts of sinners can often be reached through song when all other agencies fail. The church that pays particular attention to the music is doing a good thing and should be commended therefor.

D. D.'s and Other D's

In addition to efficient equipment, a church might be fortunate enough to secure as its pastor a man with a wide reputation, with a D. D., a Ph. D. and maybe several other D.'s on the end of his name. Some churches would never consider a candidate unless they could call him "Doctor," for they believe that such distinction adds greatly to the efficiency of the church. But you can overemphasize all this equipment and leadership. Any church can secure the same if it has sufficient funds. While it is true that some churches prove themselves worthy of the highest of commendation by the expenditure of large funds, yet in other places such is not the case at all. Sometimes we find churches which are fortunate enough to have within their membership men of large means, men who could give a thousand dollars any day as easily as some others could give a dollar; and the same rule might apply to friendly supporters on the outside, men who never go to church but who look upon the church as a valuable asset to the community and are therefore willing to support it. As long as gifts can be made without a real sacrifice you will find in some communities churches whose treasury is always well supplied, and that is all that is needed to equip a church in an A1 condition: all it takes is money to put up the building and buy the organ, and if efficient singers cannot be found among the members, all it takes is money to hire some from the outside. In many cases money goes a long way toward securing the prominent pastor. Some people seem to think that which money can buy is all that is needed to make a live church. This may give the church a great reputation among men, but the Lord, who can look beneath the surface, might still say of that church, "You're dead! There's no life in you." I've seen many a church in recent years, most thoroughly equipped, of which I believe that the Lord has said that very thing. Equipment will add to the efficiency of a live church, but it will never put life into a church that is dead. You will have to go much deeper than that to find life.

There are some churches whose constituents realize that equipment, valuable as it may be, is not enough and they seek to add to the equipment other things. I well remember congratulating a certain pastor and his wife on the large building and splendid equipment which their church possessed, and the wife said, "Yes, and now if we can only fill the auditorium we'll be all right." I have noticed that many people measure the strength of the church by the attendance at its services. To secure good attendance is a worthy motive, and I, for one, am always pleased when I can look out over my congregation and see a large number present. I well remember when I held one of my first charges how discouraging it was to see a mere handful out to the service, two or three dozen at the most, while the Methodist preacher in the same town used to have a packed house regularly. I believed that I was just as spiritual a man, if not more so, than my fellow-pastor; and it was generally admitted that he was a very poor speaker, so that even if I was no better I couldn't have been much worse; and still his audiences were always at least three times as large as mine and sometimes more so. Seeing such goodly congregations, he doubtless considered his a live and flourishing church. But it so happened that just as soon as high school was closed and his two pretty daughters left town, he suddenly discovered that he could not so much as round up a corporal's guard to come out and hear him preach. Therein hangs the tale. He had the daughters to draw the crowd, while I had none. Many men still believe that attendance is the main strength of the church; and when a missionary church is asked to report to the state convention, care is given to find out how the attendance is averaging. But attendance can be overemphasized. A great number may attend for something other than religious motives. A church may be packed in attendance and still be dead in the sight of God.

Members and Life

There are some who do not place so much emphasis on attendance, but rather upon the membership which the church is able to build up. If you will follow our religious papers closely you will notice that a pastor's reputation is usually judged largely by the net gain in members. It is nothing uncommon to see some such report as this, "During so many years of his pastorate the Rev. Mr. Blank has doubled the membership of his church." When any such remark as that can be made of any man it gives him and his church, as well, a reputation of being alive and on the job. Time after time since I have been in the pastoral work when I have attended conferences, conventions, or associational gatherings I have been asked how many members my church could number. Inasmuch as the Clear Lake Association has fewer members by far than any other association of Northern California some of you doubtless consider this the weakest and the deadest association, but such need not be the case at all. It is one thing to have members. It is quite another thing to have life. While I was in one of my pastorates the other church of the same town secured as its pastor a young man just out of the theological seminary and he came to town full of his brilliant (?) ideas and began launching a campaign for members; and from all that I could see, members was all he was working for. He did not try to proselyte from my church, but almost everybody else in town, even if he had not been inside of a church in the last thirty years, received an invitation—not to come to his services, but to join his church. Some laughed at the idea, but others responded, and on one Sunday he received enough new members into his church to double his membership. For a few days he was treading on air. In fact, he had so arranged it that they were all received the Sunday that the state convention secretary of his denomination was present to watch him receive them. It gave him a great standing and he thought that he was going to do wonders. But it so happened that his new members came and took communion about once, and that was the last he saw of most of them. Two or three months later he was telling me about how discouraged he felt over his work as pastor, and I said to him, "But you've built up a good membership, haven't you?" And he said, "What's members if there's no life to them?" By this time his eyes were open, and he realized that it takes more than members to make a church. You can be so eager to gain members that you receive them into the church before the Lord has even received them into the kingdom of God.

Neither is a church or association of churches sure of being alive because of its creed, although a great many people actually think that there is something vitally wrong with a church that does not preach the second coming of Christ several times every year. Now I believe in the second coming myself, but I'm far more interested in hearing a message about the Comer than I am about his coming. When I sent my wife a telegram telling her that I was coming home from the war she never worried about how I was coming. It mattered not to her whether I came by rail or airplane, just so I came, and the true watcher for the coming of the Lord will feel the same way about it. Fortunately, that doctrine is not so much a bone of contention as some might think it to be, but there are other doctrines which many think are the sole assets toward the building up of a live church. At our last annual convention an attempt was made to secure the adoption of the New Hampshire Confession of Faith as the authorized Baptist creed, and because it was voted down many people feel as if the Baptist denomination has lost its great ideal. Now, while I personally like the creed and the doctrines for which it stands, nevertheless I object to a convention or even an association adopting any cast-iron creed, for I believe that such an adoption would only tend to stir up strife and discontentment. I'd much rather rightly divide the word of truth than to wrongly divide the brethren. And when so much attention is given to the creed there is too great a tendency to overlook the weightier matters of the law, as Christ said to the Pharisees. A few months ago a Chinese convert writing to America said that if the Baptists of America didn't quit wasting so much time wrangling over fundamentals they would forget the greatest fundamental of all, which is Christ's command to carry the gospel to all creatures. We might hold to the most orthodox creed ever framed and still not be a live church, for we might believe only with our heads, and before there can be any real life such as God can see we must believe with our hearts.

An Enthroned Christ

What, then, is needed, if wealth, equipment, attendance, members, and even creed will not do? There must be, first of all, an enthronement of Jesus Christ. He must be first and foremost in all things. I truly believe that if Jesus Christ should step into many a church today he would not find a single welcome. Why? Because other things have been given first place. When we think so much of creed that we emphasize creed above everything else, then we have given creed first place, then we worship creed and the Lord can never bless us, for that is modern day idolatry. If we think about numbers all the time, then numbers take the place of Christ. If we think about equipment and all that sort of thing, it takes the place of Christ and no church is a live church that subordinates Jesus Christ to anything else, no matter how important that may be. When God said, "Thou shalt have no other gods before me" he had just as much reference to the modern day idols which some churches worship as he had to the heathen gods of the nations round about. An old negro man once went to the pastor of a rich, fashionable church and applied for membership. The pastor was horrified. It was preposterous; it was out of the question; it could not be thought of. So the pastor, not wishing to hurt the old man's feelings, said: "Well, Rastus, I think you had better pray about it awhile. You might be jumping at conclusions too quickly. Come back again in about a week and we'll talk it over then." When Rastus came back he said: "Well, sah, Ah prayed and Ah prayed and de good Lord says to me, 'Now, Rastus, don't you bodder yo' head one bit 'bout gittin' into dat air church; Ah's been trying to get into dat air

The Gull

By Martha Newton Lamson

SEA gull with thy broad wings spread,
Tranquil eye and lifted head,
Thou seem'st not to know base fear,
As through mists all gray and drear,
Thou aloft dost soar.
Thou wert born the air to mount,
Thy brave heart takes no account
That uncharted is thy path,
Or that storms pursue in wrath.
Lost in cloud thou canst not be,
Since the Power safe leadeth thee
To thy far-sought shore.
So may not my spirit rise,
Trusting on its wings, to skies
Far beyond the gull's brief flight,
To the spaces infinite,
E'en beyond the dome?
Mind may roam the firmament,
Though untracked is the ascent,
Unafraid as is the bird,
Winging through the mists unheard,
Knowing by an instinct true,
That some Power guides me and you,
Earth-tired souls to home.

church mahself fo' de las' twenty years but Ah ain't had no luck.'"

The Lord Jesus Christ should be first in the church and I know that when he is honored and upheld men and women will come to church to hear of Jesus. Don't tell me that men and women have all outgrown the old gospel of Jesus Christ and want something new and more modern. The main reason for so many empty churches today is because there has been too much of worldliness dragged in and too much of Christ crowded out. There is one verse of scripture which can never be too strongly emphasized and that verse is found in Matthew 17:8, "And lifting up their eyes they saw no one save Jesus only." "Jesus only"—that is what the church needs; that is what the church has always needed—"Jesus only." Men and women can get enough of worldliness outside the church. They come to church for something else, for something better, for something more satisfying. There is no lasting satisfaction in the world or the things of the world, and men and women often tire of those things and come to the church seeking something better. Can we furnish it? We can. Let us preach Jesus only and if we do that, even plain, ordinary men from the lowest ranks of life can come forth and become a power for good.

If you want the churches to be live churches don't forget that they must first of all be Christ-exalting churches, churches that are built and established on him and him alone, and working for his glory. Let this be said of the churches:

"On Christ, the solid Rock,
we stand;
All other ground is sinking sand."

Wherever I'm pastor, Christ shall be first, for in no other way can a church hope to come to the place where it can be pronounced alive by Christ himself, and he alone is capable of passing judgment; his judgments alone will count in the end. In the text we certainly find him passing judgment upon the church at Sardis when he says, "I know thy works." He knew that they were not putting him first, and their failure to do this was showing forth its results in all the works of the church which really counted.

When Jesus Christ really is enthroned and made first then there will be undertakings requiring faith. Then we shall ask great things of God and expect great things from God. If Christ is first there will be faith enough to raise the necessary funds for carrying on the needed work for the upbuilding of the kingdom's interests both at home and abroad.

The church that is always behind in its finances, whether local or benevolent, is the church where Christ is not first. Where he is really first he will be given the first fruits of our labors and not the few crumbs that fall from the table; and this will be done, not to make a big showing but because of our love for Christ. . . . Without faith it is impossible to please God. If Christ is first, the first manifestations will be seen in works of faith, in undertakings which faith alone can launch. When works of faith are seen then we can rest assured that we have signs of life and will not fall into condemnation. Again, if Christ is first it will be seen in the perseverance in the works of faith that are undertaken, perseverance in the face of apparent defeat. A live church is a church where members are not easily discouraged, a church that will not lose heart the moment it meets with opposition and apparent defeat. The devil can always be counted on to start something whenever a church begins to show signs of life. Let a church go on peacefully from year to year, everything running pleasantly and smoothly and without a sign of care, and you can mark it that the church is dead. When, on the other hand, the church struggles on in the midst of adversity, that is a pretty good

(Continued on page 896)

The Too Much Promised Land*

The Arab fears he will be crowded out. The Zionists are gaining control of the land and, more important, of the water. Palestine to have irrigation and waterpower

By Elizabeth Titzel

THE Jews have come home. After centuries of wandering and oppression, they have returned to the Promised Land. They are there, so many of them believe, in fulfilment of a promise made by God to his people, made through the prophets of old and repeated down the ages in synagogues and Jewish homes in every land; more immediately, in fulfilment of a promise made to Baron Edmond de Rothschild, the great Zionist of France, by Lord Balfour on behalf of the British government. What a history is behind the careful, official phrasing: "His Majesty's Government views with favour the establishment in Palestine of a National Home for the Jewish people and will use their best endeavors to facilitate the achievement of this object: it being clearly understood that nothing shall be done which may prejudice the civil and religious rights of existing non-Jewish communities in Palestine, or the rights and political status enjoyed by Jews in any other country."

The Jews have come home. About 26,000 of them have entered Palestine since the signing of the armistice. Added to the Jews already there, they form a small minority of the population. Of roughly a million inhabitants, official estimates show one-seventh to be Jews. The Jews themselves, seeking a larger proportional representation in the elective assembly, claim that the population numbers well under a million and they accordingly are one-fifth of the whole. One-fifth—but they seem to predominate. In traveling through the country last summer, I could not shake off the impression that there were more Jews than Arabs. The Arabs somehow melted into the background, were part of the landscape. The Jews were conspicuously present—active, aggressive, foreign, agents of change. The signs of their activity seemed in their incongruity more numerous and more important than they really were. The tree-shaded Jewish villages, built after European models at intervals during the past half-century, stood out, little oases of green in a parched landscape, while the huddled, shadeless Arab towns of mud and stone were part of the hills among which they crouched. The gaunt machinery, the scientifically constructed stables of Jewish agricultural colonies were conspicuous in a plain where Arabs plowed with wooden plows and beat out grain with mallets and housed their asses in corners of their own dwellings. Jewish factories, angular structures belching smoke —there were only five in all Palestine, I found, with a capital of over 5,000 pounds, and yet the smallest of them seemed big in a land of one-man industries. And how modern and enterprising seemed the Jewish shops with glass display windows just round the corner from a rabbit-warren bazar! Jewish schools, Jewish hospitals, Jewish infant welfare stations with blue trimmings that might almost have been translated over night from New York to the Holy Land—signs in Hebrew characters forbade one to overlook them. They were conspicuously Jewish—that is, conspicuously foreign.

The Jews have made themselves at home in Palestine, and they take on an air of glad proprietorship that to one who knows their history is very touching. "This is our home," they say proudly. And they talk of a new Jewish culture, a new Jewish civilization that will regenerate Palestine—the entire Middle East. Jewish culture. Jewish civilization. The Arab stiffens. "This is my home," he says. "The Balfour Declaration? A new bit of western impudence. What right have the British to promise the Jews a home in our land? Their doing so is a direct violation of a promise they made to us in 1915, when they told King Hussein, sherif of Mecca, that the Arab countries should have self-government in return for Arab aid against the Turks. And now the British explain to us that we cannot have self-government in Palestine because it might interfere with the carrying out of their promise to the Jews. The Promised Land, indeed."

The Arab looks at the newcomer coldly, with hate and suspicion in his eyes. He is often bitter and unjust. And the Jew puts on the ineffectual armor that he has used against injustice and hostility down the ages. A sort of defiant arrogance. He himself has a word for it. Chutzpah, he calls it. It expresses itself in loudness, in swagger, in contemptuous impudence, in an assumption of proud superiority toward the enemy. It collapses at the most critical moments and miraculously mends itself. And it covers a quivering sensitiveness.

So the tension grows. Nothing is too bad to believe of the other side. The wildest rumors are circulated as true, circulated by the irresponsible and the responsible, by the ignorant and by those who should know better. There is a story afloat in Palestine to the effect that the government investigated all the rumors current during a certain period and found that 93 per cent of them were false. I should have fancied the percentage higher. No one keeps any perspective in his picture. I was once invited to tea by a handsome, childlike Arab woman, who had lived for some time in the United States, but loved the lazy luxury of her own land. We sat in room stifled with bad modern furniture and meaningless bric-a-brac, and over an appallingly long series of delicious cloyingly sweet cakes, she voiced her views of the political situation. "Those Bolshevist Jews," she confided, "they are bad. You know what they do? They put poison candy in the streets so that Christian children they pick it up and eat it." A few days later I met in a business-like office in Jerusalem an intelligent young American Jewish welfare worker, with whom I was to visit Jewish institutions. "Miss Wein was stoned again today," she said, with an air of patient martyrdom. I was horrified. I pictured Miss Wein beset by an angry mob. I learned that an urchin, the son of a prominent Arab politician had shied a stone at her as she passed his father's garden.

*(Excerpts from an article which appeared in a recent issue of "Asia." Published here by special permission.)

All Too Human

At the end of my first two weeks in Palestine, I thought that all the meanness in human nature had been concentrated in the Holy Land. I had romanticized the Arabs, as an Occidental tends to romanticize the Oriental, as an American tends to romanticize any people clamoring for independence. I found the Arabs all too human. They poured into my ears tales of the baseness of the Jews that were puerile in their pettiness and for the most part obviously untrue. They uttered noble catchwords learned from the West, "liberty," "democracy," "self-determination," "the fourteen points," with small, if any idea of their inner meaning and often with the very transparent intention of saying something to please the ears of the American journalist. Most of their leaders were politicians with all the unpleasant traits of western politicians, and an added naivete that prevented them from concealing the petty personal motives, the self-seeking that lay behind their devotion to the cause. Some of them were venal, some merely pathetic, belonging to neither the East nor the West, the old or the new, jerked hither and yon by custom and opinion. Few among them had any vision of an indigenous civilization—the ideal of most was a hand-me-down western culture. None among the many to whom I talked had any broad conception of government. "The East for the East," they said vaguely. And there it ended.

I turned to the Jews. Here was theory concerning government in bewildering abundance. Their notions of the Palestinian state varied from a constitutional democracy through state socialism to pure communism. After the melancholy apathy and nervous ineffectiveness that seemed to mark most of the Arabs, the enthusiasm and vigor of the Jews were refreshing. There were splendid characters among them, men and women working—and working hard—for the sake of an ideal. But I soon found that in the majority the ideal was dwarfed to a dangerous brand of national egotism. The Jews were the chosen people destined to rebuild the East—on a Jewish model. . . .

Palestine is not a desert. It is thickly populated. Barren as it is, it supports twice as many persons per square mile as does the fertile United States. Most of its inhabitants are content with a meager, hand-to-mouth existence. They must be. Though methods of agriculture are wasteful, though only one-fifth of the tillable land is tilled, it will take many years and a great expenditure before the denuded hills and the impoverished valleys can yield enough to support the present population according to decent standards—not to speak of the three million persons that liberal estimates give as the maximum future population of the land. And long before that time comes, the Arab fears he will be crowded out.

For the Zionists are gaining control not only of the land, but of the water. No one who has not been in Palestine can fully realize what that means. I was there in the height of dusty summer. I learned to appreciate the symbolism of such a phrase as "waters of life," for save in the fortunate vicinity of springs, there were no green, growing things to give relief from the monotony of hard sunlight reflected from bare pink and yellow hills. Irrigation will mean enormous gain in productivity and in sheer livability; water-power will make possible the establishment in a fuel-less land of small industries that will furnish employment and raise the standard of living. And Palestine is to have both. The Jordan and its tributaries and the waters of the Auja, in the vicinity of Jaffa, have been turned over to a company formed by a Jew named Pinhas Rutenberg for irrigation and power development. Some say his scheme is sound. Some hold it to be fantastically visionary. Some say he himself is a solid citizen. Some rise to the heights of anathema and call him a bolshevik. You can find supporters for all sides of an argument in Palestine. So far as I could ascertain, his project is feasible from the point of view of an engineer and promises to save Palestine in the future from the waste involved in a multiplicity of projects destined for the same end. There is vision in it, as in many of the Jewish enterprises in Palestine. It is estimated that the rivers of Palestine, if fully utilized, are capable of furnishing regulated energy to the amount of one million horse-power, and sufficient water for irrigating one million and a quarter acres of land. It may be, as opponents of the scheme charge, that the returns of the Rutenberg company will be extremely meager for many years to come—that the project is too ambitious to be anywhere near self-supporting in a country in the stage of development of Palestine. But investors in the company are said to be for the most part people such as will find a romantic pleasure in losing money in the Holy Land. So the financial aspect of the scheme does not matter greatly. What does matter to the Arab is that the control of the waters of Palestine has been given into Jewish hands. For seventy years this company has the exclusive right to build generating stations, transmission and distribution lines, electric tramways.

A Thousand and One Stories

"The Jews are gaining control of the land. They control the life-giving water. They control the government. What chance have we?" So say the Arabs. In Palestine, I listened ad nauseam to claims of how the government discriminated in favor of the Jews. I was told that the department of public works awarded contracts to Jewish bidders, though Arabs bid low. I was told that the Palestine railways discharged Arabs to make place for Jews. I was told that an Arab could not find justice in the courts. I was told a thousand and one stories; some of them had not the slightest basis of fact, and some of them were perversions or exaggerations of actual cases. My impression of the government of Palestine was of an honest government. I do not mean to say that there may not be meretricious individuals, both Jews and Arabs, in government employ. Palestine is not Utopia. Certainly there are Zionists in official positions who let their zeal for their cause run away with their discretion, as there are Arabs who have learned too well the methods of a Turkish bureaucracy. But on the whole I think the government of Palestine is honest in the performance of its duty as defined by the mandate for Palestine.

---

Nicodemus, 1922

By C. B. Hilton

(A study for the religious metaphysician. Or perhaps for the psycho-analyst.)

ARE you every tired of living? Yes, living.
Not an ache in nerve or muscle anywhere
But vast dissatisfaction in your soul?
If so, you have no patience with a fool who says,
"All's for the best in the best of possible worlds."
Transcendent problems do not trouble you;
For instance, what and where is God?
But you would like to solve with certainty
The lesser riddle, who and why am I?

When I feel so my antidote is Job.
The drama of the misery of man;
Job, who endured a thousand unexpected,
Unexplained calamities unconquered.
I like Job's dogged assurance in affliction
That, though all the world may be dead wrong,
Jehovah is magnificently right.

But most of all I covet for my own
The friendship of the man of Galilee,
Who rested at the well near Sychar, too tired
To walk another short half-mile to supper;
Who lay exhausted in a fishing boat
Asleep, unmindful of a hostile storm
Until awakened by the human cry for help;
Who stumbled in the street beneath a cross,
And later hung thereon and quickly died;
Who rose, refreshed by two days in the tomb,
And ate broiled fish for breakfast with his friends.

These facts give comfort and a gleam of hope
That somehow, with a mastery divine,
All things will work together for our good
And in the end life's pathway lead to God.

Evidence That God Lives

The Alpha and Omega, who is and who was and who is to come—the Almighty

By Andrew Martin Smith

AN attempt to argue for the existence of a living God would appear almost a needless waste of time and space in view of the abundant evidence that "he ever liveth"; and yet even Christians need to be reminded from time to time that God is not dead. God's own statements concerning himself should be sufficient to cause hope to spring up anew in the heart of every believer in his Word.

Evidence From His Word

"I am the Alpha and the Omega, saith the Lord God, who is and who was and who is to come, the Almighty." Rev. 1:8.

"Unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given; and the government shall be upon his shoulder: and his name shall be called Wonderful Counsellor, Mighty God, Everlasting Father, Prince of Peace." Isa. 9:6.

"Jesus Christ is the same yesterday and today, yea and forever." Heb. 13:8.

"I and the Father are one." John 10:30.

"Every created thing which is in heaven, and on the earth, and under the earth, and on the sea, and all things that are in them, heard I saying, Unto him that sitteth on the throne, and unto the Lamb, be the blessing, and the honor, and the glory, for ever and ever." Rev. 5:13.

These and other passages of scripture lend assurance that there has never been nor will there ever be a time when he in whom "we live, and move, and have our being" is not alive, awake, and cognizant of human affairs. Society today presents such a complex problem of industry, education, politics, bolshevism, alliances, compacts, bootlegging, breaking of law and the Sabbath, and here and there a little of the good, that unless we fortify ourselves we may forget that God is an important factor in world history—that there is a divine end toward which the world moves.

The Bible Has Stood The Test

Time and usage have proved the validity of God's Word. Genesis was almost 3000 years old when Columbus discovered America. For three millenniums the psalms of David have held the chief place in devotional literature. The ninetieth psalm is attributed to Moses who lived 3500 years ago. Isaiah's vision of "the Lord sitting upon a throne, high and lifted up," has for 2700 years added new glory to man's conception of his God. The New Testament writings have weathered the storms of criticism for nearly 2000 years. No other book has had such a perilous journey through so long a period of time, and yet come out so intact. Time has not aged the sacred writings. For ethical, moral and spiritual instruction they are unsurpassed. It is still "good news" to every one that believeth.

The old Book enjoys a popularity which is common to no other writing. More copies of the Bible than of any other book, have been maliciously destroyed, and still it has the widest circulation. There are 60,000,000 Bibles in 770 different languages. Every great library has its quotations; every famous art gallery contains paintings which have been inspired by the sacred scriptures. It is like the Irishman's fence which he built three feet high and five feet thick. When asked if he was not afraid that it would turn over he replied, "Faith, and if it does it will be two feet higher than it was before." Spurgeon said, "You talk about defending the Bible! It's a lion! Open the cage and let it out!" Our Lord Jesus Christ, ths strong Lion of the tribe of Judah, defeated Satan with "It is written."

Evidence From Nature

"In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth." Some say it was 6000 years ago; others, three or four billion. We are inclined to believe that both figures have missed it by a few thousand or millions of years. However, at whatever distant point in time that creative work of God began, he set in operation laws of nature which are still operative today. The flowers blossom and the trees bud the same as they did of yore. The pollen is carried in the same manner from one flower to another by insects, birds and the winds. The rain falls, the winds blow, and the seasons come and go as yesterday. Species follow after species, and the birds sing the same song. Amid an environment being changed by the hand of man and time the laws of God go on the same.

Evidence From Growth in Christian Activity

The Christian church, in its simplest form, may be said to have begun with twelve men, and one of these was a devil. Christianity has always been hindered by about this same or even a larger proportion of the unfaithful. The work took more definite form at Pentecost when we hear of 120 assembled in the upper room for prayer, and of 3000 who "were added unto them in that day." Soon the church at Jerusalem had grown to number about 5000 men, but at its best Christianity was a hated, despised, outlawed religion.

It is true there had been Christian expression before the choosing of the twelve and Pentecost. John of the wilderness had awakened Jerusalem from its spiritual lethargy with the startling admonition, "Bring forth therefore fruit worthy of repentance." Isaiah had invited "every one that thirsteth" to "come, buy wine and milk without money and without price." Moses, Joshua and Elijah had drawn a distinction between service for God and that for the idols of heathen nations. Abraham "believed God," "Enoch walked with God" and Adam early received the promise of the triumph of the seed of the woman over the serpent. The entire Jewish nation, however, did not at any time number over a few million people.

Today there are 47,461,558 members of religious bodies in the United States. This is an increase of 1,220,285 over the previous year, or a gain in one year of 10,000 times the number present in the upper room at Pentecost. Recent figures show that there are 8,167,535 Baptists in the United States. Two hundred years of Baptist labor in America brought the first million, twenty years more the second million, ten years the third million, eight years the fourth million, nine years the fifth million, seven years the sixth million, five years the seventh million, and three years the eighth million. Our God is marching on! Christian progress is evidence sufficient that God lives.

Evidence In Christian Experience

God is working on the hearts of men in a mighty way. An average of 3,343 joined the churches in our country alone each day during 1922. If they can be considered truly converted, there was a pentecostal blessing 365 times during the year. A great outpouring of the spirit of God at the Southern Baptist Convention at Kansas City led to provision being made from individual subscriptions to send out ninety-six missionaries over and above those whom the board is able to support. The presence of the same spirit was felt at the Northern Baptist Convention at Atlantic City. Rev. Socaciu, a Baptist worker in Roumania, writes, "I have come in the midst of persecutions and terrors from a land of freedom and peace (America), but the Lord needs me here and I am to stay in my country no matter what comes. I am ready to die for the gospel.—The church buildings, in many places, are too small to get in the crowds which seek to hear the gospel." The best evidence that God yet lives is that his spirit still bears witness with our spirits.

Lighted Lanterns in Open Doors

LIKE looking through a great black cylindrical tube with jets of light shooting into it at irregular intervals was this Chinese street on the evening before the greatest festival day of the year, New Year's Day. Although the weather was very cold, doors were opened wide and in their very "mouths," as the Chinese say, hung one, sometimes two lighted lanterns, paper things, reinforced with bamboo splints, and red candles, omens of happiness, burning brightly within. So, they say, are the good spirits shown the way and welcomed with a warm welcome to abide with the family for many moons. By the same token, the evil spirits, fearful of light, and loving darkness, are driven away.

Just now China's mental doors are wide open in the darkness and all who are bearers of light may enter and abide there. The light of the gospel is entering multiplying doors and there are none shut against it. As the good spirit of God comes in the evil spirits of superstitious fear go out in haste, never to return. This is the way his kingdom is won.

—F. C. Wilcox

Dignity at a Discount

A story about the former Baptist governor of Massachusetts who was the first president of the American Baptist Missionary Society

By W. H. Morse

"IN my time, sir, the office of governor of Massachusetts was an office of dignity!"

It was a pompous old gentleman who one morning entered the law office of George Frisbie Hoar in Worcester, and in a tone of mingled disgust and disdain spoke to the young lawyer.

"Good morning, Governor Lincoln," Mr. Hoar replied, rising and extending his hand.

Into his hand Levi Lincoln thrust a small handbill.

"Sir," he said, "in my day the chief magistrate of this commonwealth was dignified! His arrival in any town was an event of the greatest importance. Sir, he traveled in his carriage, and with suitable attendants. It was only on great occasions that he appeared in public. But now! But now, sir! What have you in your hand? A dodger. A handbill scattered all about the streets of our city of Worcester, left in the stores, poked under house doors! See what is on it! It is a notice of something that is there called 'a temperance tea party' to be held tomorrow in the afternoon in some small hall or some like place! Read that! 'Music by the Peak sisters.' 'His excellency, George N. Briggs will address the meeting. Admission, 10 cents.' Think of it, sir! Think of it!"

Disdain for Simplicity

Levi Lincoln was not alone in looking disdainfully upon the simplicity of behavior of Governor Briggs. His familiarity with all classes of people did not tally well with the idea of the conduct of the head of the commonwealth. But in the course of his long incumbency of the office the people became accustomed to it, and when, in 1850, he was succeeded by George S. Boutwell, who revived the traditional idea of dignity without discount, there were not wanting those who missed the governor whose only boast was that a blacksmith-shop was his alma mater, and the Baptist church membership his highest honor. How the precisians did indict him! "Speaks at temperance rallies!" "Never wears a collar." "Shakes hands with nobodies." "Refuses to dance." "Leaves the meeting of the council to go to prayer meeting in some Baptist church." "Puts himself out of business on Sundays, so as to go to church." "Makes so much of the niggers."

If one count was more exasperating to sticklers for the proprieties than another, it was the last named. With Governor Slade of Vermont he was particularly interested in encouraging white teachers to go South to teach the slaves. In Pittsfield his house was always "next door" to negroes. When the migration to Liberia was in vogue, he interested himself in sending to the African republic, Gerard Finnemore and his wife, members of the Pittsfield Baptist church, who came to be important personages in Monrovia. When David Jaques, an East Pittsfield negro man, was so unfortunate as to be sentenced to the Lenox jail for debt, the governor went to his rescue. When Carline Sanders, a negro boy with a propensity for mischief, developed an interest in other people's personal property, and in strong drink, the governor interceded for him, ineffectually, however, as the negro, now an old man, has been for many years a familiar figure in the county jail.

Another in whom the governor took particular interest was Festus Campbell, an educated negro, some time valet for David Campbell, and later for many years proprietor of a greenhouse.

"Well, how do you do, Porcius Festus," the governor would say, greeting him. "How is Caesar today? What appeals?"

This was not mere persiflage, for Festus was the governor's agent in finding out deserving people who were in need. And it was to such that the word "appeals" referred. One of these "appeals" was of more than ordinary interest.

An enterprising Irishman, whose name was Fogarty, was accustomed to drive a herd of hogs from York state into Massachusetts every spring, making sales as he did so. The drive started from Troy, and in due course reached Pittsfield, and went on until all were disposed of, to > SELF is the only prison that can ever bind the soul,

> Love is the only angel who can bid the gates unroll;
> And when he comes to call thee, arise and follow fast;
> His way may lie through darkness, but it leads to light at last.
> —Henry van Dyke.

Westfield and Springfield. One Sunday morning in May, Fogarty appeared at the door of the First Congregational Church while Dr. John Todd was preaching. Constable Fairbanks, noticing the man standing there, went out and spoke to him. He was much excited, and said that he was waiting for John C. West, chairman of the board of selectmen, to leave church, as he wanted to speak with him. Mr. Fairbanks replied that Mr. West was not in his pew. Fogarty then inquired where he might find one of the other selectmen. He was told that one of them, Chauncey Goodrich, was a Baptist and was always at church on Sunday morning. Fogarty thereupon proceeded to the Baptist church corner and there waited. While waiting, out of the church came Governor Briggs, who, from the window had seen the man.

"Saw you out here," he said. "Waiting for some one inside?"

"Yes, sorr, it is Mr. Goodrich," the hog-driver replied.

"He is in there," was the reply. "Step in, and wait for him."

And before Fogarty could offer any excuse he found himself sitting beside the governor in his pew, listening to the Dr. Lemuel Porter's sermon.

After the benediction the governor found Mr. Goodrich for him.

"It is for this same," Fogarty said, "My naygur has run away, and do yez suppose ye could git the feller for me?"

"Your negro?" Mr. Goodrich said. "Ran away?"

At once the governor was interested. The plaint sounded very like the "runaway slave" charge.

"What, Fogarty, you got a negro? Brought him into Massachusetts?" he asked.

"Sorr, it wurr this way," Fogarty said. "I wurr in Tr'y, and askin' a man to hilp dr-rive fur me. Whin I see a lettle black, havin' a box with a pole to it, who stood foreninst me. The same, sp'akin' odd, said he woulld come 'long, an' helup. So we strick a barggin. He did. I rode mostly in my buggy, and carried his box, and he drove. Friday we come in here to Bateses stable wid the hogs. Sat'day he wur there. Now he is gone, and his box. Will yez git him fur me?"

"Not hardly a runaway slave!" commented the governor. "A man you hired."

"He did not steal anything from you, did he?" asked the selectman.

"No, sorr," was the reply. "But the tuk his box and is gone. I want him!"

Just then Festus Campbell came out.

"Festus," said the selectman, "seen anything of a stranger negro?"

"He Ought to Go to Church"

"Why yes," Festus replied. "This morning I came across a man carrying a green box, on Fenn Street. He was evidently one of those Santa Cruz men that we sometimes see. I spoke to him, and although I could not understand him well, I thought at any rate he ought to go to church, so I went with him as far as the Second Congregational and there left him."

"The same!" exclaimed Fogarty.

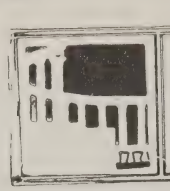
"Mr. Fogarty, may be the darkey does not care to work for you any longer," Mr. Goodrich suggested.

"But he must, that's all!" the drover returned.

"Had you paid him?" asked the selectman.

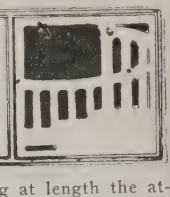
"No, sorr. I brung his box all the way for his drivin'. And of coorse the nade of payin' him after my doing him that good turrn, is nothin'!"

The men talked together for a few minutes, and it was agreed that Festus would find the missing man, and bring him on Monday morning to the town hall, where the selectmen would adjust the matter. The evidence was strong that the drover had got out of paying the man, and that he had deserted.



The next morning Fogarty was at the town hall, and the three selectmen were present. Punctual to the hour appointed Festus came alone.

"I had no difficulty in finding the man," he said. "He is not a colored person. I find that he is an Italian, a hand-organ man, and has his instrument with him. He complains that Mr. Fogarty would not pay him, and he left him. He is under no obligation to return."



"Where is the naygur?" asked Fogarty, still excited.

"He is at my place," Festus answered

(Continued on page 892)

The Open Forum

"THE PERPETUAL CRISIS" AGAIN

Although I could not endorse all of Doctor Van Dyke's address reprinted in THE BAPTIST of June 30, I was glad to read it. Doctor Van Dyke and Mr. Bryan do not seem to differ much in their personal beliefs. Both are orthodox. Doctor Van Dyke's views of scripture are less legalistic and he would not limit the views of others to so narrow a range as Mr. Bryan. Both are great men. However, the article in criticism of Doctor Van Dyke's address in THE BAPTIST of July 28 seems to obscure the thought of the original writer. Probably Doctor Van Dyke will never see any of these articles. What a loss to him! I am convinced that the veteran teacher, Mrs. Ellen A. Copp, is right in declaring that there should be a clear, concise definition of evolution. If the definition she quotes as scientific is the only correct one it is anti-Christian. It is: "Evolution is the development of organic forms by the operation of the forces of nature without design." Of course Doctor Van Dyke does not use the term in that sense. No doctrine of evolution has been proved, but there is a doctrine of evolution that is not opposed to an orthodox interpretation of Genesis though it differs from Mr. Chamberlin's. Take this as such a definition: "Evolution is the development of organic forces under the creative impulse and constant guidance of the Supreme Being." It is not at all probable that the early chapters of Genesis were ever intended to be understood in a narrow, literal fashion, but even so this view of evolution is hardly at variance with Genesis. Genesis does not say how God made different kinds of life after their own kind, whether by instantaneous fiat or by a long-continued process. It does not say how the physical man was made. Surely man's body was not made in the image of God, for Jesus said that God is a spirit. "No man hath seen God at any time." The Christian view of evolution is consistent with the statements of Genesis. Personally I doubt evolution being the final solution of the great problems of being.

Then as to Christ's teachings in regard to the Old Testament, while Jesus indeed made no effort to destroy the old law and always observed its ceremonies, he certainly knew that his teaching would in time overturn much of the Old Testament. It is practically impossible to read such passages as Matt. 5:38,43; Mark 10:4-9; Heb. 7:18, 10:4 and believe that all the Old Testament was the word of God in more than a very limited sense and that Jesus did not mean to abolish some of its teachings. However, Doctor Van Dyke was considering a wider question—that of the inerrancy of scripture on all subjects. It nowhere claims to be infallible in history, geography, geology, chronology, etc. To have been absolutely correct on all such subjects would have defeated its purpose and made it unintelligble for thousands of years. It was God's plan that man should make discoveries and investigations for himself. But the plan of salvation man could never have discovered. Hence divine revelation. This view is not doubt-provoking but absolutely orthodox and Bible-honoring.

Now as to the resurrection. Evidently there is a misprint in stating what Doctor Van Dyke said. He doubtless really said "The dogma that Christ's resurrection body was entirely unchanged from the body buried in the tomb, is unscriptural." The different accounts taken alone give us different impressions of his resurrection body. We must of course reject the view that it was only an influence and a memory that survived the tomb. He lived again, but he does not seem to have lived with his disciples as before. He appeared and disappeared suddenly in a closed room, undetected as he walked along the road to Emmaus, vanishing suddenly, manifesting himself unexpectedly beside Lake Galilee and at last disappearing out of the sight of his disciples. But he also ate with his disciples and invited Thomas to thrust his hands into his side, though he does not appear to have done so. To what extent his body was physical does not appear. When the change to the immortal body took place is not clear. We speak of a spiritual body, but that expression means different things to different people. It will hardly be settled in this world just what the nature of his body was, but we know that when he shall be manifested we shall be like him. We know that then we shall see him face to face. Meanwhile, without dwelling too much on things that are beyond our power to know we should proclaim Jesus as the Saviour of men. Whether he did his mighty works by his own omnipotence or whether, as Paul seems to indicate (Phil. 2:5-8), he laid aside in his earthly life his infinite attributes and worked by the power of the Father matters little. In either case Jesus is "the effulgence of his glory, and the very image of his substance."

GEO. B. HOPKINS.

Freeport, Ill.

CERTAIN QUESTIONS

There appeared in THE BAPTIST of July 7 a contributed article from Mr. Sherwood Eddy professing to set forth a movement in India leading to the acceptance of Christ by multitudes there. But the article is mainly made up of an attack upon the British government of India, partly in Mr. Eddy's own words and partly by quoting at length the attack of Mr. Gandhi upon the government, as his method of defence when he was arraigned on a charge of sedition.

One cannot avoid wondering whether the editor of THE BAPTIST consulted some of our veteran missionaries in India before giving publicity to Mr. Eddy's attack, and the more especially since many score of our own missionaries are working in India under the protection of the British government and in many ways in close cooperation and mutual sympathy with its officials. Mr. Eddy went once to India as a missionary but for some reason did not stay. Now he is an itinerant lecturer, and, like so many other transients, seems to have picked up the reports that happened to come to hand and without careful discernment retails them as solid truth to innocent hearers or readers. I well remember the indignation with which one of our own Baptist veteran and deeply revered missionaries in India spoke to me of globe-trotters among our countrymen who make a tour through the country and proceed forthwith to tell us how India ought to be governed by the British.

Mr. Gandhi is an Indian political agitator. He may be ever so sincere but his statements, like those of most men of that sort, are extravagant. He does not advocate violence but the movement he aroused went beyond his control, as any one acquainted with such things could see it would, and threatened to become a mass movement of violence. When Mr. Eddy says: "We are witnessing today the remarkable spectacle of a vast nation, or sub-continent of 320,000,000, whose leaders have in principle repudiated physical force and accepted vicarious suffering as their national program," he is guilty of a grand extravagance. One might ask whether India has no other leaders than the followers of Mr. Gandhi, whether what Mr. Eddy says is true of all Gandhi's followers, and whether it is true that these 320 millions have actually accepted his program. Such questions answer themselves.

It is quite likely that the British government of India has committed many blunders and done many wrongs. Sometimes we accuse our own government at home of doing such things and, quite likely, at times with reason. The English are often severe self-critics. They realize, as others cannot, the magnitude of their task in India. They know the jealousy with which some other peoples watch their doings. They seldom offer a defence but leave their work to tell its own story to intelligent and fair-minded people. Possibly they have lit-

(Continued on page 893)

Religious Education

"What I Would Like to Say to My Boys' Sunday School Teacher

By Henry T. Colestock

With the Sunday-school teachers of my children I would like a serious and friendly chat. Speaking for myself and other parents, I would say to these teachers, in whose hands is the religious education of the boys and girls of the community entrusted, that they should never forget the fact that the children in their classes will most probably go through high school and what they teach in the Sunday school should harmonize with the education they will later receive from the high school.

Just why should the Sunday school teacher keep this in mind? Because there is danger of one set of ideas being taught in the Sunday school and quite another approach to the same subject matter coming to the pupil in the public schools. If the church and the public schools do not give the same interpretation to life the pupil is thrown into confusion and doubt, with the result that the pupil abandons and becomes indifferent to whatever does not fit into his public school presentation of life. For the teaching of the church, with its one or two hours a week, cannot hope to withstand the teaching of the public schools where the ideas of the two may not be in full and complete harmony.

But is there danger of such lack of harmony? Indeed there is grave danger. Here are the roots of the whole problem of the fundamentalists. Here is where Mr. Bryan would safeguard the church by requiring the public schools to conform to the teachings of the church.

Why not secure harmony of teaching between the public schools and the church by the method Mr. Bryan and his fellow fundamentalists advocate? Why not require the schools to conform to the ideas of the church? If either must adjust itself to the other, why not the schools to the church?

On the surface it would seem that such an adjustment would be the right and proper solution of the problem: we love and venerate the church—let the church set the standard to which all public schoolteachers must conform; of course, such control of education would not stop with the public schools, it would soon include all colleges and universities as well. . . . .

Why not? Because every page of history cries out in protest against it. Our modern civilization is the fruitage of intellectual freedom. No other single element lies so largely at the base of the splendid achievements which crown the efforts of mankind today. Intellectual freedom is the mother of science; intellectual freedom is the parent of political liberty; intellectual freedom is the only pathway to solution of our present and future problems. As we value our heritage from the past; as we hope and plan for the future we must not, we dare not imperil our intellectual freedom.

Because when we begin to limit the teachings of the schools on one subject, the whole range of thinking is endangered. Science could make no further progress. Champions of the larger vision of truth would again face imprisonment and the stake.

For these reasons I would like to help keep the schools and colleges free from ecclesiastical control. Loyalty to our fathers demands that we should preserve the heritage they have passed down to us.

Of course the church also must have its freedom. Intellectual liberty demands this. Nevertheless, herein is a problem: if the church teaches one view of life on Sunday and the schools teach another view of life the rest of the week—there can be only one result; namely, the church will lose the loyalty, affection and confidence of the coming generation. So far as confidence and loyalty to the church has been lost, such a condition is a direful calamity. No parent can look upon such a trend with indifference. But confidence and affection of the growing generation can be held only by teaching modern interpretations of truth.

In behalf of the boys and girls of the present who need the church relationship even more than any preceding generation, I urge pastors and Sunday school teachers to give careful thought to the ideas they present; because if these growing children lose confidence in you they lose confidence in the church. The church of today can ill afford to alienate from itself the men and women of tomorrow by maintaining or even seeming to maintain an unfriendly attitude to modern ideas.—Excerpt from address delivered at the Lewisburg, Pa., district Sunday school convention.

International Sunday School Lesson for August 26

BARNABAS THE GREAT-HEARTED
Lesson: Acts 4:36; 11:19-30. Golden Text: Acts 11:24.

Introductory

Chiefly we hear of Barnabas as associated with Paul. He it was who introduced Saul to the Christians at Jerusalem. Paul was his companion when he journeyed to Jerusalem with relief funds for the poor. When the two returned to Antioch, where Barnabas had previously been sent to investigate the work among the Gentiles, they were set apart by the church for missionary work. Barnabas was Paul's companion on Paul's first missionary journey. He did not accompany him on the second journey because of the difference arising between Paul and Barnabas as to whether John Mark should accompany them. The slight breach between them was later healed. Antioch was the capital of the province of Syria and a most famous city of the ancient world.

The Lesson

Barnabas, so surnamed by the disciples, was a man who was interested in the poor. Early in the history of the church he sold a piece of property and brought the money to be distributed among the poor.

The stoning of Stephen resulted in the dispersion of the disciples, preaching the word to the Jews. But upon arriving at Antioch men of Cyrus and Cyrene preached to the Greeks also with the result that "a number believed and turned unto the Lord." Here, then, seemed fertile missionary soil, and the church at Jerusalem sent Barnabas who "was a good man, and full of the Holy Spirit and of faith: and much people were added unto the Lord." Then Barnabas went to Tarsus after Saul and brought him to Antioch. For a year they worked together in this city and the "disciples were first called Christian (Christ's men) in Antioch." To Antioch came Agabus, a prophet from Jerusalem and told of the great famine which would come all over the world. This came in the time of Claudius. A relief fund was raised for the poor every man contributing "according to his ability" and this fund was sent to Judea by the hand of Barnabas and Saul.

Leading Thoughts

1. "He was a good man"— a desirable comment on one's character to have passed on down through the ages. 2. He was "full of faith"—in God, yes; also in his fellowmen. 3. He was ever ready to serve.—his God; and his neighbor.

---

The Sunday-school room, which is the first unit of the $70,000 building being erected by the Tabernacle Church of Wilkes-Barre, Pa., will be dedicated next month. Rapid progress is being made on the building.

In a survey of conditions surrounding infant life made by the United States children's bureau, a special study in Gary, Ind., showed that infant mortality bore a close relation to economic conditions among the workers. Thus, when the breadwinner's wage amounted to not less than $1,850, the infant death rate was 89.4; when earnings were between $1,050 and $1,850, the rate rose to 127.1; when the income fell below $1,050, the rate increased to 137.8.

The Chimney Corner

Out of the Pigeon-Hole

THERE is a certain Desk; and in that Desk is a certain Pigeon-Hole; and in that Pigeon-Hole go certain Fascinating Scraps of Paper which may prove interesting some time to Chimney Corner readers; a few of these "scraps" are given herewith to show what possibilities there are in human progress! For instance, this:

Let There Be Light

IN 1816 a New England newspaper summarized the arguments — torrid and portentous—then prevailing against the introduction of gas for street lighting. They contended that:

Artificial illumination was a human attempt (doubtless inspired by the devil) to interfere with the divine scheme of things wherein it had been ordained that it should be dark at night.

Emanations of illuminating gas were injurious. Lighted streets would incline people to remain late out of doors, which would lead to an increase in ailments of various kinds which were "known" to be caused by "exposure to night air."

Fear of darkness would vanish, and drunkenness and depravity increase.

Horses would be frightened and thieves emboldened and aided in plying their nefarious craft.

If streets were illuminated every night, such constant illumination would rob festive occasions of their charm.

However, this diabolical innovation persisted, and the evil predicted did not come to pass—much to the disappointment of the prophets. Gas gave place to electricity, a far more brilliant street illuminant, in most communities.

Now, even the strictest theologians do not cavil at brilliant illumination of the streets at night. Youth and old age, promenading under the white lights, have no fear of illness from "night air." The police and public officials generally know that good street lighting is one of the most effective deterrents of crime.

The Daily Miracle

YOU wake up in the morning, and lo! your purse is magically filled with twenty-four hours of the manufactured tissue of the universe of your life. No one can take it from you. It is unstealable. No one receives either more or less than you receive. Waste your infinitely precious commodity as much as you will, and the supply will never be withheld from you. Moreover, you cannot draw on the future. Impossible to get into debt! You can only waste the passing moment. You cannot waste tomorrow; it is kept for you.

ARNOLD BENNETT.

This department is conducted by Miss Margaret T. Applegarth. Communications to her may be addressed in care of THE BAPTIST.

The Rain Prayer

"LORD, LORD, dar's a drought in dis dry land,
Famin' is feared here for beast and man,
My Lord, oh, won't you raise up yo' han'
An' sprinkle de rain on dis heah lan'?
My Lord! Yo' good Book's full of rain—
From kiver to kiver and back again—
De reign of David and de reign of Saul—
De Bible tells us about 'em all!
For heah in de One-Eyed Kings, I see De story of David and how he Had a reign in Israel forty year
An' furderer mo' it do appear
He'd a reign in Hebron for seven year—
And many mo' in Jerusalem—
De oil roll down to his garment's hem!
But, Lord, we don't want no rain like dat!
We don't want no swisher-swasher—oh!
We don't want no gully washer—Oh!
We des want a drizzly-drazzly shower
Dat'll scarcely hurt de cotton flower!"

MARTHA YOUNG.

Envy

OH, de gol' fish say to de pollywog
"You's gwine for to turn to a long-laig frog,
You can't be handsome an' swim like me,
An' be raised as a pet; 'cause, don' you see,
De time is certainly boun' to come
When you gotter git out o' dis' quarium."

An' de pollywog say to de gol-fish: "Sho',
You ain't tellin' nuffin I didn't know.
I'd rather hop than swim, I vow,
An' I doesn't like de comp'ny much, nohow.
I'se jess bin waitin' f'um day to day
For my laigs to grow, to be on my way."

Now frogs is frogs, an' fish is fish,
An' it's nuffin but foolishness to wish
To be changin' round like de white folks do
An' dream dem dreams what can't come true.
So honey, you stay whah you done belong,
And do yoh bes' an' you can't go wrong.

The Diary of a Bible

Author Unknown. Bible Unidentified. Was it yours?

Jan. 15—Been resting quietly for a week. The first few nights after New Year's my owner read me regularly, but he has forgotten me, I guess.

Feb. 2—Clean up. I was dusted with other things and put back in my place.

Feb. 8—Owner used me for a short time after dinner, looking up a few references. Went to Sunday school.

March 7—Clean up. Dusted and in my usual place again. Have been down in the lower hall since my trip to Sunday school.

April 2—Busy day. Owner led meeting and had to look up references. He had an awful time finding one, though it was right there in its place all the time.

May 1—In grandma's lap all afternoon. She is here on a visit. She let a tear-drop fall on Col. 2:5-7.

May 6—In grandma's lap again this afternoon. She spent most of her time on 1 Corinthians 13, and the last four verses of the fifteenth chapter.

May 7, 8, 9—In grandma's lap every afternoon. It's a comfortable spot. Sometimes she reads to me and sometimes she talks to me.

May 10—Grandma gone. Back in the old place. She kissed me goodbye.

June 3—Had a couple of four-leaf clovers stuck in me today.

July 1—Packed in a trunk with clothes and other things. Off on a vacation, I guess.

July 7—Still in the trunk.

July 10—Still in the trunk, though nearly everything else has been taken out.

July 15—Home again, and in my old place. Quite a journey, though I do not see why I went.

Aug. 1—Rather stuffy and hot. Have two magazines, a novel, and an old hat on top of me. Wish they would take them off.

Sept. 5—Clean up. Dusted and set right again.

Sept. 10—Used by Mary a few moments today. She was writing a letter to a friend whose brother had died, and wanted an appropriate verse.

Sept. 30—Clean up again.

Dizzy Doings on My Desk!

THE pencil has made quite a number of pointed remarks about the sponge being soaked all day, and the waste basket being full. The scissors are cutting up and the paper weight is trying to hold them down, while the paste is sticking around to see the stamps get a good licking. The ink's well but appears to be blue, while bill is stuck on the file and the calendar is looking fresher after having had a month off. The blotter is lying around taking it all in.

The Young Reserves

The Heroine Who Fell Among Thieves

By Margaret Applegarth

IT sounds rather biblical to call her the Heroine - Who - Fell-Among-Thieves, but as a matter of fact the thieves fell among her—which may not be a strictly grammatical use of the word "among," although a perfectly truthful use for suddenly there were about two hundred robbers on her front lawn where none had been before: bag and baggage they were there, with donkeys braying and babies wailing and confusion galore. Suppose you had been in the heroine's shoes, how would you have felt?

Suppose you looked out of your window one afternoon and saw the vacant space across the street filled with strange, wild-looking folk and disconsolate little donkeys, and suppose that when you asked a nearby policeman about them he answered, "Oh, that's Gang No. V of the Erukalas. They are thieves and we are here to watch them, and we sleep by them all night to see that they don't go off committing robbery." Suppose! Would your first impulse have been to ask them all to come, bag and baggage, fifty donkeys and all, and stay in your grounds, where they would be more comfortable? And when you had gathered them all there, would you have gone to the district superintendent of police and asked him to give you all those people to look after, instead of sending them to the mica mines? And when he said, yes, he would, provided you would take not only this group, but the whole tribe, which numbered about two hundred families, what would you have said? What Miss Bullard, a dauntless little missionary in India said was, "All this seems so like the working of God's plan for the saving of these poor, down-trodden, wicked men that we cannot refuse." So she set them to clearing a piece of ground which was overgrown with cactus, not because they were good and efficient workmen, but because they must be taught to work. Meanwhile word was sent out to other members of the "Red Thieves' Tribe," that any who cared to come would be very welcome on the mission compound. And the invitation was promptly accepted. Men, women, children, cattle, sheep, goats, dogs, cats came pouring in.

Miss Bullard had indeed fallen among thieves you see, and when she wrote home to American Baptists she said: "How can one describe these wild-looking creatures? Many of the men have hard faces, showing that crime is not a new thing to them. Others again have bright faces and it is hard to believe that they have ever done such wicked things. The women are so uncivilized that they are dirty and unkempt in the extreme. . . . The children are bright little things, as scared as little rabbits at first. . . Dirt and noise seem to be the words that best describe the Erukalas."

But today? Ah, today, if you visit Kavali you will see a sight sure to thrill good Baptist eyes—two thousand robbers now in our care; two thousand robbers living quietly in small mud huts with straw roofs; two thousand robbers in a village without walls, choosing their own members to act as a committee for the settlement of all disputes; two thousand robbers diligently earning an honest livelihood, the men by building roads and farming, the women weaving on their looms, and four hundred children boarding in Miss Bullard's school. For from the ages of six to fifteen it seemed wisest to separate the children from their parents, for old habits should not be passed on, of course. So while we leave our heroine making them robber-proof, suppose we see what the criminals themselves are doing in charge of Mr. Samuel Bawden.

Each morning at the settlements (for there are three,—Kavali, Allur and Bitragunta) is begun with roll call and prayers at which every member must be present or accounted for. After the devotional exercises the announcements for the day are made and then the people separate to their various working gangs, each in charge of an overseer. The streets are patrolled all night by special constables, who are trustworthy members of the settlement and receive their appointment upon recommendation of the manager. The penalty for running away from the settlement is severe, for any member found outside the ninety acres of Kavali without written permit is given a jail sentence.

But do not think from this that we Baptist jailers are hated. There is the case of Mr. Bawden's ring to prove the contrary! But first you ought to know that Mr. Bawden is a hero, his services to India have been so notable that the British government recently conferred upon him the Kaisar-I-Hind medal, which means "emperor of India" medal. The ex-robbers at Bitragunta wanted to see this medal, and begged Mr. Bawden to stop off—and would you believe it—he was greeted at the station by four hundred persons, all decked for the occasion with flags and banners and flowers! Some of the people had walked eleven miles to Kavali to borrow a wagon which they decorated with palm leaves, water lilies and flags, and in this the Bawdens were escorted two miles from the station to the settlement. There was a band and a program of songs, dialogs and recitations! But I think you will like to hear the rest as Mr. Bawden himself tells it:

"These people in their extreme poverty had taken up a subscription and bought a necklace for Mrs. Bawden which one of the women hung around her neck with many expressions of affection. I was surprised with a gold ring. They had inquired of Mrs. Bawden to find out the size of my finger and had asked her to design a "B" which they said stood for Bawden and Bitragunta; then they had sent to Nellore, thirty miles away, and had a native goldsmith make the ring. I put it on my finger before them, saying that I should certainly remember them every time I looked at it and should tell the folks at home about my friends in India. As highly as I value the medal from His Majesty King George V, I prize the ring still more, for it stands to me as a token of love and esteem of those whom their own people have despised and rejected but whom God has reached out his arm to save.

"When I took charge of the work in 1914 the district magistrate, a strict Brahman, said to me: 'Mr. Bawden, I have no faith in your Christianity's doing these people any good. You cannot reform the adult criminal, but at any rate it will do them no harm and putting the children in your school will help to wean them away from the habits and thoughts of their parents. The only thing we can do with these adults is to keep them under the restrictions of the settlements until they die off and the new generation may be saved for better things.' I did not argue the matter with him, for I knew better than he what Christianity could do. Seven years later when introducing my successor to the government official at Madras who is in charge of the police administration, I had the pleasure of telling that gentlemen that we had seen two hundred of these former criminals converted and baptized and that I thought fully 30 per cent of our people could be released with safety to the community. Our work can be counted as successful."

---

The Spingarh medal, awarded each year for distinguished achievement by a negro, goes this year to G. W. Carver of Tuskegee Institute in consideration of his work in agricultural chemistry, his lectures promoting interracial good-will in the South and his recognition by the British Royal Society.

An intensive movement to instruct laymen in religious work, and workers in the handling of boys and girls of the teen age, is being organized in Hartford county, Conn. Various religious bodies will unite to conduct a central school during the fall and winter. The school will be in charge of Rev. F. W. Raymond, Glastonbury, Conn. The chairman of the general committee in charge is Rev. L. H. Dorchester, pastor of the First Methodist Church, Hartford. Participating in the movement are: The Hartford Council of Churches, the Episcopal Diocesan Council, Hartford County Sunday School Association, Hartford Christian Endeavor Union, Baptist State Convention, School of Religious Pedagogy of the Hartford Theological Seminary, Young Men's Christian Association and Young Women's Christian Association. Instruction will be given in Sunday-school work, mission work, social service and young people's recreation. Some of the instructors will be paid workers, but most of the faculty will give their services.

Young People's Work

Topic for August 26

THE CALL OF THE IMMIGRANT
Deut. 10:17-19

Materials

"Jottings from the Note-book of a Christian Americanization Secretary," 5 cents; "The Conquest of Volunteers," 3 cents; "Katie," 3 cents; "Mobilizing Forces for a Better America," free; "Knock at the Door," free; "My Friends," 3 cents; "Almanac," free; "Garden Catalog for Human Flower Gardens," free.

The above material may be secured from the General Board of Promotion, 276 Fifth Ave., New York City; 143 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago; 313 W. Third St., Los Angeles, Calif.

"Americans from the Other Side"

A small boy of dark skin was asked, "Are you an Italian?" "No," he retorted, "I'm an American from the other side."

For years we have been confronted with an invasion of European and other foreign peoples. Until about 1880 the majority of these came from the Protestant countries of Europe. Then came an influx, sometimes a million a year, chiefly from Jewish and Catholic sections. The war stopped the flow for the time being. When the literacy and quota laws were enacted, the percentage of Catholics decreased, since these laws favor immigration from Protestant northern Europe. Statistics prove that for the present, people from the Protestant countries of Europe come and stay here permanently, whereas the increase is not so great from other countries.

Christian Americanization

The fine art of being a good neighbor is learned by many Americans through enlistment in the work of Christian Americanization. These volunteers usually work in connection with the local Christian Americanization secretary or some mission agency ministering to foreigners. They go into the home to teach English to the mother, to initiate her into American ways of living, to help her solve the problems that constantly arise in her unfamiliar surroundings, to interpret to her the things she cannot understand. Thus the volunteer wins the confidence and friendship of her needy neighbor and through her wise helpfulness and guidance leads her to understand and to love America. Thus also she prepares the way for the time when she may, without offense, speak of the Friend of Friends, Jesus Christ.

Some Incidents

The following incidents are told in Missions:

Winning a family. A Newark volunteer had been praying and talking of Jesus to a Polish woman and her husband. Many things had to be explained. Her foreign-speaking friend declared, for example, that at the last supper Judas stole a roll from the table when Jesus was not looking and then denied it. This is only one slight case of the way in which the foreigner gets things twisted. The true story was told, and then they all knelt down on the miserable basement floor to pray. Word by word the volunteer taught her friends to talk to Jesus, and they, sobbing, followed her. The entire family, mother, father, and four children, now attend the mission Sunday school.

Christ in every home. Outside the city of Pontiac, Mich., a new settlement of Roumanians, Bulgarians, Hungarians, Germans and other nationalities had sprung up. No church ministered to them. They could go up town to churches of their own faith and language, but only the faithful would go so far.

"No one is doing anything for these people," said the school principal. "They couldn't be in greater need of uplifting influence if they were in the heart of Africa."

A desire to serve their neighbors, to reach out in friendliness to new Americans, led the First Baptist Church of Pontiac into this community. First, splendid Baptist women were interested to go into the homes of some of these new Americans and teach English. Poverty was there, too, during the last hard winter, when unemployment was prevalent. American friendliness soon made an opening in such a community.

Then, word went around that there was to be a community night at the school. "No money—pictures and singing—good times." The community was stirred. Long before the hour set, little groups started toward the school building—women with shawls over their heads, carrying their babies, the older children following in single file. Something of the feeling of the community was apparent when a woman whispered as she went out, "We're so glad you'ins came down here. We thought every one had forgotten us."

Thus began the community nights, which have constantly increased in interest and attendance, with programs sometimes given entirely by the foreign neighbors. The mission is growing spiritually, numerically and financially. Classes in English for adults are maintained and those who attend are learning rapidly. Many conversions have resulted from this community work.

Nationality nights. Miss Mary E. Comstock, Americanization secretary for New York City, planned a series of nationality nights.

The program given in November was Italian. The second, Czecho-Slovakian, was held in an American church, and many were drawn who might not have attended had they been obliged to travel to a down-town East Side district. The valuable support of the Russian department of the International Seminary at East Orange was enlisted for Russian night, and a striking picture of Russian Baptist work in all its phases was presented.

When it came time to prepare for the Hungarian dinner, an enthusiastic group of people was found in Mr. Dulitz's field, who put all their strength and energy at the secretary's disposal for the success of the Maygar cause. At one dinner, several Chinese university students caught the spirit of the plan and welcomed the opportunity to present to their American friends a picture of real China.

The usual evening's program has included a dinner at which representative national dishes are served, followed by an exhibition of arts and crafts work and a lecture on some vital topic in connection with the country concerned.—Adapted from Service.

These pages are for all Baptist young people's organizations. Send news items on activities, organizations, plans and methods of work for publication in THE BAPTIST to James Asa White, General Secretary 143 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago.

Convention Impressions

This being my first B. Y. P. U. convention, I have had a lot of inspiration and helpfulness from it. I will surely attend the next one. God bless the wonderful work.—Maynard H. Hammond.

This being my first B. Y. P. U. convention, I was very much impressed.—Elwood Hovey.

I was not disappointed in my first B. Y. P. U. convention. I expect to attend next year and bring some of our society with me. Christ Jesus has been made more attractive to me.—Elizabeth Canavan.

A renewed and greater faith in Christ, and the desire to teach and serve others.—Sec. Davis.

It has made me realize all the possibilities of service for young people and that the best joys have come from serving Christ.—Beulah Thomas.

Although I was here only one day I received a blessing from the sermon of Dr. Taylor. His talk should have opened the heart of every Christian. This is the first convention of its kind I have attended, but it will not be the last.—John Sanders.

This convention has meant a final decision of service for Christ. "Here am I, send me."—R. O. Bancroft.

Our Own Folks

Boston Letter

By Charles H. Watson

The Clarendon Street Church

The name of this church is rich with precious associations, and brings back the names of Baron Stow and A. J. Gordon, princely preachers and leaders. The entire district where the noble church stands, had at the time that Rev. W. Harry Freda came to the pastorate, greatly changed. It had lost its old family type. It was nested with boarding houses bringing in an ever-changing population.

But changes are busy, and it really looks as if the former more desirable "church" neighborhood were coming back. Family after family of church people have bought homes around the meeting house, and are coming back into the sanctuary. Of course the old status will not completely return. But this partial renascence brings solid encouragement. Pastor Freda fits the task so perfectly that his promises to be a long reign. Success on this field demands the rare combination of spiritual and social sense. The pastor has it. His nature is rich in practical brotherliness. A real passion to help is constantly finding its own way. The church gives ample scope and assistance, accepts the unusual when it is wholesome, and all with confidence and success work together. It will be interesting to watch the old church come back into its second glory.

By the way, Dr. and Mrs. George W. Coleman are workers here. Always the riddle is—which is the sturdier end of that strong team? The writer recently "listened in" when one who "knows," confidentially informed him that "Mrs. Coleman had George beaten to a frazzle!"

A Good Man for Peabody

Sometimes a church suddenly becomes famous for wisdom. The church at Peabody has just given us one of those pleasant surprises. Think of unanimously calling a minister who is venturing on the shady side of fifty! But a man is only as old as he is. Dr. A. E. Scoville is the good man for Peabody. Fourteen years he was at Melrose, where he led in building that sanctuary. Since 1915, he was professor of theology at Richmond Theological Seminary. Resigning that position, he returned home to New England, the land of his fundamentals and his loving friends. It is a happy arrangement for both church and pastor. A leader, and teacher of rich experience, and pronounced ability, will be environed with an appreciative church and community. There will be substantial results of this union.

A Veteran Retires

Rev. Millard F. Johnson, graduate of Brown 1876, of Newton 1879, classmate there of Pres. G. E. Horr, Dr. E. F. Merriam, Prof. Albion W. Small, Dr. Richard Montague, and other good ministers, retires from his church at Rock, Middleboro, and goes to live with a daughter in St. Paul, Minn. In a marked degree, Pastor Johnson joined the scholar with the practical and won the abiding confidence and gratitude of churches at Nashua, N. H., and Medford, Dorchester, and Middleboro, Mass. He is one of the men who will be missed in the councils of our state work, and our schools.

Summer Preachers

Vacation time always brings to us distinguished visiting preachers, some to face large congregations; others to run the risk of small ones. It is a risk in the modern summer, or rather in the average modern church. These are only a few of the names that a long catalog would contain: Dr. John W. Ham, of Texas, at Tremont Temple; Dr. W. W. Bustard, there a Sunday, also at Dudley Street Church; Dr. Walter Woodbury, of Minneapolis, delighting the First Church during the entire vacation of the pastor; Dr. Elmer W. Powell, of Kalamazoo, coming back to his old pulpit in the First Church, Cambridge; Dr. F. J. Goodchild at the Dudley Street Church; Dr. A. C. Dixon at Tremont Temple; Rev. W. Harry Freda at First Church, Arlington; Dr. Emory W. Hunt at Newton Center; Dr. A. E. Scoville in his old pulpit in Melrose; Dr. A. Ray Petty, of New York, at Brookline; Rev. I. W. Williamson, of Canada, at Clarendon Street; Rev. Samuel Russell of Buffalo, at Dudley Street.

Many pastors in the vicinity reciprocally accommodate each other in supplies, and more than ever churches in towns and neighborhoods unite for the season by an arrangement that gives each pastor six weeks vacation, yet saves the churches the expense of outside supplies. It must be said that the general summer let down grows apace, and often raises the question whether the occasion of it all is fag or fad. Let us give fag full credit in modern conditions.

Ford Building

Our vacationists returning will meet a pleasant surprise in Ford Building, and especially in the more familiar halls. For the first time since the building was finished eighteen years ago, the halls have been furbished up and redecorated. The edifice is solidly built in every detail, so that even after the wear of the years, many will be surprised that it needed an over hauling anywhere. No radical changes have been made; it is merely a picking up and freshening of things. This fact points to the advantage and economy of sound construction. Where will some of these "pretty" houses, built for sale, be in eighteen years? Some one told Doctor Watkinson that a certain new house had been blown down before it was papered. "That explains it," said the witty doctor, "It needed the paper to hold it together!"

Borrowed Prophets

Some of the best of our prophets are borrowed; also some of the worst. The best of them we are ambitious to keep. The worst gladly would we return to their sources. We could hardly do without the contribution of able and consecrated men that come to our pulpits from Britain, Canada, and the southern states. Not producing all of our own ministry in the northern states we are fortunate to catch the overflow of devoted and adventurous young ministers coming from other sections. Hundreds of them are admirably serving our churches and schools.

But there is another brand of prophets to whose bulging prominence and overlordship we are too hospitable. Sometimes he comes from England, and acts as if sent by the Lord to lay down the law to us. Sometimes from Canada, and long before he gets naturalized, tells us in what we are undemocratic, and just where are the rotten spots in our theology. Too frequently he comes from the South with his frenzied "orthodoxy," orders off our leaders, seeks to boss our boards, and cracks his overseering whip over our backs after the manner of the old time slave driver. Our patience is excessive, and our hospitality also. We have opened to him our largest pulpits, bribed him with our biggest salaries, and tempted him to assume that we needed and merited his corrections and castigations. Thus encouraged, he has gone so far as to call attention to his self-exaggeration, and convince us that he is not what he is cracked up to be. It is against nature for such prophets to decrease. They swell, even without encouragement. Has not the time come for us to hearken to our own prophets? They understand us, observe the Christian proprieties, and do not take so many liberties with us.

Rev. Frank Milton Holt

This downright good minister is at Ocean Park, recuperating rapidly after his surgical exploit, and becoming better than ever. Pastor and Mrs. Holt remind you somewhat of the Coleman quandary—which is the bigger worker? The church at Reading, that had them eleven years, would answer—"What difference does it make, when they pull so gloriously together!" It will be a wise church that connects with that team.

Nebraska Letter

By R. R. Coon

So successful was the B. Y. P. U. assembly last year that it was decided to hold a similar gathering each year. It was also decided to make the permanent meeting place the grounds of Grand Island College. The destruction of the college gymnasium and the power house by a wind storm will not prove an inconvenience to the meeting of the assembly. Repairs on the ruined buildings are now in progress and the power house will be finished before school opens.

William Jewell College at Liberty, Mo., had a special commencement week ending the thirty years' presidency of Dr. J. P. Greene. He leaves the college in its most flourishing condition with bright prospects. He goes to California for a year.

Our Pastors

They come and go. Rev. H. M. Wyrick closed his pastorate at Fairbury, an important church, and has gone to Louisville to finish his seminary course. Rev. H. F. Smith has left Western and has gone to Corryton, Tenn. Rev. W. F. Robbins moved from Arthur to Waukonda, S. D. Rev. P. O. Silvara labored two years at Arnold and vicinity. In that time a large community church was built and three outstations for preaching were established. A fine opportunity for an advanced work awaits one looking for an arduous task.

At a recent meeting of the state administrative committee, Rev. B. H. Ward of Superior was elected state evangelist. Mr. Ward is the song leader in the B. Y. P. U. assembly. The election is timely as two good evangelists were allowed to be drawn to states north of us. Rev. R. R. Richards the past year conducted eight revival meetings in South Dakota. Rev. E. W. White did similar work in North Dakota. These workers are helping solve the rural problem by aiding the country churches. Rev. A. P. Broyles of Beatrice has accepted the call of the church in David City. Rev. T. S. Kesterson moves from Herman to Glenvil. Rev. E. E. Shoufler is coming from Michigan to the important church at Hastings where Rev. B. P. Richardson served for seven years.

Not many churches have a real dedication service twice in seven years. The church at Loup City has that distinction. Seven years ago it entered a new house of worship. In a short time it was destroyed by fire, but with faith and determination the church unitedly set its face to rebuilding a better edifice. On Sunday, June 24, this new house was dedicated. Dr. George Sutherland, who in time of deep discouragement put iron into the blood of the people, preached the dedicatory sermon. Rev. J. L. Dunn is now in the tenth year of his pastorate.

Iowa-Chicago Letter

By J. W. Weddell

Iowa is a park, where it is not a farm. Missionary Brown, whose son became the head of the New York Central, used to tell us on his frequent visits to Davenport that when he and his wife first came to the far woods and fields of bonny Iowa, it did not look like wild land, wilderness and prairie mixed, but like a beautiful English manor already laid out for occupancy. Then the homes and cities came in and changed it a bit, but all for the better.

Iowa Falls

No prettier place in the country is to be found than Iowa Falls, where Baptists, 1,800 strong, a tremendous outpouring, held their summer assembly. Here is a comely and triving town of 4,000 with a church to match under the management of Rev. W. A. Simmons. "And yet," said an old resident I met, "when I came here over sixty-five years ago there were but log huts to be found." But the river and the rapids drew the settlers, as they had drawn the Indians before, and the mill, early erected on the tide of the waters, was a place of necessary resort from near and far.

It is the lift of the spiritual currents that draws the people now. I have been meeting them in the quiet vesper service from evening to evening on the brow of the hill that we call Prospect Point. It is a spectacle of sylvan serenity and devotion to move men's hearts. This was but on the side; the main program was the course of lectures and studies for ten days under competent instructors on the tented heights overlooking the Iowa. Chancellor V. N. Witter with Pres. A. W. Caul and departmental secretaries Mate Goodell, Viets and Fletcher have learned how to put together a series of recreative and stimulative events that draw great companies of campers from all directions.

This year Douglas Haring, missionary to Japan; Albert H. Gage of Chicago; John L. Barton of Omaha; W. H. Thompson of Ohio; Miss Alice Brimson of Americanization work in the Lakeside city; Howland Hanson in the Bible chair; and Clark R. Parker as director of music. were the drawing cards. As regular lecturers there were Chas. A. Carmen, J. O. Gould, Geo. K. Merrill of New York, Walter Hutton of Des Moines, Myrtle Hershey of Decatur, and a group of special speakers on the evening program, such as Pres. John W. Million, S. P. Fogdall and W. W. Ainsworth of Des Moines.

Summer Schools

They are everywhere today, but none greater in numbers, in attendance or in influence than the great gathering at the state university. Hot, yes; but the frequent breezes tempered the heat. Did they come from Kansas? I pass on to you what Chancellor Lindley said in his address. "Down in Kansas when the wind blows a man's hat off, he doesn't stop to run after it but just reaches up in the air and gets another." And, O, the wealth of library lore this wealthy state is acquiring. I saw a new invoice of the valuable old Broadmead Documents and other original "Liberty of Conscience" writings that had just been discovered and brought in from London. Colgate or Crozer ought to requisition them.

Iowa Items

Pastor Best leaves Forest Avenue, Des Moines, for the Northwest, which will welcome him back to the Dakotas in the early fall. Rev. W. G. Hooper is the successful pastor of the Peoples' Church near Ogden. He has made it the center of a broad community service. Rev. L. E. Viets, well known to Denison people, is making a fine success of his Boone pastorate. Dr. S. E. Wilcox, after his retirement as state secretary, following upon Doctor Bartlett's incumbency, is making his home at Des Moines.

His previous pastorates in Iowa were at Muscatine, Osage and Boone. His pastorates out of the state were at Omaha and Homer, N. Y. Rev. Charles Carmen of Grinnell is a leading spirit among the young people of the state. Rev. R. E. Williams of the First Church, Waterloo, is also active among the B. Y. P. U. He expects to see a new house of worship for his people in the near future, as does Doctor Roger at Muscatine.

Secretaries Mitchell and Lagerquist were delegates to the World Alliance at Stockholm.

On July 29, Rev. E. J. Smith took the pulpit among the saints and the students at Iowa City, and your correspondent goes home to see the folks at Morgan Park.

Back on the Field

Getting back into one's missionary stride is no easy task. The easiest and most comfortable part by far is slipping again into the old well-worn clothes one considered with contempt as the "things to be left behind" on the eve of a furlough. Style in China has the pace of a turtle. Almost anything not worn out marks a man as being up-to-date.

Scarcely four months have elapsed since Mrs. Wilcox and I returned to China. Yet in that time we have seen the question of union with the Presbyterian Mission in high-school work for boys taken up anew and satisfactorily solved. Beginning with the spring term we shall conduct together a junior and senior high school enrolling 300 students and elementary schools attached to the high school enrolling at least 200 more. Thus the largest school in Ningpo will be a Christian school. The new school takes the old name of the city of Ningpo, Sze Ming, meaning the four brightnesses, referring to the encircling mountains. I have often prophesied that the school will add a new brightness to the city of Ningpo and have suggested as its real name, Wu-Ming, the fifth brightness. We pray that it may have the inner light of Christ.

Close upon the heels of our return came a week end of special meetings conducted by an able pastor of the Methodist Mission. The spirit of Christ was in the message and the boys responded, twenty-nine of them asking for baptism. A week later a group of grave Christian boys and their teachers gathered in the chapel for the formal examination of the candidates. As each candidate arose he was questioned by his fellow students as to his knowledge of the Bible, doctrine and conduct. No board of deacons could have more seriously undertaken this task and certainly not as discriminatingly examined each boy with reference to his actual conduct among his fellows. The Christian students by majority vote recommended twenty-three out of twenty-nine to the church for baptism. The deacons of the church wisely decided that they could not improve upon the examination already given and approved the recommendations of the teachers and students.

At one of the student prayer meetings each one who desired arose and told the others why he became a Christian. Story after story contained one remarkably similar statement. "Pastor So-and-So came to preach. I heard his doctrine and believed." I was struck with the utility of preaching as a vital factor in these boys' religious experiences. The transcendent beauty of Christ's character captures the boys' allegiance at an early age. As effective as your missionaries are in making known the new life in Christ, their work is sadly handicapped by the great amount of attention and effort given to correcting the deficiencies in material equipment. As I survey the work of each year I conclude with a sigh, oh, for the day when carpenters and masons and tinsmiths may pass out of my life and students and teachers with their higher needs may more completely come in!

F. C. Wilcox.

River Bend, Ningpo, China.
March 1, 1923.

Duly Emphasizing the Word

By Fred Scott Shepard

The Baptists of Canada are giving emphasis to the study of the Bible and consequently report many additions to the churches from the ranks of the Sunday schools. The Canadian Baptist, their leading denominational paper, recently made the following statement as to the purpose of the Sunday school: "The Sunday school is a place for gospel teaching with the Bible, which is the Word of God, as the text book. The central thought and purpose of this school is that through the use of this book the scholars may be made wise unto salvation. The problem of the Sunday school is to mould the complex nature of youth into Christian life and character, instilling into the minds of all a sense of duty, leading toward the development of better citizenship, higher ideals, nobler aspirations and the Christianizing of mankind. The organization is based upon a standard which is voluntarily accepted by officers and teachers and the maintaining of this standard is the fulfilment of the purpose of the school."

At a recent meeting of the Toronto Baptist Sunday School Teachers' Association, it was reported that there were 9,999 scholars on the rolls of the fifty schools of that city, with an average attendance of those reporting of 6,788 and an aggregate in the year of 359,764. Twenty-eight schools said they had 1,676 scholars who were members of their churches; thirty-seven reported home departments with 250 visitors and 2,200 members, while thirty-two schools showed 1,564 members on the cradle roll and sixty-two visitors.

Baptists are conducting four Sunday schools for Indian children on the Six Nations Reserve, near Brantford, Ont. Four thousand Indians are located on this reservation, living on an area about twelve miles square, 1,000 of whom are reported as being pagan and worshipping much as their fathers did.

It is said of the Sunday school at New Liskeard, Ont., that it has become a beehive of activity. To accommodate the increased number of classes, it has undertaken to secure additional class-room space by excavating the basement, the work being done largely as a labor of love. The Bremer Church of Galt, Ont., with a membership of only forty, has a Sunday school in which the regular attendance is over 200. Recent decisions for the Christian life in the school at Sault Ste Marie, Ont., resulted in eight scholars being baptized and uniting with the church, while an equal number took the same steps at Port Arthur, Ont.

Church News by States

Atlantic Coast

MAINE

EDGECOMB CHURCH: Rev. F. W. Hovey, pastor, recently baptized four candidates at the conclusion of an evangelistic campaign conducted by Pastor-evangelist Evans. Mr. Evans also assisted Rev. C. H. Berry, Boothbay, with good results.

THE FIRST CHURCH, NOBLEBORO, has extended a unanimous call to Rev. G. W. Collins, of So. Windham. This is the oldest church and one of the most important fields in the Damariscotta Association.

NO. NOBLEBORO CHURCH: A recent quarterly meeting was largely attended. Rev. E. L. Sampson of So. Jefferson arranged an interesting program on the rural church.

FIRST CHURCH, CALAIS: Pastor W. F. Grant is on vacation in Europe, where he will visit his relatives and his old home in Wales.

SECOND CHURCH, CALAIS: A successful daily vacation Bible school is one of the features of the summer work of Pastor Boardman and his church.

CHERRYFIELD CHURCH: Pastor Brown is emphasizing personal evangelism and has conducted a vacation school for the children.

THE ANNUAL MEETING OF THE NEW England Conference will be held at Jordan Memorial Hall, Ocean Park, Old Orchard, Aug. 29, at 2:30 p. m., for the receiving of reports, the amendment of the by-laws, the election of officers and the transaction of any other business that may be deemed advisable.

NEW HAMPSHIRE

AN ORDINATION SERVICE was held in the First Church at Peterboro, July 18. The council met in the afternoon and listened to the statement of Brother H. E. Danielson, a recent graduate of Gordon Bible College. At the service of ordination, Pres. Nathan R. Wood of Gordon Bible College preached the sermon. Mr. Danielson has supplied the Peterboro Church nearly a year.

THE FUNDS OF THE FIRST CHURCH of Sanbornton, amounting to $11,690, have been placed in the hands of the convention as trustee. This church has not been very active of late and is able to conduct services only in the summer. It has also voted to give the convention reversionary right in its real estate consisting of meeting house and parsonage.

A NEW PIPE-ORGAN will be installed in the church at Rochester during this month.

THE BRADFORD CHURCH has been without a pastor since last fall, but has now settled Rev. G. L. Hibbard who comes to the state from Worcester, Mass.

MASSACHUSETTS

REV. H. E. LEVOY has entered his third year as pastor of the Beth Eden Church, Waltham. During his ministry, ninety-eight new members have been received.

NEW YORK

MRS. AUGUSTUS H. STRONG and Miss Nellie G. Prescott of Rochester, expect to sail Aug. 18 from Montreal on the "Doric" for Liverpool en route to Rangoon, Burma. Mrs. H. E. Goodman, Mrs. H. W. Peabody and Miss Prescott have been appointed by the W. A. B. F. M. S. to visit and study the work of the society in four British Indian fields. Mrs. Goodman has already sailed for Europe in order to attend the Alliance meetings. The party plans to reach Rangoon in time for the All-Burma Conference which opens Oct. 10 and to remain in British India until March 1.

DURING SEPTEMBER, Dr. C. A. Barbour and Rev. C. H. Moehlman will occupy the pulpit of the Lake Avenue Church, Rochester.

ROCHESTER HAS SUFFERED A LOSS in the death of William Hartman, which occurred at Verdun, France, while he was on a vacation trip with his family. He sailed on the "America" June 28. His pastor, Rev. Clinton Wunder paid this tribute to him, "Mr. William Hartman was a Christian gentleman. He was a tower of strength in the Baptist Temple and a loyal layman upon whom I had come to lean heavily for counsel and aid. As chairman of our building committee, he furnished the zeal and untiring enthusiasm that made possible our decision to erect a new temple and that caused us to raise successfully the initial sum of $260,000. Mr. Hartman's passing has made of our new building enterprise a fitting and proper memorial to him."

WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA

REV. ARTHUR F. PURKISS has resigned as pastor of the Dormont Church, Pittsburgh, to become executive secretary of the Christian Laymen's Association of Pittsburgh.

EASTERN PENNSYLVANIA

THE WAYMART CHURCH is making progress under the leadership of Rev. Curtis K. Shoup. This church and the Presbyterian church unite in Sunday-school work and prayer meetings. Mr. Shoup also serves the church at Maple Grove. He was ordained at Waymart, July 11.

REV. JAMES W. CLAYTON tendered his reignation as pastor of the church at New Britain, July 22, to become effective Sept. 17.

NEW JERSEY

REV. A. R. DEMOTT, formerly pastor of the Bloomingdale Church, has accepted a call to the Calvary Church, Hackensack, and will begin his new work Sept. 1.

Mississippi Valley

OHIO

FUNERAL SERVICES FOR DR. T. H. MCAFEE, pastor emeritus of the Trinity Church, Marion, were held July 23. Dr. Daniel F. Rittenhouse of Columbus preached the sermon. A message of condolence was received by Mrs. McAfee via radio from President Harding at Cordova, Alaska.

MRS. G. M. PETERS of Cincinnati, died July 4 at Aix-les-Bains, France. Both Mrs. and Mr. Peters, who died four years ago, were active in religious and educational affairs. Mr. Peters for some time was president of the board of trustees of Denison University and was a contributor to its endowment funds. Mrs. Peters at one time was secretary of the local woman's missionary organization, and was an active member of the Walnut Hills Church.

ON SUNDAY, JULY 29, the new $100,000 house of worship of the Calvary Church, Youngstown, was dedicated. Rev. J. H. Lord is pastor. Dr. H. C. Rowlands was the speaker both morning and evening.

ILLINOIS

MR. H. E. BOLLINGER was ordained at the Elmwood Park Church, Chicago, July 25. Pres. George W. Taft of the Northern Seminary delivered the ordination sermon.

MR. FRED S. DONNELSON was ordained July 26 at the Messiah Church, Chicago. Dean Jacob Heinrichs of the Northern Theological Seminary preached the sermon. Rev. J. C. Dent was moderator, and Rev. Wilfred Noble, clerk.

Rev. Mawlon C. Tunison of the Baptist Temple, Logansport, Ind., has accepted a call to the pastorate of the First Church, Elgin, to succeed Rev. A. D. McGlashan. Mr. Tunison has served the church at Logansport for the past five years. His other pastorates have been at West Hartford, Conn., Worchester, Mass., and Ft. Wayne, Ind. He will begin his new work early in September.

Evangelist William S. Dixon of Wheaton will lead the music in the evangelistic campaign at the Woodlawn Church, Chicago, Sept. 23-Oct. 7. Rev. M. P. Boynton is pastor.

The Austin Church, Chicago, has secured Mrs. Adda H. Smith as pastor's assistant. She was formerly secretary to Dr. C. A. Brooks and to Doctor Case. She will begin her new work Oct. 1.

Pastor Fred Albert Isler, Oglesby, was ordained July 27 by a representative council of the churches of the Ottawa Association. Rev. George R. Wood was elected moderator, and Rev. Harry E. Miles, clerk. Rev. L. P. Cassel preached the sermon.

Rev. A. W. Fleischman, pastor of the First Church, Sterling, closes his work Aug. 26 to become a teacher in the theological department of Virginia Union University, Richmond.

The First Church, Moline, has called Rev. Walter Ingram of the White Temple, Mitchell, S. D.

Rev. G. W. Chessman of Benton Harbor, Mich., has accepted a unanimous call to the First Church, Peoria, and will be on the field early in October.

Rev. Martin S. Bryant, university pastor, Champaign, especially requests that parents, pastors and friends give him the names of any Baptists who will attend the university this fall. This should be done before Sept. 1 so that he may have time to mail them an announcement of the services of the church before the university opens. He also asks that an invitation be extended to them to visit him at his study. Mr. Bryant may be addressed at 807 S. Fourth street.

At a joint service of the Messiah and Grace churches, Samuel A. Ogg, pastor of the latter church, was ordained July 26. Dean Jacob Heinrichs delivered the ordination sermon.

Edwin H. Kinney, son of Rev. Bruce Kinney of the Home Mission Society, was killed in an airplane at the Rantoul flying field, July 19. As a reserve officer in the aviation service, he was attending the annual summer training encampment. Mr. Kinney was born in Chicago, January, 1895. He graduated from Denison University in 1917 and for a year was registrar of Lake Forest Academy. During the first year of the New World Movement he was private secretary to Dr. John Y. Aitchison. In 1920, he began his business career with the Johnson Fare Box Company of Chicago. Mr. Kinney is survived by his wife, Mary Martin Kinney, daughter of Rev. J. M. P. Martin of Grand Junction, Colo., and a two year old son. The family were members of the North Shore Church, Chicago, where the funeral services were held July 23 and were conducted by Rev. W. H. Jones.

WISCONSIN

Rev. Eugene Mintz, pastor of the Baptist Temple, Oshkosh, is attending the summer quarter of the University of Chicago, Sunday, Aug. 5, he supplied the pulpit of the Englewood Church, Chicago. Sunday, Aug. 5, he supplied the August he will fill the pulpit of the Wilmette Church. Rev. John Balfour of Lansing and Professor La Rue of Wayland Academy, will supply his church during his absence.

MINNESOTA

Rev. Arthur C. Smith, pastor of the First Church, Brainerd, for four years, has resigned to accept the position of associate to Rev. E. H. Rasmussen, promotional secretary. He will begin his work Sept. 1.

KANSAS

Rev. W. N. Reynolds recently resigned as pastor of the church at Minneapolis and is available for service elsewhere.

NEBRASKA

Rev. H. P. Cox, after an absence of several weeks because of illness, was able to preach at the Tecumseh Church, Sunday, July 22.

Rocky Mountain States

COLORADO

Rev. J. Walter Field, formerly pastor of the Farnam and Antelope Center churches, Neb., accepted the call of the First Church, Brighton, and began his new work July 29.

Pastor Crosby at Ft. Collins is regaining his strength and by the first of September expects to be able to push the work of the church with vigor.

Rev. Walter I. Fowle was asked to deliver a series of popular lectures to the students of the State Teacher's College on the general subject "Jesus Christ and the World Today."

The Church at Johnstown has called to its pastorate Mr. Hargrove, a student at the state university at Boulder.

UTAH

Utah Baptists are rejoicing in the fact that a number of their mission fields which have been without pastors are to be supplied in the near future.

Rev. Ivan C. Whipple entered upon his duties as pastor of the Moab Church on July 1. He has already made plans for an intensive work for the autumn months. The village of Moab lies in a fertile valley of the Colorado River in southeastern Utah and is an important center. Mr. Whipple will be the only Christian minister in a great area comprising more than 11,000 square miles.

Rev. Thomas Anderson of Omaha began work at Magna on July 22. The prospects for Baptist work in this little mining city are more encouraging than for some time in the past. The community is growing and labor conditions are improving.

Rev. Alex Rexion began his work as pastor at Murray on August 5. He will carry on this important work in connection with his service as instructor in Westminster College.

Lester T. Randolph came to Salt Lake City, Aug. 1, to give part of his time as bookkeeper in the office of the supervisor of missions and the rest of his time to the care of the Taylor Avenue Mission.

Rev. M. L. Rickman is now serving as state missionary and is rendering good assistance in the development of the mission fields.

The first unit of the new building which is to house the Burlington Church of Salt Lake City, is nearing completion and will probably be dedicated in the early fall. The church, under the leadership of Rev. Henry Jacobs, has been putting forth heroic efforts under adverse conditions and with this new building will be able to render much larger service than ever before.

The First Church at Ogden is erecting the first unit of its new $100,000 church home. Under the leadership of its pastor, Rev. L. A. Garrison, the church has made good progress and with a new building Baptists in Ogden will have a large opportunity.

Two successful church vacation schools were recently conducted, one in the Rio Grande Church of Salt Lake City and the other in the First Church at Ogden. The pastors of these churches had the assistance of Miss Hazel Boyd of Plainfield, Ia.

Pacific Coast

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Rev. Chas. A. Fulton of Colorado Springs and Rev. F. O. Belden of the First Church, San Diego, exchanged pulpits during July.

Rev. Geo. M. Parks, formerly pastor at National City and for the past year educational director of the First Church, San Diego, has recently been called to become associate pastor of the First Church, San Francisco of which Rev. James West is pastor.

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

On July 4 the son of Rev. and Mrs. Charles R. Eastman of Turlock was drowned. Mr. Eastman, who is pastor of the First Church, has continued his work with utmost devotion.

As a mark of appreciation, the church at Willows sent its pastor, Rev. J. C. Garth, to the Stockholm meeting. He will also visit the chief points of interest on the continent and in the Holy Land. Mr. Garth has served the church ten years.

SERVICE DEPARTMENT

Rev. L. J. Anderson, for the past six and a half years missionary and evangelist in New England, is now located at Rio, Wis., and does general evangelistic work in the middle northwest.

Mr. John Imrie, singing evangelist, of Topeka, Kans., has open dates after Aug. 19.

Rev. C. R. Luther, evangelist, is now located at Seattle, Wash., and has open dates after Oct. 1.

Rev. L. D. Lambkin recently closed a series of meetings at Detroit. He has open dates for the fall and winter and may be reached at Decatur, Ill., Box 549.

Rev. J. L. Rayburn, general delivery, Kansas City, Mo., would be glad to negotiate with any pastor or church desiring the help of an evangelist. References given.

The Gospel for Neglected People

By Charles L. White

The Home Mission Society and the Publication Society, working together in cordial unity, are determined that so far as their resources will allow under the blessing of God they will not overlook the people in the sparsely settled regions of widely neglected areas, but that they will give them the gospel with as much care as it is taken to those who can be more easily reached in the settled communities. How to reach these widely scattered populations is a problem not easily solved. It is often impossible to establish churches and in some cases even Sunday schools cannot be organized, and yet it is encouraging to discover that Christian men and women are quite evenly distributed among the sparsely settled areas of the nation. These people are spiritually ministered to by the colporter-missionaries who offer for sale evangelical literature and copies of the scriptures, which they give away if the people are not able to pay the cost. These devoted men also conduct religious services in the homes, schoolhouses, and barns, and hold personal conversation with those met by the wayside. They conserve such contacts and endeavor to bring these isolated people into relationship with, and under the watch-care of, Baptist churches. One of the great problems of modern church life is to discover fresh methods for preserving the spiritual experiences of those people in the neglected areas. It is surprising to discover how successful among such people.

Then too the annual vacation school and the week-day school of religion are opportunities which should feature on every rural church program. The returns more than warrant the effort. Children will walk long distances and only sickness or compulsion will keep them away from vacation school. The great majority of them will also improve the opportunity of the week-day school. The importance of religious education and the inadequacy of the work in the past; the additional time which the new plans furnish and the greatly increased quality of work done should stir the church to action. It will cost something and take the consecration of time on the part of some, but the returns will more than justify the cost. Churches serving rural fields should promote these. Usually facilities can be found either in church or other buildings. If not they should be provided as soon as possible. They can be at a small cost.

The educational curriculum offers a wide range of opportunity—Bible study, church history, civic righteousness and Christian missions come within the list. Tracts and literature, stereopticon lectures and movie films; pageants and dramatization all add to the possibilities for putting the program across.

In community and world service the possibilities are equally great. Through its own initiative and through cooperation with other agencies it can promote a constructive program. Better farming, better schools, better neighbors and a better community conscientiousness lie within the range of service. Building the community, the state and the nation lie not outside the realm of Christian duties and church service. It does not in time of war. It should not in time of the greater warfare of peace.

In the specifically social and recreational fields the opportunities are as inclusive as the number of groups to whom the church ministers. That church fails which does not map out a positive constructive program to serve the social needs of young and old both. Play, relaxation and change are blessings from the Creator. Until the church provides or sees that the provision is along clean and moral lines it will not cease to commit sins of omission. Its opportunity is to teach to "do" and not to condemn with "don'ts." There is no graver need and no greater place for a play program than in the country.

But no rural church program can be complete without a well-planned worship schedule. There should be opportunity for all ages to come into close touch and fellowship with their Maker. Natural and normal expression needs to be given to the children as well as to the adult. Children's sermons, well organized worship programs in the Sunday school, hymn selections adequate to a natural expression of the different groups will aid materially. All this is basis and no church can adequately serve its constituency and its head—Jesus our Christ, without such a broad and inclusive program. Rural America is awakening and in her church life is coming into her own.

Things as They Are

By Lida S. Ashmore

JUDGED from what is published in the home papers the conclusion is inevitable that China is a moribund old land that is seeking to borrow enough money to buy a lacquered coffin, and to pay the astrologers who must find a suitable grave site, where the "wind and water" will be propitious.

The Canton correspondent for one of the Hongkong daily papers seems to carry out this valuation of China. It reports that the teachers of the government schools in Canton at a meeting decided that if half of their back salaries then due them were not paid by a certain date, all the government schools would be closed May first.

Sun Yat Sen, who just now is in power at Canton, in order to raise money for the "pacification" of the southern provinces, has sold a number of pieces of public property at private sale. This procedure being objected to, some of them, notably the agricultural station and the Taifat Buddhist monastery, were withdrawn and resold at public auction. The center of the monastery where the idols are kept is to be preserved. If only the old temples were sold and dismantled not much regret would be felt by China's well-wishers, but the agricultural station goes too. The students in the college there have petitioned that the school be kept up.

It is difficult to keep in mind the different factions that are fighting. It simply is the ability to remember the names of the generals, for there is no "cause" nor any principle involved. It is simply the prestige of the generals involved that men are called on to lay down their lives. If this is kept in mind there is no wonder why certain armies mutiny and go over to the other side. It goes without saying they want to be on the winning side, for what do they fight for except for their food and pay and the loot to be had from the fallen city.

War conditions here in Swatow are quiet just now, but have been acute during the last few weeks. For many months four and sometimes five Chinese gunboats have been anchored in the bay above Swatow. When Sun Yat Sen returned from Shanghai he ordered these gunboats to Canton to join his navy there. But the anchors were left in the mud of our bay and the officers amused themselves turning on their searchlights. They kept a vigilant eye on our mission compound and often we were awakened in the night by the bright dazzling light coming into our rooms.

Then one day two large gunboats came up the bay and anchored just opposite our house. These did not acknowledge allegiance to any one, not even a successful general, but belonged to the "independent" navy. What would the gunboats do which were anchored a mile or so up the bay? One of them went away, two of the smaller ones we found anchored down here near the two large "independents." Then one morning when we were on the veranda looking the situation over, the last of Sun Yat Sen's gunboats here in the harbor came slowly down the bay and dropped anchor just a little above the others. The "independents" now numbered five boats—three large and two small ones. All the foreshore was guarded by the soldiers who held Swatow and these stood only a few feet apart. Not a man from the gunboats was allowed to put foot on shore, and thus a battle was forestalled and Swatow saved from a bombardment.

We have had no end of armies here under different generals. As the armies are not under the jurisdiction of the civil governors, they have no backing of the government, for the pay of the army. When an army comes and takes possession of a city and occupies all the large houses whether the owners are there or not, they must have money to carry on. They peacefully consult with the chamber of commerce, the heads of the different guilds and the charitable institutions and tell them how much money they must have each month. As they have the army which can be turned loose on the city and the civil governor has nothing to enforce his will, the amount demanded is raised and given. We often hear that an army has mutinied because it has not been paid for months. Well, the general has a big fat bank account if the men who carry the guns have no money. It is a tiresome monotonous refrain, this asking for a foreign loan. Right here in Swatow the next to the last general who held the city was here about two months. He kept his army up and deposited in his own name in a Shanghai bank over $1,000,000, at least that is what one of the men who is at the head of one of the associations who had to contribute the money, told one of our missionaries. One of these associations has to furnish $50,000 a month to the last occupant of Swatow. China has, so it is said, 1,500,000 men in the different armies. When one of the generals can deposit for himself over $1,000,000 within two months, I beg of you, don't spend any pity on the poverty of China. Rather pity her that she does not have honorable men who are willing to put aside personal ambitions and work for the good of all.

A few years ago one of our missionaries was in Canton and called on one of the Christian government officials of his acquaintance. This man told him that money was then in hand to build a railroad from Canton to Swatow and on up to Amoy. He showed surveys of the route, but—the government fell and with it all this money went too. This is true of the Bund in Swatow, which was to reach from the old city down the foreshore to the fort, and would give a frontage for the rapidly growing city.

The charitable guilds and chambers of commerce in Bangkok, Singapore and Penang where many of our Tie-chu men are living, have sent generous contributions to the Swatow typhoon sufferers. One general here asked to "borrow" this fund for his soldiers. The man who had the money in hand went into hiding and thus saved the money for the cause for which it was given.

The papers have been full of the Liucheng railroad outrage, when so many foreigners were captured for ransom, among them being a major and a captain and other prominent people. Now today, May 15, the Hongkong paper brings the news of a very successful raid on the steamship Tai Shun of the China Merchants Steamship Company, a large steamer from Hongkong to Shanghai via Swatow. When about to enter Swatow the pirate passengers who had planned the attack perfectly, attacked the ship. After getting it in their control they looted the passengers and strong room. After having a chicken congee dinner served by the Chinese stewards at the point of the guns, they shot at a junk, forcing it to come alongside. They loaded their loot, estimated to be worth about $60,000, into the junk and taking the captain and some of the sailors aboard they made for the shore. The captain and sailors were sent back. They did little bodily harm to the passengers.

With no efficient government either in the north where the railroad outrage was so successfully carried out, nor in the south, where this later piracy has followed an earlier one on the steamship "Suian," what can China do? At one time recently we had three generals here in and about Swatow. All were for Sun Yat Sen, yet each of them was fighting the others.

When an army moves from one place to another, coolies are caught and commandeered to do the carrying for the army. A short time ago a cook in mission employ was seized. He managed to get off by the payment of a bribe. It is not safe for our Chinese to move about in the streets of Swatow. The steam launches are taken for the transport of soldiers just now. There is a rumor that they are fighting up in the Hakka country.

Small independent armies seem to be springing up everywhere.

Nothing but Christ in the hearts of the Chinese can save dear old graft-ridden and army-ridden China.

Swatow, China.

May 15, 1923.

Want Ads

Wanted: Church by minister, fifteen years experience, now serving churches in eastern Pennsylvania. References furnished on request. Address Rev. J. F. McAboy, Catawissa, Pa.

CHURCH FURNITURE

PEWS · PULPITS
CHANCEL FURNITURE
SUNDAY SCHOOL SEATING

American Seating Company

1069 Lytton Bldg.
CHICAGO

Branches in Principal Cities

If Some One Should Ask You About a Will

And when you make your own
Our Corporate Name is:

The American Baptist Home Mission Society

CHARLES L. WHITE, Executive Secretary
SAMUEL BRYANT, Treasurer
23 East Twenty-Sixth Street
New York, N. Y.

With French Baptists in the Devastated Area

ON Ascension Day the French Baptist Union met in a little town, La Fère, about eighty miles from Paris, for the annual gathering, and for the purpose of reopening the Baptist chapel which had been destroyed in the war.

We made an early start from Paris, and were surprised to see a large number of Baptist friends in the train, including the choir from Pastor Vincent's church in Paris. From Compiègne onward the towns were badly smashed, but the countryside seemed fertile. To the English visitors it all brought back sad memories of a few years ago.

The new chapel of La Fère was open to receive us on arrival, and we were delighted to see the building choicely decorated and with tip-up seats. My companion, Mr. Scott Wells, the new accountant of our B. M. S., could not help quoting on entering, after seeing the desolation outside and comparing it with the decoration inside, "The desert shall blossom as the rose." Old friends were greeted, including some from our own Breton mission, and we settled down for the opening service. The very first act was a quarter of an hour for free prayer, in which several took part. We listened throughout the service to anthems sung by two choirs present. Pastor Vincent carried the new Bible to the pulpit, and Pastor Pelcé, of Roubaix, reminded his hearers of the history of the church. It was one of the oldest Baptist churches in France. The days of persecution, when the doors had to be closed and when the members had to meet in the woods for worship, were the best days of all. Pastor Andru, an old student of Regent's Park, had been minister for many years, but the home call had come a few months before the opening. Surely he knew about it all and he was glad. Doctor Lewis, the American Baptist representative, and other visitors brought greetings.

The French Baptists are justly proud of the fact that the church has been restored without the help of foreign funds. The building is in a good position on one of the main squares, and near the barracks, and, given an earnest minister, ought to be a source of light and leading to the whole district. For the time being the church is supplied by a neighboring minister and by students from the Baptist school at Paris.

The annual assembly of the Baptist Union followed. A notable feature was an address by one of the Baptist students on "The Social Aspect of Christianity." We could hardly conceive of one of our English students addressing the venerable English Baptist Union. Business and other matters were discussed, and the proceedings brought to a close in time for us to get back to Paris by 10:30 p. m.

There are now twenty-three churches affiliated with the French Baptist Union, staffed by nineteen active ministers, one of whom is an English woman, Miss Pedley, who has started a Baptist church near Havre.

There are also seven students in the little Baptist school at Paris. These students join others at the Paris mission house and at the theological faculty for some of their studies.

The French Baptist Union is helping to support Baptist work in the Cameroons, and last year it raised 14,000 francs for this purpose. The Paris Evangelical Missionary Society is responsible for this field.

Of late years the Union has passed through dark days. Churches were destroyed by the war, congregations were scattered, and, later, certain churches cut off all connection through theological controversy. But we believe that bright days are ahead, and that, as the little church of La Fère has been restored from the ruin of the evil times that are passed, so the Baptists of France will also taken on new life, and go forward to win their fellowmen to the standard of the Son of God.—C. H. JENKINS in Baptist Times and Freeman.

Dignity at a Discount

(Continued from page 881)

quietly, "and if I might suggest, it seems to me Mr. Fogarty should pay him something."

With reluctance the drover gave Festus a dollar for the man, and left the hall bemoaning the loss of the "naygur" and the dollar.

The Italian, well remembered as the first organ-grinder to visit the town, was there for some time. There was a general interest in him, and Mrs. Ensign H. Kellogg had him to play for a children's party on her lawn on one occasion. Among those interested in him was Governor Briggs, and when the man expressed a desire to go on to Boston, the governor took him with him. Presumably Levi Lincoln would have had another attack of disgust had he seen the chief magistrate sharing his car seat with an Italian! At this distance of time the man's name is missing, but he was known in Boston, as he had been in Pittsfield, as "Persip," the organ-grinder. Scant of welcome by the Catholics, he was found out by a Methodist minister named Steele (presumably the Rev. Daniel Steele), and became a Protestant, returning to his native land subsequently, and avowing a purpose of "telling Ahmereecah and Jesus Christ" to his relatives and friends, for whom he felt the Protestant Italian's solicitude.

Hartford, Conn.

The Open Forum

( Continued from page 882)

tle to learn from our experience, possibly a good deal. Be that as it may, they are on the job in India and seem to be trying to do it well, even if they receive no thanks.

It is not for me or any one else who has not an expert's knowledge of India's life and history to seek to condemn or to acquit Great Britain of injustice to the people of that country. She is certainly giving India self-government, as we westerners understand that term, increasingly. I met American missionaries in India who thought she was going too fast in that direction, especially in giving the natives the control of education, as she did in passing the Montague Act. I do know that I met hundreds of missionaries in that country and, so far as my memory goes, they were to a man in sympathy with the British and believers in the justice and humanity of British rule, on the whole. India has had the misfortune to have been subject to conquests by foreign peoples for many, many centuries. Britain has had the misfortune of being the most recent of those conquerors. Whatever may have been the motives of the men who made the conquest of India in the last two centuries, the thing is done and there is now nothing to be done for India by running away from the task the conquest brought. Let us whose experiences in this direction have been limited and not altogether happy, be not too ready to condemn.

Before accepting Mr. Eddy's statements one might well propose certain questions. For example: Is life less safe, is there more violence now in India than before the British took possession? Is there actually less self-government there now than before? Are famines more frequent and more terrible now than then? Is less care being taken to feed the people? Has caste, the great foe of India's progress, a mightier power now? Are the people less intelligent, is there less provision for the education of the low castes and outcastes? In short, is the penetration of India by western religious and intellectual life, by western economic and social influences, by western ideals of government and western conceptions of the worth of the common man a loss or a gain? Great Britain has had a hand in it all and we Americans are also responsible in no small degree for the changes in India and for her serious problems.

GEORGE CROSS.

Rochester, N. Y.

Our Book Shelf

The Hawkeye, by Herbert Quick. Indianapolis: Bobbs Merrill. $2.

Of the dozens of works of fiction that sift through a reviewer's hands in the course of the month, it is rarely that he finds one with real meat and muscle to it—food for the mind and the spirit, and a grippingly good story as well. "The Hawkeye" is such a story. It is primarily the life of Fremont McConkey (and incidentally much of the life of Kate McConkey, his mother), born in Iowa in the year 1857, passing through childhood, almost as undesired and unheeded and unguided as the tumble weeds that drifted over the early prairies, through the years to middle age. So interwoven is the life of the boy and the man with the growth of the state, that much of the political life of Iowa is pictured. The reader follows the development of the Iowa boy physically, mentally and spiritually and, as well, the development of a state. The writer is full to overflowing of the story he has to tell. There is no padding or searching for material, there are no bare bones of a plot poking through a frail covering. The characters are real because they have actually lived or are the counterparts of living men, women and children. The author is a part of the soil of Iowa and his book bears the clean, wholesome earth odor.

To Start the Day, by John Timothy Stone. New York: Revell Co. $1.50.

A volume of meditations and devotions by the pastor of the Fourth Presbyterian Church, Chicago. Doctor Stone gives a key-thought supplemented by a passage from the Bible and a stanza from a hymn.

Stories for Young Americans, by Albert H. Gage. Philadelphia: Judson Press. 75 cents.

The aim of this course is to help children live the normal life in their homes, out-of-doors, at work, at play, and in church. The book falls into three parts: The organization and conduct of the school, with a daily program for children of the junior age; sixty stories are told in full, and a closing pageant; expressional activities. There are two missionaries stories for each of the five weeks, and a Bible and a character story for each day, three of the Bible stories being dramatized.

The World's Great Religious Poetry, edited by Caroline Miles Hill. New York: Macmillan Co. 836 pp.

The poems in this anthology have been arranged in twelve divisions under the twelve religious concepts: Inspiration; the search after God; the existence and idea of God; faith; God in nature; God in the life of man; prayers; worship; comfort in sorrow; conduct of life; death and immortality; the nature of the future life. Each of these divisions is indexed, so that the poem for the time and the place is immediately available. There is also another index listing the poems by their first lines.

"The most obvious facts about this collection of poetry," says its compiler,

The School with a Soul

PAST

Into its every brick a prayer has gone.
In 1908 it received a prize for being the best adapted building for its purpose in the United States.
It was the first missionary training school for women in America.

PRESENT

Its alumnae now number one thousand strong.
Its graduates are found in all parts of the world.
Its standards have steadily risen.
It stands in the midst of an ideal missionary clinic.

FUTURE

Its further expansion is your responsibility.
How many girls from your state are among its students?
Are you yourself the very person whom Christ wants to see on a mission field?

Investigate, Inform, Promote!

The Baptist Missionary Training School

MRS. CLARA D. PINKHAM
President

2969 Vernon Avenue Chicago, Ill.

UNDER THE

Women's American Baptist Home Mission Society

$12,161,521.67 is needed this year to care for the work of all organizations participating in the New World movement.

THE GENERAL BOARD OF PROMOTION OF THE NORTHERN BAPTIST CONVENTION

"are that it is not all great and that it makes strange combinations and sequences. It ranges from the Psalms of David and the Hymn of Cleanthes to the latest free verse. The great hymns that are translated from the Latin and the most radical of the twentieth century verse are alike only in that they show human feeling about the concept that is the foundation of all religion. Many poems that are far from being great belong here because they are significant. . . . A cursory view of other religious poetry shows little that is not based upon the biblical poetry, but the spiritual assets of mankind have never been gathered together that we may see what they are." This the editor has begun in compiling this anthology. The book furnishes food for the soul of man. It is a treasure-trove for every lover of inspiring verse. The type and binding of the book are of the best.

Can We Dispense with Christianity, by F. W. Butler. New York: Doran. $2.

We readily accept the publisher's statement that this is a brilliant defence of Christianity. In forceful rheotric and captivating style the author restates the familiar arguments for the foundation verity of the great religion; he considers the objections of critics, doubters and disbelievers and answers them in approved polemic style and makes a "clear case" in the judgment of, at least, its friends. We confess a distaste for the term "a defense of Christianity." It is itself the best defence. Attacks on its aims, spirits and ideals are rare and are not worthy of the advertising they get from answering them. However, as the book is written from an Anglican viewpoint, we are less sure of our objection We are not quite satisfied with the assumptions of the author that there is among our young people a drifting away from sympathy with Christianity and belief in its faith. The sin of the age is not in objections to and disbelief in the tenets and ethics of the divine religion but it is indifference to it, created by the many colored materialism of the times. Not the brain of the age is the greater foe of Christianity, but its defective moral sense, perverted conscience and selfish love of pleasure.

Men of the Inner Jungle, by W. F. Alder. New York: Century Co. $2.50.

This is a narrative of the expedition made by a mere handful of white men into the inner jungle of Borneo. The natives are not cannibals, like Mr. Alder's New Guinea acquaintances, but are warlike head-hunters; trustworthy once their confidence is gained, but in the meantime apt to take sudden and mysterious revenge for unintended slights and, for the individual case, under but precarious control by the Dutch. Their general supervision is excellent, and the Dutch officials' attitude of concern for the safety of the white men all it could possibly be, but still—anything is likely to happen, and the punishment does not help the victim. So there is in this account daring adventure as well as picturesque amazing fact; there is easy, humorous, colorful narrative; and again there is wonderful photographic illustration—the book altogether deserving even a wider popularity than the author's previous one attained.

Pearls from Patmos, by J. J. Ross. New York: Fleming H. Revell. $1.50.

The "pearls" are gathered from chapters 1-3. The volume is divided into four parts; the first serves as an introduction to the whole book in which a careful presentation is made of the author, writer, theme, style and importance of the contents. Doctor Ross' unusual gift for analysis and apprehension of salient points is conspicuous. The first three verses only are considered in this part. Interpretation and discussion of verses 4-8 compose the second part under the heading "The Glorious Greeting." As we would expect, this part discusses the character, office and work of Christ as presented by the symbols of the text. The third part treats verses 9-20 under the caption, "The Vision Victorious." The fourth part under the title, "Letters from Heaven" (comprising nearly two-thirds of the volume) discusses the famous "letters to the seven churches." The author interprets the number "seven" in this connection as a sacred number which makes those churches representatives of the church in all ages; hence the far-reaching and general application of the letters to all times and conditions. The substance of the letters he classifies into their commendations, complaints, counsels and promises.

From a literary viewpoint, the book is written in the lucid and chaste style characteristic of the author. We read one hundred pages at the "first sitting." There are some earmarks of repetitions and ejaculations which impress us that the contents had been delivered as expository sermons of which method of sermonizing the author is a master. It is remarkable how the scripture passages under the cunning hand of the trained student yield thoughts, meanings and suggestions that are fresh and vital so that they throb with new interest and power. The explanations and interpretations he gives of the abounding symbols of these chapters are in the main natural and acceptable but occasionally they strike us as strained and overworked, and the inferences fanciful; but they are not violently torn from the text or out of harmony with the spirit of the context. The author sees meanings in the symbols not so plain to the average Bible student. The eisegesis is more manifest than the exegesis.

The letters to the churches (or "from heaven") are considered with unusual ability. The historical element is not overworked, possibly economized because of the principle on which the author interprets the term "seven churches." We have read books and sermons by various authors on these "messages to the churches" and we aver that few of them equal and none exceed in ability and interest the addresses or lectures of this volume. The teacher and preacher will find in them suggestions and instruction that abound in inspiration feeding the religious heart as well as the knowledge-seeking mind. The premillennial views of the author are never concealed when pertinent nor obtruded Not a flavor of the controversial is noted The book is one of unusual merit.

A Permanent Income

Life Annuities on One or Two Lives

On one life the rate of income varies from four to nine per cent a year, payable semi-annually.

On one or two lives the rate varies from four to eight and three-tenths per cent a year, payable semi-annually.

A survivorship agreement provides a permanent income for two lives.

For annuity booklet and samples of single and survivorship agreements, please address

CHARLES L. WHITE
23 East Twenty-Sixth Street
New York City

The American Baptist Home Mission Society

THE BAPTIST INSTITUTE FOR CHRISTIAN WORKERS

Exceptional opportunity in Bible study, Religious Education and in Practical Methods. For catalogue write

J. MILNOR WILBUR, D.D.
1425 Snyder Ave. Philadelphia, Pa.

Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society
(CORPORATE NAME)
ALICE M. HUDSON, Treasurer
276 Fifth Avenue New York City

PICTURE SERMONS DRAW CROWDS

We have over 250 religious lectures, travelogues, illustrated hymns, etc., for sale or rent. Special lectures on the life of Christ—1922 Passion Play—

Special Easter Services—Just Out

Five lectures by Marion Lawrence on Japan, the beautiful. Write for slide bulletins. Complete line of stereopticon and projection machines

GEO. W. BOND SLIDE COMPANY,
27 Years Supplying Churches
Room B, 6 E. Lake St., Chicago, Ill.

When Making Wills and Legacies Remember

Our Corporate Name Is:

"WOMAN'S AMERICAN BAPTIST HOME MISSION SOCIETY"

Mrs. Mary E. Bloomer
Treasurer

276 Fifth Avenue, New York City

"It Is to Laugh"

Teacher (to a little girl)—"Name a useful animal, Mary."

Mary—"A man."—Judge.

Married in Nebraska.—Joe Corey, a hustling business man on Northern avenue quietly slipped off to Alliance, Neb., and on Tuesday last became a benefit.—Western Exchange.

"Papa, did Edison make the first talking machine?"

"No, son, God made the first one, but Edison made the first one that could be shut off."—Baptist and Reflector.

Even a newspaper office must be haunted by a bit of humor. "Isn't there such a word as acumen," asks the feature writer. "Certainly not," replied the Scrooge. "If there was we wouldn't be in the newspaper business."—Buffalo Evening Times.

A Highlander from Tobermory asked at the Oban railway station the price of a ticket to Killin.

"Hoot awa'," replied Donald, "it's far ower dear; I'd rather walk!" and off he started.

He had not proceeded far when the train came tearing along, whistling as it neared the station.

"Ye needna whistle for me!" said Donald. "I made ye and offer ance, and ye wadna tak' it; sae ye can gang on. I'm no comin'."—Canadian Magazine.

OUR MUSIC CORNER

CONDUCTED BY WILLIAM LESTER

A BLOW AT NATIVE COMPOSERS

There appeared recently in a monthly musical magazine, which purports to interest itself in the progress of the American composer, an article calling the attention of music clubs all over the land to the existence in New York of a lending library, where music may be rented at a moderate cost. The article then went on to point out that this was the clubs' opportunity to "have access to and the use of an unlimited répertoire of music." It dwelt on the fact that the present price of music is very high, so high that the small club is unable to purchase the music it desires. The plan suggests that for one-fifth the cost of purchasing the music, the club may rent it from this library.

Let us examine the case calmly. The library is within its rights when it rents out to clubs non-copyright musical compositions, such as Rossini's "Stabat Mater," Grieg's "Landsighting," Cowen's "Rose-Maiden," three choral pieces that come to mind as we write. But the seriousness of the situation is brought about by the fact that these libraries do not only concern themselves with such works. Let one of our American publishers issue a cantata for mixed voices by a native composer, say George Chadwick or Henry Hadley, which has a performance at some festival, Worcester, Maine or Cincinnati. The library purchases a set of 100 vocal scores and puts them in stock. A choral society in Illinois, which has for years rented standard non-copyright works from the library, hears about the cantata and applies for it to the library. It receives it, and although the printed copy states clearly that "orchestral score and parts may be had of the publishers," the library supplies the choral society with a set of orchestral parts made by some musician engaged by the library to do the job.

There is a distinct violation of our copyright laws in this procedure, which makes the practice one that must be condemned from an ethical viewpoint. Artistically it is equally pernicious, for the composer's own orchestral setting of the work in question is not brought to a hearing. The work is performed; the critics hear a spurious orchestral version, made by Mr. Jones or Mr. Smith at so much a page. If the instrumentation be good, the composer receives praise which is not due him; if bad, he is damned for something with which he has had nothing to do! Surely an unjust arrangement from start to finish.

It is high time that our publishers took this matter in hand. They can forbid, we are certain, the orchestrating of works of which they are the owners of the copyright. The house of G. Ricordi, publishers of the most important modern Italian stage works, has demonstrated that with vigilance it is possible in any country to protect one's copyrights. All those singers who have had orchestral scores of the favorite arias from the Puccinni operas made for them by able musicians in this country have soon learned to their grief that excellent as the scores may be, they cannot be used and that the American Ricordi house will confiscate them as quickly as it learns of their existence.

Again, the American composer suffers when a lending library rents out vocal scores of his cantata. The revenue which a composer gets from high-class music is, as all know, very small. If he writes a successful cantata he deserves the 7 to 10 cents royalty on every copy sold. But if a lending library purchases 100 scores and rents them to choral societies, which would otherwise buy them, his returns from the sales of the cantata will be seriously interfered with.
—Musical America.

NEW PARK AVENUE BAPTIST CHURCH SUNDAY AFTERNOON PROGRAMS

Installation of the four-manual Hook & Hastings organ in the New Park Avenue Baptist Church, New York City, was made the occasion of a series of musical events of unusual interest. On Sunday afternoons at 4:30 the organist, Harold Vincent Milligan, conducted a series of programs known as "The Ministry of Music," unique in the fact that although scheduled as regular services of the church, there is no word spoken, the entire hour of the service being devoted to music.

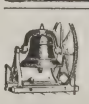
The Park Avenue Church, in the heart of New York's most fashionable district, is considered one of the most beautiful edifices in America. Its lines are pure Gothic and its proportions are similar to those of the famous Sainte Chapelle in Paris. The main auditorium is acoustically perfect and the organ is exquisitely voiced. The music of the organ, together with vocal and instrumental soloists, combines with the beauty of the building to preach a sermon without words.

The "ministry of music" was made possible by the interest of John D. Rockefeller, Jr., who is a member of the board of trustees of the church. Mr. Rockefeller is well-known as a music lover, being one of the principal guarantors of the Philharmonic Orchestra, the New York Oratorio Society and the orchestral concerts at the Metropolitan Museum of Art. He has presented the Park Avenue Church with a carillon, which will be the largest in the country. It will consist of forty-two bells, comparable to the most famous carillons of Belgium.

"The ministry of music" was tried out, at the suggestion of Mr. Milligan, as an experiment and proved a most gratifying success, the capacity of the church being taxed every Sunday afternoon. Even in the face of a severe blizzard on the second Sunday, the church was filled. The soloist assisting Mr. Milligan on the first program was Livio Mannucci, violoncellist. Cecil Arden, mezzo soprano, of the Metropolitan Opera Company, sang Jan. 14, Helen Jeffrey, violinist, played on Jan. 21, and the soloist Jan. 28 was Mildred Dilling, harpist.

CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL
Ask for Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 10
ESTABLISHED 1858
THE C. S. BELL CO. HILLSBORO, OHIO

CROZER THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY
Seminary is located within thirteen miles of Philadelphia, to whose churches, libraries and art collections students have ready access. Near-by rural districts furnish opportunity for Christian work under the supervision of the department of Practical Theology.
Tuition and Room-rent free. Scholarships available to qualified students.
Seminary's relation to University of Pa. warrants offer of the following:
1. Regular Course for Preachers and Pastors, Seminary. Degree of B.D. or Diploma.
2. Course with emphasis on Religious Education. Seminary and University. Degrees B.D. and A.M.
3. Training for Advanced Scholarship. Seminary and University. Degrees Th.M or Ph.D.
For Catalog—
MILTON G. EVANS, LL.D., Pres., Chester, Pa.
EXTENSION COURSE
Seminary maintains a Correspondence department for men unable to take a course in residence. Cost, including books, $10 a year. Certificate on completion. Address—
ELI S. REINHOLD, A.M., Dir., Chester, Pa.



PILLSBURY
Academy for Boys
Seventy miles from Minneapolis; large campus and seven modern buildings; military training, all athletics; high standards of scholarship and conduct; small classes insuring individual attention; terms reasonable; illustrated catalogue on request.
Milo B. Price, Principal
Box 397F Owatonna, Minnesota

Lindenwood College
Fifty minutes from St. Louis
A college with 96 years of history for the cultural and spiritual development of young women. Two and four year courses leading to degrees. Liberal Arts, Vocational and Fine Arts departments, Courses in Home Economics, Business, Oratory.
School of Music of Unexcelled Merit
Christian training and emphasis on spiritual values. 114-acre campus. Outdoor sports including golf, hockey, tennis, gymnasium and swimming pool. For catalog, address
J. L. ROEMER, D.D., President
Box C-23 St. Charles, Mo.
Roemer Hall

WE TYPEWRITE Sermons, lectures, stories manuscripts, letters, books, etc. Price 1 cent per line. Minimum charge $1. PRINT 500 Bond Letterheads 8½x11 and 500 envelopes $5. FORM LETTERS that look like typewritten, 30 lines, $4.50 per 1,000. Special prices on larger orders. Neat, accurate work. Prompt service. Satisfaction assured. Be sure to write in plain letters. Proceeds go to Christian work. Postage extra.
AMERICAN ADDRESSING CO.
Golden Rule Service
3147 S. Millard Avenue Chicago, Ill.

PIPE ORGANS
of any size or construction. Estimates cheerfully submitted. Also Reed Organs for Church or Home.
Electric Organ blowing outfits for organs of any make.
Write, stating which catalog is desired.
Hinners Organ Co., Pekin, Ill.

McSHANE BELL FOUNDRY CO
Baltimore, Md.
CHURCH, CHIME AND PEAL
BELLS Memorials a Specialty

A Dead Church or a Live One

(Continued from page 878)

sign that the church is alive and carrying on a good work; and this will be true of any church where Christ is first and all the work of the church is done for his glory.

When Christ is placed first, then it will also be manifested in works of love, in works where there can be no hope of personal gain to ourselves, in little deeds of love and kindness that will never be known to the world at large or to any other churches. John says, "We know we have passed from death unto life because we love the brethren." The church that puts Christ first will be a church of love and a church of love will hate no one, will therefore have no internal troubles, but will have a spirit of sweet harmony. The church of love will hold an open door of welcome to all, regardless of station, or character, or creed; and that church will be a live church and will meet with the approval of Christ. When I see cliques and factions within a church, I question whether that church has life.

And, last but not least, the church where Christ is first will be a church where the members are consistent in their lives; where they will not profess one thing and do another; where they will not make vows to God and forget them the next day or in a few weeks or months at most. God's word says, "Pay thy vows unto the Most High," and I cannot find a single passage in all the scriptures giving the right to break our vows to suit our own convenience. Men know very well that they would have no use for God if his word could not be depended upon. But many people never seem to think that God has a right to expect them to keep their promises to him. The heathen Romans of ancient days could put some of the twentieth century pillars of the church to shame in the value they placed upon their word. Well do I remember the story of a Roman who was taken prisoner in battle and sent back to Rome to urge the Romans of ancient days to sue for peace. He was promised his life and freedom if he would bring about peace. He was sent only on condition that he give his word of honor to return with Rome's message, whatever it might be. He knew that Rome would win the war if she continued the struggle and he told them so. Therefore they decided not to make peace and he prepared to take back the message. His friends said, "You mustn't go; they'll kill you. Let another go with the message." And a Roman soldier said, "Shall a Roman not keep his word?" And back he went to a certain death, because he dared to keep his word—and a heathen too.

But today, what? Look at the churches all over the land! Look at their members, some in prominent positions! Men and women pledge to God to pay certain sums of money into the church treasury both for local and beneficenct work, and then forget all about it and never meet their pledges. At the time of a revival the heads of families will vow to God that they will set up a family altar, and then forget all about it in a few weeks. Young people will renounce the dance and other harmful amusements, and then go right back in less than six months. And so I could go on and enumerate things which I have seen with my own eyes since I have been in the work of the gospel ministry. And as I look back upon those who forget their vows to God, I sometimes wonder at the patience of God. Only once in the New Testament times do we find anyone committing so great a sin that God struck him down dead in punishment therefor and that was the case of Ananias and Sapphira. And what was their offence? Only this: they lied to God—just the same thing that many are doing today . . . . .

We are living in a critical time. The church of Jesus Christ is facing the greatest challenge of the ages. Civilization, education, arbitration, legislation, league of nations, all have failed to solve the great problems of this world, and men are now looking as never before to the church; and the church is realizing as never before its place in this world. Shall we face the challenge with courage or shall we falter and fail? The church will never fail that puts its trust in Jesus Christ. According to his own word, the gates of hell shall not prevail against the true church.

Those Loyalty Luncheons

By Helen Barrett Montgomery

We are just entering the home stretch. The last year of the New World Movement is already begun. This means that we must put forth every ounce of strength—physical, mental and spiritual, to see that our beloved denomination ends the year with honor and not with dishonor.

Your continuation campaign committee has not been idle. It planned a great plan which was submitted to the various organizations involved in the New World Movement and was by them approved and later incorporated and adopted as a part of the program of work for the year by the Northern Baptist Convention. This means that all loyal women may go ahead in the full assurance that they are playing the game in the fullest sense when they throw themselves whole-heartedly into the promotion of the loyalty luncheons—the first number in the year's campaign of promotion.

Remember the loyalty luncheons are not for the purpose solely or even chiefly of aiding the work of the women's societies. They are for the purpose of stimulating the women and through them, the whole church to renewed loyalty to the whole great task of the denomination. "Women's sphere is atmosphere." We hope through these great gatherings of the women to create such a warm, loving, prayerful atmosphere that the churches will rise to the completion of the thing to which they set their hand at Denver.

There are to be eighty of them held in strategic centers, the larger cities in our territory. Five teams have been chosen to cover these eighty luncheons. Each team is to consist of four people, a national officer or board member of the Home and Foreign societies and of a missionary of each board. These women are to present to our women the needs and the opportunities of our Baptist work.

Following the eighty loyalty luncheons after an interval of one week will come a series of echo luncheons held in about 800 of the smaller cities and towns. These echo luncheons are to be grouped about the cities in which the loyalty luncheons are held, and are expected in their turn to draw in the little villages and hamlets. So we plan to get the message and the impulse to every woman in every church.

There is one rather unique feature by which it is hoped that each echo luncheon will supply its own speakers' team. Each city or town selected to hold an echo luncheon is to be invited to select four women and send them in to the nearest loyalty luncheon. Here they each take notes on one of the speakers with a view to impersonate her at their own echo luncheon.

In 1911, when we held the series of interdenominational jubilee luncheons, there were many such echo luncheons. One woman wrote me that she had the fun of impersonating me, and that if she did say it as shouldn't, she thought the speech lost nothing by being repeated.

In towns where the women are too distrustful of themselves to provide these four speakers, a team will be provided from the city in which the loyalty luncheon was held.

A complete agenda is being prepared for local committees that will outline for them just what committees they will need and what these committees will need to do in order to make the luncheons a big success. Copies of this will be furnished freely to all centers where loyalty or echo luncheons are to be held or to isolated churches that may wish to arrange for one.

It is proposed that the first half of our year's offering be brought in at that time. You know that our objective is $2,000,000; $1,000,000 is a big objective, but we can reach it if we work and pray and count on the help of Almighty God.

It is planned that on the evening of the day on which the luncheon is held there be a mass meeting at which time each church shall announce the amount of its gift to the continuation campaign. The campaign director of each church will come to the platform, tell the name of her church and the amount of its gift. At the time of this ingathering there will be such a release of love and gratitude and consecration as shall set the bells of heaven ringing.

Many inquiries have been received from the women whether what they give on the continuation campaign could count on their church allotment. It was decided at the last meeting of the continuation campaign committee that inasmuch as this is the final year of the New World Movement during which all possible effort must be made to bring in the whole amount now due and payable, all contributions received by the woman's continuation campaign through the loyalty luncheons or otherwise shall count on the allotment of each local church, for the causes included within the national budget adopted by the Northern Baptist Convention at Atlantic City for 1923-1924.

If we are to have this ingathering it means that women must begin to plan now, to give now, to pray now—at once—or even sooner! This thing cannot be worked up in a hurry. It is no spasm. It is the beginning of a year's campaign that is keyed to victory.

In all cities where Bible and missionary conferences are to be held the loyalty luncheons will take place on the first day of the conference when the women's program as arranged by the continuation campaign committe will be put on with certain features added by the Bible and missionary conference team.

Volume IV August 18, 1923 No. 29

The Baptist

Published Every Week by the N[illegible]ptist Convention

[illegible] of Ill Libr
[illegible]bana Ill

A GENERAL view of Stockholm, Sweden, situated at outlet of Malar Lake into Baltic Sea. Built partly on a number of islands, partly on peninsulas cut off from the mainland by deep fiords, while the waterways both towards the Malar and sea lead through labyrinths of fiords and islands. Stockholm has been called "The Venice of the North," although actually it is only partly insular. It is celebrated for its beauty and the remarkable physical characteristics of its situation.

Pre-Congress Meetings at Stockholm

The General Baptist Conference of Sweden and the Seventy-Fifth Anniversary of Baptist Work.

AMERICAN delegates who reached Stockholm several days in advance of the meeting of the Baptist World Alliance were fortunate. They were given opportunity, if they cared to embrace it, of attending sessions of the annual meeting of the General Baptist Conference of Sweden, as well as the celebration of the seventy-fifth anniversary of the organization of the first Baptist church in that country. It will be possible in this article merely to refer to several of the outstanding features of these meetings.

The Swedish Baptist Conference was in session July 17 and 18. On July 18, representatives of American Baptists were received at the morning session, when the Bethel Baptist Church was crowded to its doors, with people standing in the aisles almost to the pulpit. Dr. James H. Franklin, representing the Foreign Mission Society, and Dr. Frank Peterson and Dr. G. A. Hagstrom and others representing the Swedish Baptist churches of America, were given a very warm welcome. At the afternoon session President E. Y. Mullins of the Southern Baptist Convention brought greetings from the Southern Baptists and referred feelingly to his experience in Sweden in 1920 when he was here with the late Dr. J. B. Gambrell. President Bystrom's introduction of Doctor Franklin, who had visited Sweden on other occasions, was full of appreciation of the relations which have existed for so many years between Swedish Baptists and the Foreign Mission Society. Doctor Bystrom spoke with real affection of the various secretaries of that organization which have shown an interest in Sweden during the last fifty years or more, calling by name such men as Warren, Murdock, Duncan, Barbour, Mabie and Haggard. Secretary Franklin told of the great joy American Baptists have experienced in being permitted to cooperate with the Baptists of Sweden.

A Great Missionary Meeting

The concluding session of the annual convention was a great missionary meeting, when fully 2500, or possibly 3000 people crowded the floor and the two galleries of a very large church building for an ordination service for seven newly appointed foreign missionaries, three of whom have been designated for service in China and four in Central Africa. Brief addresses were made through interpreters by Secretary Fullerton of the Baptist Missionary Society of London, Secretary Franklin of our own Foreign Mission Society, and Secretary Love of the Foreign Mission Board of the Southern Baptist Convention, as well as several Swedish brethren, and the new missionaries themselves. After the brief ordination service for the seven missionaries, Dr. C. S. Miao of China, a delegate to the meeting of the alliance, spoke briefly but beautifully. He received an ovation from the large audience. American visitors and others have been delighted, as well as surprised at discovering the very notable record already made by the Baptists of Sweden in their foreign mission work. They now have under appointment 108 foreign missionaries—one for every 600 members of their churches. Secretary Franklin declared that this record places the Baptists of Sweden in the lead of all of the Baptists of the world in their foreign missionary zeal. He added that it was worth crossing the ocean in order to ascertain that inspiring fact.

The celebration of the seventy-fifth anniversary of the founding of the first Baptist church in Sweden was held on July 19. The large Immanuel Church building, seating 2500 people, was none too large for the crowds which attended. The morning and afternoon sessions were devoted to a review of the history of the Baptists of Sweden, but the evening session was devoted chiefly to hearing fraternal messengers bearing greetings from various boards, some of whom were as follows: Rev. Frank Peterson, and Rev. J. O. Backlund, representing the Swedish Baptist Conference of America; Dr. G. A. Hagstrom, the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society; Dr. J. H. Franklin, the Northern Baptist Convention; Dr. D. G. Stevens, the American Baptist Publication Society; Dr. Charles A. Brooks, the American Baptist Home Mission Society; Dr. C. S. Miao, the Baptists of China; Rev. J. A. Ohrn, the Baptists of Norway; Rev. P. Olsen, the Baptists of Denmark. There were also representatives of several other European countries.

Beautiful indeed, were the memorial services held on July 20 by the Baptists of Sweden at various graves in the cemetery just outside the city of Stockholm. At noon, a multitude gathered at the grave of Dr. K. O. Broady and unveiled a granite stone. The Swedish societies brought flowers, and representatives of the Foreign Mission Society, in the name of American Baptists, placed a large wreath of roses and sweet peas on the grave, bearing this inscription in letters of gold on silk ribbon: "In imperishable and loving memory of K. O. Broady, and with gratitude for his life and labors as a servant of Christ." From the grave of Dr. Broady, who died only last year, the large company moved to the graves of such early pioneers as Wieberg, Palmquist and Drake. The hours spent in the beautiful cemetery will never be forgotten by the multitude which represented all sections of Sweden and several foreign countries.

The American Baptist delegates who attended some of the pre-Congress meeting were deeply impressed with the character, ability and enthusiasm of their denominational kinsmen in Sweden.

Greetings at Swedish Celebration on Behalf of the Northern Baptist Convention

This was translated into the Swedish language

BY JAMES H. FRANKLIN

I AM highly honored in being asked to serve as the spokesman of a committee appointed by the Northern Baptist Convention of America to bring the greetings of that body to the Baptists of Sweden upon this auspicious occasion. At the last meeting of the Northern Baptist Convention, formal resolutions were adopted which have been translated into Swedish. Those resolutions I now have the honor to present to this notable gathering of the Baptists of Sweden.

Please believe that together with the formal resolutions, we bring also the most affectionate greetings of our people. We know the story of the suffering of pioneer Baptists and other dissenters in Sweden. That story is very much like the history of our own Baptist forefathers in America who oftimes suffered imprisonment and other afflictions for our distinctive denominational principles. Strange as it may seem today, the Baptist pioneers in almost every land have suffered in order to secure complete freedom of soul. They have suffered for such principles as the right of every man, however humble, to worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience; for a regenerate church membership; for the baptism of believers only; for an open Bible in the hands of every man, and the right of every man to interpret that Bible for himself under the guidance of the Spirit of God; for the right of every man to come to Christ for himself without the intervention of church or priest or any other human authority.

Happily, in Sweden as in America, and in many other countries, the days of persecution are passed, but we must still stand resolutely for the great principles which have been distinctive with us. We rejoice that in seventy-five years you have made such splendid progress. Within seventy-five years your numerical growth has been as great as was that of the Baptists in America during the first 150 years of their existence.

But you have made progress in other ways than in mere numbers. Last evening at your great missionary meeting, which was one of the most inspiring I ever attended, a significant fact was revealed. It was discovered that the Baptists of Sweden now have under appointment 108 missionaries of their own to foreign lands. This means that for every 600 members of your churches, or less, you are supporting a foreign missionary. In this respect you seem to be leading the Baptists of the world. It was worth crossing the Atlantic to secure that fact.

Your splendid achievements in Sweden, in Africa, India, China and elsewhere, should prove an inspiring example to Baptists from every section of the world who are about to assemble here for their third world congress. It is to be hoped that these representatives will return to their countries to exhort the people in every land to follow your

(Continued on page 928)

The Baptist

Vol. IV Chicago, Ill., August 18, 1923 No. 29

THE BAPTIST, founded in 1919, is published every Saturday by the Northern Baptist Convention at 417 South Dearborn Street, Chicago, Illinois. Entered as second-class matter, February 4, 1920, at the post office at Chicago, Illinois, under the Act of March 3, 1879. Acceptance for mailing at special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized February 4, 1920.

Managing Editor: Edgar L. Killam

Committee on THE BAPTIST
EMORY W. HUNT, Chairman
CLARENCE A. BARBOUR HUGH A. HEATH

RATES: Single subscriptions, $2.50 a year; church clubs equal to 10 per cent of church membership, $2.00; single copies, 10 cents. In foreign countries the postage is $1.04 extra; in Canada, 52 cents extra. CHANGE OF ADDRESS: Both old and new addresses should be in our hands at least two weeks before the change is to go into effect. Always give key number as it appears on your label.

REMITTANCES: Should be made payable to THE BAPTIST. Acknowledgment made through change of label date. If check on local bank is sent, please add exchange.

SPECIAL: Renewal notice will be sent each subscriber previous to the date to which subscription is paid. Subscriber should give attention to notice by sending in renewal promptly, or, if paper is not desired for the coming year, should send in a discontinuance order.

ADVERTISING: Display: Rate per agate line, 30 cents; full page (420 agate lines), $125. No time or space discounts. Classified: 6 cents per word. Obituary notices: One hundred words free; 4 cents per word for additional. Cash to accompany order.

CORRESPONDENCE relating to subscriptions should be addressed to THE BAPTIST, Subscription Department, 417 South Dearborn Street, Chicago, Ill.

BRANCH OFFICES: The office of the state director of promotion in each state is an office of THE BAPTIST.

Table of Contents

| | Page |
|---|---|
| PRE-CONGRESS MEETINGS AT STOCKHOLM | 898 |
| GREETINGS AT SWEDISH CELEBRATION ON BEHALF OF THE N. B. C., BY JAMES H. FRANKLIN | 898 |
| FRESH FROM THE FIELD | 900 |
| EDITORIAL | 901 |
| A MESSAGE OF THE BAPTIST WORLD TO THE BAPTIST BROTHERHOOD, TO OTHER CHURCHES AND TO THE WORLD | 904 |
| THE BAPTIST WORLD ALLIANCE THIRD WORLD CONGRESS, BY THE EDITOR | 908 |
| THE BAPTIST CONCEPTION OF RELIGIOUS LIBERTY, BY E. Y. MULLINS | 914 |
| THE ALLIANCE SERMON, BY GEORGE W. TRUETT | 916 |
| RELIGIOUS EDUCATION | 917 |
| THE CHIMNEY CORNER | 918 |
| A BAPTIST WORLD EXHIBITION | 919 |
| YOUNG PEOPLE'S WORK | 920 |
| OUR OWN FOLKS | 921 |
| OUR MUSIC CORNER | 927 |

Sign Language

In Europe we have found it necessary to use "sign" language a great deal. With it we have managed to get along pretty well. We have found that a smile and a frown mean the same in German or Swedish as in English. We have found also that apparently unintelligent beings have become the most discerning of mortals by the use of the "monetary" sign. How an American dollar can talk. Even a deaf and dumb man understands its language perfectly. Kind reader, during the editor's absence as at other times THE BAPTIST understands its dialect. If your subscription expires during the summer "Pin your check, etc." The office will do the rest.

Killam's Kollum

The Echo

Those who were going to Stahholm instead of going to Stockholm may feel reconciled when they read this number of THE BAPTIST, for it is a reverberation of the big meeting that should thrill their hearts and souls and set their minds actively to work trying to grasp the thrilling significance of it all. Yes, they may feel reconciled—then again they may get an inkling of what they have missed. Perhaps the latter sensation will be a more valuable one than the former. But there's another World Alliance meeting coming—five years from now. And it's going to be right next door—Toronto, Canada.

"Back Talk"

It's coming. We like it. "Here's my response," writes D. W. Hoyt of Worcester, Mass. "Began my subscription January 1. Am more than pleased with THE BAPTIST as the organ of the denomination and not of any party or group." And another, who says he's not to be published, wants to know: "Why does THE BAPTIST contain so many articles from the fundamentalists' point of view and so few from that of progressive scholars and educators?" And still another says: "You're doing just what a denominational paper should do. It's evident that you're giving in an unbiased and unprejudiced manner the thoughts of the best men on the mooted questions of the day." They've told you.

Making "THE BAPTIST" Do Double Duty

We never keep the best things that come to us. We are not selfish. We pass them on. Sometimes we pass on the worst ones, too. A subscriber living in the capital city of Illinois writes:

"Please find enclosed stamps for which send me two copies of THE BAPTIST, June 2 and June 9. I send my copies after reading to a sister out West, but I feel I must have these two for more careful reading than I was able to give them, and felt I could not keep her waiting for hers so long. I wish to thank you for our fine paper—the best church paper I ever read, and it gets better and better all the time. You are doing a great work and I pray our denomination will fully appreciate it, encouraging your heart and holding up your hands. We surely have reason to be proud of our BAPTIST and Missions." It's a good thing to pass THE BAPTIST on. We like to have it read to tatters. Of course there's a simpler way than sending copies out of the home and not having them handy when you need to refer to them, and that is make a present of a subscription to those who look to you for your copies.

Fresh from the Field

Rev. J. E. Naylor of Chautauqua, N. Y., has been appointed evangelist in Minnesota for eight months beginning September 1.

Mrs. S. B. Lingle, Chicago, has presented to the office of THE BAPTIST bound volumes of the Christian Times dating from 1861 to 1867, and of the Standard from 1867 to 1870. This borders on treasure trove.

Upon the occasion of President Harding's visit to Seattle on his return from the Alaskan trip, Rev. Ambrose M. Bailey, pastor of the First Church, was invited to deliver the invocation at the stadium before an audience of 40,000.

Rev. J. J. Ross, pastor of the Ruggles Street Church, Boston, has accepted the call of the First Church, Vancouver, B. C., and will begin work on the new field in the fall. Mr. Ross is well known in Canada having held pastorates at James Street, Hamilton, and Dovercourt Road, Toronto.

Dr. A. E. Booth, of the First Church, Beaumont, N. Mex., recently resigned his pastorate there.

The church at Fayette, Ala., is planning to erect a new house of worship. Rev. N. R. Stone is pastor.

It is reported that a death mask of Napoleon has been discovered in a small shop in Paris. Two similar masks are in the possession of the Army Museum in Paris. The museum will seek to prove the authenticity of the mask.

Dr. Cornelius Woelfkin, pastor of Park Avenue Church, New York, will supply the pulpit of the City Temple, London, Aug. 12-Sept. 2. An arrangement has been made with Doctor Norwood, pastor of the City Temple, whereby he will occupy Doctor Woelfkin's pulpit for two months next year.

The people of the United States pay more than a million dollars a week for chewing gum, according to the National City Bank of New York. The value of the output in 1921 is more than double that of 1914, the first year in which the government secured official statements of the amount turned out by the factories of the country.

Because of his unselfish devotion to the community of Bethlehem, Conn., Rev. C. H. Beers has suffered a physical breakdown. His ministry is considered unusual in the history of church or missionary work in that state. It has in some respects been pioneer work, but no farm house was too remote or isolated for Mr. Beers to refuse to visit. It is said that it mattered nothing to him what the church affiliations of a needy family were; he was always ready to be a general counselor and friend.

The following description of Stock-holm appeared in the Spectator: "Uproot half Venice from its piles and perch it upon granite cliffs and you will get a fair notion of the capital itself. Next figure to yourself a race of men, rather taller and fairer and healthier-looking than the English, graced with the hospitality of Americans, the efficiency of Germans, and the manners of Southern France; imagine all the girls fresh and frank-eyed and upstanding, every fourth woman worth turning round to look at, and you have an idea of the Swedish people."

Rev. John H. McLean, pastor of the Calvary Church, Minneapolis, will be the preacher at the West Somerville Church, Mass., while the pastor, Rev. Frank M. Swaffield is on his vacation.

Dr. Algernon Coleman, professor of French in the University of Chicago, has been appointed director of the American University Union in Paris for the year 1923-24, and will sail for France Sept. 1.

Rev. E. E. Dudley has resigned as pastor of the Park View Church, Norfolk, Va., and will devote his entire time to evangelism.

Mr. Carl E. Olson, a student in Bethel Academy, St. Paul, is supplying the church at Rutland, N. D. Mr. Freeman, the blind evangelist, will hold meetings at the church during September.

Rev. Nestor Nesdoly, general mission-ary to the Russian Baptists of North Dakota, recently closed his work and moved to Blaine Lake, Sask., Can.

Monday, Aug. 13, the eight-hour day went into effect in the Gary steel mills. President Harding was a strong advocate of the shorter day.

Leland Stanford University is the re-cipient of a $600,000 fund for the establishment of a chair for the study of spiritualism. The money was derived from the estate of the late Thomas Welton Stanford of Melbourne, Australia, a brother of Senator Leland Stanford.

On a recent Sunday at Calvary Church, New Haven, Conn., the pulpit was occupied by Rev. Arthur S. Phelps of Berkeley, Cal., in the morning, and in the evening by his brother, Rev. Dryden W. Phelps. Prof. William Lyons Phelps, another brother, preached at the church a short time ago. Their father, Rev. S. Dryden Phelps, was pastor of the First Church, New Haven from 1844 to 1873 and was editor of the Christian Secretary, a paper published by Baptists in Hartford.

Edward W. Bok has added $20,000 to the original sum of $100,000 offered for the best peace plan. In addition, four prizes of $5,000 each will be given.

Rev. Vernon H. Cowsert of Clovis, Cal., recently spent three Sundays with the First Church, Vancouver, B. C. Mr. Cowsert is spending his vacation in Toronto.

The ministerial association of the Swedish Baptist Conference of Nebraska at its annual meeting passed a resolution reaffirming its faith in the fundamental beliefs of Christianity.

Dr. Roscoe Murray, pastor of the First Church, Mannington, W. Va., was suddenly killed July 30. Doctor Murray was well-known in the state both as a pastor and as an evangelist.

Dr. J. J. Cloar, pastor of the First Church, Texarkana, Tex., died while abroad in attendance at the World Alliance meetings.

Dr. E. W. Parsons of Rochester Theo-logical Seminary has been ill in Toronto since last May. The degree of LL.D. was conferred upon him last spring by McMaster University of which school he is a graduate.

Baptists of Verdun, a city of 30,000 on the outskirts of Montreal, have erected a new house of worship. The church was organized in 1909 and has a membership of 172. Under the leadership of the present pastor, Rev. William A. Price of Ohio, $16,000 was subscribed over a five-year period. The building has a seating capacity of 400, pews instead of chairs and a new semi-indirect lighting system.

The Baptist Church at Tiverton, England, has acquired an old book issued in 1658, entitled "A Plain Discovery of the Unrighteous Judge and False Accuser" which deals with the life of the church about the year 1655. The traditional date of the founding of the church is 1607, and it is hoped that other documents will be found substantiating this claim. Rev. Walter Owen is pastor.

Laymen played a large part in the celebration of Independence Day at the Baptist Orphanage and Home of western Pennsylvania. Dr. H. W. Ewalt of Pittsburgh, a layman, had charge of the general activities and was largely responsible for the success of the undertaking. Large delegations from the western part of the state attended and took part in the festivities. The Wilkinsburg men's Bible class unfurled a large silk American flag with H. W. Bartle, president of the class presiding at the ceremonies. A program of old-time songs was given under the direction of H. W. Tully.

Dr. W. Edward Raffety, editor-in-chief of the Publication Society, is to become head of the department of religious education at the Baptist Institute for Christian Workers, Philadelphia. Last year, Doctor Raffety delivered the lectures on this subject at Yale and was invited to do so this year, but declined in order to become associated with the Baptist Institute. The Publication Society has released him so that he may devote sufficient time to the course. He will be assisted by other members of the editorial staff.

World Alliance Impressions

By LIZBETH HUGHES, BURMA

SOME asked for impressions up to the present. They come so fast, one is swept away to make room for new ones. Every place I have gone in auto or tram, I have been struck with the unusual cleanliness of the city and the geniality of the people. They bear with us wondrously as we rush about tongue-tied with exclamation marks for our badges. We always get the information we ask for and the friend who gave it, gives with it a smile that seems to suggest that the favor is his, not ours! The parks show that the soul of the people loves beauty —loves it scattered and not collected in one spot.

I have had two distinct impressions of Swedish coffee being the best this side of Burma and the home cooking of our hostesses fit for ye gods! I am deeply impressed with the fact that hospitality is lavish despite the work it entails.

Then there is the biggest impression of all, that this alliance is getting at the root of things. Christ is being enthroned and several speakers have stressed the great fundamental truth that Christianity must show a better front to the world if the world is to acknowledge his sway. Doctor Truett's alliance address was inspired of God. It was his message to the Baptist world in the hour of the world's crisis. If Christ does not get a square deal from the Christian nations, the missionary may well despair of the task of displacing pagan creeds by the pure gospel of Christ that is absolutely able to save unto the uttermost "all that come unto God through him."

The Baptist

The Baptists of the World

THERE has been some confusion of terms in speaking of the great world-gathering of Baptists in Stockholm this summer as to whether it is properly called the "world alliance" or the "world congress." As we understand it both are proper designations, the former referring to the organization, while the quadrennial meeting is properly referred to as the world congress. There is something inspiring in any great gathering of people; the greatness of this congress consisted in the wide inclusion of diverse peoples united not in race, language or government but solely in the maintenance of certain great religious principles.

The gathering was not a great body in point of numbers, but its significance lay in the fact that it represented probably ten or eleven million members and a constituency of twenty-five millions, the members themselves having every one of them been baptized on his personal profession of faith. This principle of believer's baptism or regenerate church membership, which affects so powerfully the quality of the church itself, and the companion principle of the separation of church and state, which sets free both church and state for a nobler development than can be in any other way attained, make the gathering in Stockholm of immense significance alike to religion and civilization.

For about three centuries the denomination has had a visible, continuous and connected existence under the name Baptist, though its roots reach farther and, under some form or other, back to New Testament times. For the first two of these centuries the growth was small and was largely confined to England and America, but in the third century it has increased not simply in arithmetical but in geometrical ratio. This increase has been chiefly in the United States, where the membership has doubled about seven times since the year 1800 and has actually multiplied itself eighty times in that period. Elsewhere than in the United States, and especially in continental Europe, Baptists are sorely handicapped. In many lands their growth is hindered by the existence of powerful state churches, in others where a nominal religious liberty exists, there is a pervasive and politically strong sentiment for the decadent traditional religion on the one hand while on the other is a rank and vituperative atheistic communism contemptuous of all religion. Baptists flourish either under persecution or absolute religious liberty, but under a patronizing toleration they languish. Religious snobbery is the most subtle and effective poison gas with which to attack them. Yet growth under these conditions while not rapid has been of a sturdy sort. European Baptists are such from conviction, and in no part of the world is it usually the fashionable or politic thing to be a Baptist. If, when and where such a thing ever comes to pass through our great success in America it will be a sad day for the denomination.

It is an interesting and important thing to ask the reason for the vast disparity between the visible progress of the denomination in this country and elsewhere. It most certainly is not because we are better Christians or Baptists than our European brethren; they have suffered and sacrificed for their faith far more than we have ever done. Is it not rather the demonstration of the divine blessing upon obedience to the two great principles set forth at the beginning of this article?

Our land has been a sort of laboratory for the working out of the problems of religious liberty. Here there has been permitted the freest differentiation of religious life and organization. The result has been several hundred different religious bodies, each free to demonstrate its worth and to win adherents. Some denominations have profited largely by the enormous immigration of past years; some by strongly centralized and ably managed organization; but the great majority of these many religious bodies have failed to grow or largely to affect the life of the nation at large. Out of them all the Baptist denomination has grown from nothing to number about eight millions of members, making it almost if not the greatest Protestant body, and it holds an honorable position in educational, evangelistic, missionary, reformatory and patriotic service. It has had almost no growth from foreign lands by immigation and it has had no strong centralized government to direct in its upbuilding, nor imposing ritual to attract adherents. When the Pilgrim and Puritan colonists settled New England any stray Baptist who appeared among them was to them "as an heathen man and a publican."

BUT when a handful of these outlawed Baptists obtained a bit of land and set up the smallest of American states it did so on the principle of the absolute separation of church and state, and the absolute freedom of the individual to hold to any religion or none. It held to this principle and finally the Baptists secured its adoption in the fundamental law of the republic itself. As there were hundreds of other denominations, so there have been hundreds of other colonizing and political experiments on the American continent. Does not the amazing success of this denomination and this republic largely spring from their common adoption of this great principle?

We shall listen and read eagerly as the story of Stockholm is told, and the report of Swedish, German, French, Czecho-Slovakian and Russian Baptists will thrill us, as did the sight of those strong-featured men with scarred faces and bodies at Philadelphia in 1910, who came "bearing branded in the body the marks of Jesus." And we shall pray that over all the world there shall prevail those principles of a regenerated church membership and of absolute religious liberty which have so blessed our nation and our denomination.

The Religion of Our Presidents

THE sudden death of the beloved and honored President Harding which shocked and saddened the world, intimately affecting the destinies of all nations, comes very close to the hearts of our denomination, for it has removed a brother Baptist.

In the earlier days of the republic—in fact, to the Civil War and beyond—our presidents were not usually active church members. It almost seemed to be taken for granted that no one so active in political life as to be a candidate for the high office could be at the same time a member of a church. There was, of course, no legal pronouncement on the subject and perhaps not even discussion of it. Some of the presidents were nominal members of some church, and others like Lincoln and Grant while in office gave evidence of an acceptance of religious principles. Grant at the close of his life was received into the Methodist Episcopal church, and some other early presidents were consistent Christians as well as church members; but for more than forty years now no president has been elected who was not a member of a church, save one and he subsequently united with the church.

It is a significant thing, that with no requirement affecting the subject and, as before, without even a discussion of the subject as far as is known, the nation has, without infringing on its great constitutional guaranty of absolute religious liberty, come for nearly a half-century to choose for its highest office men openly belonging to some religious body. Garfield had been a minister and a college president, Harrison was a Presbyterian elder and Bible-class teacher, Cleveland was a minister's son, McKinley was a Methodist, Roosevelt and Taft were both active church members, as were Wilson and Harding. President Coolidge is said to be an example of the typical New England conscience and almost of Puritanism, and to be a staunch Congregationalist.

Still more significant is it that recent presidents have repeatedly preached sermons, from the pulpit and other platforms, worthy of any minister of the gospel. Roosevelt, Wilson and most recently President Harding have repeatedly done this. It is a touching memory of our lamented late president that more than one of the utterances on what proved to be his last journey were practically and sometimes avowedly, brief sermons, though sometimes delivered from the rear of a car platform. More and more our presidents have come to feel that the religion of Jesus Christ is the supreme need of the nation. Doubtless, also, the fact that since the civil war three of our presidents have been assassinated and an attempt made on Roosevelt's life, while the enormous burdens of the office have broken or shortened the life of every one who has held the high office, has deepened the serious feeling of the presidents themselves and made them look to God both for themselves and for the people.

One of the beautiful and touching things connected with the life of President Harding was the fact that when, shortly before his inauguration, his own pastor was stricken with paralysis and unable to perform the duties of his pastorate, so that the church was compelled to secure an associate pastor, President Harding himself assumed the support of the invalid pastor, whose death preceded that of the president by a few days only.

Our country may take hope in the fact that, moved by some great common impulse, the people have long been choosing for its highest office men of God.

The World Alliance

THE BAPTIST of this week is devoted in part to the meetings of the Baptist World Alliance at Stockholm. We hope that all our readers will give a careful perusal to the accounts of that notable gathering because, unless we are greatly mistaken, it was a meeting fraught with vast importance to world progress and peace.

The prevalence of political and economic problems in the nations of the world today, and particularly in Europe, make it plain that somehow the leaders of the various peoples must depart from their former methods of secret diplomacy and political negotiation and find a new basis upon which to arrange for peaceful intercourse. The hope of the future rests not upon armies and navies, but upon a proper acceptance of the principles and practices of the Lord Jesus Christ. Furthermore, the peace and prosperity of nations in the future must rest entirely upon justice and brotherly love and not upon smart political tricks that are aimed to put a nation or people under the dominance of some other nation which desires to exploit another country for selfish gains. The only conclusive method by which the nations can rid themselves of the old practices and establish new ones that are fair to all is found in the acceptance of the ways of Jesus Christ. The only real basis upon which such a future can be built is upon the teachings of Jesus Christ. The Baptist churches are built upon the teachings of the gospel of our Lord and Saviour. Our Baptist history and heritage are of tremendous value just now, because our principles will not allow any union of church and state. We are, therefore, clear of political entanglements and can give heed to the basic needs of peoples and help them to find a solution based upon the gospel.

Our democracy is also of unusual value at this stage of world progress because it can help to produce a Christian internationalism built upon brotherly love in the Lord Jesus Christ.

The aim of Baptist churches was not to build up a great ecclesiastical machine by means of the meeting at Stockholm; it was simply a bringing together of some of the leading spirits among the Baptists of every nation in order to make each more helpful to all the others while Jesus Christ is preached everywhere.

Interference

THE radio enthusiasts bitterly complain of the confusion caused by the various and conflicting sounds which come to them out of the all-embracing ether. Personal messages, stock reports, operatic music, weather reports, the turbulent cacophony of a jazz orchestra, a bedtime story for very small children, a sermon by Dr. Boanerges—are likely all to be blended in a sort of auditory hash. The result of a half-hour's desperate listening may be more discontinuous than a page of the dictionary, more confusing than the attempt of seven children simultaneously to explain "just how the quarrel started."

In the weird new dialect of radiography, with which the dictionaries and cyclopedias have not yet caught up, we read of wave-length limits, heterodynes, tuning for inductance, widened wave-bands, radio-frequency amplification and the like, until we the uninitiated are mystified, humbled, helpless. But out of it all we gather the fact that the principal difficulty is the elimination of noise and of interference from conflicting messages, so that one will get a better ratio of signals to "strays." The receiver endeavors to select the proper currents and to "shunt" the interfering and non-significant ones. Moreover, we learn that summer is distinctly less favorable than winter to radiophony; transmission range is decreased and atmospheric disturbance or "statics" make it more difficult to hear weak signals.

All of this is eloquent of a church's difficulty with its members, especially in summer-time. The church's transmission range is decreased just when the members are farthest away. Various influences, atmospheric and otherwise, "interfere" in summer with the church's message, though it is sent out continuously through the year. But the difficulty is not confined to the summer-time; to a greater or less extent it appears at every season. Scripture, by the way, calls Satan "the prince of the power of the air," and the apostle declares that "we wrestle not against flesh and blood but * * * against the spiritual hosts of wickedness in the heavenly places," i. e., in the air. At any rate it is a fact that the influences of religion, if they get through at all to the individual soul, must run a gauntlet of "interference." To the soul which might be listening the brazen sounds of a jazz orchestra will drown the gentle strains of a hymn; the sounds of vaudeville or of a sensational play or the voluminous piffle of a Sunday paper will make the preacher's message as ineffective as a violin solo in a boiler factory; and the languorous days themselves seem to furnish but the shortest transmission range for the things of religion; the very atmosphere seems filled with the devil's static.

The remedies most effective alike with radio and with religion seem to be found not so much in the sending as in the receiving. There must be a "selective" interest on the part of the individual which will enable him to single out the worthwhile and significant things and to "shunt" the frivolous, the unworthy, the corrupting. "Whatsoever things are pure, lovely, honorable, just, of good report * * * think on these things." An old proverb says, "You may not be able to keep the crows from flying over your head but you can keep them from building nests in your hair!" You may not be able to prevent evil thoughts from crossing momentarily the field of your consciousness, but you can keep from harboring them.

All successful life is an elimination contest between good and evil, between the worthwhile and the worthless, between the purposeful and the merely casual or clearly frivolous. Like the radio fans we must seek a better ratio of signals to strays; of really significant things to the petty futilities which are perpetually trying to crowd into our range.

Is the Dog a Waster?

DOUBTLESS when riding on the trains through the farming sections of our country you have often seen a shepherd dog come out of a farm yard and rush along after the train. Many, many times we have seen this happen and always we wonder what the dog would do if he caught the train. Would he bite it, or would he jump on it and take a gay doggy ride or would he just sit down beside it and pant hard and let it alone because he did not know how to make use of what he had caught. We suppose the last would be the case, but it does make quite an interesting sight, while it lasts, to see the dog expending himself as he runs after the train and we hope it does do the dog some good to get the exercise, for it does not harm the train. However, a quest is foolish unless its goal is justified by proper utilization.

We have seen a local church come rushing out to win the world about it. With tremendous energy the gospel of Jesus Christ has been preached and many have given witness to its saving power. Then, joy of joys, many have been won to a confession of sin and a profession of faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. What then has happened? Well! we are sorry to say, the church having secured many additions to its members, has sat down and slowly but surely has lost its joy and power in service; while those who joined, to an appalling extent, have lost their joy little by little, until through lack of utilization and development they permanently disappear out of the life of the church. Did I hear some one say, "Pessimist"? Well, you are wrong. The watchman on the tower who sees a sad danger impending and helps to avert loss and sadness would not be dubbed a pessimist. We are just a watchman on the church tower calling out to see if your church has justified its quest for souls by the way you have utilized and developed those who came into your membership. Or have you made the quest a foolish one, because when the goal was within your grasp you lost it finally by a failure to utilize and develop that was sad beyond the words of earth to express?

The dog may be foolish to run after the train, but the church is not foolish to win souls when it helps to save them for eternity by utilization and development under the guidance of the Holy Spirit.

A Message of the Baptist World Alliance to the Baptist Brotherhood, to Other Christian Brethren, and to the World

Stockholm, Sweden, July, 1923

THE Third Baptist World Congress meeting in Stockholm, Sweden, July, 1923, and representing with few exceptions the Baptists of every country in the world, a constituency numbering nine millions of baptized members, and many millions of adherents, in view of world conditions, and resolutely facing the problems of the future, proclaim this message of Baptist principles and purposes to the Christians and peoples of the world.

We are, first and always, Christians, acknowledging in its deepest and broadest sense the Lordship of Jesus Christ, and devoted to him as the Son of God and Saviour of the world. We rejoice that the spiritual unity of all believers is a blessed reality, not dependent upon organization or ceremonies. We pray that by increasing obedience to Christ's will, this unity may be deepened and strengthened among Christians of every name.

The Lordship of Jesus Christ

There are various ways of stating the fundamental Baptist principle. If we indicate the source of our knowledge, we say the scriptures of the Old and New Testaments are divinely inspired and are our sufficient, certain and authoritative guide in all matters of faith and practice. As to the nature of the Christian religion, we affirm that it is personal and spiritual. We believe in the direct relation of each individual to God, and the right of every one to choose for himself in all matters of faith. A Christian's religion begins in the soul when personal faith is exercised in Jesus Christ, the Divine Redeemer and Lord. As the Revealer of God to men and the Mediator of salvation, Jesus Christ is central for Christian faith. His will is the supreme law for the Christian. He is Lord of the conscience of the individual and of the church. Hence, the Lordship of Jesus Christ is a cardinal teaching of Baptists. It excludes all merely human authorities in religion.

The Nature of Baptist Unity

We desire to impress upon our Baptist brethren in every part of the world the importance of Baptist unity at the present time. Accepting the voluntary principle in religion and regarding the nature of Christianity as a spiritual relation between man and God, we inevitably take the same attitude on questions of faith and conduct as they arise within the church. We hold fast to the freedom with which Christ has set us free, and this principle implies that we must be willing to love and to work with those who, agreeing with us on the main things and in loyalty to our distinctive Baptist principles have their own personal convictions upon nonessentials. All Baptist organizations are formed on the voluntary principle. None of these possesses authority over any other. All enjoy equal rights and autonomy within the limits of their own purposes.

Christian Unity

Baptists have ever held all who have communion with God in our Lord Jesus Christ as our Christian brethren in the work of the Lord, and heirs with them of eternal life. We love their fellowship, and maintain that the spiritual union does not depend upon organization, forms or ritual. It is deeper, higher, broader and more stable than any or all externals. All who truly are joined to Christ are our brethren in the common salvation, whether they be in the Catholic communion, or in a Protestant communion, or in any other communion, or in no communion. Baptists with all evangelical Christians, rejoice in the common basic beliefs: the incarnation of the Son of God, his sinless life, his supernatural works, his deity, his vicarious atonement, and resurrection from the dead, his present reign and his coming kingdom, with its eternal awards to the righteous and unrighteous.

LET us not fear that God's revelation in nature will conflict with his revelation in redemption. Christ is the key to both. Slowly science is fashioning a crown for him. Slowly economics and sociology are fashioning a crown for him. Slowly psychology and biology are fashioning a crown for him. Slowly his people are fashioning a crown for him. He who went forth with a single crown will return crowned with many crowns. All the armies of truth shall follow him, and on his vesture shall be written his name: "King of Kings and Lord of Lords."—From address by Dr. E. Y. Mullins at Baptist World Alliance.

To Baptists it is entirely clear that the direct relation of the soul to God, or the universal priesthood of believers, is the basis of the New Testament teaching as to the church and the ministry. Christian unity, therefore, as Baptists understand the New Testament, is a result of the operation of the Holy Spirit arising from a common faith in Christ, enlightened by a common understanding of his teachings, inspired by a common vision of the ends of the kingdom of God, and issuing in a free and voluntary cooperation in the execution of the will of Christ. Christian unity is thus a flexible principle, adapting itself to every situation. It admits cooperation so far as there is agreement, and abstains from all coercion beyond this point.

The implications of the voluntary principle based upon the universal priesthood of believers in their bearing upon Christian unity are clear. Baptists cannot consent to any form of union which impairs the rights of the individual believer. We cannot unite with others in any centralized ecclesiastical organization wielding power over the individual conscience. We cannot accept the sacerdotal conception of the ministry which involves the priesthood of a class with special powers for transmitting grace. We cannot accept the conception of ordination made valid through a historic succession in the ministry. As Baptists understand the New Testament, all believers being priests unto God, the ministry can possess no sacerdotal powers. They are called to special tasks of preaching and teaching and administration. They remain the spiritual equals of other believers in the church. Again, the principle of the universal priesthood of believers involves the direct authority of Jesus Christ our great High Priest. Christian unity, therefore, can only come through obedience to the will of Christ as revealed in the New Testament, which Baptists must ever take as their sole, sufficient, certain and authoritative guide.

The Baptist Faith and Mission

As Baptists view it, the Christian religion finds its central truth in the incarnation of God in Jesus Christ, whose sinless life and heavenly wisdom, whose deity, atoning death, resurrection from the dead, and whose second coming and lordship in the kingdom of God constitute and qualify him for his work as its Founder and Mediator. God calls all men to salvation through him, in whom they are freely justified by grace through faith, and regenerated by the operation of the Holy Spirit. Regeneration, or the new birth, is a necessary condition of church membership, since in this way alone can the churches be kept spiritual and responsive to the will of Christ. Church membership of believers only is a fundamental Baptist principle. Each church, as made up of the regenerate, is competent to conduct its own affairs. It is, therefore, by its nature and constitution, a spiritual democracy, free and self-governing, and answering to Christ alone as its ultimate authority.

The New Testament recognizes nothing as baptism but the immersion in water of the believer in Christ upon profession of faith. In the Lord's Supper it recognizes no sacerdotal authority in those who administer it, and no sacramental quality in the bread and wine, by virtue of which it conveys grace through any change in the elements.

In the matter of the polity, the officers and the ordinances of a church, Baptists seek to preserve the spirituality and simplicity of the New Testament, and at the same time the proper proportion of emphasis. A group of great spiritual principles underlies their conception of a church at all points. As a self-governing spiritual democracy, a church recognizes the spiritual competency and freedom of the individual members. Since it requires a personal profession of faith as a condition of baptism, it eliminates the proxy element in faith and respects the rights of personality. Hence, infant baptism is utterly irreconcilable with the ideal of a spiritual Christianity. Voluntary and not compulsory baptism is a vital spiritual principle of the New Testament.

The officers of a church are teachers and leaders, not ecclesiastical authorities. Thus at all points a church of Christ is the outward expression of great spiritual principles; the supreme value of personality, the inalienable rights of free choice and of direct access to God, the equality of all believers, and their common spiritual priesthood. No charge, therefore, can be more groundless than that Baptists are ceremonialists or sacramentalists. They are the exact opposite of these things.

NONE has such spontaneity of action, such untrammeled energy and buoyancy as men who have acquired the freedom that Christ, the Son, gives. Look at Paul. He abounds in images which suggest spontaneity and exuberant joy. See him yonder when like a mighty swimmer rising above the billows of adversity and difficulty he exclaims, "I can do all things through Christ." Hear him as he spreads the wings of devotion, and in a splendid flight of mystic passions he shouts, "For me to live is Christ, and to die is gain." Observe him as he is caught in the mighty grip of moral enthusiasm and self-conquest, exulting in the joy of battle, "Thanks be to God, who always leads me in victory, through Christ." See him again as he is impelled onward, the embodiment of flaming love and quenchless hope and deathless ambition, running the Christian race as one who treads the air, and exclaiming, "Forgetting the things that are behind, I press toward the mark." — From address by Dr. E. Y. Mullins at Baptist World Alliance.

In harmony with the above principles, Baptists conceive their mission to the world to be moral and spiritual. Primarily, their duty is to make known the will of Christ and secure the willing submission of men to him, as set forth in the gospel of the grace of God. Evangelization and missions thus become prime factors in the program of Baptists. The command of Christ to preach the gospel to every creature is of permanent binding force. The necessity for education, philanthropy and civic and social righteousness in manifold forms arises inevitably out of evangelizing and missionary activity.

Religious Liberty and Its Applications

Baptists from the beginning of their history have been the ardent champions of religious liberty. They have often been persecuted, but they could never persecute others save in defense of their own principles. Religious liberty is an inherent and inalienable human right. It arises out of the direct relation of the soul to God. Man is constituted in God's image. He is a free personality. Moral responsibility is based upon this freedom. This is a fundamental axiom of ethics as well as of religion.

Religious liberty, in its broadest significance, implies the following elements: first, no human authority of any kind, in society at large, in church or state, has any right to repress or hinder or thwart any man or group of men in the exercise of religious belief or worship. Second, the right of every man and group of men to complete freedom in the search for, the worship of, and obedience to God. Third, freedom to teach and preach those beliefs and truths which men may hold as committed to them from God to be made known to others.

Religious liberty is inconsistent with any union of church and state, because the church rests upon the spiritual principle of free choice, while the state rests upon law with an ultimate appeal to physical force. It is inconsistent with special favor by the state towards one or more religious groups and toleration toward others, because equality of privilege is a fundamental and inalienable religious right of all men. It is inconsistent with priestly and episcopal authority and infant baptism, because free choice and voluntary obedience to Christ are essential to the Christian religion.

Thus Baptists stand for the rights of the individual versus the close ecclesiastical corporation, the direct relation of the soul to God versus the indirect, free grace versus sacramental grace, believer's baptism versus infant baptism, personal versus proxy faith, the priesthood of all believers versus the priesthood of a class, democracy in the church versus autocracy or oligarchy or other forms of human authority. Religious liberty is not license. It gives no right to the indulgence of lust or sin in any form. It confers no exemption from the authority of the state in its own sphere. It implies and requires loyalty to Christ on the part of every Christian. For non-Christians it implies responsibility to God alone for religious beliefs and freedom from all coercion in matters of religious opinion. Baptists have ever insisted upon religious freedom for unbelievers and atheists, as well as Christians. However deplorable their unbelief, they are responsible, not to human authorities but to God.

Religion and Ethics

Our religion is not only for the salvation of the individual, it is also ethical and social. The new life in Christ creates a new moral character and a new sense of social responsibility. The Christian ideal is God's kingdom. He is to reign in all realms of life. His will is to rule in the family, the church, in industry, in society, in the arts, in the state, and in international relations.

Family Life

Family life of high quality is fundamental to all human progress. Here especially should personality, its needs, its discipline and development, control. Here Christ's law of mutual love and service should rule. Children are free personalities to be reared in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. The will is not to be broken, but disciplined and trained. The home should be a living fountain of religious life, where prayer and the study of the scriptures should not be shifted to the school or to any other agency. Divorce is one of the greatest evils of the day in many parts of the world. The duty of all Christians everywhere is to resist this evil. Christ's teaching on the subject should be respected and every proper means employed to resist and correct the tendency to divorce. The sacredness of the marriage vow, and the purity of home life should be safeguarded in all possible ways.

Christianity and Social Questions

There is widely apparent in the churches today the growth of a new conscience in relation to social problems and a new quest for the will of God in modern society. We are realizing afresh that the purpose of Christianity is the purification of the entire life of humanity, its end a community truly and completely Christian. The noble and self-sacrificing work of caring for the social wreckage of our time, the poverty stricken and the outcast, must not cease. But our duty does not end there. Not simply by doing an honest day's work, or by cultivating relations of brotherhood with one's fellow-workers, important as these are, can the Christian obligation be fully met. We must strive also to the end that the organization of society itself shall accord with Christ's will, as well as that one's calling within society shall be conformable thereto.

DID we in our own strength confide,
Our striving would be losing—
Were not the right man on our side,
The man of God's own choosing.
Dost ask who it may be?
Christ Jesus, it is he,
Lord Sabaoth is his name,
From age to age the same,
And he must win the battle.

And though this world with devils filled
Should threaten to undo us,
We will not fear for God hath willed
His truth to triumph through us.
The Prince of darkness grim,
We tremble not for him,
His rage we can endure,
For lo! his doom is sure.
—Martin Luther.

Baptists gladly recognize the Christian duty of applying the teaching and spirit of our Lord to social, industrial and family relations. While not committed to any of the varied and conflicting theories of economics, we affirm the Christian conception of industrial relations to be cooperation rather than competition. Life is a stewardship held for the enrichment of all, and not simply for personal gain.

We stand for world peace through international courts of justice, industrial peace through obedience to the rule of Christ, "Do unto others as ye would they should do unto you," domestic peace by acceptance of the sanctity of the marriage bond and the parental responsibility to train children in the nurture and love of the Lord.

Christian Stewardship

Christian stewardship rests upon the foundation of God's ownership of ourselves and our possessions, "Ye are not your own. Ye have been bought with a price," is the divine declaration. All wealth is to be held in trust as God's gift. It is to be used as he commands. The right of private ownership of property by the Christian does not mean the right to do as he wills with his own, but rather as God wills. The mere accumulation of wealth is not the aim of the Christian business man, but rather the use of wealth in the service of God and men. Under the old dispensation the Jews gave at least one-tenth of their income to the service of God. Christians are not under law but under the gospel. But surely their obligation requires giving upon a scale equal to that of Jews. One-tenth, however, does not exhaust the Christian's obligation. All that he has belongs to God and his giving should be in proportion to the needs and requirements of the Lord's work and his own ability, whether it be one-tenth or nine-tenths or even more of his income.

The Sabbath

We recognize and reaffirm with vigor the sanctity of the Sabbath all work except works of necessity and mercy should be avoided on the Sabbath day. God has appointed

Broken Walls

The wall of Jerusalem is broken down.—Nehemiah 1:3.

THE strength that once was our defense may yet our weakness be;
The future years will find the flaws the present cannot see.
A thousand things we build in faith and live to mourn their fall,
For each Jerusalem outlasts its man-constructed wall.
We hedge our narrow lives about with dogma, doctrine, creed,
For they, like walls that cities build, are found to serve a need.
The walls about Jerusalem could keep the stranger out,
And creeds may shield the shrinking soul from piercing winds of doubt.
The race survives its theories; they crumble with the years,
And the objects of our faith and pride turn the objects of our tears.
But then with tools and weapons new we bend our mental skill
To the task of building newer walls the newer needs to fill.
—Roy Ivan Johnston in "Texts."

one day in seven as a day of rest and worship and it should be observed by all men in accordance with the divine command. We condemn as un-Christian the commercialization of the Sabbath day in the interest of business or amusement of any kind. As a civil institution, one day in seven, observed as a day of rest, has proved to be in the highest degree promotive of human welfare. The religious observance of the Sabbath as a day of worship is a matter of free and voluntary action. Laws to compel such observance are opposed to religious liberty. But laws to protect the Sabbath as a civil institution are right and should be enforced.

Temperance

We record our conviction that the modern movement to curb traffic in strong drink for beverage purposes is of God. We believe that governments should recognize the movement, and that instead of deriving support from it through taxation, should abolish this traffic.

Baptists and Loyalty to State

Baptists have always been a loyal and patriotic people. This attitude arises out of their fundamental principles. It is a necessary result of their submission to the will of God as revealed in Jesus Christ. It is seen clearly in the light of their view of the state and of the church. Baptists believe that the state is ordained of God. It is established to restrain and punish the evildoer and for the protection of human rights. It is, therefore, essential to human welfare. It is not to be used in the interest of any group or class, but to promote the common good. Its duty is to safeguard the personal, economic, civic and religious rights of all.

It thus appears that the work of the church and the work of the state lie in different spheres. In the one case it is a spiritual, in the other a political task. There is no antagonism, and there should be no conflict. Each should freely pursue its own tasks in its own department of life by its own means and methods. Neither should seek to thwart or hinder the other. The members of the churches should obey the laws of the state as loyal citizens or subjects. The state should protect the rights of all men of various religious beliefs. The supreme loyalty of all men is to God. Disobedience to the state, therefore, is never justified except when the state usurps the place of God in trying to compel the conscience in religious matters, or when it becomes a transgressor of the law of God in requiring what is in violation of divine commands.

International Relations

Nations are morally bound to each other. The state like the individual must be regarded as a member of a larger community in which other members possess rights similar to its own. This implies that in an orderly world there can be no real conflict of interests between various governments. Secret, selfish diplomacy and intrigue are crying sins before God. National selfishness is a terrible evil.

We record our profound conviction against war. It is destructive of all economic, moral and spiritual values. A war of aggression is a direct contradiction of every principle of the gospel of Christ. It violates the ideals of peace and brotherhood and is inconsistent with the law of love. It alienates nations which Christ seeks to unify in bonds of friendship. It enthrones hate and dries up the fountains of sympathy. It sets power above right. It creates burdensome debts. It is prodigal in its waste of life.

The true remedy for war is the gospel of Jesus Christ. The new birth by God's Spirit creates divine love within the soul of the individual. The law of God is thus written upon the heart. The greatest need of the world is acceptance of the Lordship of Christ, by men everywhere, and practical application of his law of love.

We favor cooperation among the nations of the world to promote peace. No nation can live an isolated life. To attempt to do so inevitably gives rise to complicated problems and leads to conflict in many forms. The good of all is the good of each, and the good of each is the good of all. Christ's law of service is the key to all human progress. Nations as well as individuals are bound by that law. By obedience to it shall we hasten the complete realization of God's will among men and the fulfillment of the ideals of the great prayer which the Master taught us to pray: "Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done on earth as in heaven."

We believe that the world has come to a parting of the ways. It is another coming of the Son of Man. It is another day of the Lord. The question is whether the world will pass along the way of order and peace and goodness and faith, or whether it will go down into scepticism and ruin. We believe that the simple message of the Baptists, with its union of gospel ethics, of faith and practice, with its note of freedom, democracy, spirituality and gospel, will find an answering chord in this new world.

A Message to Parents

By Harry Emerson Fosdick

WE have boys and girls growing up in our homes and schools, and because we love them we may well wonder about the church which will be waiting to receive them. The worst kind of church that can possibly be offered to the allegiance of the new generation is an intolerant church. Ministers often bewail the fact that young people turn from religion to science for the regulative ideas of their lives. But this is easily explicable. Science treats a young man's mind as though it were really important. A scientist says to a young man: "Here is the universe challenging our investigation. Here are the truths which we have seen, so far. Come, study with us! See what we already have seen and then look further to see more, for science is an intellectual adventure for the truth." Can you imagine any man who is worth while turning from that call to the church, if the church seems to him to say: "Come and we will feed you opinions from a spoon. No thinking is allowed here except such as brings you to certain specified, predetermined conclusions. These prescribed opinions we will give you in advance of your thinking; now think, but only so as to reach these results." My friends, nothing in all the world is so much worth thinking of as God, Christ, the Bible, sin and salvation, the divine purposes for humankind, life everlasting. But you cannot challenge the dedicated thinking of this generation to these sublime themes upon any such terms as are laid down by an intolerant church.

The Baptist World Alliance Third World Congress

Stockholm, July 21-28, 1923

BY THE EDITOR

"GAY Stockholm, with its many waterways and fine architecture, is one of the world's most beautiful towns" writes H. Goddard Leach, the American author in his book, "Scandinavia of the Scandinavians." Wherever one turns he is sure to find waterways and outside the "City within the Bridges"—the old city—broad streets flanked by rows of well-built houses. Stockholm is built on no less than thirteen islands. And there are flowers everywhere.

From the point where the waters of Lake Malaren flow out into the Baltic through Norrstrom—a waterway only a few hundred yards in length and split into two channels—the Stockholm of today spreads in all directions. At its very heart on an island on Lake Malaren and the Baltic stands the Royal Palace and the Parliament and other buildings of state.

For more than 700 years Stockholm has been the capital of Sweden. It is, however, a modern city compared with Sigtuna and Upsala, both farther inland on the deep fiord of Malaren, which extends westward some eighty miles. There are nonetheless in Stockholm itself, signs of what to an American is antiquity itself. On a small island near the old town and connected with it by bridge is an old church dating from 1280 when King Magnus Ladulas caused it to be built in connection with a monastery. It is called the Riddarholmskyrkan. Here lie buried all the Swedish rulers from Gustavus Adolphus, with the exception of his daughter, Queen Christina. Here the delegates witnessed one of the most touching ceremonies of the week when in the presence of a vast throng representatives of the congress placed a wreath on the tomb of Gustavus Adolphus. Mr. Corwin S. Shank, president of the Northern Baptist Convention, spoke.

A Fitting Meeting Place

At Philadelphia in 1911 it was planned that the third meeting of the Baptist World Alliance should be held in Europe. It was expected that the gathering would be in Berlin. During the years which have passed events have made it even more fitting that Europe should be the meeting place, and the celebration of the seventy-fifth anniversary of the beginning of Baptist work in Sweden was a factor which led to selection of Stockholm for the great convocation.

To interpret such a meeting is a most difficult task. We cannot on paper reproduce the setting of the conference. There are individuals and groups from every corner of the earth. We read that on the day of Pentecost there were Parthians and Medes, and Elamites and dwellers in Mesopotamia and all the rest gathered in Jerusalem. Here in Stockholm there are fully as many tribes and nations represented. They have come from Finland, Esthonia, Latvia, Lithuania, Poland, Russia, Jugo-Slavia, Hungary, Czecho-Slovakia, Austria as well as from the missions fields and countries where our work has been longer established. They have come with their peculiarities of dress and custom, with their own methods of religious expression, with many differing languages but with common love and loyalty to Jesus as Saviour and Lord. A report can give words and statistics, but it cannot convey the tone of the voice, the gleam of the eye, the passion and gestures of earnest souls struggling to give expression to aspirations, hopes and experiences born of the Spirit of Christ. Much less can we put in black and white song, that universal Esperanto of the Christian life. How these European Christians can sing! The Lettish choir was one of the features of the convention. Those who heard it do not wonder that the police held up traffic so that the members might have right of way through the streets of Stockholm as they marched to the Congress Church.

A Capacity House

When the hour came for the formal opening of the congress every available seat in the church was filled. Rev. J. Bystrom, chairman of the Swedish executive committee and president of the Baptist Union of Sweden, called the meeting to order. A choir of 200 persons sang the opening song in Swedish. Rev. W. Y. Fullerton of London led in prayer. In his address of welcome Chairman Bystrom called attention to the unparalleled events which have taken place since a dozen years ago the congress met in Philadelphia. War has shaken the whole world. Kingdoms have trembled and fallen. Ancient thrones have crumbled. But there is one King and one kingdom which have been unmoved. Baptists are a part of the kingdom that abides. Millions have been added to our churches during the period of upheaval. Mr. Bystrom gave most cordial welcome to the delegates from "the land of Washington, Lincoln and Harding." He was proud to have as the guests of his country those from the land of "Carey, Spurgeon and Lloyd George." He welcomed his brethren from Germany and acknowledged the debt Swedish Baptists owed to Baptists in that country. He extended his hand in greeting to all who had come to the land of Gustavus Adolphus. He summoned all to the task of evangelization of the world.

The welcome which had every evidence of utmost cordiality was not alone the greeting of our fellow Baptists. Upon the platform were members of the royal family—Prince and Princess Bernadotte and the Prime Minister of Sweden, Ernst Trygger. The latter addressed the congress. He said "We clearly see in our social life movements which tend to break up our social structure. These downward tendencies have followed the war. It is of first importance that we solidify all the forces which tend to hold fast those elements of civilization which generations and centuries have built up. If religious tolerance and understanding are lacking civilization is breaking up. In Sweden there is freedom of conscience. Sweden has given the world some great men. We are thankful to God for those who have opened our minds to the essential things in life. This congress is favorably received by us because your ideals are ours. I extend to you a hearty welcome to our country."

To these greetings Rev. W. E. Bloomfield, president of the Baptist Union of Great Britain and Ireland responded. "We are indeed glad to be in your beautiful country. You have shown us how to combine the beautiful with the practical. We appreciate this welcome. Not always have Baptists been thus cordially received by officers of state. All nations are coming to see that truth will prevail where freedom is complete. Baptists honor governments. Governments are ordained of God. We do not trespass upon them except when governments trespass upon the inalienable rights of men. We are glad to be in the land of Gustavus Adolphus. We rejoice in the Reformation. Baptists are thorough-going children of the Reformation. No monarch ever uttered a truer word than that of the King of Sweden to his people in 1920 when he said "Whole hearted daring in following Jesus Christ is that alone which will usher in the kingdom of Christ."

A delegation from the Free Churches, which number 170,000 members, extended welcome and Dr. George Truett responded to the welcome.

The Cathedral of Upsala

The archbishop invited Baptists to hold a service in the Cathedral at Upsala on Sunday evening. This invitation was accepted and at the appointed hour Rev. J. H. Shakespeare of London spoke. The service was attended by from five and six hundred. Before proceeding to the cathedral, the delegates were invited to tea by the members of the Upsala Baptist Church. The kind hospitality of the Swedish was greatly appreciated by English and American delegates. Doctor Shakespeare was assisted in the service by Rev. Doctor Bystrom, president of the Baptist Union of Sweden, and Rev. Dr. J. C. Carlile, ex-president of the Baptist Union of Great Britain and Ireland.

The sermon was based on Luke 9:62. Doctor Shakespeare said that the church existed to bring in the kingdom of God. There were to special tasks to which the church was called in our day: To promote the peace of the world, and the unity of the church. The two were vitally connected. Warring churches could not preach peace to a divided world. The road to peace and unity was a hard one; but we would not turn back. The Archbishop of Upsala closed the service with the benediction.

Not alone in formal ways did the citizens of Stockholm extend their welcome. The morning newspaper on the day the congress opened printed its editorial in both Swedish and English and each day furnished the latest news in English. Large front page space was given in every issue to the proceedings and messages of the congress. Through Secretary Shakespeare, David Lloyd George sent greetings as follows: "Please convey my warm greetings to my fellow Baptists gathered in Stockholm for the third world congress. I trust that their deliberations may promote the cause of peace among the nations so that they may see in time the rocks upon which civilization is being driven. May a new faith and determination enable them to face the problems of the future."

Rev. W. S. Abernethy of Washington read a letter from President Harding. "I shall be glad if you will find opportunity to convey to the Baptist World Alliance the greetings of a fellow Baptist and express for me the hope that we shall have throughout the world a continued growth in that religious devotion which makes a finer brotherhood of men in a conscientious worship of God. I believe with all my heart that nothing is more needed in the world today than the practical application of the spirit of Christ."

A letter from Dr. John Clifford was received with great applause. While not strong enough in body to make the trip to Stockholm his message shows a wonderfully clear mind and a keen interest in the problems which the Christian forces face. His analysis of the situation and his suggestions for meeting it are well worth most careful thought. He said:

My dear Doctor Shakespeare,

You suggested that I should send a message to the Baptist World Alliance Congress about to meet in Stockholm, and I count it a real joy to comply with your request.

First of all I am sorry that bodily strength is insufficient to justify the effort to attend, or I would most eagerly avail myself of so great a privilege.

With exhilaration and delight I recall our World congresses in London and Philadelphia, and our European congresses in Berlin and Stockholm. They were unforgettable occasions, and formed a fine preparation for the discharge of the new duties that have been placed upon us by and since the war—duties of relief of the necessities of the people in the areas desolated by the war; and of the further obligation and privilege of guiding our churches passing into new conditions in the difficult and different situations created by the political rearrangement of Europe.

For the work of relief our churches, especially in the United States, have contributed magnificently; and it is hoped the need for that aid will not continue much longer.

But the second task urges itself upon the churches represented in our congress with indescribable force. One of the primary needs of Europe, in my judgment the primary and most urgent need, is the Baptist interpretation of the Christianity of Christ Jesus in the New Testament. For more than thirty years that conviction has forced itself upon me. God calls us to it. This is the day the Lord has made for us, and sad will be our lot if we fail him in this hour of pressing need. The dominance of Roman Catholicism in some areas, of the Greek Orthodox Church in others and the prevalence of the ideas and practices of state control of religion notwithstanding lip-services is rendered to freedom of conscience; these three facts constitute an imperative demand for our witness (1) to the absolute and unchallengeable authority of the Lord Jesus our Redeemer over the thought and life of the individual, with its implicate, (2) the complete liberty of conscience in religion (3) our insistence on personal faith in and experience of the grace of the Lord Jesus as the basis of the Christian church; (4) the autonomous character of societies so composed; (5) the thorough-going repudiation of a sacerdotal ministry, and of the rites of the churches as "vehicles" of divine grace; (6) the three great universalities (a) of the love of the Father for all men, (b) the sacrifice of Christ for the sins of the whole world, and (c) of the gift of the spirit to convince the world of sin, and lead it to the acceptance of the divine standards of righteousness.

That is the teaching needed, and that is the teaching we are bound to give; and this congress ought to give a decisive and mighty impact to the adventure already initiated to carry Europe forward to original Christianity.

The fathers and founders of the United States left Europe to find freedom for the incalculable human soul. They found it. Roger Williams made it the cornerstone of Rhode Island. It is now the duty of the millions of Baptists in the states to join with their brethren from Britain and all over the world to give that real liberty to the countries they were forced to leave.

This is the God-given task of this congress. God wills it. We can do it. May we have faith and courage and zeal enough for a full response.

I am, with most affectionate greetings to the congress,

Yours very sincerely,
John Clifford.

After prayer by Rev. J. R. Edwards of London there was a roll-call of nations. This can better be imagined than described. When the name of the country was called the delegates from that country rose wherever they happened to be seated. One of their number acted as spokesman. The time was limited. There was opportunity for but few words. Sometimes the speaker shared his brief moments with the members of his delegation who sang some one of their songs. There was something which stirred the hearts of even caloused editors as these men and women gave testimony, many of them having come to their faith and continued therein through great tribulation. Some of them had been in prison and exile for the gospel's sake. They had known the loss of friends and in many cases those of their own households had become as enemies to them. Again and again we caught this refrain. "And the greater the opposition, the more painful the persecution, the more the churches grew." Attempts at suppression only resulted, as in the days of the apostles, in a greater spread of the message of Christ as Saviour. Churches were scattered but the members went everywhere preaching the word. As these men testified we began to understand the prayer of an old pastor whom we knew in our youth. He often prayed that the church might be saved from flabbiness. He prayed for the sinews of faith which were born of hardship.

We shall pass over the response to the roll-call from those countries from which we hear constantly and confine ourselves to those newer areas where the Baptist faith is just gaining or regaining a foothold.

From the brief reports of these who answered the roll-call and from the report of the Baptist commissioner for Europe we hope to give the reader some conception of conditions in the various European countries especially as they affect our Baptist work. Rev. A. Wiegand of Vienna answered for Austria.

Austria

The first Baptist church building in Austria, erected with the help of the German Baptists of America, was dedicated at Ternitz in December last. The church at Vienna meets in a hired hall, which is ill-adapted and inadequate. Progress has always been slow, and at the close of 1922, over fifty years from the formation of the Vienna church, there were still only 217 members in the land. Since the war complete religious freedom has been secured, and under competent leadership the situation in Austria should show a decided improvement. It is interesting to know that this Baptist church never existed as a church in sight of the law. It was a temperance society and when this was suppressed a young people's society.

Germany

Rev. A. Hoefs of Cassel, editor of the German Baptist paper gave a rather depressing report of conditions and prospects in Germany. The report of Doctor Rushbrooke, is however, rather more hopeful. He says:

CHOIR FROM LAVTIA. DR. S. W. CUMMINGS OF REDLANDS AND DR. JOHN A. FREY OF RIGA, IN THE CENTER.

"Our hearts are stirred by the immense burdens under which our German brethren, through no fault of their own, must now labour. We congratulate them on an increase of over 4,000 members during the past two years, their total being 53,900 on Dec. 31, 1922. Their organization is as efficient as ever; Cassel in publication work, Hamburg with its seminary, Berlin and other countries with their deaconess work, are but examples of the lead that the German Baptists have given in Europe. It is to be hoped that the way will soon be opened for the resumption of their interrupted foreign mission enterprise in the Cameroons, and that the pressure of economic need will be eased. Meanwhile, the countrymen of Oncken may rest assured of their place in the regard and love of their fellow-Baptists, by whom they will not be forgotten or neglected during these trying years."

Finland

There are two groups of churches: The Finnish-speaking and the Swedish-speaking. Baptists of Sweden have undertaken to assist the latter, those of Great Britain the former. There are no considerable recent developments calling for notice. Each of the assisting groups has established contact with its constituency, and is affording some measure of financial help. The condition of the Finnish-speaking churches was found far from satisfactory: a fanatical "pentecostal" movement following the war, and an internal political struggle, had gravely disturbed the denomination and even destroyed several of the smaller churches. The mischief is now checked. The chief need of both groups is an effective training of young preachers and evangelists, and preliminary steps have been taken towards providing this.

There has been a small advance in membership during the last two years, the total now being 2,928 as compared with 2,853 at the close of 1920. To those who realize the critical situation of two years ago, such figures are encouraging.

Esthonia

Here the Baptists of the Northern Convention of Canada and of Britain, cooperate. There has been a marked revival of religion in the land. The membership of Baptist churches has more than doubled since 1910, and growth has been accelerated since the close of 1920. The membership which then stood at 3,423 is now over 5,000. The Free Churches, which are Baptist except in name, and have about 2,000 members, are not included.

The chief development in Esthonia has been the establishment of a seminary at Kegel, which was opened in February, 1922, and in which fifteen students are receiving training. Rev. A. Podin is the rector, and Rev. Martin Schmidt the chief theological tutor.

The Esthonian Baptists are distinguished by an enthusiastic evangelistic temper, and by the courage and energy with which they are setting themselves to establish their churches on a self-sustaining basis, and to take full advantage of new opportunities. Miss Corius, who is now receiving training at Havelock Hall, London, will shortly undertake a work for women and children in Reval, the capital city.

Latvia

The same groups cooperate as in Esthonia. Except for heavy emigration, the Lettish statistics would be still more encouraging than they are. They exhibit, however, a really remarkable advance: at the close of 1920 they were 8,099 Baptists, two years later 9,312. In respect of the number of its churches the denomination stands third in the land, only the Lutheran and the Orthodox churches being more numerous; it also represents an influence in public life quite beyond its present numerical strength.

Through the support received from the cooperating boards, Lettish Baptists have been enabled to open a seminary in Riga, of which Rev. J. A. Frey is rector. The premises of the German church (whose members had almost vanished during and since the war) have been secured, and there the tutors and students of the seminary serve also as preachers of a newly-formed Lettish church, while the reduced German congregation meets in the lecture hall. The number of students is sixteen.

Lettish Baptists are distinguished by their concern for education: in Libau they have recently established a high school.

Roumania

In the enlarged Roumania which has emerged from the war there are some 25,000 Baptists, over 2,000 baptisms having taken place last year. In the old Roumanian kingdom there are but few, though growth has recently become rapid; in Bessarabia there are groups of Russian Baptists; but the main strength of the denomination consists in the several thousand Roumanian Baptists dwelling in Transylvania and the Banat (transferred from Hungary after the war) and in a few thousand Magyar Baptists in the same regions.

The outstanding facts of the past two years are: (1) All the Baptists in the land have been united in a single union; (2) through the financial support of the Southern Baptist Convention a seminary has been opened in Bukarest, in the premises of the German church, with about fifteen students; (3) through similar support a building fund has been initiated; (4) a vigorous publication work has been developed in the Roumanian and Hungarian languages; (5) the attitude of the Roumanian government towards religious minorities is gravely unsatisfactory, and the persecutions it has fostered or tolerated will form a subject of consideration at the congress.

In no continental field, except Russia, have conversions been more numerous during the past quarter of a century than in the territories now included in Roumania; and through the assistance and counsel of the Southern Baptist Foreign Mission Board, there is every prospect of still more rapid advance.

Bulgaria

The statistics reveal only about 350 Baptists, but the figures alone give no true idea of the situation. It is but lately that organization has been seriously undertaken, the leader in this being the Rev. C. E. Petrick, formerly a missionary of the A. B. F. M. S. in India. Chapels are being erected, and an energetic campaign has been opened. The German Baptists of America furnish substantial help. A bright report from Bulgaria when the fourth world congress meets is confidently expected.

Jugo-Slavia

The older Serbia is without Baptists, but there are small Baptist groups (German, Hungarian, Slovak and Croatian), in the territories transferred from Austria and Hungary. These have lately, under the guidance of the Southern Baptists of America been united into a union which has 709 members. The new organization is setting to work hopefully and energetically; two Jugo-Slavian evangelists from America are serving in the land; and the grants of the foreign mission board have already enabled church building to be initiated. What has hitherto been accomplished must, however, be looked upon as merely the laying of foundations.

Hungary

The 16,832 members in 1910 were reduced to 7,542 in 1920, as a result of loss of territory; but by the close of 1922 conversions had furnished a net gain of about 1,700, and the total stood at 9,209.

A vigorous evangelistic spirit characterizes Hungarian Baptists, and the Southern Board, which is assisting them, has every reason to rejoice in the prospects. The outstanding facts in recent history, due to the initiative of the board, are (1) the founding of the seminary in Budapest under the rectorship of the Rev. A. Udvarnoki, which has now twenty-two students; (2) the acquisition of a site in Budapest for a central church, seminary buildings, and denominational offices; (3) the establishment of a church building fund; (4) the firm organization of the entire work, with the disappearance of the unhappy divisions of earlier days, so that the brethren are now endeavoring to establish their relations with the government on a basis that shall conform to generally accepted Baptist principles.

Czecho-Slovakia

Here the Baptists of the Northern Convention and Britain are cooperating, and the Swedish Baptists have also assisted in educational work. The membership is very small in proportion to the population; but in this instance again it is emphatically true that mere figures do not tell the whole story. Growth is rapid, the membership having doubled since 1920, though the increase is in part due to the inclusion by the union of congregations hitherto separated. The country is fortunate in possessing a group of young leaders of exceptional power. The literary output of the Baptists is of high quality, and their Sunday-school publications have found wide acceptance outside the denomination. The seminary, under the rectorship of Doctor Prochazka, is doing good work, not only for Czecho-Slovakia, but for the Czech-speaking congregations in Poland. The Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society has by its contributions made possible the opening of the Peabody-Montgomery Children's Home at Hlebsebe, near Prague. The organization of deaconess work has been undertaken in Brunn. In Bratislava work for fallen and endangered women has been undertaken, and there are proposals for the founding of a second orphanage for Slovakia.

Interest in religion is intense. The very numerous secessions from the Roman Catholic and Orthodox churches have resulted in the formation of a semi Protestant body, the Czecho-Slovakian National Church, but multitudes have for the time merely unchurched themselves.

Baptists in the land are alive to their opportunity, and their prospects in the larger cities are especially bright. The church at Prague appears to be on the verge of new developments. The congregation at Brunn has outgrown its accommodation and badly needs new premises; in Bratislava a new church building was dedicated in 1922. A church building fund has been established through the gifts of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society, which has also provided capital for the publishing enterprise.

Lithuania

In this Roman Catholic country there are found comparatively few Baptists of the national stock. The majority of the 446 members are Lettish, and are located near the northern border. The recent addition of Memelland to the republic has, however, had the effect of increasing the proportion of Lithuanians; and under the leadership of a young Lithuanian recently appointed as evangelist (Rev. T. Gerik), a Baptist union is now in course of formation. It is unfortunate that there is still no Lithuanian-speaking church in the capital city; and one of the earliest results of the assistance by the same boards that are cooperating in the neighboring republics (Latvia and Esthonia), should be the initiation of a Lithuanian mission in Kowno.

Poland

Here the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society has undertaken to assist the Slav work, and the Rev. K. W. Strzelec has represented the society from 1920 onwards. The German work is assisted by the German Baptists of the United States. Outstanding features of the last two years have been:

(1) The development of the Slav work (Czech, Russian and Polish), which is becoming relatively much more important. Of nearly 1,200 baptisms in 1922 some 500 were of Slavs. Independent and rapidly growing Polish churches exist in Lodz, Warsaw and elsewhere.

(2) The remarkable publishing enterprise known as "Compass," founded and carried on by Baptists in the land, and issuing literature in the various languages of the country. No finer example of enterprise and self-help has lately been offered in Europe than the organization of "Compass."

(3) The acquisition of the fine Peabody-Montgomery Hospital in Lodz, and of the Deaconess' Home in the same city, through the generosity of the Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society.

(4) The scheme (still under consideration) for the opening of a seminary to train Polish, Russian and German preachers. It is hoped that this institution will come into existence before the close of the present year.

Poland is one of the most promising fields in Europe. The membership has increased by baptisms during the past two years from 7,600 to 9,000, and the decision of the "Evangelical Christians" in June of the present year to join the regular Baptist organization will add some 2,000 more. (These are almost entirely Russians, living near the eastern frontier.)

As already stated we have purposely omitted reports from those sections of the country where the work has been longer established or is already familiar to most of our people. In the countries named you will find evidences of the way in which not alone Baptists but the nations themselves are trying to find themselves and to adjust themselves to a measure of freedom in both church and state to which they have not been accustomed. They face grave problems and need the help and encouragement of others as did Sweden itself seventy-five years ago.

Great meetings were held in the Congress Church on Sunday. In the morning Rev. W. A. Cameron of the Bloor Street Church, Toronto, was the preacher. We hope to give this sermon to our readers at an early date.

In more than a score of churches in Stockholm addresses and sermons were delivered by members of the alliance.

Impressions

By Mrs. W. A. Montgomery

MY first impression is of the exceeding beauty, dignity and strength of Stockholm, of the cleanliness and order of its streets, and the charm of its life.

The Alliance Congress makes its profoundest impression through the diversity of its component elements that seem to blend into a spiritual unity. My deepest sense of this was in the prayer service of Tuesday in which scores spoke to God in their own tongue. I wish that we might have more intercession even if we had to curtail formal addresses. It is in spontaneous prayer that our hearts will be welded together for our world mission.

Perhaps the most outstanding feature of the day were three great platform meetings which were held in the parks. Large choirs and bands called together many thousands of people who gave close heed to the messages which were given in Swedish through interpreters.

We have already called attention to the service in the cathedral at Upsala. The young people's meeting filled the Congress Church and an overflow meeting was held in the First Church.

In striking contrast to a common habit of neglecting the early devotional meeting, Monday morning found the Congress Church filled for the first hymn. Rev. Thomas Woodhouse of Brighton, England, led the meeting.

Rev. C. E. Benander called the congress to order promptly at ten o'clock. A hymn was sung. In every case where one of our Swedish brethren led a service the full hymn was used. They do not seem to have formed the habit of saying "We will sing the first and the last verses." We confess that the general impression was good. Would it not be better for us to sing less hymns and give to them more careful attention? Words of regret at the loss of Dr. Robert S. MacArthur, the president of the Baptist World Alliance, were spoken and the names of others who had been active in former meetings, whose faces we shall see no more, were mentioned.

Atttention was called to the motto of the meeting: "Baptists facing the future." Rev. W. T. Whitley was named as minute secretary of the conference and a committee on nominations and one on resolutions were named. A gavel was presented which had been made by the boys in one of our schools in the Philippine Islands. By unanimous vote the congress then addressed the following message to the king of Eweden:

"To His Majesty King Gustaf V,
The Royal Palace,
Stockholm.

"The Third Congress of the Baptist World Alliance, numbering more than 2,500 ministers and delegates, and representing at least ten million Baptists, assembled from every country in the world, is now meeting in the beautiful capital of Sweden.

"The Congress wishes to offer its respectful congratulations on the prosperous and enlightened reign of your Majesty since you have succeeded to the ancient and glorious throne of Sweden. The Congress regards with special satisfaction and joy the full recognition and practice of the high and holy principle of religious liberty during your Majesty's reign.

"We wish your Majesty and your Royal House all happiness and prosperity, and we pray that God's richest blessing may rest upon the Swedish King and the Swedish people."

The report of Rev. J. H. Rushbrooke, Baptist Commissioner for Europe was a masterful address. Because of its importance we are giving a very full summary of this account of his stewardship. He spoke upon:

Baptist Relief and Mission Work in Europe

I am today in form but giving an account of my stewardship. My fellow Baptists of the world conferred on me an immense honor when they chose me as their commissioner. They also cast upon me immense responsibilities. I can at least claim that I have endeavored to discharge these responsibilities and worthily to represent the denomination, and I rejoice that whatever my personal defects the work to which we set our hands in London has been—I dare to say almost beyond our expectation—effective and blessed.

I am to speak of achievements. Far greater than the material results to which I may refer, is the spiritual effect which constitutes the deepest meaning and the real glory of these three years—the realization of Baptist world brotherhood in the service of the kingdom. Measured in terms of finance, we have carried through the largest scheme of relief the denomination ever attempted, but this is nothing in comparison with the fact that the leading Protestant denomination of the world has realized its world task. The men who met in London were few in number, but they thought imperially. Their large-mindedness was matched by large-heartedness. Stirred by the appeal from their suffering brethren they fashioned their plans on a scale worthy of the great historic community they represented.

It stirs the blood to realize that during these three years American Baptists have, in noble fashion, set themselves to repay some of their debt to Europe. After all, it was in Europe that the Protestant Reformation arose, whose most thorough going and consistent expression was the Baptist. The Old Continent had no ready welcome for Baptist principles but west of the Atlantic a golden opportunity was found, and there the story of two and a half centuries has amply vindicated our principles. The Baptist citizens of the great free Republic of the west have realized that Europe stands in need of the thorough-going application of principles vindicated in America, and right nobly they are setting themselves to the task of meeting the need. It is impossible for me to discuss the London Conference and its results without putting to the forefront, in the name of all the Baptists of the Old Continent, an expression of admiration and gratitude at the magnificent fashion in which American generosity has taken advantage of it.

(1) What has been done during these years? Consider first the relief effort. There are thousands of men, women and children, especially in Russia, who would not be alive today but for this. There are hundreds of European students—very few of them Baptists—whose studies could never have been completed, and who must needs have renounced their chosen career, if we had not intervened. There are multitudes of children whose health but for us would have been permanently shattered. There are evangelists and ministers whom we found staggering and faint beneath the crushing burden of debt, so that they must needs have sought occupation elsewhere. These have been saved from their despair and saved for the ministry of the gospel they love. One thinks of Poland war-ravaged, of farmers returning after the armies had passed to find house and barns destroyed, and their holdings stripped of everything. One sees them dwelling in caves living miserably on roots, without resources or hope. We have helped these to replenish, rebuild and retill. What a moving story you will hear from Hungary! Austria has been helped at long last through the League of Nations; she had not to wait so long for our help. In ten countries our Baptist people have been enabled to form relief committees that have not only assisted fellow Baptists but exhibited a human love that has overleaped all denominational frontiers. While nigh a million dollars have been expended, and if gifts in kind are reckoned probably half as much again, it has been well worth while. Heads of states have expressed their gratitude, but the simple, sometimes un-grammatical letters that have reached me from simple people say far more: and the tearful thanksgiving to God has oftime said most of all.

Religious Liberty

(2) We have done more. America has vindicated the principle of full religious liberty and equality. Europe is far behind. Equality is scarcely discoverable anywhere, liberty is at best usually mere tolerance, and in too many lands there is not even tolerance. It was alarming to discover that in countries freed at tremendous cost in blood and tears, the old traditions of religious privilege and religious repression were still potent. True, on the whole, there has been a mighty advance since the great war. The treaties of peace, whatever their faults, had concerned themselves with the rights of minorities, and in some countries, such as Austria, these rights have been unequivocally recognized; but alas! there are a few lands in which our brethren suffer disabilities, and worse. Spain is not shaken in her medieval intolerance: In Poland Catholic mobs—too faithful to the tradition of their church—break up meetings and assault preachers. In Roumania the military authorities, the local officials and priests of the Orthodox Church, have been allowed an amazing license by a government that pays homage in words to the principle of liberty; and I have yet to learn of any official who has been punished or removed for his misdeeds.

Apart from actual persecution, laws and regulations are framed which limit or deny the rights of "dissenters" and ceaseless vigilance is called for. No task is more urgent than that which the London Conference accepted when it authorized its commissioner to represent the Baptists of the world in standing by our persecuted brethren and in contending everywhere for full liberty for them and for all.

Widening of Spiritual Horizon

(3) The Baptist denomination exists to insure the preaching of the gospel and here above all the London Conference has represented an immense forward step. Our denomination has set up seven new seminaries in seven different countries within the last two and one-half years; these could not have existed apart from the assistance of American, British, Canadian and Swedish Baptists. Zealous young converts eager to preach are found in abundance in Europe; given opportunity of training they will evangelize their fellow countrymen as no missionaries from abroad could ever do. We are keeping preachers at all the strategic points in countries where today but for the decisions of London there would be nothing that could be called a Baptist ministry; and partly by direct subvention, partly by the supply of capital for printing enterprises, we are enabling our brethren to produce native literature for the edification of the churches. Not for a moment do we contemplate that Baptist communities in Europe will be permanently subsidized—self-maintenance and self-propagation are the corollaries of our congregational independence. Year by year we anticipate that churches will become self-supporting; but where they are only in their beginnings and where they are impoverished as a result of the war they must be helped over the present distress, and the help granted has wrought wonders. The morale of our people has been uplifted; conversions and baptisms have taken place in unprecedented numbers. Above all there has been a remarkable widening of the spiritual horizon: those who felt themselves isolated have realized that they are partners in a world-wide task for the kingdom of God.

The title of my address printed on the program summons me to speak on proposals for advance. Let me indicate some of the points for study by the cooperating boards:

(1) It is a matter for serious consideration whether the relief effort should entirely cease (as was originally intended) in November next. Our brethren in Germany and Hungary are terribly burdened, and whilst there is a most welcome improvement in Russian conditions it cannot, I think, yet be said that we have done all we should for that land.

(2) The task of representing our people to the governments of Europe is urgent as ever. It calls for a most careful study of the legal systems of the various countries so far as they affect religious freedom, and for continuous watchfulness and prompt action at need. Especially is it necessary that we should undertake a steady and patient effort to arrive at an understanding with the government of Russia which shall assure our people the full exercise of their liberties. So completely free are the Baptist people in Russia and elsewhere from identification with party political strivings that there should be no difficulty on the part of any government in conceding them full liberty. And this involves not merely immunity from active persecution, but freedom to teach to their children their religious principles to organize this teaching through the churches, and to propagate it everywhere by speech and pen.

(3) There is need for a steady development of their cooperation with the Baptists of the continent on the part of the contributing boards of Britain and America. In this connection I rejoice in the presence of Doctor Gill and Doctor Lewis, representatives in Europe, of the two American boards. In this wide field there will for many years arise problems whose solution will call for assistance from the Baptist communities of longer experience.

(4) Special attention will need to be given during the next few years to making efficient the seminaries that have opened. We have devoted teachers, but not sufficient of them, and to a large extent those undertaking the work are without special experience. A high scholastic standard is not at present attainable nor is it primarily necessary, but we must aim at securing an efficient Bible school for pastors in every land.

(5) There is a call for a special study of our literary output in Europe with a view to securing an effective presentation of the Baptist case adapted to the conditions of each nation or racial group, and effectively meeting the particular forms of attack directed against us.

(6) The question of women's work demands very careful consideration. In most Baptist communities of the continent it remains unorganized.

(7) Similarly the organization of young people is as a rule in its beginnings, and here too careful study is needed.

Variety of Session

Variety was the spice of the next session. Dr. J. C. Carlile of Folkestone, England, read a carefully prepared paper on "Christianity and Industry." With a quiet manner of delivery he pointed out the pressing obligations of the Christian church in the face of an industrialism which more and more mechanicalized men. Dr. E. Y. Mullins was heartily applauded as he spoke on "The Baptist Conception of Religious Liberty." This address appears in full in this issue of THE BAPTIST.

In the evening Rev. Chas. A. Brooks presided. The report from various European countries was continued. Doctor Brooks said that during the year spent in Europe he had come to have a deeper appreciation of the qualities of our European Baptist brethren. Every Baptist in Europe carries a Bible. The Bible is a dangerous book to autocracy. In some places he found Baptists called the "repented ones."—they are the apostles of the changed life. Baptists can no longer afford to be anywhere a mere party of protest. There has been and is an interchange of life between Europe and America, and America has some things to learn of Europe.

Rev. K. A. Modin of Stockholm gave a summarized statement of the Baptist work in Sweden during the past seventy-five years. It is a thrilling story of the achievements of faith. In another report of the celebration we give at length the essential facts.

The Situation in Germany

Professor Carl Neuschafer of Hamburg Seminary spoke upon "Germany and the Evangelization of Europe." He dealt in a most scholarly way with the history of German Baptists especially as they have been instrumental in planting Baptist missions in Europe. There were many long and rather involved sentences in the paper, but Commissioner Rushbrooke delighted all by his prompt and sympathetic work as interpreter. After tracing the history of German Baptists Professor Neuschafer directed his attention to the Baptist situation at the present time. Only he who is something to himself can be something to another. If we are to grapple with the present situation there must be in us something of the original impulses which gave rise to our work—something of those impulses which moved the disciples of Jesus. We must say for good or for ill the fate of our Baptist work on the continent of Europe is bound up with the fate of the German people. A heavy burden rests on us for the future of German culture. We are enduring poverty and disgrace. We must tread a rough road and carry heavy loads, that we know. But there lives in us a strong faith that so much as concerns our God there is for our work a future. His Word restores us and cleans us. Unless all signs fail there is a longing for the spiritual experiences of the old days. A generation now lives conscious of inner emptiness and unfruitfulness, looking for some divine deliverance. We look upon the youth with hope. Their spirits are not broken like those of their elders. A great new resolve seems to be taking shape in their lives. Far be it from us to curb this optimism by our faithless pessimism. The signs of true life are that it extends itself. If there be life and truth in German Baptists I shall have no fear for the future however dark that future looks today. The nation does face dark days. But our unconquerable Christ moves forward and the glory of his conquests will outshine all those of past days. The frank statement of our Baptist professor met with a great response upon the part of the congregation.

Dr. John A. Frey of Riga told us of "The Evil and the Good in Latvia." Its very location has caused it to be the pathway of warring nations. The material losses of the war were great but the moral losses were greater. Even groups of religious people became fanatical and for a time our work suffered serious losses. Speaking of the permanent results of our relief work, he said: "The clothes brought over in the 'Ship of Fellowship' will be worn out. The 'fellowship' never."

Dr. W. O. Lewis spoke especially of the reconstruction work in France.

The next morning Rev. F. W. Simoleit of Germany presided.

Mrs. W. A. Montgomery spoke on "The New Opportunity for Baptist Women," and Principal W. E. Blomfield of Rawdon College, England, showed the intimate relation which exists between the work of training ministers and real progress in our work. He recognized a practical situation. We are not securing enough men who have both college and seminary work to supply our churches. Steps should be taken at once to establish Bible schools where a working knowledge of the Bible can be given to earnest men and women who can render valuable service especially in those countries where our work is so rapidly spreading. He indicated that the condition in many countries in Europe is very similar to that in England 120 years ago. Care should be exercised so that those who are received as students should have some ability and true piety. Those only should be encouraged to take their Bible training in the original languages who show "any rational prospects of success." Men of unusual ability should be taken into our established schools in England, America, Germany and given the best training available. Doctor Blomfield uttered a very timely word of warning. He exhorted us to hold to and emphasize the "centralities." Churches are wrecked by men with little minds, men who insist on labeling things morally indifferent as "sins." The ill educated and untutored are always a latent peril. Baptists believe in liberty but they bow to Christ. They are under law to him but they have and ever will repudiate all other lords and over lords. In the living spirit of the living God we find our guarantee against extremes but of course there always will be some "freaks."

> OH, God! that men should see a little clearer,
> Or judge less harshly where they cannot see;
> Oh, God! that men should draw a little nearer
> To one another, they'd be nearer thee,
> And understood.

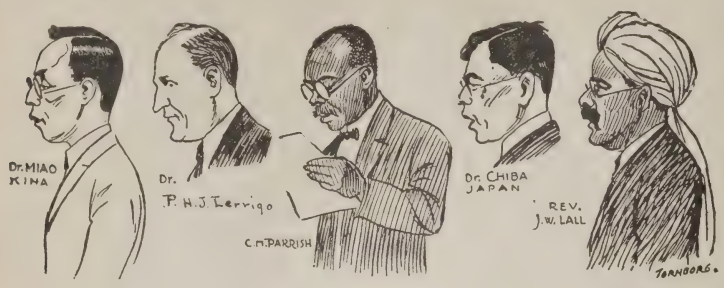
At noon Dr. George W. Truett of Dallas, Texas, preached the convention sermon. For over an hour he held the closest attention of the great congregation. This sermon will be printed.

Tuesday afternoon was entirely devoted to group conferences. The women, delegates from British colonies, representatives of the mission boards and the young people report most helpful and illuminating discussion of common problems.

Sunday-school work as carried on in America and Great Britain was presented in a paper by Rev. I. J. Van Ness of Nashville, Tenn. Doctor Van Ness did not attend the conference, so his paper was read by Mr. Wilson. Rev. Carey Bonner of London was the other speaker. Since these papers dealt with the work which is so familiar to our readers we shall not report this meeting at length.

Wednesday was on the program "missionary day." It was very like other days in that all of the days of the congress were devoted to the consideration of subjects all of which have a very direct bearing upon the extension work of our denomination.

The devotional meeting was in charge of Dr. W. Y. Fullerton, London home secretary of the Baptist Missionary Society. He followed immediately with the missionary sermon. He chose as his text Psalm 117. He dwelt on the world-wide appeal of the gospel. God set the bounds of the nations. There can never be uniformity in church or world. "If I thank God that I am Irish you will doubtless thank God that you are not." We must learn to praise God as nations. Let America praise God with its inventions, Europe with its traditions, Africa with its endurance, India with its calm, China with its tireless industry and Japan with its loyalty. It is true of nations as of individuals—"You do not know yourself if you know only yourself." He then spoke of the universal sweep of the gospel—"Every man can praise God and please God." An old Welsh woman was disappointed when she found that Christ was not born in Wales. She comforted herself, however, with the statement "but he speaks to me in Welsh." Doctor Fullerton said that he was thankful that God did not speak to him in Swedish. In order he then dwelt in the individual witness of the gospel, its enduring basis and the ultimate utter sway. We are under a tremendous responsibility to those nations who do not have "a living Word but a dying Christ."



It does not need argument to show our readers how impossible it is to carry across the seas the surroundings and conditions which gave to the delegates the full appreciation of the great meetings of the congress. It is out of the question to give more than passing attention to most significant sessions and most helpful addresses.

Less Familiar Names

With Rev. C. W. Rose in the chair, Doctor Fullerton's sermon was followed by brief addresses by Rev. A. Svard, a representative of Swedish Baptists in the Congo; Rev. F. M. Edwards, a representative of the Southern Baptist Convention in Brazil; Rev. Joseph Taylor of China; Rev. Herbert Anderson of India and Miss Hughes of Burma. With purpose we call attention to the message of those whose names are not household words in American Baptist homes. Doctor Anderson has for thirty-six years represented the British Missionary Society in India. He spoke warmly of Ghandi. "Ghandi," he said, "is far more widely known in India than Jesus Christ." The people who know of Christ say that Ghandi is like him. He stands for the unity of the Indian people. He is a powerful antagonist of intemperance and impurity. In India the dominance of western influence is checked. The eastern nations insist on their right to live their own life. Those of us who have watched the growing spirit of independence are amazed at the steady and growing demand upon the part of native churches to have the same rights of self-control and self-direction accorded Baptist churches in western lands. Our foreign societies must recognize these demands and this will open the whole question of missionary policy.

Every speaker did credit to himself and his society. We have made some discoveries in Stockholm. We hope to greatly extend the circle of correspondents to THE BAPTIST. We have some great missionaries from whom we have seldom heard. Dr. C. H. Parrish of Louisville began as janitor in the great college of which he is now the president. We will permit the artist to complete the report of this session.

A CROSS SECTION OF THE BAPTIST CONGRESS AS SEEN BY CARTOONIST OF STOCKHOLM DAILY

The evening meeting was in charge of Rev. C. E. Benander of Stockholm and our honored secretaries—Franklin, Love and Wilson spoke. We hear from them often and we will pass this informing and helpful session.

The Baptist World Alliance cannot legislate for any one. Its authority is very limited. However, the delegates showed a keen interest in the Thursday morning session. It was a "business" session. The devotional service was stimulating. Dr. W. S. Abernethy of Washington was the leader of the hour of worship.

The Russian delegation did not reach Stockholm until Wednesday afternoon. One of the delegates was released from prison, where he had suffered for the gospel's sake, just in time to join the

(Continued on page 928)

The Baptist Conception of Religious Liberty

Address at Baptist World Alliance, Stockholm, 1923

By E. Y. Mullins

THERE are three great discoveries made by every human soul which grows normally to maturity. First, it discovers the world. To the babe the world is a part of itself. Even our own mothers are at first a mere patch of moving color and a soothing sound. But when the babe tries to pluck the flame of a candle and burns its hand or bumps its head on the floor, it makes the first great discovery. It discovers that the world is different from itself. The self and the world become henceforth great realities. Later when the moral nature awakes the soul discovers God, the greatest of all realities. When a human soul discovers God the foundation for religious liberty is laid.

Men have wandered from the path of duty, civilization has gone astray, because these three realities—the self, the world and God—have not been properly related. The human problem has been how to relate personality to society, the individual life to the corporate life. But how to relate man to God comes first. It is the key to all problems. The quest for economic liberty, intellectual liberty, civil liberty, all go back to religious liberty as the root.

Look for a moment then, at the bases of religious liberty. Religious liberty rests upon man's original creation in God's image. The purpose of God in creation did not appear until the dust stood erect in the form of man, as a free and self-determining being. Man as a person created in God's image, free and spiritual, competent to deal directly with God, with an upward look, an endless discontent with the finite and temporal, a passionate yearning for the infinite and eternal; man, endowed with a conscience ringing in the soul like an alarm bell against wrong doing; man, with a will of his own which he can misuse and bring on moral ruin, but which he can surrender to God; man, with an intellect hungering for infinite truth and eternally discontented; man with a heart which no earthly object can satisfy; man, self-willed and sinful and then penitent and believing, redeemed by the power of Jesus Christ, Redeemer and Lord; man, recreated in the divine image, with the witness of the Spirit in his soul; telling him of his eternal destiny; man as a child of God seeking to walk worthily of his calling, and heir of all the ages—this is the being and these the endowments which demand that great boon which we call religious liberty.

As Baptists understand it, religious liberty excludes certain things and implies certain other things. It implies certain rights and along with these involves certain duties and privileges. Let us look at these in order.

First, religious liberty excludes a number of things. It excludes, for one thing, state authority in religion. The state depends on the use of force. Religion is moral and spiritual. The state uses coercion. Religion appeals only to freedom. The state deals with evildoers. Religion seeks to produce righteous men and women. The state represses crime. Religion develops character.

Again, religious liberty excludes the principle of toleration in religion. To put the power and prestige of the state behind one form of religion and merely tolerate others is not religious liberty. It is religious coercion. God has not given the state any power to compel men in religion. Equal rights to all and special privileges to none is the true ideal.

Religious liberty excludes the right of the state to impose taxes for the support of one form of religion against the conscience of the people. All honor to the heroes of passive resistance who refuse to pay an obnoxious tax, which the state has no right to impose. A free church in a free state is the goal we should seek.

Again, religious liberty excludes the imposition of religious creeds by ecclesiastical authority. Confessions of faith by individuals or groups of men voluntarily framed and set forth as containing the essentials of what men believe to be the gospel, are all right. They are merely one way of witnessing to the truth. But when they are laid upon men's consciences by ecclesiastical command, or by a form of human authority, they become a shadow between the soul and God, an intolerable yoke, an impertinence and a tyranny.

Religious liberty excludes centralized ecclesiastical government. Men, redeemed by Christ, regenerated by his Spirit, born of divine power and grace, are capable of dealing directly with God. Each one has a right to a voice in religious affairs. God speaks directly to men. Even the humblest believer may be a channel of the highest divine wisdom. Democracy, or self-government in the church, is the New Testament ideal. All believers are entitled to equal privileges in the church.

Religious liberty excludes priestly mediators and sacramental power of salvation. We have one priest, Jesus Christ, our great High Priest. All believers are priests entering into the most Holy Place. God's grace flows freely and directly to all who have faith and respond to his call. God has not limited the gift of his grace to any particular human channel. No group of men has any monopoly of God's grace to withhold or bestow it upon their own conditions. God's grace is direct. It is his free gift. "Let us come boldly to the throne of grace" is the injunction of the sacred writer.

Religious liberty excludes infant baptism. Baptists refuse to treat the infant as a thing. We treat it as a potential person. We recognize its will, its intelligence, its freedom. We will not rob it of the joy of conscious obedience in baptism. Proxy faith is a counterfeit faith. The New Testament recognizes only personal faith. Train the growing child for God. Lead it to Christ. As the living flower at your feet requires the forces of the boundless universe to mould and shape it, so does the child require an infinite spiritual universe. As the flower needs the power of gravitation which grips all the system, the sunlight that travels ninety millions of miles to paint its petals, the mysterious and wonderful power of electricity, and the complicated water system of the planet, to mould and shape it, so also the child needs God's infinite truth, his boundless love, his immeasurable power and his unspeakable grace to regenerate and mould him into Christ's image. Religious liberty requires that we let the child, as it grows up, learn the truth for itself, repent and believe for itself, obey Christ for itself, be baptized for itself, rejoice and struggle and grow for itself. To deny it these things is to rob it of its religious rights.

Consider next what religious liberty implies. First of all, religious liberty implies the greatest of human rights. Let us glance at some of these rights. The first is the right of direct access to God. No cloud, no shadow of human authority, should come between the soul and its God. The second is man's right to search for truth in religion. Jesus recognized this. He did not compel belief by divine authority. He so lived and taught the truth that men discovered his Messiahship for themselves. His revelations became their discoveries. "Who do ye say that I am?" was his question. "Thou art the Christ the Son of the Living God" was their answer. He dawned upon them like a sunburst. They discovered his glory and were lifted to divine heights.

So also religious liberty implies the right of free utterance and propagation of truth. The evil powers of the world have ever sought to stifle men. Heroes have led the way in the witness for the truth. Martin Luther is one of the greatest heroes of all time because at a supreme moment in the spiritual history of the race, with every earthly power arrayed against him, at the Diet of Worms he said: "Here I stand. I can do no otherwise. God help me."

Let the Common Man Speak

Religious liberty implies the right of equal privilege in the church. There are no spiritual lords in the Christian religion, except the one Lord, Jesus Christ. Christ brings the common man to his rights. Under the old human systems, the church or the state was everything, the common man was nothing. The church or state was like the tree, enduring through the generations. Common men were like the leaves on the tree that fell to the ground and perished with the seasons. The state or church was like the ocean, enduring through the centuries; common men were like the waves rising and falling and disappearing forever. Christ says: "Let the common man speak. Give him a voice in your affairs. Let God speak through him."

So also religious liberty implies the right of free association and organization for religious purposes. All men with religious beliefs and convictions have a right to organize and propagate their views. There never has been and never will be any human government, civil or ecclesiastical, with any right to curb or hinder or thwart the utmost freedom of men to associate themselves together, to organize, and to propagate the truth as they see it.

And this leads to the statement that religious liberty implies the right of men to demand of governments under which they live protection in the free exercise of their religion. That government which persecutes men for religious beliefs commits a crime against God and man. That government which is partial in its treatment of religious beliefs violates the principles of common justice, transgresses eternal and inalienable human rights and defies the will of God.

Having considered what religious liberty excludes and what it implies, I consider next what are the duties imposed. Among these duties are the following:

First of all, is the duty to search for and discover the truth. God gave us the Bible. God made the world. There is no conflict between truths. The city of truth which science is building up from the earth, when completed and purified, will be seen to be a suburb of the city of God which is descending from heaven arrayed in the glory of a bride adorned for her husband. Let us not fear that God's revelation in nature will conflict with his revelation in redemption. Christ is the key to both. Slowly science is fashioning a crown for him. Slowly economics and sociology are fashioning a crown for him. Slowly psychology and biology are fashioning a crown for him. Slowly his people are fashioning a crown for him. He who went forth with a single crown will return crowned with many crowns. All the armies of truth shall follow him, and on his vesture shall be written his name: "King of Kings and Lord of Lords."

WE have one priest, Jesus Christ, our great High Priest. All believers are priests entering into the most Holy Place. God's grace flows freely and directly to all who have faith and respond to his call. God has not limited the gift of his grace to any particular human channel. No group of men has any monopoly of God's grace to withhold or bestow it upon their own conditions. God's grace is direct. It is his free gift. "Let us come boldly to the throne of grace," is the injunction of the sacred writer.

I name next the duty of sacrifice for truth. To discover truth is one thing. To be willing to sacrifice and even die for it is another. Christ's witnesses have ever been Christ's martyrs.

"By the light of burning martyrs Christ's bleeding feet I track,
Toiling up new Calvaries ever, with the cross that turns not back,
And those mounts of anguish number how each generation learned
Some new word in that grand credo which in prophet hearts has burned
Since the first man stood God-conquered with his face to heaven upturned."

A third duty is to protest with all our souls against religious oppression. Baptists believe in religious liberty for themselves. But they believe in it equally for all men. With them it is not only a right; it is also a passion. While we have no sympathy with atheism or agnosticism or materialism, we stand for the freedom of the atheist, agnostic and materialist in his religious or irreligious convictions. To God he stands or falls. He will render his account to the eternal judge, not to men. So also the Jew and the Catholic are entitled to protection in the exercise of their religious liberty. Baptists do not desire to share the errors of men, but we are, and have ever been, and ever will be passionate and devoted champions of the rights of men. The supreme and inalienable right of all men is the right to direct and free and unhindered approach to God.

The next duty involved in religious liberty is loyalty to the state. The state is ordained of God. It serves a divine end and purpose. Baptists have ever been ardent patriots. Liberty is not license. Liberty is opportunity for service. Religious liberty is the prime condition for every kind of human progress. Let a man have free access to God and hear God's voice, and he will become a champion of law and order. He will become a champion of the economic rights of men. He will become an advocate of the Golden Rule in all industrial relations. He will become an evangelist of brotherhood among the nations, of peace on earth and good-will among men. He will oppose war because he knows war is directly opposed to the gospel of Christ. He will pray for his own country and for all countries. He will live and strive and pray that his own country may become a part of God's kingdom.

Finally, religious liberty involves the supreme duty of loyalty to Jesus Christ. Not license, self-will, or human will, but God's will as revealed in Christ is the goal of history and religious liberty. There is no danger in this religious liberty centered and anchored in Jesus Christ. Catholics are afraid of it and want to impose the authority of the pope and the church. Cardinal Gibbons defined religious liberty as "the right to worship God according to the dictates of a right conscience, and the practice of that form of religion most in harmony with man's duty to God." But a right conscience is a Catholic conscience, and the Catholic religion alone answers the above description as Cardinal Gibbons sees it. Wrapped up in that definition is all oppression. Gibbets and prisons and thumbscrews and racks are concealed in it. It can start martyr fires which would girdle the earth.

Words of a Catholic

Another Catholic writer referring to the pope says: "We acknowledge that authority; we proclaim it; we embrace it, as one surrounded by dark and turbulent waters clings to a lone spar lifting to safety above the perils of the deep. We may indeed hear the siren song of liberty; we may feel in our hearts the urge of our race to be free; we may be tempted to turn and walk no more in the way pointed out to us. But we know full well that liberty without authority is the kiss of death. As a kite without a string, a ship without a rudder, a meteor that has strayed from its orbit in the skies, so is man when the tie that binds him to his Creator is cut asunder. He floats through life, a wayward and meaningless atom in the universe, his destiny thwarted, his future nothing but darkness, desolation and extinction. Oh, give us faith, that virtue which reaches down from heaven to lift the universe."

But authority here advocated is that of the pope and the Catholic church, and these are not the true authority. Jesus Christ is that authority. Unto him is committed the destinies of the human race. Let him have sway in men's hearts and they will realize their true freedom. Freedom comes only when a man finds his true object and is impelled by a higher motive. One man seems to find his object when he sits astride a splendid thoroughbred horse; another man when aboard a well-equipped yacht, sailing across the sea; another when in his green house surrounded by flowers. But none finds his soul's true object like the man who finds Christ. None has such spontaneity of action, such untrammeled energy and buoyancy as men who have acquired the freedom that Christ, the Son, gives. Look at Paul. He abounds in images which suggest spontaneity and exuberant joy. See him yonder when like a mighty swimmer rising above the billows of adversity and difficulty he exclaims, "I can do all things through Christ." Hear him as he spreads the wings of devotion, and in a splendid flight of mystic passions he shouts, "For me to live is Christ, and to die is gain." Observe him as he is caught in the mighty grip of moral enthusiasm and self-conquest, exulting in the joy of battle, "Thanks be to God, who always leads me in victory, through Christ." See him again as he is impelled onward, the embodiment of flaming love and quenchless hope and deathless ambition, running the Christian race as one who treads the air, and exclaiming, "Forgetting the things that are behind, I press towards the mark."

The moral career of Paul reminds one of the flight of some mighty eagle, long confined in a cage and then released. At first he is uncertain of his new feeling of freedom, but at length, becoming conscious of it, the heavy eyelids open, he looks about him, his drooping wings he gathers for flight, and then with a scream of joy he soars away to the clouds. His eagle soul has found its object, God's free air. Jesus Christ is the atmosphere of the soul. In him the soul finds its true object and freedom. Men become the slaves of Christ because he makes them autonomous, sets them free.

The Alliance Sermon

Preached at the Baptist World Alliance, in Stockholm, Tuesday, July 24

By George W. Truett

THE representatives of more than 11,000,000 Baptists felicitate themselves that they are privileged to gather in this Baptist World Alliance, in the strategic and commanding city of Stockholm. Baptists are here gathered from the various nations of the earth to take counsel with one another concerning their common work as the followers of Christ. It is a joyful privilege to greet fellow Baptists from Sweden, and from every other country of Europe; and from Britain and all her far-reaching provinces; from China and Japan and Africa and from the islands of the sea, and from all sections of the Americas.

Baptists have thus come apart from every quarter of the globe to get a commanding vision of the world and to seek for a fresh enduement of superhuman power for their world task. It is quite a different world from what the messengers to this alliance faced at its last meeting in Philadelphia in 1911. These recent years have experienced one of the greatest tragedies, if not the greatest, in all history. The whole world has been shaken to its foundations by the great war. We need only to remind ourselves of the millions of graves made by the war, of the financial burdens it has imposed, both upon the present and the future, of the pitiful sufferings and sorrows that have come to many lands, and of the tremendous changes that have come to all, to realize how acute is the world's need of divine help at this hour. The instability of reconstruction, the philosophies of terror and hate, industrial unrest, social discontent, the strife of classes, racial prejudices, national and international misunderstandings, disregard in many sections for constituted authority, sorrow and weariness and overwrought nerves in a high-powered world, all send their echoes around the world and suggest how great is our need for a wisdom and a power infinitely greater than our own. Such power is indispensable in order that the Christian religion may be made a triumphant reality in our own lives and, through us, in the life of a sorely striken world.

Have we an adequate message for mankind in this troubled hour? Will it be said of us as it was said of Issachar, that we were men who had understanding of our times to know what Israel ought to do? Have we a gospel dynamic that is completely adequate for the world situation today? With unfaltering conviction we answer that we have. Paul was not overwhelmed in the presence of a sinning, suffering, morally bankrupt world. He had a remedy that civil government and material prosperity and science and invention and trade and legislation and learning were all unable to provide. He had the gospel of a divine Saviour and Lord. Paul staked his all on that gospel and was triumphant in his faith. Note his sublime declaration: "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." Paul made this sublime confession when it meant loss of friends, separation from his family, finally, the loss of his own life. Was Paul justified in his course?

> WE need no new gospel to win the world. The way of the cross is ever the way of triumph both for Christ and his people. The tragedy of the world is not poor wages, nor bad legislation, nor ignorance, nor poverty—the supreme tragedy of the world is sin. There is only one adequate remedy for sin, and that remedy is found in the cross of Christ. That cross is the sign manual in the redemption of mankind. It is the central fact toward which all previous history converges and all subsequent history diverges with its crimson tide forever. All the light of the sacred story gathers about that cross. Redemption is there and not elsewhere. The salvation of men is not to be found in creeds and ceremonies and rituals and sacraments and forms of righteousness which men perform, but it is to be found in Christ, the one mediator between God and man. Let Christianity be reduced to a mere ethic and you would immediately fling away its redeeming power. All such gospels are utterly bankrupt of the power necessary to regenerate and redeem a sinful world.

Paul was not ashamed of Christ, the author of the gospel. Surely there is nothing in the person of Christ to cause us shame. He was both God and man in one personality—the God-Man. Never did hyphen mean elsewhere what it means here. It both joins and divides. It marks distinction and yet unity. Jesus was as really God as though he were never man and as really man as though he were never God. In the face of this great mystery, it is no wonder that Paul exclaimed: "Great is the mystery of godliness: God was manifest in the flesh, justified in the spirit, seen of angels, preached unto Gentiles, believed on in the world, received up into glory." The most stupendous truth that ever challenged human thought is stated in these brief five words: "The word was made flesh." Christianity stands or falls with the person of Christ. From the great Arian controversy in the fourth century and even back to the days of the apostles, the battle theological has been waged about the person of Christ. Historic, apostolic, supernatural Christianity stands or falls with Christ.

That Christ was more than a man is attested by his words, by his works and by his character. Note the words, "Never man spake like this man." His is the ultimate and final word upon every subject upon which he speaks. Towards man he asserts that he is the object of faith, that all human ties, if need be, must be severed for him, and for his sake even death is to be welcomed. He assumes and affirms the attributes and perfections of Deity. If men stumble at his words, he asks them to look at his works. They attest his deity. From his cradle to his grave were the outflashings of his deity. The shepherds came to worship him and the magi came with their gifts for him when he lay a babe on his mother's breast. At the age of twelve he so asked and answered questions in the temple as to baffle the superlative wisdom of all the learned men who were gathered there. Jean Paul Richter was right when he said that Jesus with his pierced hands had lifted empires off their hinges and turned the stream of centuries backward into its channel. And Leckey was also right when he declared that the three brief years of Jesus' public ministry had done more to soften and regenerate mankind than all the disquisitions of all the philosophers and all the exhortations of all the moralists since the world began.

Behold Christ in his character. His standing challenged for two thousand years is: "Which of you convicteth me of sin?" The response to that question both from friend and foe is the answer of Pilate: "I find no fault in him." He was supernaturally born, he lived a supernatural life, he was supernaturally raised from the dead, and he is this hour exerting supernatural influence and power over the hearts and lives of millions of men and women. Modern civilization would fall into a shapeless mass if Christ were taken out of it.

Christ is the universal man, blending in himself all races and ages and temperaments and types. Born though he was in the first century, he belongs to all centuries. Born though he was a Jew, he belongs to all races. Born

(Continued on page 925)

Religious Education

Facing the Facts

The study of country Sunday schools is vital. Many great problems are involved. Hitherto these problems have not been considered in a separate discussion. It was considered that the rural worker would learn the basal principles, plans and methods in general discussions and adapt these to his peculiar needs, but all too many have failed to do this.

The bigness of the problems involved grows out of the well-known fact that nearly half the population in the United States and nearly three-fourths of the people in the South live in the country or in villages. This makes it a matter of most vital importance to see that the religious life of the country people is adequately provided for.

What happens in the country affects everything everywhere. The religious life of our rural people always has and always will largely determine that of the cities. Make a test at any state convention and you will find 90 per cent of the preachers in city pulpits came from country and village churches. Study local church leadership, church and Sunday-school officers, and you will find that they, too, largely came from the country.

The country is now furnishing the leadership in education, business and politics. To find how to make out of country boys and girls the best men and women possible is to find out how to safeguard every interest of the future. It is not enough to care for their bodies through boards of health, and to develop and train their minds through fine systems of public schools. There is also a definite challenge to country churches to make adequate provision for the best religious instruction and training.

The Challenge to Country Churches

Conditions have changed so greatly and so rapidly in a decade that the work in country churches is no longer simply a difficult problem; it is a positive challenge to every interest. The editor of a great farm paper says, "We must give more attention to country churches. This is important, not only because it is vitally necessary for a proper rural civilization, but also because the country church is breeding the largest proportion of town and city leaders, not only in churches, but also in banks, factories, stores and municipal life."

To meet such a challenge country Sunday schools must be used to the greatest advantage. We need the wisest counsel and the most earnest cooperative effort to make them as efficient as possible. They have achieved well in the past. No man of vision will question this, but old methods must be changed to meet new conditions.

There must be created such an atmosphere for worship that the work will be effective. This work will reduce itself to just four things:

1. Organization to take care of those who attend. This requires trained officers to conduct the school and sufficient classes and departments to meet the needs of a graded school.

2. A building and equipment to meet the needs of physical comforts. There must be some attractiveness, too, if we hope to reach and hold children and youth.

3. Enlistment, or reaching the great numbers not now in Sunday school. This means from 50 to 80 per cent of the entire rural population.

4. Teachers who by consecration, training and experience will teach the Bible so effectively that the lost will be saved and the saved taught and trained for service.—From "Building a Country Sunday School," by E. L. Middleton.

International Sunday School Lesson for September 2

PAUL THE APOSTLE

Lesson: Acts 22:3-10; Philippians 3:7-14
Golden Text: Philippians 3:14

Introductory

Saul was a Jew born at Tarsus, a university town and the capital of Cilicia. His father possessed the rights of a Roman citizen, so Saul was freeborn. He was educated under a rabbi and became one of the strictest of the Pharisees and a persecutor of the Christians. His journey to Damascus was for the purpose of putting Christians to death, but on the way he met Jesus, was won by him and became Paul the apostle. Following his conversion to Christianity and his confession to it at Damascus, Paul went into retirement in Arabia. Upon his return to Damascus he was subject to persecution and left the city by night. Later he, with Barnabas, was set aside for special missionary work. His three great missionary journeys cover his work in Asia Minor and Europe. His life was one of hardship, he was often imprisoned and his life was plotted against many times.

The Lesson

The first verses of the lesson are a part of Paul's speech to the mob which had seized him because he had been seen walking the streets of Jerusalem with Trophimus, a Greek from Ephesus, and it was thought he had violated the temple by taking Trophimus into its most sacred enclosures. "I am a Jew," declares Paul, "born in Tarsus of Cilicia, but brought up in this city at the feet of Gamaliel, instructed according to the strict manner of the law of our fathers, being zealous for God, even as ye all are this day." Then he proceeds to tell of his conversion on the way to Damascus, seizing, as he always did, this opportunity to preach the Christ.

The second part of the lesson shows Paul's estimate as to what he considers the real values in life. "What things were gain to me, these have I counted loss for Christ ....for whom I have suffered the loss of all things, and do count them but refuse, that I may gain Christ." And these things which Paul was counting "but refuse" were not slight matters from a worldly viewpoint. There is reason to suppose that he came from a family of wealth and distinction and power. "I press on toward the goal," he declares, and what is the prize toward which he is bending every power of his life? "The high calling of God in Jesus Christ."

Leading Thoughts

1. How many of the affairs of the world today that are displacing the Christ in the lives of men are "but refuse"? 2. "I press on toward the goal"—not an easy, when-I-feel-like-it religion with this man: "I press on....." 3. Why is a man called to be a Christian? "That he may lay hold on that for which he was also laid hold on by Christ Jesus."

"I think it is the duty of every man to go to church. Frequently I have to listen to sermons that bore me. But the church has contributed so enormously to civilization, its service to society is so great, that irrespective of all other considerations I feel I ought to support it and to attend whenever I can."

—Theodore Roosevelt.

Getting Pupils to Study the Lesson

Quite a general and a perplexing problem; how can it be solved? To the teacher a few suggestions are offered:

1. Expect it. If the faithful teacher really expects the pupil to prepare the lesson, and the pupil knows it, there is one incentive.

2. Ascertain whether preparation has been made. If it has, the scholar will be gratified; if not, he may be spurred to do better in the future.

3. Recognize the preparation made. This may be done in class work by the kind word of the teacher, or on the record of class and school, or may win honorable mention before the school at the close of the quarter or year.

4. Assign special work for the scholar to do during the week. He will commonly do it. Then be sure to call for it on next Sunday.

5. Tell the class how to study the lesson. Many follow no plan because, in fact, they know of no plan to follow. If some clear and simple method of study is presented them, they may do better.

6. Get the cooperation of parents. The pupils themselves may be asked to secure the help of their parents on some phase of the lesson; and a visit to the pupil's home will serve to deepen parental concern for the child's development in Biblical knowledge.—Sunday School Builder.

The Chimney Corner

A Rest and Change

This department is conducted by Miss Margaret T. Applegarth. Communications to her may be addressed in care of THE BAPTIST.

July 30. Obviously something is about to happen in our house. Jennie has all the trunks down and suitcases are on every chair. The only words ever addressed to me nowadays are: "Where is the collar and cuff set for this dress," "Do you see my hairnets anywhere?" "Must you really take this awful pair of walking boots?" "Do you suppose I could possibly want this dress? "It's such old style, but such a lovely color. It really might come in handy—."

"Then take it, by all means, my dear," I say obligingly. "It's always been my favorite dress."

"Mere man!" snaps Jennie disdainfully. I tactfully disappear, for absence makes the heart grow fonder. This vacation business is a mystery to me anyhow. Half an hour later I hear Jennie caling me: "Adolphus! A-dolphus! Where are you? The iron and the books and the hammock are ready to pack."

Quite unexpectedly she flings open the door of the tiny foot-wide cloak closet under the stairs where I sit squeezed and compressed into as small a niche as possible.

"Adolphus!" she gasps. "Have you gone quite mad?"

"My darling," I answer soothingly, "I am merely trying, in odd moments and by gradual degrees of discomfort, to accustom myself to the cribbed, cabined and confined quarters of our coming summer experience. The rest of our house is so peculiarly palatial—"

"Palatial?"

"And out-spread that I am in grave danger of dying of suffocation later on unless I now spend an occasional leisure moment practicing how to untie my necktie in—"

"Idiot!" says Jennie with a stern blue eye. "Go and pack those books and irons and hammocks."

"Presto!" I cry and scramble forth into daylight, for a stern blue eye in our family means that Jennie's sense of humor is temporarily in cold storage.

July 31. The train was a soothing mass of steaming red plush decorated profusely with humanity and shoe-box luncheons. Bananas, oranges and hard-boiled eggs were being consumed audibly when Jennie and I boarded the car. Jennie shut her eyes and assumed that pained expression which one always associates with early Christian martyrs. Jennie has acquired this new expression lately and does it rather well on the hoi polloi. They don't seem to mind much. But I do. For in spite of the name which fond parents bestowed on me I am a democratic soul and enjoy being in the thick of the maddening crowd. Jennie's nose, however, was elevated throughout this earlier stage of our journey at such an acute angle that I feared for its return to normalcy, but when we reached the junction where we changed cars for the through express Jennie thawed perceptibly She was too sweet for words to the colored porter when he fetched a green velvet pillow for her feet.

"This is bliss after that awful car," she sighed.

It was rather nice—although parlor car chairs are often hotter to sit on than the day coach variety—one is more surrounded by the velvet arm of luxury.

August 1. We arrived late last night in a torrential downpour. I was reminded of the expression: "It was raining cats and dogs," for it seemed to me that all night long I could hear kittens and puppies descending with sickening thuds on the tin roof just outside the cubicle which a thoughtful management had provided for our use at some scandalous sum per week. It is even smaller than I anticipated.

August 2. Jennie says the people look nice, and had she better wear her blue sweater or the yellow one. I vote for the yellow, being partial to that color, but Jennie wears the blue. This happens every summer, when my tastes are consulted each morning and regularly ignored. Curious, isn't it?

August 3. Today I asked the stable boy what there was in the way of a view in these parts.

"Wal," he drawled, "if twarn't for them hills being in the way you cud see all the way to Mt. Washington."

"Them hills" are enough for me: miles on miles of soft green velvet in fold on fold as if some giant clerk were obligingly matching samples. Jennie says I ought to be a poet. I said that if I were we certainly wouldn't be here in this expensive cubicle. Even poets have to choose their garrets.

August 4. Did what I always plan to do once every summer, got up to see the sunrise. It was a gorgeous pink affair, with diamonds and pearls on every bush and blade of grass. The glory of it was rather dissipated for me by old man Whalen on whose fence I was sitting lost in wonder when he trudged along on his way to see the cows.

"Mornin'!" says he.

"Mornin'!" says I.

"Sick or in love or s'thing like that?"

"Not one on your life, sir! But early rising is good for the health."

"Maybe that's true about health," said the old fellow quizzically, "but, next to the sun, rain, and fertilizer, it's the best thing there is for crops."

(Poets—we may say in passing are born and not made.)

It reminds me of the famous British admiral who was complimented on his superb health. "I attribute it," he said, "to plenty of exercise and no banquets. One-third of what we eat enables us to live."

"What becomes of the other two-thirds?" he was asked.

"Oh, that enables the doctor to live!"

But that admiral never summered in this hotel! What a curious thing it is to leave home in the thick of the string bean-corn-tomatoes-peach-etc. season and come to the country to eat canned vegetables and preserved fruits, all at some exorbitant sum per week.

August 6. Jennie says she has so few clothes that she hates to think of staying here another week.

"You've worn everything only once," I comfort her, "couldn't you begin all over again?"

"I'll have to," she moans.

Curious, this happens each summer. Too much to go in the trunk, but never quite enough to wear when we get away.

August 13. I have paid the bill and checked the trunks. We are both brown as berries, we have worn all the clothes we brought, we have walked miles and eaten dozens of cans of last year's fruits and vegetables. We came away for a rest and change. The bell-boy has just gotten the change, the proprietor got the rest! Even when we get home we can't afford fresh vegetables for some time, but—we have had a vacation.

The Young Reserves

Proverbs Can't Always Be Trusted

ISN'T it a curious thing that there are proverbs which say exactly the opposite thing from other proverbs? For example, read these partners:

A bird in the hand is worth two in the bush.

Nothing venture, nothing have.

What's sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander.

One man's meat is another man's poison.

* * *

Marry in haste, repent at leisure.

Happy is the wooing that's not long in the doing of it.

* * *

Health is better than wealth.

Health without wealth is half a sickness.

Perseverance kills the game.
If at first you don't succeed, try, try again.

* * *

Hope springs eternal in the human breast.
Hope deferred maketh the heart sick.

* * *

Fine feathers make fine birds.
Handsome is that handsome does.

* * *

Fine words butter no parsnips.
Honey catches more flies than vinegar.

* * *

Appearances are deceitful.
Apparel oft proclaims the man.

* * *

Out of sight, out of mind.
Absence makes the heart grow fonder.

* * *

Fortune favors the fool.
A fool and his money are soon parted.

* * *

You can't teach an old dog new tricks.
Never too old to learn.

* * *

A good beginning makes a good ending.
Win at first, lose at last.

* * *

A man's wealth is his enemy.
Money makes the mare go.

* * *

Knowledge is power.
A little knowledge is a dangerous thing.

---

Minnewaska, N. Y., August 5, 1923.

Dear Young Reserves:

You are doubtless watching our page to see news of the Japanese contest. It is impossible to give any results as yet, since all your letters and stories have had to be forwarded from Chicago to my home in Rochester and from there here to Minnewaska where I am spending the summer among these lovely mountains, resting! Probably you never get tired, yourselves, but I do; and this is the grandest place in the world in which to do nothing, because the first thing you know you are always doing—something.

Everybody has had a birthday and been given a party. Not "everybody," literally, but it seemed like everybody because I have been so busy making place-cards and favors and surprises for all the guests invited to these parties; you can see for yourselves that if twelve persons come to every party and there are five such parties, then somebody's fingers have been very busy cutting and painting! Did you ever look for a twig that was almost like a man in the way its little branching twigs formed arms and legs? I had lots of fun in finding dozens of twigs like this, to the proper ends of which I added cardboard hands, feet and heads. The grown-up people had never even guessed that twigs could be turned into people so easily, and they laughed a great deal over the comical appearance of these unexpected guests. Another easy and beautiful thing to do is to take a lacy paper doily putting a tiny bouquet of wild flowers through the center of it, then tying the stems with a ribbon to keep the doily in place. Queen Anne's lace, black-eyed Susans, daisies and "self-heal" form a bouquet that any florist could charge several dollars for! A third favor, simple to make, was a butterfly cut from colored paper, with a peppermint candy stick for the body. The paper wings then reared up into the air in a very airy-fairy fashion, for delicate little circles of color had been painted here and there to make the paper look more truly wing-like.

All this has nothing whatever to do with your contest entries, of course. I simply thought that if you were getting up any parties of your own you might enjoy copying these ideas. Your stories are slowly reaching me here in the mountains, and I hope that by next week the winning stories can be printed here for you all to read. Wishing each of you the best of vacations,

Your friend,

MARGARET T. APPLEGARTH.

Queen Anne's Lace

UP through the rocky pastures,
Where the blackberry globes hang low,
A stately dame has come wandering
Back from the long ago—
Back in her sable velvet,
With its showers of ancient lace,
In its pearls and curls and ribbons
That mock her weary face.

What says my Lady Marlborough
As the queen goes here and there?
Is not dame Abigal angry?
(She has those robes to wear.)
White as the bloom of the berry,
Fine as the cobweb's trace,
Scattered on thorn and bramble
Glistens our Queen Anne's lace.

Far and wide o'er the meadow
It shines where the sunbeams fall,
It waves where the brooklet ripples,
It droops by the old stone wall;
Wherever the queen may wander,
Tired of court and crown,
Her way is marked by the lily lace
The briers tear from her gown.

A Baptist World Exhibition

FOR many weeks a group of men and women in America and Europe made extensive preparations for one of the outstanding features at Stockholm during the week of the Baptist World Alliance. They compiled a vast amount of data, assembling photographs and outlining charts and diagrams for a world exhibition of Baptist work and progress. Throughout the United States, in Canada and in the various countries of Europe, as well as in New Zealand and Australia, Baptist organizations cooperated in gathering the material for this interesting display.

Nothing on a similar scale had been attempted heretofore in Baptist history. The visitor to Stockholm who took occassion to wander through the exhibition hall and to review the collections in the various rooms was surprised to learn of the vast geographical distribution of the denomination, from Bolivia to Japan, from Alaska to Czecho-Slovakia, from Nova Scotia to Central Africa. He became aware of the magnitude of its operations, from evangelisim to philanthropy, from printing to criminal reformation, from agriculture to architecture. He was inspired by the extent of the service which his denomination has rendered.

The committee of arrangements at Stockholm secured the use of a high-school building, situated a short distance from the great church where the congress assembled. The first floor of the building was used for the congress offices, registration rooms, information and entertainment bureaus, committee rooms and other purposes in connection with the congress meetings. The second and third floors, consisting of a dozen or more large rooms and the central auditorium, were devoted to the exhibition.

One room featured the growth of the denomination through statistical tables, graphs, diagrams and charts. The present denominational situation was compared with that over a period of years, going back as far as seventy-five years so as to coincide with the seventy-fifth anniversary of the Baptists of Sweden, celebrated during the three days prior to the alliance meetings.

Another room was transformed into a portrait gallery, in which photographs of famous Baptists of past generations were displayed. Many hallowed and inspiring memories were awakened as the visitor passed through this gallery and viewed the photographs of the men of God who served the denomination in their day and generation and whose work constituted the foundation of our present denominational life and progress.

A third room contained an exhibit of the denominational press. Here were displayed copies of all magazines, periodicals or papers published under denominational auspices, irrespective of whether denominationally owned or issued under private control. Delegates to Stockholm were greatly surprised to learn what a large amount of periodical literature is being issued by Baptists.

Naturally the missionary activities of Baptists had a prominent place. Several rooms were used for displaying types of missionary work in Canada and the United States, such as that among the American Indians, among the foreign-speaking people in the large cities and the work in rural sections and on the distant frontiers. The central auditorium room constituted the foreign mission exhibit. Each country was treated as a unit irrespective of the boards that may be at work in that country. Thus in India, the work being done by Northern Baptists, Canadian Baptists, English Baptists and Australian Baptists was grouped into one comprehensive exhibit on India. Other countries were similarly treated. A separate section was reserved for an exhibit of what negro Baptists are doing.

The several publication enterprises in the denomination had an exhibit consisting of photographs of their printing plants and a representative collection of books, pamphlets and other material that had been produced in recent years. Northern Baptists visiting Stockholm had an opportunity to see not only what their own Publication Society is doing but also the magnitude of the Southern Baptist publication work, what English Baptists are doing, and what Baptists in mission lands are doing, for the big mission press at Rangoon and the China

(Continued on page 925)

Young People's Work

Topic for September 2

LESSONS FROM THE PSALMS
(9) A Singing Psalm. Ps. 96:1-13
(Consecration Meeting.)

"O sing unto Jehovah a new song: Sing unto Jehovah, bless his name; Show forth his salvation from day to day."

Music has always played a great part in the religion of Jehovah. The Old Testament has many musical passages. These must have been sung with great religious fervor as the people of God came together for worship and for their various feasts. The singing of hymns has been one of the outstanding features of the worship services of the Christian church. We find in a very early report of an official investigation of the conduct of the early Christians these words, "They sang hymns to Christ as God."

The ninety-sixth psalm is a call to worship Jehovah. The stanzas picture the goodness and majesty of Jehovah. The power of the song increases until the very "trees of the wood sing for joy." The entire psalm should be rendered by some one who knows how to read and how to appreciate its music.

It is a long way from the music of this passage to that which we hear in many of our young people's societies, Sunday schools and churches. In many cases commercialism has gotten in its work. The song book man has practically become a nuisance and unfortunately music committees fall for almost anything that comes along, especially if it has a catchy title, and is the latest thing off the press.

The entire time for the discussion of the topic might well be given over to a few choice hymns, and a discussion of the kind of music most adaptable to young people's organizations. The society might organize a debate on the subject: Resolved that the old hymns of the church are best suited for use in young people's societies."

Questions for Discussion

1. Who is responsible for the music of the young people's society? The Sunday school? The church services?

2. Should the leader of the music prepare just as definitely as any one else taking part in the program?

3. If you were a member of the music committee of the church, on what basis would you select hymn books?

4. How much time should be given over to music during the regular preaching service?

5. Is a choir ever justified in planning so many preliminaries that the minister does not have sufficient time for the sermon?

6. Granted that the proper length of time is given over to music, what should be the length of the sermon?

These pages are for all Baptist young people's organizations. Send news items on activities, organizations, plans and methods of work for publication in THE BAPTIST to James Asa White, General Secretary 143 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago.

Convention Impressions

The convention has created within me the wish that I were younger so that I could engage more in this work for the young people.—W. H. Pevear.

It has made me want to live closer to Jesus.—Mrs. O. S. Vance.

The meetings which I have had the pleasure of attending have done so much for me. I feel as though I have been doing very little for my Master but I shall go back and do what God would have me do. —Anne C. Day.

This is the first time I have attended a B. Y. P. U. convention. I realize now as never before that God needs me. The inspiration I have received I will most surely pass on to others.—Helen D. Light.

This is the first convention our B. Y. P. U. has ever sent delegates to but I have received so much inspiration from it that I am going back and do my best to pass it on and see that we have a part in the ones from now on.—Zelma Snyder.

The Pennsylvania crowd may have been very noisy but they go home with enough inspiration to make the whole state wake up.—F. E. Van Kirk.

I never fully realized how much was being done toward the Christianizing of America until I came to this convention.—Thelma Parrott.

The help and inspiration which I have received from this great convention of young people is beyond measure, but I am going home with a determination to influence all young people to accept Christ as their best friend.—Muriel Brusie.

No one could attend this convention without receiving an inspiration and a desire to live a better Christian life.—Alta Higgins.

Christ is more real to me today than before I came to the convention. I intend to serve him better than ever.—Harry E. DeGroot.

It has been an inspiration to learn that so many young men are consecrating their lives to the cause of Christ.—Lizzie A. Black.

The meetings have helped me wonderfully spiritually, and I will tell of this great work in Philadelphia.—Mrs. DeGroot.

A clearer vision of my Saviour, and clear call for duty which by God's grace I will heed.—Clara M. Gordon.

The convention has proved the power of Christ to attract all who will come to him. —Ruth M. Barber.

This convention has certainly meant a great deal to me. This is the first convention that I have been able to attend, but I hope it will not be the last.—Mabell A. Steinkopf.

This convention has given me a more burning desire to serve God and come into closer communion with my heavenly Father.—Ruth E. Mahan.

This convention has shown me the need of religiously trained young people for His work.—Madeleine Arthur.

The convention has been inspiring inasmuch as it revealed to me the responsiveness of young people to the spoken word in present day terms built on the Eternal Rock, Christ.—Thomas Drever.

This convention has given me a new vision of a real Christian.—S. C. Johnston.

This convention has given me a larger appreciation of the need for and possibilities of a united force of Baptist young people the world over.—Waldo C. Machum.

This convention has made me see Christ's plan for this world a great deal clearer. As I go back to my church I shall work for B. Y. P. U. with a spirit and desire to bring other young people to know Christ.—L. D. Lippitt.

The convention has given me the desire to live more for Christ and do all I can to help others to do the same. I'll pull for B. Y. P. U.—Ramona Fans.

This is the first convention I have ever attended and I cannot find words to express how much I have gained by it. I have often been discouraged in my local union but after meeting with the best young life in America and hearing testimonies and messages I feel more competent and fitted to go back and work for the "attractive Christ."—M. Crusan.

This convention, my first, has meant a great deal to me, one of the greatest things in my life, and I hope I shall be able to attend others.—Rosalind Rood.

To me this convention has been a great awakening to the need of Christ for workers to tell the world of the "attractive Christ" and a definite consecration of my life to the ministry of the church of Christ.

This convention, my first but not the last, has meant a great deal to me, more than I can express. I am honestly glad that I have given my time to come here. —Evelyn Jackson.

B. Y. P. U. Extension Fund

Additional remittances for the B. Y. P. U. Extension Fund are as follows:

| | |
|---|---|
| B. Y. P. U. Wellsville, Kansas | $ 2.25 |
| B. Y. P. U. Prospect Park Church, Brooklyn, N. Y. | 5.00 |
| B. Y. P. U. Deputy, Ind. | 1.00 |
| Mrs. Porter, Michigan | 1.00 |
| B. Y. P. U. Ottawa, Kans. | 2.45 |
| B. Y. P. U. Ganson Street Church, Jackson, Mich. | 2.50 |
| B. Y. P. U. Quinter, Kans. | 2.00 |
| B. Y. P. U. Ottawa, Ill. | 1.36 |
| Mr. Harold Howard, Mt. Vernon, Ill. | 2.50 |
| | $20.06 |

Our Own Folks

A Layman's Job

By R. O. Jasperson

Up in New Hampshire there is a little church of eighty-five members and out of that church comes a suggestion for men's work that has the merit of practicability as well as usefulness.

This suggestion is in harmony with the idea that if a man puts business into religion he will soon be putting religion into his business. This is a rule that works both ways. Start by putting religion into business. It is going to result in that man striving to put business methods into religious methods.

Here is the suggestion that comes from New Hampshire: "A first-class layman's job is to help get up a uniform system or method of church accounting which will be simple enough for small churches, yet business-like enough to command the respect of all concerned."

The writer adds, "It would help in making comparisons if there were a uniform church fiscal year for all who report to the associations and the state conventions. Possibly a conference of church treasurers at the state conventions might be of value if there were not too much said by the leader, and a real conference and discussion arranged. Why not have a conference of church officers, especially deacons, addressed by a layman if possible?"

It may be these suggestions are already in effect; if they are, this man from New Hampshire is not aware of them.

The state convention season is approaching. Laymen interested in providing something useful for men to do have here an idea to work on. Encourage church treasurers to attend the state convention. Let them discuss the subject of uniform accounting and then resolve to send a representative to the Northern Baptist Convention at Milwaukee to work out a plan to be summitted to theentire denomination.

Right here let me say a word about the Milwaukee convention. If plans materialize, there will be a laymen's contingent at Milwaukee next year which will eclipse any previous representation. Laymen with ideas of the subject of men's work will be asked to go there and work them out for practical use: There will be a conference of leaders on how to lead. There should be a conference of church treasurers on how to do their job most effectively.

If the general program committee of the Milwaukee convention accedes to the request of the laymen, Saturday of convention week will be laymen's day, devoted especially to lay problems.

The place to begin is in the state conventions. Leaders of men's groups, church officers, and "privates" as well, will be getting into step if they attend their state conventions and there plan to be well represented at the great national meeting at Milwaukee.

The Iowa Baptist Assembly

By J. Orrin Gould

If anyone has the idea that the Iowa assembly, July 18-28, is sort of a farmer's picnic, he has another guess coming. Having attended similar meetings in five neighboring states, I am prepared to say that the Iowa assembly surpasses all of them in at least two ways: program and attendance.

Program

The outstanding feature of the assembly was the program under the direction of Rev. Victor N. Witter, director of religious education. And what a program it was! I wish all might know of its completeness but space forbids. Four different classes were held the first period of each day, five the second period, five the third period, and one the fourth period. Three hundred and fifteen registered for these courses, the majority taking at least three subjects each day. The total registration, and many did not register, was 1825, a decided gain over last year.

An interesting discovery was the fact that the most popular courses were the young people's with an enrolment of 140. The best work done during the assembly was in the specialized classes for children's work; credit being given on the new standard course for this work—the only classes thus credited. A church vacation school was conducted on the ground, the first time in the history of the assembly.

Faculty.

The faculty consisted of eleven leaders from outside Iowa, thirteen from the state, and four supervisors of children's play, recreation and athletics. With a single exception, all served without any remuneration except their tent and board while attending the assembly.

Special mention should be made of the work of the faculty as a whole. The young people's courses led by Rev. C. A. Carmen, J. Orrin Gould, and Rev. Douglas Haring were the most largely attended. The work of Mrs. Lewis Auten of Chicago with juniors was especially interesting. Miss Alice Brimson of Chicago conducted the woman's missionary study class. Mr. Geo. E. Merrill of New York City had a class of pastors in church architecture. Rev. W. H. Thompson of Ohio conducted a course on the rural church survey which brought forth a great deal of discussion. Rev. J. L. Barton of Omaha gave two addresses before the pastor's conference. Rev. C. R. Parker led the music. Dr. J. W. Weddell of Chicago led the vesper services.

The big day undoubtedly was Sunday when Rev. Albert H. Gage of Chicago, gave three addresses on the "Evangelism of Youth." The pavilion was more than overflowing to hear these addresses.

The Management.

The board of managers was nearly swamped by crowds from the opening of the assembly. It was evident that interest in the work had outgrown present accommodations. At the board meeting it was therefore voted to improve and enlarge the pavilion and add a wing to the dining room, thus providing for 300 at meals at a time. The young people of the state voted to begin a campaign for funds for the permanent equipment of the assembly grounds, fifty per cent to be given to the board for general improvements, and the remainder to be used for the construction of a young people's class-room. The assembly was a city of tents.

Awards.

Three pennants were given for the best note books completed during the assembly. Pennants were also given for the church having the largest attendance, Sheffield having seventy present. The mileage pennant was given to the Waukon delegation for 15,280 miles travelled to attend the assembly. A number of pennants were awarded for athletic events.

Future Plans.

A great program has been launched by the assembly for the coming year. A handbook, giving the state, associational and local constitutions, the state officers, and the new standard, will soon be published. A monthly program will be sent to every B. Y. P. U. president and pastor in the state, and later an outline for the weekly meetings. All of this material is to be supplied by the office of Director Witter. A state editor for young people's work has been elected and through him a monthly news letter from all of the young people's organizations will be issued.

A Tribute

By H. O. Rowlands

Within a few months there have been transferred from the membership of the church at Elgin, Ill., to the church triumphant three members who for many years were conspicuous for their Christian character in the community, their devotion to and service in the church.

Mary Bateman

The first to pass beyond was Miss Mary Bateman. During my pastorate in Elgin about thirty years ago, I had the privilege of baptizing her, and her conversion was positive, marked and thorough. She was the daughter of a religious family. Her father was well known as a citizen. Mary inherited the granitic character of her father and the sweet spirit of her mother; she was a composite of the graces of both. She trained herself for a school teacher, and a position was offered her in one of the Elgin schools. After years of service as a grade teacher, she was promoted to the office of principal of one of the largest city schools.

Her spiritual experience from the day of her conversion gave her a strong influence in church circles. No woman was ever baptized into the church who won more of the affectionate trust, the esteem and the cordial friendship of all the membership than did Mary Bateman.

Mrs. Gertrude Farnum

Mrs. Farnum was the daughter of one of the former pastors of the church, A. J. Joslyn, who later became pastor of a Chicago church. When I became pastor at Elgin, she was most active in the life of the church, especially as a singer. She sang for years in the choir as the leading soprano. Her social and religious influence was wide and her name will be affectionately cherished.

William F. Sylla

Deacon Sylla went home in July after a brief illness. He was about eighty-three years old, or young rather, for his eyes had not dimmed nor strength, mental or spiritual, abated. Every path he trod led him to usefulness and honor. In his young manhood he was a Union soldier, and an officer in the army. On his return he became a city alderman and later clerk of the city of Elgin, which office he held for over a third of a century until the type of city government changed. He was in the constant service of the city in private and in official capacity. For many years he was a member of the school board, until he won the affectionate title of "the grand old man of Elgin." He lived intensely in the world, but the world did not live in him.

It was as a member of the church I was most closely associated with Mr. Sylla. From boyhood he was a member of the Elgin Church and for about half a century, a deacon. His reputation for integrity, business capacity, and uncompromising fidelity to every responsibility he assumed secured for him the fullest confidence of his fellow members. His judgment was unerring and his irenic and tactful spirit saved him from the possible resentments and criticism of those who might differ from him. The confidence of his many friends and their affection for him grew almost to reverence with the passing of years.

In the long history of that church which has on its records many names of prominent men and women, none shines with greater luster than the name of Deacon William F. Sylla. Earth is better for his living and immortality more glowing since his passing into it.

Rev. George Lord

An Appreciation

By L. G. Clark

Just a thought concerning the homegoing of Rev. George Lord, as he was closing the evening sermon in his church at Monrovia, Cal., July 8. His text was, "Not by might nor by power; but by my Spirit, saith the Lord." He closed the Bible, stepped back to his chair and sat down repeating the text once more and then sank into the arms of the brother ministers who were with him in the union service. His last words as he went away, were, "It is glorious to be filled with the Spirit."

Last night, again, I was thinking about that wonderful evening at the close of Brother Lord's great sermon on the transcendent value of spirit force, and how his life was ever a radiant example of the truth. These words came to my mind:

His spirit-filled message well said,
His Christlike work well done,
His evening star bright as meridian sun,
His going away, the radiant splendor
Of an all glorious day.

"Let me die the death of the righteous and let my last end be like his!"

Mr. Lord was loved and honored by all who knew him. He was a great preacher and a truly great and good man. His homegoing has made a profound impression, not only upon the churches of Monrovia, but upon the entire city as well. His funeral was one of the most impressive services ever held in this part of our state. Flags were at halfmast on our school buildings and the business houses were closed during the time of the funeral services.

For nearly seven years I have had the privilege of calling him my pastor. And I am one among many who feel profoundly grateful to God for giving us such a noble friend and teacher and Christian leader. Like Joseph of Aramathea, he was "a good man, and a just." His love for Jesus and what he did for him can never be forgotten.

Death of Rev. George Boardman Ilsley

After a trip across the continent and after attending the anniversaries at Atlantic City, Doctor Ilsley went to his old home at Limerick, Me., to visit his older brother and sister. While there, he was suddenly called by God.

Doctor Ilsley was born in Limerick, Aug. 17, 1839. He was a member of the Colby class of '63 and a classmate of Judge Percival Bonney, Rev. C. M. Emery, Col. Francis S. Hesseltine, Chief Justice Whitehouse and other notable men. He also graduated from Newton in 1866 and was ordained at Springvale where he served as pastor for seven years. Pastorates at Yarmouth and Lewiston were followed by the great work of his life in Columbia Street, Bangor, where he served for nineteen years. He was afterwards pastor for many years at Westbrook.

Doctor Ilsley was active in the work of the state convention and was its president in 1898-99. He was also superintendent of schools in Sanford, Yarmouth and for thirteen years in Bangor.

He was married in early life to Jennie D. Lowell who was his helpmate until she died in 1914, the last year of his pastorate at Westbrook. Two of his children, Mr. Reuben L. Ilsley of the Treasury Department, Washington; and Mrs. Frank W. Padelford, survive him. His grandchildren, Dr. Morrill L. Ilsley of Ashland, N. C.; Priscilla H. Ilsley, a student at Goucher College; and Norman J. Padelford, a student at Denison, will carry on his work.

Doctor Ilsley's long life of service prove his Master's word, "He that followeth me shall not abide in darkness but shall have the light of life." Maine, that was long blessed by his ministry, will long hold him in grateful memory.

Church News by States

Atlantic Coast

MAINE

Mrs. Ida W. Kingsley, wife of Rev. A. E. Kingsley, recently passed away. Because of her helpfulness, her loss will be felt by the churches in Bangor, South Berwick and Hebron where Mr. Kingsley served.

VERMONT

Springfield, a busy, hustling, growing village of 6,000 inhabitants has never had a Baptist church. About three months ago the state convention purchased a site with parsonage. Rev. Walter F. Sturtevant, assistant superintendent, was sent on the field and after about two months' labor, on July 22 a new church with fifty-six members, fifteen of whom had been baptized the previous week, was organized. State secretary Davidson was present and spoke. He also presented the constitution and by-laws for the church which is called Calvary Baptist Church. A council was called July 24 which elected Rev. W. E. Lombard moderator, and Rev. O. H. Rankin, secretary. After a statement by Mr. Sturtevant, and examination of the articles of faith and church covenant, it was unanimously voted to receive Calvary Church into the Woodstock Association. Rev. E. C. Weeks of North Springfield gave the charge to the church and extended the hand of welcome into the association. Dr. W. A. Davison welcomed the church into the state convention. The address was delivered by Prin. John B. Cook of Vermont Academy. The outlook for a strong church in Springfield is encouraging. Mr. Sturtevant will return to the field Sept. 1 and remain with the church two or three months until the right man is found to take up the pastorate. This church will offer an unusual opportunity to a man who is a builder, and is able to build up the Bible school and church membership.

MASSACHUSETTS

Rev. Eben F. Francis, pastor of the First Church, Lynn, is afflicted by the sudden death of his daughter Ruth Isabel, wife of Mr. George E. Ehringer, executive secretary of child welfare work for the state of Oregon. Mrs. Ehringer was buried in Portland, Ore., Aug. 1., and leaves three little boys.

The First Church, Melrose, in a letter to Pastor McDowell, expressed its sorrow at his departure and its appreciation of his services in the past.

Dr. L. L. Henson, of Covington, Ky., is passing his vacation in the state and is supplying prominent pulpits. He preached Aug. 5 for the First Church, Cambridge.

Rev. Charles R. Powers closes his work at Avon as stated supply, with the coming of the new pastor, Rev. John A. Harding.

Dr. Isaac W. Grimes is supplying the Belmont Street Church, Watertown, through the vacation period.

NEW YORK

Rev. H. B. Brown of Hamilton, Ontario, supplied the Prospect Avenue Church, Buffalo, Sunday, Aug. 5.

John C. Wiley was recently ordained at the York Church. Dr. Clarence A. Barbour preached the sermon. A. L. Boynton was clerk. Mr. Wiley is a graduate of Rochester Seminary.

NEW JERSEY

On July 29, the new $10,000 parsonage of the Metuchen Church was dedicated. The pastor, Rev. Calvin A. Hare, and Mrs. Hare are spending the month of August at Atlantic City.

EASTERN PENNSYLVANIA

The Brandywine Church, Chadds Ford, recently celebrated the fifth anniversary of pastor and Mrs. Floyd H. Andrus and presented them with two parlor chairs. The Brandywine Church is nearly 210 years old.

The North Church, Camden, is the recipient of $18,000 from the family of the late F. Wayland Ayer. The gift is for the purpose of entirely wiping out the floating debt of the church where for half a century Mr. Ayer was superintendent of the Sunday school and president of the board of trustees. For the first time, the church this summer held a vacation school with an average attendance of 125. Mr. O. H. MacDonald was in charge. The pastor, Rev. James Dalton Morrison, is spending his vacation in Hawkesbury, Ontario. During August the supplies will be Mr. Willard Johnson, and Revs. Milton J. Westphal, Benjamin P. Hope and Oren H. Baker. As the result of an every member canvass $11,000 was subscribed for local work.

Mississippi Valley

INDIANA

Rev. F. A. Hayward of Indianapolis recently supplied the pulpit of the First Church, Terre Haute. The other supplies are Rev. C. R. Parker of Cedar Rapids, Ia., and Rev. A. A. Cohn, Sullivan, Ind.

Rev. I. C. Overman, pastor for four years of the First Church, Greensburg, has accepted the call of the church at Shelbyville and will begin his new work early in October.

On July 29, the Mount Pleasant Church dedicated its new building. The amount needed to cover the indebtedness was oversubscribed by $500. Superintendent Morse preached the dedicatory sermon. The building is of brick and cost $6,500, $4,500 of which has already been paid. Rev. S. G. Huntington conducted the financial campaign.

MICHIGAN

The new $75,000 building of the First Church, Redford, Mich., was recently dedicated. The main auditorium has a seating capacity of 600. The old church house will be used as a banquet room. The second and third floors are especially equipped for departmental and grade work. Seatings and woodwork are finished in grey, blending with the wall and ceiling. Rev. Harold H. Davis has been pastor since June 1, 1918. The Redford Church was organized with twenty members in 1903. The membership now includes that of the Bell Branch Baptist Church which was organized in 1831.

ILLINOIS

The church at Roodhouse recently conducted a three weeks' vacation school. The average daily attendance was 136. There were fifteen volunteer teachers while the pastor, Rev. John S. Brinkman was principal.

The First Church, Rockford, is now pastorless. Rev. E. P. Brand supplied the church Sunday, Aug. 5. The general feeling in the church is that it must have a pastor for full time for preaching and pastoral work. The field presents a splendid opportunity.

Rev. W. H. Mundell conducted a memorial service at the First Church, Baltimore, in honor of the late President Harding. The work is progressing under the leadership of Mr. Mundell.

IOWA

After forty-seven years, the church at Storm Lake is building a new edifice costing $25,000. Rev. J. A. Harley closes his work at Estherville and will take up the work at Storm Lake Sept. 1.

Rev. J. W. Case of Ripley, N. Y., became pastor at Spirit Lake May 1 and the work has been progressing since that time. He returned to Iowa after several year's work in the East.

Rev. T. J. Gibson closed his work at Little Cedar and began work at Harlan Aug. 1.

Rev. Harold P. Norton began work at Renwick late in the spring. He recently conducted a vacation Bible school in the church.

Rev. A. W. Caul is field worker for the northwestern district. In addition to his many other duties he was one of the managers of the assembly held July 18-28. He had no small part in making it the success which it attained.

Rev. O. H. Sisson, nome after six years in Burma, was a visitor at the assembly. He will visit different churches, associations, and other organizations while in this country.

The reserve officers of the Seventh Corps area, headquarters at Omaha, Nebr., held its third annual meeting at Des Moines August 2-3. One hundred and fifty delegates were present from eight adjoining states. Rev. J. Orrin Gould was the only chaplain of the area present at the meeting. Final arrangements were made for next year's meeting at Kansas City, Mo. The C. M. T. C. is now in camp at Fort Des Moines and 1000 boys from this area are there for a month's military training. Parents having sons in the camp will receive special attention for their sons by writing Chaplain C. L. Miller, Fort Des Moines, Ia.

WISCONSIN

The First Church, La Crosse, Rev. W. S. Stewart, pastor, is the only church in the city to continue its evening services during the summer months. All meetings have been well attended. The church has already appointed committees to prepare for the meeting of the state convention in the city in October.

OHIO

The Madisonville Church, Cincinnati, is determined to fulfill its obligation to the New World Movement. Four special offerings will be taken on the appointed pay-up days. On Sunday, July 29, the goal set was $200. This entire amount was raised and the church is confident that the remainder will be secured. Harry S. Mabie is pastor.

MINNESOTA

The Judson Church, Minneapolis, has extended a call to Rev. Howard Vernon of Cleveland. He will begin work in his new field Sept. 23. Although a young church, Judson has a membership of more than 500 and has an open membership representing fifteen denominations engaged in

LOVING—LIVING—LIFTING

the watchword for 1923-1924

LOVING—"We love Him because He first loved us."

Because we love Him, we would spare nothing in proving our loyalty to Him. Our loyalty calls for our gifts. Through day-by-day use of our "Might Boxes" and gifts from our check books, Baptist women hope to present a love gift of $1,000,000 at the time of the Loyalty Luncheons and Echo Luncheons to be held from coast to coast in the fall. A committee on ingathering of funds is planned at every Luncheon point.

SEND FOR A SUPPLY OF MIGHT BOXES
PLAN THOUGHTFULLY YOUR OWN LOVE GIFT

LIVING—"He lives; we shall live also."

Because He lives, we women live today the abundant life. Living that life calls for living prayers. Through organized prayer groups in our churches and daily united supplication in our homes Baptist women seek to unlock the powers within the denomination and the abundant life to all the world. Every Loyalty Luncheon city will have its Prayer Committee.

FORM A PRAYER GROUP IN YOUR CHURCH
COVENANT WITH ANOTHER WOMAN FOR A PRAYER HOUR

LIFTING—"Bear ye one another's burdens and so fulfill the law of Christ."

Because we know the comfort of the Burden Bearer, we Baptist women would fulfill that law. It calls for a lifting service. The debts of our Societies, the operating budget for the year, the discouragement and added burdens of our missionaries, the weariness of a wandering world must all be lifted. The aid of every woman, in the Continuation Campaign will be a lifting service dedicated to that end. A Luncheon will be held near you. It will need your help.

BE ENTHUSIASTIC IN YOUR OWN CHURCH
LEND YOUR REAL SUPPORT IN ALL THE PLANS

WOMAN'S CONTINUATION CAMPAIGN

needs 700,000 Baptist women community service. Rev. Mark F. Sanborn was at one time pastor.

LOVING — LIVING — LIFTING

NEBRASKA

TEMPLE CHURCH, LINCOLN, has extended a call to Rev. Ralph Daily, who recently graduated from Ewing College. Mr. Daily will continue his studies at the state university in connection with his pastoral duties. He succeeds Rev. F. W. Ainslie who resigned to become executive secretary of the state convention.

Rocky Mountain States

COLORADO

THE CHURCH AT SIMLA was dedicated July 2. Rev. C. B. Lewis has been called as pastor. Judge F. W. Freeman and Dr. Frank E. Eden preached at the dedicatory services. Pledges were secured to cover the entire indebtedness.

Want Ads

Wanted: Teachers for public and private schools, colleges and universities. Education Service, Steger Building, Chicago; Southern Building, Washington, 1254 Amsterdam Ave., New York.

A Permanent Income

Life Annuities on One or Two Lives

On one life the rate of income varies from four to nine per cent a year, payable semi-annually.

On one or two lives the rate varies from four to eight and three-tenths per cent a year, payable semi-annually.

A survivorship agreement provides a permanent income for two lives.

For annuity booklet and samples of single and survivorship agreements, please address

CHARLES L. WHITE
23 East Twenty-Sixth Street
New York City
The American Baptist Home Mission Society

When Making Wills and Legacies Remember
Our Corporate Name Is:
"WOMAN'S AMERICAN BAPTIST HOME MISSION SOCIETY"
Mrs. Mary E. Bloomer
Treasurer
276 Fifth Avenue, New York City

Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society
(CORPORATE NAME)
ALICE M. HUDSON, Treasurer
276 Fifth Avenue New York City

IT IS A BURNING SHAME

that so many churches are without sufficient insurance and not properly safeguarded against fire.

Baptist Department
Mutual Insurance Corporation
furnishes protection AT COST
FIRE, LIGHTNING and WINDSTORM

No assessments; easy payments; profits to policyholders; legal reserve for protection of policyholders same as stock companies.

Parsonages, Homes and Personal Effects of Church Members also insured.
No agents. Deal direct.

National Mutual Church Insurance Co. 22 years old under same management. Address Henry P. Magill, Manager, 1509 Insurance Exchange, Chicago, Ill.

Obituary

MRS. J. C. SHOFNER

Mrs. J. C. Shofner died July 27 at Sonoma, California, from pneumonia. After graduating from Mills College, she married Lieutenant J. C. Shofner, becoming with him a member of White Temple Portland, Oregon.

For the past four years they have been active members of the Napa Baptist Church. In her going the Napa Church loses one of its best members, for she was a woman of faith, energy, ability and consecration. She was greatly loved.

She leaves to mourn her husband, four children, Webb, Henry, Caroline, Wesley and many friends.

ALLEN W. HEALD

Allen W. Heald was born in Vermont, July 30, 1838, and passed away at his home, 2101 Cass St., Joliet, Ill., July 31, 1923. Death came as the result of apoplexy accompanied by a severe fall. He is survived by his widow, Nettie C. Heald; a son, Rev. Prescott S. Heald, and wife; one grandson, John Allen Heald; and one brother, Pleasant O. Heald of Bottiman, N. D.

Mr. Heald went to Joliet in 1897 and started a linen supply company which he sold in 1919. He served as adjutant for three and a half years in the Civil War with Company K, Seventh Illinois Cavalry. He was a familiar figure in the business affairs of Joliet and took an active part in the Baptist church, of which he was a consistent and beloved member, serving as deacon for many years. He was faithful and true in every relationship of life.

Funeral services were held from the home Thursday afternoon, Aug. 2, and were conducted by his pastor, Rev. Raymond S. Carman. Interment in Elmhurst Cemetery. Final rites at the grave were in charge of Bartleson Post, G. A. R.

Our Book Shelf

Happy Childhood Days, by Fannie Vail Gage. Philadelphia: Judson Press. 75 cents.

Designed for a vacation school in which the primary children are assembled in a separate department. It develps a correlated program around home life, the world of nature, work, play, and the church. Provision is made for dramatization not requiring costumes or settings. Supplemental missionary stories are presented for each of the five weeks of the course, together with two other stories for each day. Songs with the music are also given and other helps indicated.

Unity and Rome, by Edmund Smith Middleton. New York: Macmillan. $2.

This is a well-written plea for the organic union of all Christian church organizations under the leadership of the Roman Catholic church. The author's conclusions are bolstered up by copious quotations from the early church fathers. It is in this material, rather than the propaganda for the pope, that the value of the book lies. The author is so wholly in favor of the headship of the Catholic church that he is evidently attempting to convince us of his beliefs, rather than dealing with the matter in the more effective way of balancing the pros and cons over against each other. Argument which sees only one side to a question never settles a question. As a fervent setting forth of the "I Will" school advocating complete union with and subjection to the Roman church, this volume is of interest. That it will have much effect in producing movement in that direction is to be doubted.

The Soul of Modern Poetry, by R. H. Strachan. New York: Doran. $2.

Doctor Strachan has produced a volume of intense value and stimulus to all forward-looking souls interested in the newer poetry, its strivings and its achievements. Emphasis is laid upon the spiritual attitude of the poet rather than his technical type. It is a survey admirable in its scope and contents, fair and candid in the critical estimates, displaying wide reading and a fineness of perception and appraisement. Many ministers and lecturers will welcome the book for its wealth of imagery and valuable quotations. It is a fine addition to the growing list of books dealing with literature as a fine art and as a molder of spiritual aims and aspirations.

A Modern Encyclopedia of Illustrations, by G. B. F. Hallock, New York: Fleming H. Revell Co. $3.

This book reminds us of Foster's illustrations of the last generation and other similar publications popular in their day and generation. We were prepared to expect superiority in such a book when prepared by Doctor Hallock, and we are not disappointed, for he is an omniverous reader of prints where "illustrations" profusely grow and his experience as writer and editor has developed a keen appreciation of the best selections in prose and rhyme, both for their merits and their adaptation for days, occasions and persons. This is an octavo of 450 pages. The contents are well arranged as to topics, occasions, days and events with a copious index so that the "ammunition" needed is conveniently secured. The "foreword" of the author is a short but very practical code of instruction on the use and abuse of illustrations in public speaking. To those who need and can use such a volume, we commend this one as equal to the best we have seen, and it will prove itself a "very present help in time" of need.

The Glory of His Robe, by Edward John Stobo, New York: Doran. $1.50.

We prefer the subtitle to this volume to the major: "Meditations for the Quiet Hour." A series of fifty short essays on the every-day experiences and events that touch us. We never realize how interesting those things are until such writers as the author of this volume accentuate them. Mark a few of the subjects: "The Worth of a Smile," "Forgiving One Another," "Worry," "Rain and its Compensations," "Why I Go to Church" and the others quite as interesting. The author has a charming style—homely, lucid, incisive, and a faint coloring of humor that makes reading of his lectures restful as well as helpful. Keep the volume on your table, near by, as you would a bouquet of flowers.

The Clarendon Bible: Acts of the Apostles, by A. W. Blunt: Clarendon Press $1.50.

This volume is one in the series of the Clarendon Bible which we have previously noticed. The contents are forty or fifty maps and illustrations, ancient and modern; introduction containing a discussion of Luke, the author of the book, its sources, times and authority; the text is in the revised version with a commentary at the close. While the commentary is not as exhaustive as Hackett's and other serial works, yet we consider this one as helpful, satisfactory and complete as we have examined in many a day. We gladly commend it. The introduction is one of the best we have ever read.

A Baptist World Exhibition

(Continued from page 919)

Baptist Publication Society also had exhibits at Stockholm.

Several rooms were set aside for the exhibit of the educational interests. Here the visitor viewed photographs of Baptist colleges, seminaries and training schools in various parts of the world Again he received a new and larger impression of how the denomination is meeting the task of educating its rising generation, such as he could not receive by viewing merely the work of one group in the denomination.

Other features at the exhibit included a presentation of the denominational philanthropic enterprises, such as hospitals, orphan asylums, old people's homes, etc., and a collection of curios, idols, etc., from all parts of the world particularly from mission fields where Baptists are trying to bring the gospel of Christ to people still living in darkness, superstition and sin. One of the most fascinating features was a display of Baptist church architecture. Photographs of typical church buildings in every continent were exhibited together with complete sets of drawings and architects' designs for new church buildings.

The executive committee of the Baptist World Alliance at its meeting in London last July, appointed a general exhibit committee with Dr. W. Y. Fullerton of London as its chairman. Cooperating with him were Prof. J. Nordstrom of Stockholm, Mr. Frank E. Burkhalter, publicity director of the Southern Baptist 75 Million Dollar Campaign, and Secretary William B. Lipphard of the American Baptist Foreign Missionary Society. A special committee among Northern Baptists on which the several national societies and boards, including the Board of Promotion, are represented, worked for several months compiling the material. The exhibit was arranged and open for inspection a week before the Baptist World Alliance meetings began so that the thousands of people who attended the seventy-fifth jubilee of the Swedish Baptists also had an opportunity of viewing this extensive display of Baptist activities around the world.

The Alliance Sermon

(Continued from page 916)

though he was in Bethlehem, he belongs to all countries. And every man, be he Saxon or Teuton or Mongolian, or Slav or Latin, or whatever his race or country, who truly comes near to the heart of Christ shall thrill with the consciousness of his sympathy and divine power. Like Paul, we would commit ourselves without hesitation or reserve to the personal Christ, asking nothing more in this world and the next than to know his will and to follow it forevermore.

Paul was not ashamed of the power of Christ's gospel in the lives and affairs of men and of nations. This gospel has infallible and innumerable credentials that it is the power of God unto salvation. It has converted South Sea cannibals, African Hottentots, Indian Parias, Chinese opium sots, Korean demon worshippers, Confucian scholars, Mohammedan fanatics, Brahmin priests, Buddhist devotees, Japanese statesmen, and on and on, a list which no man can number, out of every tribe and tongue and condition of mankind. The gospel has given birth to spiritual kingdoms. It has laid the cornerstone of our highest civilization. It has founded institutions of learning. It has inspired our best literature. It has given new conceptions of sin, new ideas of beauty, and new hopes of immortality. It has changed barbarism to civilization. It has emancipated the slave. It has conserved childhood, dignified womanhood, and glorified the home. Throughout all the earth it has accomplished social and moral transformations which to the human heart has seemed impossible.

Men have sought to get rid of Christ

JAMES MONROE

Was PRESIDENT of the UNITED STATES when THE AMERICAN BAPTIST PUBLICATION SOCIETY came into being.

1824 While the Monroe Doctrine was being promulgated, Samuel Cornelius, the pioneer in Colportage work carried tracts in his high hat for the purpose of evangelization. He was the forerunner and occasion of the establishment of our great Publishing House.

1923 (Almost one hundred years later.) We have telephones, motor, electric and steam cars, an efficient postal service, and even the aeroplane, and radio, among other inventions, to aid in the wide and rapid spread of the Gospel.

The resources of the Society have increased since its beginning, 500 times faster than the population of the United States, but not fast enough to keep pace with the need.

Every effort is being made to keep abreast the marvelous developments of the past century. Beside being THE Publishing House of the Baptist Denomination, Our Society is an effective evangelizing agency.

$12,161,521.67 IS NEEDED THIS YEAR TO CARE FOR THE WORK OF ALL ORGANIZATIONS PARTICIPATING IN THE NEW WORLD MOVEMENT.

American Baptist Publication Society

1701 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Established 1824

THE GENERAL BOARD OF PROMOTION OF THE NORTHERN BAPTIST CONVENTION.

in two ways, that is, by critical analysis and logical analysis. But violent and persistent as have been their efforts to destroy Christ, there he stands towering above storm-tossed sea of human doubt and speculation like some majestic rock at whose base the angry waves foam out their rage and dash themselves in vain.

Glance for a moment at Christ's achievements in history. He moves westward in the person of the apostle to the Gentiles and kindles a flame of faith in the islands of the Mediterranean. He plants his banner at Antioch. He sweeps through, and Lystra and Derbe and Asia Minor begin to bow before him. He visits Ephesus and Diana begins to totter from her throne. He crosses the Hellespont, amid the quakings of the earth, he wins trophies at Philippi. In Athens, amid the classic surroundings of the Acropolis and Parthenon, his voice is heard calling men to repentance. At length in Rome itself he grapples the world power. When the empire is broken up and barbarians come in hosts sweeping over the ancient empire Christ lays his transforming hand on their untamed spirits. Clovis is converted. The Goths are evangelized. The Franks and Gauls and Scandinavians come bending to him. England owns Christ's sway. America, through Cavalier and Puritan and Pilgrim, is founded and when the feet of these men touched American shores, the "sounding isles of the dim woods rang with the anthem of the free" and the praise of Christ.

The church is Christ's monument. It has had a long and checkered career and has often proved unworthy of its high calling, but today it is the fairest among ten thousand institutions and the chief glory in all the earth.

The modern missionary enterprise attests the deity of Christ. Only in the gospel message of a risen Christ could be found the vigorous faith that would send men into the missionary enterprise. Call over the great missionary names of Carey and Judson and Yates and Morrison and Livingston and all the rest. When did any comfortable and self-satisfied ethical culture ever produce one single person to be placed in the same category with these heroic names?

Christianity stands or falls with a world faith. Christ is not a national Saviour but he is to be the Saviour of all mankind. He is the propitiation for our sins and not for ours only but also for the sins of the whole world.

We long for enduring peace and for wars to cease unto the ends of the earth. It is most inspiring to think of that prophetic day when men shall beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning hooks and when nations shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more. But when did the prophet say such halcyon day would come? Not when enemies are crushed on the battlefield, but when all nations shall walk in God's paths. The most vital matter therefore in the world is for Christ's friends to lay their every power under tribute to preach Christ's gospel to every creature and to call all nations to walk in his paths. Our work shall never be done until at the name of Jesus every knee shall bow and every tongue confess that he is Lord to the glory of God the Father. We must rest not and halt not until we write his name large across the sky of the whole world, and make his voice the deep undertone of all human life and apply his principles to the solution of every problem in the world. When will Pentecost be repeated? It will be repeated when Christ's people undertake Pentecostal tasks in the old-time Pentecostal power.

We need no new gospel to win the world. The way of the cross is ever the way of triumph both for Christ and his people. The tragedy of the world is not poor wages, nor bad legislation, nor ignorance, nor poverty—the supreme tragedy of the world is sin. There is only one adequate remedy for sin and that remedy is found in the cross of Christ. That cross is the sign manual in the redemption of mankind. It is the central fact toward which all previous history converges and all subsequent history diverges, with its crimson tide forever. All the light of the sacred story gathers about that cross. Redemption is there and not elsewhere. The salvation of men is not to be found in creeds and ceremonies and rituals and sacraments and forms of righteousness which men perform, but it is to be found in Christ, the one mediator between God and man. Let Christianity be reduced to a mere ethic and you would immediately fling away its redeeming power. All such gospels are utterly bankrupt of the power necessary to regenerate and redeem a sinful world.

The one hope of the world lies in the reign of Christ. There are many occasions of division and rivalry among the nations. We do not disparage the work of the diplomats and statesmen, but redemption of the world does not lie in that direction. The world's hope lies in the Saviourhood and Lordship of Christ. He is not going to divide the world with Mohammedanism or Buddhism or Confucianism or any other ism that opposes Christ. His dominion shall extend over every acre of the earth.

The crowning glory of Christ's gospel is that it may be fully tested and proved in the crucible of human experience, Christ submits himself to the scientific test of demonstration by experiment. Men may call on Mohammed or Confucius or Buddha and they will get no answer. Let them call upon Christ and they will be forgiven of sin and clothed with moral reenforcement for the battles of life. Destructive criticism can not finally shake our confidence in the Bible, because in that God-given book we find revealed our own experience. With our more than eleven million Baptists we may quickly fill the whole earth with the knowledge of Christ if we will only be faithful to him. The world can be saved only by the gospel of Christ. Society is to be transformed by transforming its individual units.

Stupendous days and demands now confront us. Will we tread the paths of the cross, abjuring all selfish ease and giving our best for him? It is an hour for our rededication as preachers to the faithful preaching of this dynamic and divine gospel. It is an hour when parents should bring their children with the light and joyfully give them to his service. It is an hour when every talent of learning, of wealth, of piety, of prayer, should be laid on the altar for the winning of the world to Christ. The open door of the ages is before us. The whole world invites and challenges immediate occupation for Christ. Autocracy must go, both in church and state. Sacramentalism and sacerdotalism must likewise go—they are the graveclothes of a moribund and decadent faith. The day of the inalienable rights and worth of the individual is everywhere coming to the fore. Christ's people are to cast up the highway for the spread of his gospel everywhere. If they will only be true to their privileges and resources the name of Jesus will soon be known in every dialect under heaven.

CROZER THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY

Seminary is located within thirteen miles of Philadelphia, to whose churches, libraries and art collections students have ready access. Near-by rural districts furnish opportunity for Christian work under the supervision of the department of Practical Theology.

Tuition and Room-rent free. Scholarships available to qualified students.

Seminary's relation to University of Pa. warrants offer of the following:

1. Regular Course for Preachers and Pastors, Seminary. Degree of B.D. or Diploma.

2. Course with emphasis on Religious Education. Seminary and University. Degrees B.D. and A.M.

3. Training for Advanced Scholarship. Seminary and University. Degrees Th.M or Ph.D.

For Catalog—
MILTON G. EVANS, LL.D., Pres., Chester, Pa.

EXTENSION COURSE

Seminary maintains a Correspondence department for men unable to take a course in residence. Cost, including books, $10 a year. Certificate on completion. Address—
ELI S. REINHOLD, A.M., Dir., Chester, Pa.

PILLSBURY

Academy for Boys

Seventy miles from Minneapolis; large campus and seven modern buildings; military training, all athletics; high standards of scholarship and conduct; small classes insuring individual attention; terms reasonable; illustrated catalogue on request.

Milo B. Price, Principal

Box 397F Owatonna, Minnesota

Gordon

Theological, Missionary, Religious-Educational College course of 4 years, college degree of Th.B. Graduate School of Theology, 3-year course, degree of B.D. An embodiment of the highest ideals of evangelical culture and unity.

NATHAN E. WOOD, President
Gordon College of Theology and Missions, Boston, Mass.

DES MOINES UNIVERSITY

JOHN W. MILLION, A. M., LL. D., President

A growing university in a progressive city of the Middle West—standard courses—best of advantages, including access to great libraries, lectures, music, and contact with people of world prominence.

Join in the endowment of this institution—your gift will be a genuine investment in youth for time and eternity.

Des Moines University, Box N, Highland Park, Des Moines, Iowa

OUR MUSIC CORNER

CONDUCTED BY WILLIAM LESTER

THE GOSPEL SONG

An Analysis

By E. O. Sellers

That music is an essential part of man's being, necessary to his life and conduct, few, if any, would care to deny. Song or music of some sort is insepaably connected with every experience of life, from boyhood and mother's breast to old age when our barque of life "crosses the bar" and puts out to sea.

Dana in his "Two Years Before the Mast" says: "A song is as necessary to a sailor as a drum and fife is to a soldier. They can't pull in time, or pull with a will, without music. Many a time, when a thing goes heavy without a fellow yo-ho-ing, a lively song has put life and strength into every arm."

What is true of a sailor or a soldier, of social life and patriotic inspiration is also true, and in a higher degree, in the realm of the supernatural. The souls of men are not only moved to devotion and praise through music but there are also inspirational and volitional results as well,—especially in the work of evangelism. It is this that gives such power and potency to the simple gospel song.

While all persons and races everywhere respond to a harmony of sounds, yet the greater and primary musical appeal to which mankind yields is to melody—to the "tune." Nearly all of us can recall with joy the college and young manhood "barber shop chords" that accompanied our musical expressions, yet the deeper and more abiding impression was the tune.

It is this that comprises one of the chief differences between "churchly hymns" and the "gospel song." The former pay the greater attention to the harmonic content while the latter are chiefly concerned with the melodic effect.

In either case, however, there ought to be a welding of words and music, for music is but a vehicle for carrying the words of a hymn or a song to the hearts and lives of the auditors.

The gospel song is like unto the "folk songs" of every nation—simple, effective, appealing to the imagination, recalling home and the practical experiences of life, renewing and quickening our hopes and ambitions as well as immortalizing our racial and national characteristics.

The gospel song grows chiefly out of the passing experience and thoughts of the hour and for this reason, as well as its intense emotional appeal, is apt soon to be laid aside for some "new song" of grace, but this does not necessarily lessen its value and usefulness.

It is easy to criticize, to talk about jazz in our hymn books, though but few who so glibly condemn are qualified properly to discriminate or perhaps even know what they mean by their wholesale condemnation.

The church has ever had to be on its guard lest secular and vulgar melodies creep into and taint its sacred praise. Nevertheless the self-appointed mentors are often dismayed at the vitality and finally surrender to some simple melody, like one of our American spirituals, and embody it in their high-class collections.

We grant that the element of permanence is not so great in proportion among gospel songs as the church hymns. This is owing to the ease whereby a melody is constructed and the few chords or harmonies used to support it. But in a careful examination of the greatest of our American hymns, those abiding ones of Mason, Webb, Bradbury and others, it will surprise any one to discover their simple melodies and plain harmonies. Compare these with the greatest of gospel songs, such as those of Doane, Lowrey, Bliss, Stebbins and the others and little, if any, essential difference will be found.

Back of the song must be the singer, not one who merely "sings the gospel" but one who sings the gospel, not about it —a great difference.

There is an abundance of high-grade gospel music, of the right sort, embodying a positive and personal message, that is true to God's Word and Christian experience. Such songs, used by spirit-led and anointed singers and congregations are an effective volitional agency, producing spiritual results.

The songs we have in mind were not, are not, born in the theater nor moulded along the lines of the latest "hit" evolved in tin-pan-alley, New York.

There are great gospel songs, great not because they are popular, or have survived the test of time, but rather because in simple and direct language they contain that "indescribable something" which fastens the heart, moves the emotions and, by an appeal to the intellect, also the wills of men. Let us not lean too far on either side and certainly not sin by neglecting to make use of this great and God-given agency, the gospel song.

Baptist Bible Institute,
New Orleans, La.

---

To prevent the churchyard in Vienna in which Mozart is buried being sold as a building site, a fund has been started to purchase the ground and erect thereon a suitable monument to the composer. There is nothing to mark the spot where Mozart lies; indeed the exact location is unknown.

---

The arts and festivals committee of the United Neighborhood Houses of New York offers a prize of $100 for a community pageant, to be performed by the young people of the different neighborhood houses, in commemoration of the three hundredth anniversary of the founding of the city. It is desirable that there be no changing of scenery; that the time of performance be not more than one and one-half hours; that the spectacle have precedence over the dialogue, and that there be scope for dances and pantomime.

The competition closes October 1, 1923. Manuscripts should be sent by registered mail, with self-addressed stamped envelope enclosed, to the arts and festivals committee of the United Neighborhood Houses. The committee reserves the right to withhold the prize, should the manuscripts be below standard.

THROUGH THE Mounds Park Sanitarium, beautifully located at the Indian Mounds Park, the Midway Hospital and the Merriam Park Hospital, a complete Baptist Hospital service is offered to the Northwest.

The
NORTHWESTERN BAPTIST HOSPITAL ASSOCIATION
GENERAL OFFICES
INDIAN MOUNDS PARK, SAINT PAUL

If Some One Should Ask You About a Will

And when you make your own Our Corporate Name is:

The American Baptist Home Mission Society

CHARLES L. WHITE, Executive Secretary
SAMUEL BRYANT, Treasurer
23 East Twenty-Sixth Street
New York, N. Y.

Van Duzen Bells
formerly Van Duzen & Tift
Guaranteed Genuine Bell Metal Bells made of Copper and Tin. Famous for full rich tones, volume and durability.
The E. W. Van Duzen Co.
Buckeye Bell Foundry
CINCINNATI, OHIO
Est. 1837 428-434 East Second St. Send for catalogue.

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS.
UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.
Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL
Ask for Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 10
ESTABLISHED 1858
THE C. S. BELL CO. HILLSBORO, OHIO

CHURCH FURNITURE
Pews, Pulpits, Chairs, Altars, Book Racks, Tables, Communion Ware—EVERYTHING. The finest furniture made. Direct from our factory to your church. Catalog free. DeMoulin Bros. & Co., Dpt. 17 Greenville, Ill.

The Baptist World Alliance

(Continued from page 914)

delegation bound for Stockholm. These men bearing in the body the marks of the Lord Jesus should have been given more opportunity to be heard. We had address us again and again great and good men and women whom we hear and can hear in America. Most of the delegates crossed the ocean to get first-hand knowledge of conditions on the world fields and the folks were present who could have answered our questions but many of these returned to their hard tasks and persecutions without any opportunity to unburden their hearts.

We are not placing blame on individuals but we are calling attention to what seems to us the loss of an unusual opportunity and one which will not come again for many years if ever.

We heard from the presidents of the All Baptist Union of Russia and of the Evangelical Union, both Baptist bodies with rapidly growing constituencies.

With great enthusiasm the congress adopted the following resolution of temperance:

RESOLUTION ON TEMPERANCE
Adopted by Third Congress Baptist World Alliance at Stockholm, July, 1923

"That this congress accords its wholehearted approval to the important work being done in the Baptist churches of the world to secure, by the adoption of the principle and practice of total abstinence and by governmental action, the total elimination of the evils wrought by the use of intoxicating drinks.

"The congress affirms this the more confidently because of the great and growing body of authentic evidence resulting from careful and impartial research pursued by scientists and sociologists respecting the facts of alcoholism, constituting a most powerful and convincing indictment of the baneful effects of alcoholic beverages on the life of mankind. The congress, believing that truth is the surest antidote to error, calls upon the Baptist churches, in conjunction with other Christian churches, to spread far and wide the truth concerning alcoholic beverages and their disastrous effects.

"The congress believes that the time has fully come for all disciples of the Lord Jesus Christ to strive their utmost to remove these evils

(a) By personal abstinence from the use of intoxicating liquors as beverages, and by seeking to persuade others to abstain from their use.

(b) By the avoidance of direct complicity with the trade in alcoholic beverages.

(c) By the full exercise of the rights and powers of citizenship in the enactment of legislation designed to effect the complete eradication of the drink evil.

"The Baptist World Alliance rejoices in the action of those governments and peoples that have already entirely prohibited, or drastically restricted the manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks. We ask our people to consider with care and impartiality the result of these acts of prohibition and restriction, and call their attention to the fact that the liquor defense organizations of the world are engaged in a selfish and designing propaganda to discredit the beneficent results achieved. We pray Almighty God to grant his blessing on the labors of his servants in all lands, to the end that the needless and tragic wrongs inflicted by alcoholism on the peoples of the world may be speedily and forever removed."

The committee on nominations indicated that theirs had been no easy or enviable task. They, however, brought in a unanimous report which was adopted by the congress and those named became the new officers of the Baptist World Alliance. Dr. Edgar Y. Mullins of Louisville is president. The five vice presidents represent Sweden, Norway, India, Brazil and Russia. In order they are C. E. Benander, J. A. Ohrn, J. W. Lall, F. M. Edwards and Mr. Pavaloff. The European secretary, Dr. J. H. Shakespeare of London and the American Secretary, Dr. Clifton D. Gray of Lewiston, Me.

Perhaps chief interest centered in the "message" which the alliance "proclaimed" to the world. Its title is "A Message of the Baptist World Alliance to the Baptist Brotherhood, to other Christian Brethren and to the World." It is of great importance and is printed in full.

Be Glad!

By David F. Nygren

Be glad!
We are not here to sigh;
A Christian should reflect the clear blue sky;
Go forth to battle praying,
Go forth to conquer smiling,
Be glad!
The world has plenty sadness of its own;
Go lift the burdens, do not add a stone;
Go forth and evil in His name dethrone;
Go forth and righteousness and truth enthrone;
Go forth and know you'll never stand alone;
Go forth into the fray,
Go forth and win the day,
Be glad!

Thursday afternoon was set aside for an "outing." Four steamboats were chartered to take the delegates to Drottningholm Castle and the Royal Parks. The boats were all filled to capacity and many automobiles were pressed into service and still there were some left behind who desired to spend the afternoon in fellowship with brethren from almost every land under the sun. The Stockholm folks had prepared a bountiful table for the thousands. It rained. It rains in Sweden without the least provocation. There was a rushing business at the cleaning and pressing establishments next day.

The closing evening was almost solely devoted to emphasizing the work of evangelism. Rev. J. J. North of New Zealand was chairman and Rev. E. A. Wilson of Dallas, Tex., Rev. L. R. Scarborough of the same state and Rev. A. D. Brown of London were the speakers.

The sessions of the congress closed Friday morning. Dr. Curtis Lee Laws spoke on "Christianizing the Homeland" and Rev. J. E. Roberts of Manchester, England, gave a searching address on the work of reaching young men and young women for Christ.

It is a most unusual sight to see the closing session of a convention with more than a corporal's guard present. This is not true of Sweden. The house was well filled on Friday morning. A resolution on international peace was adopted and the great meeting of the Third Baptist World Alliance was brought to a close. The peace resolution was as follows:

RESOLUTION ON INTERNATIONAL PEACE TO BE ADOPTED AT THE THIRD CONGRESS OF THE BAPTIST WORLD ALLIANCE

Meeting in Stockholm, July, 1923

1. The members of the Baptist World Alliance meeting in Stockholm, recognize with thankfulness that there are many signs of hope on the far horizon in spite of the fact that the war spirit is still at work among the nations. The sense of the horror and wickedness of war has burnt itself deeply into the heart and conscience of all the members of our churches.

2. The congress urges the members of all churches throughout the world to pray for peace, to counterwork everything that is likely to provoke governments to act against each other; to foster kindly and just judgments upon each other; to cleanse the educational books of all nations of all racial and national antagonisms especially in their writing of history; and to kindly admiration for the leaders who devoted themselves to the deliverance of the oppressed, the healing of the diseased, and the service of all. Further, the congress believes that the cause of peace would be furthered by international church conferences and the meeting together of Christian people of different nationalities in the interests of brotherhood and goodwill.

3. The congress earnestly desires that all the nations should be brought into cooperative efforts to secure peace through a representative tribunal or court for the settlement of international quarrels.

4. This congress, representing millions of citizens and belonging to different governments, appeals to the governments of the world to make the maintenance of peace their first aim, for the sake of each nation and people, and for the sake of the happiness and well-being of mankind.

Greetings

(Continued from page 898)

noble example. We can hope for nothing better as a result of the congress, than that fires of missionary enthusiasm and evangelistic fervor will break out afresh in all parts of the world.

Perhaps Nilsson, Wieberg, Palmquist, Broady and others, look down on us tonight. We believe that their spirits are with us at this hour. Surely we feel the inspiration of their spiritual presence. But I think they would exhort us not to praise them. They would ask us to exalt Christ and help to proclaim his message throughout the world. They would ask us not to glory too much in the past, but to press on to larger and better things in the future. We who represent American Baptists believe that the future of the Swedish Baptists is to be even more glorious than their past; that in cordial cooperation all who love his name are to win great triumphs for Christ and his kingdom. With our deepest affection, the Baptists of America greet you and bid you Godspeed.

AP

Volume IV August 25, No. 30

The Baptist

Published Every Week by the Northern Baptist Convention

A Prayer for Workingmen

"O GOD, thou mightiest worker of the universe, source of all strength and author of all unity, we pray thee for our brothers, the industrial workers of the nation. As their work binds them together in common toil and danger, may their hearts be knit together in a strong sense of their common interests and destiny. Help them to realize that the injury of one is the concern of all, and that the welfare of all must be the aim of every one. If any of them is tempted to sell the birthright of his class for a mess of pottage for himself, give him a wider outlook and a nobler sympathy with his fellows. Teach them to keep step in a steady onward march, and in their own way to fulfill the law of Christ by bearing the common burdens.

"Grant the organizations of labor quiet patience and prudence in all disputes, and fairness to the other side. Save them from malice and bitterness. Save them from headlong folly which ruins a fair cause, and give them wisdom resolutely to put aside the two-edged sword of violence that turns on those who seize it. Raise up for them still more leaders of able mind and large heart, and give them grace to follow the wiser counsel.

"When they strive for leisure and health and a better wage, do thou grant their cause success, but teach them not to waste their gain on fleeting passions, but to use it in building fairer homes and nobler manhood. Grant all classes of our nation a larger comprehension for the aspirations of labor and for the courage and worth of these our brothers, that we may cheer them in their struggles and understand them even in their sins. And may the upward climb of labor, its defeats and its victories, in the farther reaches bless all classes of our nation, and build up for the republic of the future a great body of workers, strong of limb, clear of mind, fair in temper, glad to labor, conscious of their worth, and striving together for final brotherhood of all men."

—"Prayers of the Social Awakening," Walter Rauschenbusch.

Fresh from the Field

Dr. A. J. Dickinson, a prominent Baptist minister in Alabama, recently passed away.

The July issue of "Postage" a monthly direct mail magazine devotes a page to the address of Rev. Charles A. McAlpine at the convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World at Atlantic City in June.

It is reported that the last city directory of Chicago recently issued is the largest of its kind in the world. Speaking of new Americans, the first name entered in the directory is Aaron Aaba and the last one is Roger Zzarcllo.

Rev. Singleton Neisser died suddenly at his home in Logan, Philadelphia, August 11. Mr. Neisser held pastorates at Tom's River, New Jersey, and at Patton, Westover, La Jose, McKeesport and Reading, Pa. He is survived by his wife and three children.

Miss Virfsel Roe has been appointed to the position of assistant professor of economics in Hillsdale College. She is a graduate of Franklin College and for the last four years has been a member of the faculty of Wayland Academy. Miss Roe will have charge of the commercial branches.

Rev. T. R. Gathright, pastor of the Wilburton Church, Okla., has accepted the call of the First Church, Aurora, Mo. During his pastorate at Wilburton, 250 new members were received. As the church is now pastorless, any one interested should communicate with R. S. Pace.

The New England conference on evangelism, under the auspices of the Home Mission Society, will be held September 9-12 at Tremont Temple, Boston. The following ministers will preside: Revs. W. H. Freda, C. L. White, William Reid, D. S. Jenks, A. B. Coats, W. A. Davison, I. B. Mower and Hugh A. Heath. All meetings are open to the public.

Among the speakers at the eighth annual meeting of the American Council of the World Alliance for International Friendship through the Churches, to be held November 13-15 at Philadelphia, are Dr. Fridtjof Nansen, Rev. Nathan Soderblom, Rev. Thomas Nightingale, Rev. T. G. Brierly Kay, Rev. Voyslav Janitch and Prof. Adolph Deissmann. The name of David Lloyd George has also been included on the tentative list of speakers.

Plans are under way for a two-weeks' celebration of the centenary of the organization of the Rutland, Vt., Baptist church. This will take place in November. The first week will be devoted to social activities and the second to evangelistic meetings. Mrs. Earl E. Johnson will be the historian. Among the speakers engaged are former pastors, Rev. Gibbs Braislin, Haddonfield, N. J., and Rev. Charles A. Reese, Boston, and Rev. W. A. Davison, secretary of the Vermont state convention. Rev. George A. Stilwell, superintendent of evangelism of the Northern Baptist convention, will be the speaker at the evangelistic services. The pastor of the church is Rev. George W. Peck, Jr.

"Four thousand different people" attended the West Texas encampment, says a Baptist exchange. How different? Weren't they Baptists?

Charles L. White, of the Home Mission Society is one of the committee of one hundred men and women appointed by Hubert Work, Secretary of the Interior, to work on the American Indian problem.

A Social Litany

O God, the Father of our spirits;
Have mercy upon us.
O Son of God, Brother of all men;
Have mercy upon us.
O Spirit of holy fellowship;
Have mercy upon us.
O Blessed Trinity, wherein three are One;
Have mercy upon us.
From the sins that divide us; from all class bitterness and race hatred;
Good Lord, deliver us.
From the corruption of the franchise and of civil government; from the arbitrary exercise of power;
Good Lord, deliver us.
From forgetfulness of thee and indifference to our fellowmen;
Good Lord, deliver us.
From greed and hardness of heart against our neighbor;
Good Lord, deliver us.
From the fear of unemployment and the evils of over-work; from the curse of child-labor and the unequal burdens of womanhood; from all ill-paid toil;
Good Lord, deliver us.
From the luxury that enervates; from the poverty that stultifies;
Good Lord, deliver us.
That it may please thee to unite the inhabitants of every city, state, and nation in the bonds of peace and concord;
We beseech thee to hear us, good Lord.
That thy followers may be strong to achieve industrial justice, and to bid the oppressed go free;
We beseech thee to hear us, good Lord.
That the labor movement may be guided in wisdom, and that the employers of labor may fashion their dealings according to the law of service;
We beseech thee to hear us, good Lord.
That thou mayst help us to give all men health of body and soul;
We beseech thee to hear us, good Lord.
That the great command, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself," may become the watchword of the state with impelling power;
We beseech thee to hear us, good Lord.
That the spirit of reconciliation may be made manifest among all men;
We beseech thee to hear us, good Lord.
That the vision of thy kingdom, coming down out of heaven and possessing the earth, may become the clear faith of the church and that the glad day of God may dawn at last;
We beseech thee to hear us, good Lord.
O Son of God, the Hope of the World;
Have mercy upon us and grant us thy peace. Amen.

Printed by the Commission on Social Service and Rural Work of the Reformed Church.

William Jewell College, Liberty, Mo., has completed the building of a model college church at a cost of $225,000. The seating capacity is 1,000.

Rev. Harry S. Mabie, lately pastor of the First Church, Weirton, W. Va., has accepted the pastorate of the Madisonville Church, Cincinnati, where he has already taken up the work.

The annual assembly of the International Association of Women Preachers will be held in Chicago, August 28-30. Eight denominations will be represented on the program, although sixteen denominations are represented in the association.

The $2 000 debt on the First Church, Beaver Falls, Pa., has been lifted. The indebtedness was incurred when the church was built about fifteen years ago. Rev. T. D. Rees is pastor.

The World's Sunday School Association will be held in Glasgow, Scotland, June 18-26, 1924. Information may be obtained by addressing 216 Metropolitan Tower, New York City.

Rev. Charles Baistock, for the past three years pastor of the First Church, Lawton, Mich., recently closed his work there. Mr. Biastock intends to enter college and complete his education.

A $175,000 Japanese national Sunday-school association headquarters will be erected as a memorial to Frank L. Brown. This project is the result of the world's Sunday school convention recently held in Tokyo.

A stereopticon lecture on the Baptist World Alliance Congress in Stockholm will be ready for use about October 20, and can be secured from the General Board of Promotion.

Rumors of the death of Sadhu Sundar Singh which spread through Britain and Europe, have proved groundless. They probably arose from the fact that his father recently died.

The annual convention of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union will be held at Columbus, O., September 7-13, and will celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of the Woman's Temperance Crusade. Mrs. L. M. Kirk, Columbus, is chairman of the committee on information. The convention headquarters will be the Hotel Deshler.

While Dr. Henry Edward Tralle was lecturing recently at the Michigan Baptist Assembly at Kalamazoo, word was received of the death of his mother, Mrs. Cathering Elizabeth Tralle, at Los Angeles, Cal. Funeral services were conducted by Rev. Sam P. Gott at Santa Ana.

"The President Passes," is the heading of a page editorial on the death of President Harding in the August 9 issue of the Canadian Baptist. That the makes us feel closer kin than ever.

Rev. James Gilbert Tedford, for thirty-five years an active pastor in Indiana, died July 28 at the home of his brother, Rev. Ira C. Tedford, Hutsonville, Ill.

Rev. C. E. Stephens, Bozeman, Mont., has accepted a call to the pastorate of the Blooming Church, Ind.

The Southern Schuylkill Chapter of the Red Cross, Pottsville, Pa., has given the aged women in the county almshouse twenty-two easy chairs to replace the hard wood benches.

The Baptist

Vol. IV Chicago, Ill., August 25, 1923 No. 30

THE BAPTIST, founded in 1919, is published every Saturday by the Northern Baptist Convention at 417 South Dearborn Street, Chicago, Illinois. Entered as second-class matter, February 4, 1920, at the post office at Chicago, Illinois, under the Act of March 3, 1879. Acceptance for mailing at special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized February 4, 1920.

Managing Editor: Edgar L. Killam

Committee on THE BAPTIST
EMORY W. HUNT, Chairman
CLARENCE A. BARBOUR HUGH A. HEATH

RATES: Single subscriptions, $2.50 a year; church clubs equal to 10 per cent of church membership, $2.00; single copies, 10 cents. In foreign countries the postage is $1.04 extra; in Canada, 52 cents extra. CHANGE OF ADDRESS: Both old and new addresses should be in our hands at least two weeks before the change is to go into effect. Always give key number as it appears on your label.

REMITTANCES: Should be made payable to THE BAPTIST. Acknowledgment made through change of label date. If check on local bank is sent, please add exchange.

SPECIAL: Renewal notice will be sent each subscriber previous to the date to which subscription is paid. Subscriber should give attention to notice by sending in renewal promptly, or, if paper is not desired for the coming year, should send in a discontinuance order.

ADVERTISING: Display: Rate per agate line, 30 cents; full page (420 agate lines), $125. No time or space discounts. Classified: 6 cents per word. Obituary notices: One hundred words free; 4 cents per word for additional. Cash to accompany order.

CORRESPONDENCE relating to subscriptions should be addressed to THE BAPTIST, Subscription Department, 417 South Dearborn Street, Chicago, Ill.

BRANCH OFFICES: The office of the state director of promotion in each state is an office of THE BAPTIST.

Table of Contents

| | Page |
|---|---|
| FRESH FROM THE FIELD | 930 |
| FACTS, IMPRESSIONS AND COMMENTS REGARDING BAPTIST WORLD ALLIANCE CONGRESS, BY THE EDITOR | 932 |
| EDITORIAL | 933 |
| A CONSTITUTION FOR INDUSTRY, BY SAMUEL ZANE BATTEN | 936 |
| LABOR SUNDAY MESSAGE, 1923 | 939 |
| THE NEWEST NASH STORY, BY HAROLD MARSHALL | 940 |
| THE CHURCH AND INDUSTRIAL PROGRESS, BY THE SOCIAL SERVICE COMMITTEE OF THE N. B. C. | 941 |
| A SPIRITUAL APPEAL FOR THE AMERICAN LABOR MOVEMENT, 1923 | 943 |
| THE NEW OPPORTUNITY FOR BAPTIST WOMEN, BY HELEN BARRETT MONTGOMERY | 944 |
| ONE WAY OF CELEBRATING BASTILLE DAY IN FRANCE, BY W. O. LEWIS | 945 |
| STEPS TO CHRIST AND SERVICE, BY C. S. MIAO | 946 |
| A BIBLE STUDY ON DIVINE HEALING, BY A. B. REESE | 947 |
| THE GENERAL BOARD OF PROMOTION FINANCIAL STATEMENT | 948 |
| RELIGIOUS EDUCATION | 949 |
| THE CHIMNEY CORNER | 950 |
| YOUNG PEOPLE'S WORK | 952 |
| OUR OWN FOLKS | 953 |
| CARRY THE BATTLE TO BETHCAR, BY J. W. WEDDELL | 958 |
| OUR MUSIC CORNER | 959 |

Beginning a Letter

There are persons who have difficulty in beginning a letter. Some generations ago it was a la mode to begin thus: "I take my pen in hand, etc." There is an up-to-date sentence that commands immediate attention in this office. It is as meat to the body, refreshing us and inspiring us to greater efforts in every good direction. The words, thrilling as any ever penned by mortal hand are: "Enclosed you will please find my check for———in payment of my subscription to THE BAPTIST."

Killam's Kollum

Labor Sunday

Labor Sunday offers the church and pastor an opportunity for giving a moral and spiritual interpretation of the labor movement. It offers the church an opportunity also for presenting to the people the voice of the churches on the whole subject of labor and industry. Elsewhere in this issue we give two important papers—the Labor Day message of the Federal Council of the Churches, and the message of the Executive Committee of the American Federation of Labor.

Many pastors have found it worth while to invite some well known representative of labor to address their congregations. Many ministers' associations have cooperated with the Central Labor Union or other labor organizations in observing Labor Day. Just now the world needs a Christian interpretation of industry. We need to understand that the function of industry in service and its method is cooperation. We need to realize that labor and industry are proving grounds of the Christian spirit. Above all we need to see what are the kingdom values that men are to seek in and through industry. A valuable pamphlet on this subject is "A Christian Industrial Program," issued by the Social Service Commission. Copies can be had free by addressing Secy. S. Z. Batten, 1701 Chestnut St., Philadelphia. " What's on the Worker's Mind" by Whiting Williams gives a good statement of the causes of unrest. "The Golden Rule in Business" by Arthur Nash is a fine illustration of applied and practical religion.

Keep Informed

"I am especially solicitous that more of the rank and file of our church shall interest themselves in the management and in the program of our great national convention," says C. Oscar Johnson, pastor of the First Church, Tacoma, Wash., at the quarterly business meeting. "It would seem fitting to me that just here I should make mention of the lack of information about the convention due largely I think to the fact that so few of our members are subscribers to the Baptist papers whose columns carry news of our convention and of our various societies. I would here and now call to your attention this rather sad defect and urge you to increase the number of papers coming into our homes." THE BAPTIST stands ready to receive the subscriptions of all members of the First Church, Tacoma, Wash., and of all the members of all the other churches in the Northern Baptist Convention. Likewise non-members. Less than five cents a week is an infinitesimal amount to pay for such a fund of information.

Facts, Impressions and Comments

Regarding the Baptist World Alliance Congress

BY THE EDITOR

THE next meeting of the Baptist World Alliance is scheduled for Toronto. The choice of this city met with general approval although there were four or five other cities which wanted to entertain the alliance five years hence.

* * *

For the cultivation of fellowships and mutual understanding informal, unscheduled group-meetings proved most valuable. The British delegates, who chartered the S. S. "Marloch," which not only transported them to Stockholm but also fed and housed them during the week, invited one evening a large company of American delegates for a social hour. Several were heard to remark that for outspoken frankness and general helpfulness this gathering was not surpassed at Stockholm. Steps were taken to bring English and American Baptists into close touch with one another.

* * *

Speaking through interpreters was for many a new experience. It was most interesting to watch the faces of an audience as your interpreter translated your thought and words into language it understood. Not always was the reaction exactly as one expected. Speaking of interpreters, we wonder if it would not be well for some American congregations to secure the services of an interpreter. We know some ministers who, though they use beautiful English, speak in a language foreign to the thought and life of their people. It would be well to have some good man filled with wisdom to stand beside these brethren to tell their congregations what they are driving at.

* * *

Speaking once more of interpreters and interpretations let us here remark that in our humble judgment there was far too little use made of these useful agencies in the Stockholm meetings. As we understood it this was a Baptist WORLD Alliance and yet a casual visitor could easily have mistaken it for an Anglo-Saxon Baptist Alliance meeting in Stockholm. In most of the sessions we are safe in saying far more than one-half of all the people present were unable to understand the meaning and import of the addresses and matters of discussion. Be it said to the credit of these brethren that they entered into the spirit of the meetings and showed a splendid loyalty in the matter of attendance upon the sessions in the face of what to us would have been an impossible situation. We trust that this matter will be remedied in the next meeting of the alliance. We have, however, lost an invaluable opportunity of getting our message across to a larger number of foreign-speaking delegates than we will have at Toronto.

* * *

It was a strange coincidence that Doctor Lathan A. Crandall should depart during the meeting of the alliance which he had been so active in organizing. The cable announcing his death was read at one of the sessions and as one man the great audience arose and for a considerable period stood with bowed heads.

There seemed to be an unusual amount of tragedy introduced into the convention. A deep and lasting sense of depression followed the announcement of the death of Edwin Kinney, who met death in the line of duty as a member of the officers' reserve of the aviation service. His father, Dr. Bruce Kinney, is one of the most widely known men in our Baptist brotherhood. With him was David Paddelty, an Indian delegate from Oklahoma. This faithful brother in Christ positively, and with that loyalty characteristic of his race, steadfastly, refused to let Doctor Kinney return alone. They both left for America on the evening of the day on which the message was received.

* * *

Dr. J. J. Cloar, pastor of the First Church, Texarkana, Tex., died from an acute attack of indigestion before he could be hurried to the hospital for treatment.

* * *

No one present at the meetings at Stockholm can ever forget the singing. The combined Swedish choirs gave a great concert in the largest hall in the city but hundreds could not secure admission. The Russian choir was heard repeatedly with delight. The negro choir was enthusiastically received especially by the European groups who seldom have such an opportunity. In Europe the black man's color seems an asset and not a liability. And finally there was that marvelous choir from Latvia. Who can describe their singing? In almost every session they were heard with increasing interest. In the cathedral at the service at the tomb of Gustavus Adolphus an impression was made which time can never efface.

* * *

For years we have attended Baptist meetings and have been forced to the conclusion that for general efficiency and out of courtesy to the speakers scheduled for the last day of these conventions we ought to do away with the last day. We must confess that this judgment was not justified at Stockholm. The attendance held steady to the very time of the final benediction. The only vacant seats belonged to American delegates who have formed the habit of making next to the last day the last day of any meeting.

* * *

The attendance reached almost 2,500 regular delegates. They represented nearly every country on earth. It was the largest Baptist convention ever held in Europe. The daily papers gave large space and sympathetic treatment to all matters which were under discussion in the congress. The Swedish officials of both church and state did everything possible to make our stay pleasant and profitable. With uniform courtesy both the citizens and policemen bore with our questions and natural awkwardness under new conditions and with our "foreign" language. We never learned to turn to the left. We would have been killed by cars and trucks bearing down upon us on that side made blind by habits of watchfulness at home, had it not been for their consideration.

* * *

"How do they do it?" the editor asked again and again as he noted the good manners of even groups of boys. He talked, mostly by sign language, with two lads fishing in the lake. After ten or fifteen minutes he said to them, "Good bye," and to his utter surprise both boys said, "Good bye," and tipped their caps. Can you imagine two boys on the dock in an American city accosted by a "foreigner" who could not speak a single word of their language getting the same kind of treatment?

* * *

On the whole we are glad to have had inoculated into our systems the feeling that we were "foreigners." We became a bit self-conscious as we found ourselves the object of curious eyes and realized that we were as "queer" in the sight of natives as are the foreign peoples in our own country. We will, without doubt, be more watchful, for opportunities to be helpful to strangers within our gates.

(Continued on page 948)

The Eternal Quest

BY F. E. WILCOX

BEFORE I could descend from the teacher's platform after I had dismissed a high-school class I was confronted by a youth with a question. In a school of two hundred boys this is not exactly a phenomenon. Not of numbers, however, or of language, or of laws was this question, but of life: "When will China ever be saved?" So here was another mental truant, gone on an illegal quest to seek some illusive cup, while I had been teaching mundane rules of English grammar. One can never be sure that back of these slant eyes, apparently so attentive in the class room, there is not going on some imaginative crusade against all the evils that keep their beloved country struggling in her weakness.

If he looked upon me as a diagnostician hoping for some bit of terse speech by which he might embellish his language I was bound to disappoint him. However he looked like stern stuff, and stern speech I gave him. "When you yourself and he and he and all the others of your fellow students come to know the will of God and are ready to do it then China will be saved."

Thus we preach to these boys. It is hard, incomparably hard, when we compare the soft moral maxims of China's intellectuals to the stern moral demands of Christianity. The drooping head of that boy as he walked slowly out of the class-room told me that it was hard.

The Baptist

The Church and Labor Sunday

OUR denomination has had for some years in its Northern Baptist Convention a committee on social service, and it has further functioned through our Publication Society with a secretary who devotes his time wholly to the promotion of interest and cooperation in that work. For a still longer time our pastors have been wont to devote the first Sunday of September, just preceding Labor Day, to special services designed to express the interest of the church in labor and to increase the interest of labor in the church, though some pastors have been discouraged by the fact that organized labor has usually ignored these services. It is gratifying to note that the Federation of Labor has this year formally taken notice of what the churches have for many years been doing in this direction and is recommending its members to respond to the courtesy thus shown.

It behooves our pastors and churches of all denominations to take special pains this year to make more of Labor Sunday than has perhaps seemed worth while to do of recent years. It should not be a merely perfunctory interest that is shown by the churches, nor will a simple announcement from the pulpit or in the newspaper church notices do much to promote the occasion. These notices should be supplemented by invitations through the pastor or some official of the church to the labor organizations, and then all of these invitations should be followed up by what is the only sure method, namely, the men's class, or classes, or the church brotherhood should definitely arrange to invite and personally to bring by automobile or otherwise a large number of men either from organized or unorganized labor to the service. It will be the happiest sort of arrangement if the working men belonging to the church or at least to its men's class are active in securing the attendance of and extending a welcome to all the men affiliated in any way with the church or any of its organizations.

Where a church is situated in a great industrial center there are likely to be a goodly number of working men in our churches, but it is a sad and ominous thing that the toilers at hand-work, especially those connected with labor organizations, are for the most part conspicuous by their absence from the congregation of the ordinary Protestant church. It should not be forgotten, however, that this is not an isolated fact but is one phase of a far broader phenomenon. It is not only toilers at manual labor who are missed from the average congregation but other men—bankers, merchants, lawyers, clerks, and especially young men of all classes— are few and far between in the pews of the majority of our churches. It is a phenomenon of masculine human nature. But it should be particularly noted at the same time that in a goodly and increasing number of churches there has come to be a fine representation of men of all ages and all classes proving that there is no necessary antagonism between the church and the laboring man.

Undoubtedly churches have been neglectful of the interests and grievances of the working man in many instances, though it is not clear that the increased attendance and interest of working men and other men in the churches just mentioned has been brought about uniformly or usually by the pastor's specializing in pulpit treatment of labor problems. But undoubtedly the non-attendance of the laboring man at church is largely a part of the tendency of men in general to substitute for church attendance an attendance at some lodge or other organization of men only. Joined with this is the man's tendency to make of Sunday a day of informality, of relaxation, a day in which he may throw off the feeling of exigent impulsion associated with the task which for six days has held him fettered to his job. There is the luxury of a long, late sleep on Sunday morning, of a leisurely getting-up, of a forenoon in negligee, and the seductions of the Sunday paper with its large absorption of his time and modest demand upon his intellect. All of these things tend to keep the masculine animal from church. We heard an old Baptist deacon sum up the situation in the simple words, "They claim they kaint git thar!"

THAT is about all there is of it. Through the law of habit a mere disinclination, if long indulged, becomes an actual disability. The manual laborer and other toilers fail to realize that for a man in reasonable health the Sunday which brings a slump and a letting-down in idleness or self-gratification is less restful and leaves him less fit for Monday's job than a Sunday which brings him into a new world of association and aspiration, a day wherein he dons his best garments, a day wherein he gives his soul a chance.

Without flattering or patronizing the working man and without conceding that the only workers are those who toil with their hands (since by brain toil a man of financial genius or one of inventive genius or one with masterly ability in directing the work of masses of men may provide work and subsistence for millions), the church and the minister may make of Labor Sunday and of every Sunday a day which will unspeakably benefit every man of toil and by winning recruits from these sturdy ranks may greatly increase the church's influence and power for good.

Let Us Have One Big Union

SOBER thinking is due at the present juncture. In considerable portions of the earth social order and peace have suffered shipwreck. Danger seems to threaten everywhere, and no man knows how near and vast the peril may be. For the evils that have come upon the world at this time, nation charges the responsibility upon nation, class accuses class, faction brands faction, and the church blames the devil. Each accuser can make out a reasonable case against the accused, and each prescribes some sort of a help for the guilty. But hells cure no ills. What we want is a way of salvation.

With religious reiteration we are told that the gospel of Christ is the remedy for the world's ills, domestic, industrial and international. So also will soap and water remove dirt. But in both cases alike the efficiency of the remedy depends upon its right application. Good sentiments are futile until they realize themselves in good ways. Mathematics alone never built a bridge, nor did the gospel alone ever save a state. A king may be as spiritual as Saint Francis, but unless he has practical knowledge of statecraft, his saintliness will not save his kingdom. The gospel, in order to be effective, must be operated by people who know how. Spirituality which exhibits itself in the mysticism of a self-enraptured "sacred ego" may have value; but a socially dynamic spirituality is that known as old-fashioned common sense centered upon the common good.

Some things that belong to the social primer are religiously, morally, spiritually and economically settled and generally overlooked. For instance, labor is any kind of human effort that produces either wealth or welfare. Any other kind of human activity, no matter how busy one may be in it, is a nuisance. A good deal that goes by the name of labor is merely larceny. All wealth and all labor power exist for the good of all people. All men have an equity in the service of any man equal to that which he claims for himself. It is not and never was true that every man is entitled either to all he produces or to all he can get by legitimate business. There is an equity of the common good to which all of us are trustees in all that we have and are; and no man can discharge that equity except by doing his best to secure for all others the good he seeks for himself.

Society exists to give effect to these principles. Every government, association, chamber of commerce, labor union and unorganized group must face this moral test: Is its aim profit or service, special advantage or the common good? Its economic test of course is efficiency. It is not enough that an individual or group here or there become moralized and efficient in its own limited sphere. Such persons and groups have always existed. What is needed is that the community as a whole be organized on the basis of Christian equity to promote the best life for all.

We are approaching that standard in fact; let us welcome it in thought and try to think it through to reality. Standard organizations of business and labor are socially useful and may be made far more so. But right here is the essence of the present tragedy of civilization: These organizations operate apart to serve group interests rather than together to serve the common interest. They "head up" nowhere. The precise and simple problem underlying economic and political peace is that of finding a way to "head up" the group organizations into a community organization for community ends.

Where is that group in politics or in business with vision enough to see that community cooperation for community ends is the only way to avert ruin; with moral courage enough to accept the common good as its principle of action, subordinating all private and group interests; and with faith enough to invite friendly counsel amongst all parties with a view to the finding of a practical program? No matter who shall move first, whether the Congress, the Federal Council of Churches, the United States Chamber of Commerce, the Federation of Labor, the I. W. W., the Ku Klux Klan or a local Kiwanis club. The field is open, and they must act together at last.

To initiate effort towards a cooperative organization of all economic groups is a natural function of the government. If these groups can beat the government to it and effect such an organization among themselves, very well; but their cooperation is the alternative of tweedle-dum and tweedle-dee. In any case it means that the symbols of state shall become, as Micah dreamed, tools instead of weapons. Within each nation and among all nations, peace waits for this.

The sophisticated may smile at these suggestions as visionary, transcendental, impracticable, "counsels of perfection." A reply is not difficult. The sophisticated gave to the world the Congress of Vienna and the Treaty of Versailles. The sophisticated never have been able to comprehend the methods of either Christianity or common sense. The sophisticated forever sneer at the Golden Rule. The solution proposed is scientific, for it proposes to deal with all facts and factors as it finds them. It is practical, for it proposes to take the next step in a process of organization already tried in successful experience. It is simple, because, however complex problems may be, their solution, when discovered, is always simple.

This path leads directly out of the wilderness. There is no other way out. And necessity accepts no excuses for delay.

An Evaluation

THE summer assemblies and Bible institutes are a growing force in our denominational life and future. There is good reason found for this when their work is really studied and understood. The vacation element enters into the value of an assembly. Many young people have a limited chance to get away from the normal tasks of every-day life and play and change the regular routine for a period. Their two weeks or less of vacation involves additional expense which needs careful planning if future financial troubles are not to follow. The young people of today are a thoughtful, ambitious set and therefore when arranging a vacation period they want more than a "good time," they want a helpful time. The assembly meets this need of theirs in a fitting way, for the morning and part of the evening can be given to class-room and lecture work in the company of congenial spirits at some seaside or mountain resort where the assembly is held.

The remainder of the day is spent in bathing, playing and resting under the loving but watchful eyes of older people who thoroughly understand the younger generation of this day. Under denominational supervision the expense of such an outing is kept at a reasonable figure if the advantages offered are taken into consideration. It is no wonder, therefore, that the summer institute or assembly is growing in favor with young people and that attendance is steadily increasing.

From the standpoint of the denomination which puts money and people into maintaining the enterprise, let us now see why the assembly is worth while. It offers a splendid chance to get an individual from a local sphere acquainted with a large group from many other localities. Mingling with a mass of people enlarges the viewpoint of every one and brings valuable encouragement to those who struggle in isolated places with difficult local problems. The assembly provides a great opportunity for a week's concentrated attention upon one or two books or topics. The educational value of this feature of the summer assembly is very large and has great denominational possibilities.

Next, it offers a chance to get the isolated constituency acquainted with some one or more of the big women or men of the denomination. This close-up acquaintance with a leader is very valuable to the leader and the scattered people.

Again, we find that an assembly affords a fine chance to enlist young men and women for the ministry and missionary service of our cause. It also gives a splendid chance to train local church leaders. The assembly is not troubled by church business, but all the meeting hours are used for instruction under a carefully selected leadership. We believe in the institute or assembly and hope the whole Baptist constituency will help to maintain them in many places.

The Better Way

THE labor movement has been defined as the effort of working men to live the life of men. It is the desire to secure for their families and themselves the benefits of modern civilization. It is the determination to guarantee to every worker an adequate income, a satisfying work life and a fair opportunity in society. With these aims the churches most fully sympathize, and in many pronouncements they have affirmed their social faith.

The question of method is still in debate. There have grown up in all lands where industry has developed strong labor organizations, and these in some lands include a large proportion of the workers. At present the industrial world is divided into two groups separate and competing. Workers do not ask for charity, but they demand justice. Neither group at present fully trusts the other. And so we have a struggle for advantage and for what each group calls its rights. The labor union has many aims and purposes. But it is at present primarily a fighting organization.

In the steel industry many workers have believed that they were not receiving fair treatment. Wages were usually as high if not higher than in some other industries. But they were denied the right to organize: and many thousands of them worked twelve hours a day and a seven-day week. Some four years ago the workers in the United States Steel Company went on strike in Pennsylvania and elsewhere. There were many wrongs committed during that strike and some of these deeds make a dark page in Pennsylvania history.

Following the Inter-Church World Movement, through its department on industrial relations was issued a report on the steel strike. This report has awakened much discussion: some persons have questioned the wisdom of such investigations by the churches, but no one has invalidated any of the statements and conclusions. Still the twelve-hour day continued and many workers were restless.

Then the Commission on Church and Social Service of the Federal Council in cooperation with the denominational secretaries, made a study of the twelve-hour day. It brought certain facts to the attention of Mr. Gary and his associates. It published the facts to the churches and gave material for an intelligent judgment on the question. It pointed out the human and moral values that were involved. It joined with the Catholic Welfare Council and the Association of Jewish Rabbis in a protest and appeal. It welcomed most heartily the noble appeal of President Harding. It made public the conclusions of the engineers who had studied the question.

Within the past two months there has been a remarkable change in public opinion. It became evident that public opinion was against the twelve-hour day. Six months ago the officers of the United States Steel Company decided that it was not expedient to make the change at present. Within the past few days orders have been issued to abolish the long day in steel.

Strikes, fights and abuse accomplished little. Study of the facts, the interpretation of the human interests involved, the publication of material on which the public may base a judgment, an appeal to conscience and humanity—these have scored a great victory for justice, for labor, for the nation. There is a better way than fighting. This signal victory for the right points the way to further progress.

Money's Worth

PROVIDENCE, R. I., is one of the cities that was mentioned by the President as spending more than their income. And the income of that city is a pretty figure, being $60.48 per capita.

On the surface, municipal bankruptcy seems to be impending. But a large part of the expenditures went for sanitation and highways, and $3,000,000 were spent on the water system.

Those Rhode Islanders spent their money and have the goods, and if the deal was a good one, they are richer than before.

High taxes may be good business. The vital question is what the people get for them.

A Constitution for Industry

Industry is a social function, but its status has not advanced beyond that of a private contract

By Samuel Zane Batten

The Social Institutions

THUS far society has recognized three great primary institutions, namely: The family, the church and the state. These are all implied in the nature of man and grow out of certain basic needs. They are means through which men cooperate in the work of life. They are, to many, experiments in the divine art of living together. They are all fields for the expression of the Christian spirit and are so many agencies through which men are to seek the kingdom of God. In the progress of time each of these institutions has developed a life and form of its own. Each has certain recognized functions and is governed by recognized ideals. Each in a sense has a method and law of its own for its guidance and conduct.

I. The Economic Factor

Beyond these institutions mankind has certain other basic needs which underlie his very existence. Man must have food and clothing, shelter and tools. Even in the savage state he must have such economic goods as food and clothing, shelter and tools. Civilized man has a vast range of additional needs, and to supply these he requires elaborate industrial devices and agencies such as roads, factories, stores, banks, books and papers. These and allied interests together compose what we call the economic basis of human life.

The industrial order includes all of the factors that enter into the production, the transportation and distribution of economic goods. As such it holds a large place in man's life, and it may be regarded as the divine method whereby God's children are fed and provided for. From the first, the industrial order has been an important factor in man's life and progress. In these times, owing to the growing complexity of life and the increasing demands of civilized life, this factor has gained a new importance. It is now gaining a new social and moral meaning and is about to acquire, as it must, an institutional form and status.

II. The Need of Organization

The industrial order as we know it today is largely inchoate and unorganized. Manufacture and trade have grown to colossal proportions; production and transportation have become two of the major activities of society. But the industrial order has not acquired a social meaning and moral valuation. It has not developed a body of ideals and principles for its inspiration and guidance. It has not formulated any charter or bill of rights as the foundation of conduct, or accepted any constitution as a standard of appeal. Above all, it has not developed any machinery whereby disputes may be adjusted and the relations of men be socialized. Industry is a social function, but its status has not advanced beyond that of a private contract.

The situation as we find it today is unsatisfactory. This is due in part to the nature of the state and of the industrial order. It is due in large part to the confused ideas of men concerning the meaning and function of industry. Much of this confusion is due to an anarchy of men's fundamental ideas of life and morality. In part it is due to defects in the organization of industry, or rather to the lack of organization. It is evident that something is lacking in the ideas of men and the methods of society.

The First Lack

The first lack is a body of ideals and standards. In the past, charters and bills of rights, constitutions and laws have been developed. But these have been framed in political terms and deal almost exclusively with political rights and obligations. The civil state has framed laws for the interpretation of civil justice; it has established authoritative courts for the adjustment of human relations. But we have no charter or bill of rights for industry; we have no accepted standards, no fundamental laws, no authoritative machinery for the definition of justice, the arbitration of differences and the adjustment of human relations. We have hardly begun to stammer the first syllables of social and industrial justice.

The consequences are known to all. When disputes arise in industry, as they are constantly doing, we have no accepted body of basic laws to which men can appeal. We have no recognized court of justice to which we can refer our disputes in the confidence that they will be tried by common standards. Consequently men resort to private methods and non-lawful means to safeguard their economic interests. Workers organize, often imperfectly enough, and attempt by crude collective bargaining to secure justice. They rely on the strike as their final weapon and frequently resort to its use. Employers on the other hand, feel an equal necessity for organization to resist the demands of laborers and to protect their rights; their final weapon is the discharge or lockout. Essentially these are the old methods of the fist and the jungle, and they work disaster in society. They lead to long and bitter struggles between opposing parties, which are often attended by violence and which entail upon the people loss and suffering without redress.

"We Are Still Uncivilized"

In the family, in church and in state, we are in a civilized order. In industry, as Secretary Charles E. Hughes says, we are still uncivilized. This uncivilized industrial order reacts disastrously upon the civilized institutions of the family, the church and the state, and tends constantly to weaken their bonds, to neutralize their benefits and to defeat their progress. This condition discredits our civilization and discounts our religion. It cannot be that mankind is willing to accept it as necessary and permanent. It cannot be that we are so lacking in social intelligence as to be unable to find a way out of such a situation.

The immediate task before society is clear. Men must recognize the fact that industry is a basic factor in society and is gaining an institutional life and organization. Industry in its vast modern organization both presents indispensable benefits to mankind and carries defects which seriously menace social order and people.

Men must now seek to understand the human meaning and social value of industry and must apply to it the basic principles of institutional order. They must translate these principles into industrial charters and bills of rights and into industrial laws and regulations.

Society must develop adequate machinery to the formulation of industrial laws and the adjustment of industrial disputes. This may mean a council or congress made up of representatives of all parties in industry; and a court or board to which all questions may be referred; this court or board is to consider the question at issue in the light of accepted principles and by accepted standards.

In fine, industry must develop principles, standards, methods and processes for the regulation of its own life and the adjustment of all questions. In the past men have found that the state is incompetent in the field of religion and the church; and so they wisely insisted upon the separation of church and state. In our time we have found the state is not fully competent in the field of industry. Political and industrial questions are very different in content and scope. The politician is usually not more incompetent in the field of economics than in the field of church polity. The positive aspect of all this means that industry must develop its own standards and ideals; it must adjust its own differences, that thereby it may make the largest possible contribution to the whole life of society.

The immediate task before us is clear. It has three aspects and these may be briefly noted.

III. The Christian View of Industry

In a resolution adopted by the Lambeth Conference in 1920, we find these significant words: "An outstanding and pressing duty of the church is to convince its members of the necessity of nothing less than a fundamental change in the spirit and working of our economic life. This change can only be effected by accepting as the basis of industrial relations the principle of cooperation in service for the common good in place of unrestricted competition for private or sectional advantage. All Christian people ought to take an active part in bringing about this change, by which alone we can hope to remove class dissensions and resolve industrial discords."

The Christian conception of industry carries certain fundamental truths. It is God's will that his people should have daily bread and all other things that are needful. God uses man in the attainment of this end; and industry is thus the divinely appointed means to the divinely ordained end. Industry we thus see is a group of people working together to secure certain essential human needs.

For Women Who Toil

O GOD, we pray thee for our sisters who are leaving the ancient shelter of the home to earn their wage in the factory and the store amid the press of modern life. Save them from the strain of unremitting toil that would unfit them for the holy duties of home and motherhood which the future may lay upon them. Give them grace to cherish under the new surroundings the old sweetness and gentleness of womanhood, and in the rough mingling of life to keep their hearts pure and their lives untarnished. Save them from the terrors of utter want. Teach them to stand loyally by their sisters, that by united action they may better their common lot.

If it must be so that our women toil like men, help us still to reverence in them the mothers of the future. But make us determined to shield them from unequal burdens, that the women of our nation be not drained of strength and hope for the enrichment of a few, lest our homes grow poor in the wifely sweetness and motherly love which have been the saving strength and glory of our country. To such as yearn for the love and sovereign freedom of their own home, grant in due time the fulfilment of their sweet desires. By Mary, the beloved, who bore the world's redemption in her bosom; by the memory of our own dear mothers who kissed our souls awake; by the little daughters who must soon go out into the world which we are now fashioning for others, we beseech thee that we may deal aright by all women.—"Prayers of The Social Awakening," Walter Rauschenbusch.

Its function is service.
Its method is cooperation.
Its spirit is fellowship.

IV. An Industrial Bill of Rights

In order that the people may establish economic justice, insure industrial peace, and promote the general welfare, it is necessary for men to frame a charter or bill of rights for the economic order of society and to establish a constitution for the governance and control of industry.

In the past, men in their struggle for liberty and democracy have framed some great declarations. These affirmed some of the inalienable rights of men and pointed the way in political progress. Among these declarations may be named the Magna Charta, the Declaration of Independence, and the Declaration of the Rights of Man and of the Citizen. These declarations have to do with the civic rights of men, and move in the realm of political action.

Other Rights of Men

In the course of human events it has become evident that there are many rights of men which are not covered in these declarations. It has therefore become necessary for us to define and affirm certain inalienable, economic rights of men. That is, the industrial order needs a statement of human rights which shall be at once the basis and the guarantee of a body of accepted economic principles and standards. It may not be possible to discover and define all of the rights and principles which must be incorporated in a worthy and democratic industrial order. There are, however, certain principles which have been affirmed from time to time by some of the great Protestant, Catholic and Jewish religious bodies.

A. Opportunity.

1. Every life is sacred and is entitled to a place in society, a good opportunity in life and full scope for its powers.

2. Equal opportunity must be secured to all for employment or for acquiring a living, for conditions favorable to health and morals, for one day's rest in seven, for adequate time for family life and civic obligations.

B. Work.

1. Every person is under obligation to do some useful work in society: income and wealth are moral in so far as they are made and earned and are not merely won away from others.

2. A living income for every worker is the first moral claim upon industry.

3. Industry is to be so organized as to secure as far as possible economic efficiency in production and democratic cooperation in operation and management.

4. Industry is a partnership, and that partnership should be held to include investors, managers, workers and the community.

5. Industry like government, derives its just powers from the consent of its members; its conduct should rest upon the judgment and cooperation of all parties either directly or through chosen representatives.

6. As no one can be deprived of property without due process of civic law; so no worker should be deprived of his job without due process of industrial law.

C. Property.

1. The earth and its resources are the common heritage of the people.

2. Values created by the community belong to the community.

3. The equity of each person in the common heritage is inalienable; but it may take the form of adequate provision for individual welfare.

4. Property is to be acquired, administered and used as a trust for the common good in harmony with human and spiritual ends and securing the best life for all.

V. The Constitution for Industry

Having certain industrial rights which are recognized and social liberties which are guaranteed, it is possible to outline, at least, an industrial constitution.

This constitution should include:

a. Definition and guarantee of citizenship in industry by all parties.

b. Provide for the participation of all parties in industry either directly or through chosen representatives in the management and control of industry.

c. Provide for a council or congress made up of representatives from all parties, which shall interpret the principles of morality, frame laws and regulations for the regulation of industry and insure the equitable division of the products of industry.

d. Establish a court or council to hear all disputes and try all questions by the accepted constitution and laws.

VI. The Method

We are not concerned here with any detailed statement of the machinery and method by which the constitution may be made effective and industry may be organized.

In a democracy the validity and power of government rests at last upon local autonomy and personal action. Industrial democracy must build from the bottom and grow up naturally out of the life of the people.

Each industrial plant may well adopt its own charter and constitution according to the judgment of all parties.

Each industry, as the steel industry, mining, silk weaving, etc., may well develop its own standards and regulations in accord with the fundamental principles and constitution.

There may be a federal industrial congress made up of representatives of local groups and special industries to represent industry as a whole and to frame codes and laws for its regulation.

In Summary

The church may well charge its members to consider the meaning of industry, the principles of industrial morality and the constitutional organization of industry; and should expect its members to seek to realize the spirit of Christ in the whole process of industry.

Society should encourage the widest possible experimentation on the part of employes and workers in the field of constitutional definition and democratic organization.

The problems of society and the progress of industry can never be secured through the domination of any one group; but only in and through the cooperation of all in behalf of all.

In a general way it may be said:

That is a good policy which sees the democratic ideal and seeks to define it in industrial terms.

That is good policy for the time and place which brings employers and employes together as partners and equals.

That is good policy which makes for the common ownership of the tools of industry.

That is good policy which prepares men for intelligent and direct participation of all as equals and partners in the affairs of industry.

Social Service Ideals

Approved and published by the Social Service Commission of the Northern Baptist Convention.

EVERY child has the right to be well born, well nourished and well protected.

Every child has the right to play and to be a child.

Every child is entitled to such an education as shall fit him for life and usefulness.

Every life is entitled to a sanitary home, pure air and pure water.

Every life is entitled to such conditions as shall enable it to grow up tall and straight and clean and pure.

Every life is entitled to a place in society a good opportunity in life and a fair equity in the common heritage.

The resources of the earth, being the heritage of the people, should not be monopolized by the few to the disadvantage of the many.

The stewardship of property requires the holder to supervise it for moral and spiritual ends.

Work should be done under proper conditions with respect to hours, wages, health management and morals.

Every worker should have one day's rest in seven and reasonable time for recreation and family life.

WOMEN who toil should receive equal pay with men for equal work.

Widowed mothers with dependent children should be relieved from the necessity of exhausting toil.

Employers and employes are partners in industry and should share as partners in the enterprise.

Suitable provision should be made for the old age of workers and for those incapacitated by injury and sickness.

Income received and benefits enjoyed should hold a direct relation to service rendered.

The state that punishes vice should remove the causes that make men vicious.

The bond of brotherhood is the final and fundamental fact and men are called to organize all life—ecclesiastical, civic, social, industrial—on the basis of brotherhood.

The help should be greatest where the need is sorest. What the few now are the many may become.

Labor Sunday Message, 1923

The Commission of the Church and Social Service of the Federal Council of Churches.

THE twelve months just closing have been marked by industrial events which, although of less sensational interest than those of the preceding year have large significance for the industrial life of America. A period of unemployment has given way to a period of great business activity which has been marked by rising wages. The upward swing of the business cycle has greatly altered the relative position of labor and capital in industrial relations. It is conceded by industrial leaders that labor is economically in the ascendancy. Yet the sharpness of the antagonisms developed during the depression period, when great pressure was brought to bear to curtail the prerogatives of organized labor, has not worn away. Labor organizations are aggressively active, and the effort continues on the part of many employing interests to limit the power of labor organizations. Labor's economic advantage may indeed be but temporary. Its continuance and its permanent effect on the status of labor rests largely with labor itself to determine.

The Railroad Strike

To this fact several events of the year bear instructive testimony. The continuance on several of the railroads of the conflict, now more than a year old, over recognition of the shop crafts unions has not only caused serious hardship to the shop crafts' employes but has caused very great expense to the railroads and has jeopardized the passenger and freight traffic of the country in a measure that will probably never be fully realized. The railroads which declined to settle with the striking shopmen have made a desperate effort to keep their equipment in a tolerable condition without the services of the skilled mechanics upon whom the efficiency and safety of the railroads so largely depend. Perhaps no occurrence in our industrial history illustrates better than does this continuing strike the fact that a resort to aggressive measures by either side where a great public utility is concerned is fraught with heavy penalties to both parties and to the public, and is likely to be barren of permanent results. It may be argued that it was unwise and rash for the men to strike. It may likewise be argued that the executives who refused to accept a settlement which the executives of other roads had signed, were unwarrantedly obdurate. But the important fact from the public and social point of view is that the use of economic force, even as a means of redressing admitted grievances, is an increasingly unfruitful method of settling disputes and of securing justice.

Twelve-Hour Day

Of similar import are the developments of the last few weeks with reference to the long continued and much discussed régime of the twelve-hour day in the steel industry. Four years ago, a great strike, one of whose objectives was the abolition of this régime, proved ineffective and disastrous. In contrast with that experience a recent appeal to public opinion based not upon partisan considerations but upon a regard for the human values involved has brought an unequivocal declaration from the industry that the twelve-hour day would be presently abandoned. (On Monday, August 13, the eight-hour day went into effect in the Gary Steel mills.) The question inevitably arises whether this end might not have been accomplished much earlier by an insistent and sustained appeal to the nation unaccompanied by belligerent activities. With no desire to assign to labor a major responsibility for the prevalence of militant measures in the past, it must be recognized that at this moment labor stands in a position of potential leadership and of consequent moral responsibility.

> "THIS is the gospel of labor.
> Ring it, ye bells of the kirk,
> For the Lord of love
> Came down from above
> To live with the men who work."
> —HENRY VAN DYKE.

Of perhaps equal significance is the record of orderly settlement of disputes that has been made in strongly organized industries through jointly maintained arbitration machinery operating under an impartial chairman. The outstanding fact in this connection is the increasing dependence that certain labor organizations are placing upon research and the substitution of facts for partisan propaganda and warlike methods.

Kansas Industrial Court

It is instructive that the unusual experiment that has been tried in the state of Kansas for the last few years in the control of industrial relations through the courts is apparently about to be set aside following a decision of the United States Supreme Court rendering its validity very uncertain. The president of the United States has recently declared himself against any effort to compel men, or any group of men, to work against their will. This statement may perhaps be taken as definitive of the American position in this important matter. There can be no question that the public interest is paramount, but it is coming to be recognized that in time of excitement and of stress, the determining factor is less the public interest than the public's immediate convenience.

Coal Commission

Over against this verdict on the experiment in compulsory arbitration should be placed the report recently made public by the Federal Coal Commission on the anthracite branch of the industry. Perhaps more notable than any specific recommendations for control of the industry is the doctrine laid down in the report that it "cannot continue to be treated as if it were not affected by a public interest." The commission proposes a plan of control which is designed to yield a maximum service to the public and a minimum of interference with individual initiative. Can any one doubt that the great basic industries will be increasingly held to be "affected by a public interest," or that in the development of public policy with reference to them the primacy of that interest will be increasingly asserted?

This does not mean that the effectiveness of organized action by workingmen can be doubted or that the propriety of such action should be questioned. The material gains to the working people of America which have resulted from organized effort on their own part cannot be denied. The fact which must be recognized, however, is that the effectiveness of organized action on the part of any group in industry must depend in the long run upon the bearing which such action has on the public welfare. No permanent advantage can be gained by any group which does not enrich the life of the people as a whole. This has been asserted repeatedly, and often demonstrated, with regard to combinations of capital, and it is equally true of organizations of labor.

Such legitimate complaint as can be made concerning the activities of American labor unions has to do not merely with their aggressiveness, which has surely been equalled by the aggressiveness of representatives of employing and financial interests. It is rather due to the fact that in the conduct of their activities a merely defensive policy has too often predominated which has made little provision for the growing demands of the community in goods and service. Labor itself has as large a stake as any other group in the prompt and adequate fulfillment of the community's needs.

Increased Production Necessary

It is not to be denied that the distribution of the product of labor is far from equitable, and this fact inevitably weakens labor's movtive to produce. But the basic economic fact in America today is that instead of a surplus the nation has an absolute deficit; not enough goods are produced, even assuming the most ideal distribution, to provide the material needs of all our people. The danger of overproduction is a false doctrine. There is no limit to the legitimate wants of mankind.

The responsibility for greater production rests with management as well as with labor, but no other single act would be so potent toward increased prosperity and stability in industry as a concerted effort by the great labor organizations to create an economic surplus. Given an adequate production, the intelligence and the conscience of the community must be depended upon to effect a more equitable distribution.

Labor's Responsibility

There has undoubtedly been too great a tendency on the part of employers to make labor bear exclusive responsibility for increased output. Recurring periods of unemployment and the tendency to give labor a lower rate of return as its productive effort increased have in the past gone far to make the workers unresponsive to the appeal for increased production. Nevertheless, in the future organized labor must justify itself by functioning, as the guilds of the middle ages functioned, in creating, preserving and guaranteeing high standards of production. Union membership should have a significance akin to that of membership in a profession. It should be a guarantee of the attainment of high standards in craftsmanship and a high order of integrity and fidelity. We are not without examples of such industrial efficiency and statesmanship. The recent experience of the railroads, which have suffered a virtual collapse of their equipment, calls attention to the debt we owe to union craftsmanship. Likewise the maintenance of efficient production by a long-tried agreement in the garment trades proves that aggressive unionism is not incompatible with industrial efficiency, loyalty to the industry and orderly government.

Labor's Opportunity

It seems fitting and useful to call attention to these facts as Labor Day for 1923 approaches. Organized labor in America is faced by an extraordinary opportunity. The liberal policy toward labor which was adopted during the war under the patronage of the government was all but obscured during the depression period, but it is probable that in any fair test the public will support the right of labor to organize on a national basis and to bargain collectively through appointed representatives for the improvement of its own conditions. To the extent to which labor is relieved of the necessity of defending this right it may give its attention to more constructive undertakings.

There is reason to believe that organized labor is not unaware of its opportunity and the responsibility which it entails. The recent appeal of the American Federation of Labor for the observance of Labor Sunday gives a clear recognition of the spiritual factors in industrial relations and declares the essentially spiritual aims of the labor movement. This statement commands the respectful attention of the public. The public in turn will expect that the spiritual aims asserted by the labor movement will make themselves manifest in definite ways during the new period upon which we have entered.

It would be superficial to say that the continuance of strikes is necessarily an evidence of a lack of social motive on the part of the labor organizations. It is quite conceivable that serious labor disturbances may be rather the evidence of a devotion to spiritual ideals of liberty. There have been undoubted examples of highly conceived and splendidly executed struggles on the part of labor. What is essential, however, is that the aims of every act on the part of labor should square with its declared purpose of raising the standard of life of the whole community and of promoting the efforts of each in the interest of all.

Open or Closed Shop

The long continued acrimonious discussion over the issue of the open and the closed shop cannot be settled by a few declarations of principle. It is a problem of industry itself and must be worked out with patience and mutual respect by the parties involved. Is it not clear, however, that the issue is one of freedom? Open-minded employers and representatives of the public seem to be in agreement as to the right of labor organization and the impropriety and injustice of any interference with such activity on the part of the employer. Possessed of the right peacefully to persuade workmen to affiliate with the labor movement, may not the representatives of organized labor abandon aggressive attempts, where they are now practiced, to enforce union membership through the instrument of the closed shop? The labor movement aims fundamentally to give the worker greater security of status, freedom of expression, and a juster share in the product of his labor. It can hardly be maintained that this ideal is consistent with the use of compulsion upon either fellow-worker or employer in the matter of membership in a labor union.

Labor's Honor

The controversy over responsibility of labor organizations has too often taken the form of a demand for summary court action or for some purely legal device to insure responsibility. The liability of labor organizations for damages resulting from unlawful acts has now been established by the United States Supreme Court. There are involved in this issue questions of public policy and questions of constitutional law upon which laymen must speak cautiously. The question is one of ethics more than of law. There can be no doubt that the continuing power and influence of organized labor and its standing with the community at large will depend in great measure upon the degree to which it can be said that labor's word is as good as its bond.

The labor movement has a history of important achievement and of patriotic service. It promises to be greater in the future than in the past. But the public will increasingly insist, and the teachings of religion require, that in undertaking to serve the workers, organized labor should serve the whole people. In no other way can the interests of labor be permanently advanced.

The Newest Nash Story

By Harold Marshall

FIVE years ago bigger men in the same line of business in the same building were calling the founder of the A. Nash Tailoring Company "Crazy Nash." He was insane enough to believe that the Golden Rule ought to be applied to business but not quite crazy enough to believe that it could possibly succeed. Brought up in a church that teaches that daily life is to be governed by the principles of religion, Arthur Nash, when he suddenly found himself the owner of a sweat shop, believed he must apply the Golden Rule to his pay roll. To him that meant a going business—going toward bankruptcy, with the hope that enough might be saved to help pay for a little farm somewhere.

Then he went out to look for the farm.

When he came back he found business coming to meet him. The touch of the Golden Rule had begun to work that golden miracle of which the worst business men dream and the best despair. Increased wages had decreased production costs. The story of the next five years is the most thrilling and inspiring chapter in modern industrial history. In the fiercest competition, the Golden Rule won against the Rule of Gold. A total output of $132,000 in 1918 grew to $3,750,000 in 1922, and it is already evident that it will not be humanly possible for the present great factory to take care of the business offered it for the coming year.

This material achievent is so great that it may easily blind us to that of which it is only sign and symbol—a spiritual development that leaves those closest to it thrilled and awed. For 1900 years men have been looking and longing, have been saying, "Lo, here," and "Lo, there," but the kingdom of heaven on earth has not come. Has it come now in a clothing factory? No man knows; but no man or woman who was in the Nash factory on the morning of July 3 will ever forget the great experience and much more the great mood of that hour.

Fixing Their Own Wages

It was the semi-annual mass meeting of the workers in which by their own vote they fix prices, wages and hours for the ensuing half year. To those who watched the hundreds and hundreds of men and women slowly gather in the big workroom, there was an atmosphere of sunny serenity seldom seen anywhere in these fevered days in which we live. In that atmosphere it was the obvious thing to open the business meeting with a prayer for the realized presence of the Father and the deeper sense of brotherhood. Though salesmen from all parts of the country had gathered with the workers for the first time, as the vice-president called for the reports of the heads of departments there was neither formality nor restraint. The various executives and superintendents gave intimate family talks, punctured here and there with clever friendly comment from the workers themselves.

Finally the report of the president was called for, and as he climbed up on the work table that served as a platform there was a tender, reverent hush. Carefully and patiently he explained to them the operations and results of the previous half year. He went into intimate financial details, told them just what the profits had been and how derived. He reminded them that there had been a tacit understanding that a profit of one dollar per suit should be allowed the company out of which to pay dividends and make necessary increases. He told them it had not been earned under existing conditions of prices of wages and hours. If there were any listeners familiar with ordinary stockholders meetings, they were probably thinking this prefaced a proposed raising of prices or lowering of wages or increase of hours. As a matter of fact it was followed by this statement and recommendations:

Fellow-workers:

As your co-worker and the president of this company I have three recommendations which I wish to offer for adoption or rejection at this, our semi-annual meeting.

First, I recommend that the price of our garments remain the same as it has been for the last two seasons, namely, $23.50 per suit or overcoat at retail.

Second, I recommend a change in the hours for our women workers as follows:

Whereas, we have been working five days per week, eight hours per day, making a working week of forty hours, I recommend that this be changed for the women factory workers to five days of seven hours each, making a week of thirty-five hours, the weekly wage to remain the same as it is now for forty hours except in cases where the next recommendation would increase the wages.

Third, I recommend that 50 cents per hour be made the minimum wage for regular women workers. In submitting these recommendations I beg the privilege of making the following statement:

I have several reasons for making this first recommendation not to change the price of our suits. I read to you the other day in a called meeting a portion of a letter from a competitor urging us to raise the price of our suits. This letter showed clearly that other manufacturers are only waiting to see what we do before they decide what price they will put on their garments. This places upon us a double responsibility. In this meeting we are to consider the interest of three parties: first, the consumer; second, you workers in the factory; and third, the investors in the company.

The consumer, the first to be considered, is not here to speak for himself, but if we are going to live the Golden Rule we must live it toward him, and do by him as we would be done by if our positions were reversed. While it is true that the woolens and everything used in suits have advanced in price, I believe that we are in duty bound to protect the public which has so loyally supported us, to the limit of our ability. I, therefore, recommend that we do not raise our price.

Regarding the second recommendation, I simply want to say that it seems to me to be absurd and an insult to the Master himself to talk about building the kingdom of heaven on earth in church and religious meetings and then when we come to our factories and industries, take the women workers, the wives and mothers of the next generation, and set them at intensive, highly specialized work, often on machines run by electricity, for even forty hours per week, which is less than in most industries.

Since we established the forty-hour week I have received a great many communications purporting to condemn it; one was a circular signed the "Housewife's Union," telling how many hours the housewife has to work, and asking why something was not done to shorten her hours. In reply I would say that perhaps something can be done, but the nonsensical fallacy of offering this as a criticism for shortening the working hours for women in a factory is readily seen when it is remembered that a very large percentage of these factory workers must go home after they have put in a day in the factory and do the tasks of the housewife.

Careful inquiry has led me to the definite conclusion that practically all the women workers in industries are really performing the duties of a wife or preparing to do so. The percentage of girls and women who enter industry as a life work and do not expect to ever have homes I believe is less than 2 per cent of the women workers. Arguments against what we are doing are based on these 2 per cent instead of the 98 per cent. It is preposterous to expect a woman in any industry to do these highly specialized jobs, working eight hours per day, and prepare herself for love, husband and family.

Regarding the third recommendation, I think no remarks are necessary. I believe that this minimum wage is required in order for a girl or woman to be decently self-supporting, and when I recommend that 50 cents per hour should be our minimum wage, I want it understood that that simply means that no wage is to be less than that, and I hope they will all be much more.

During the reading there was earnest and thoughtful attention. Then came a few moments in which inquiring looks were met by answering nods. Presently it was moved and seconded that the recommendations be adopted by a rising vote. Instantly every worker, including many who were stockholders in the company and knew that this meant still smaller profits, was on his or her feet, and the chairman declared the three recommendations adopted by a unanimous vote.

To many of us it seemed as though nothing else so thrilling as this could possibly happen, but no one can anticipate what these amazing people will do. The chairman told them that before the meeting adjourned, a representative of the New England Nash force would tell them what happened at a meeting in Boston where Mr. Nash spoke. Then followed a brief recital of how the ninety-six members of the sales force in Boston had listened to a plea for the substitution of brotherly cooperation for selfish competition in all our industrial relations, and spontaneously formed the Fellowship of the Golden Rule. He told of similar meetings held by the salesmen in Chicago and Detroit and Philadelphia. It needed no formal vote to express their approval. Workers and salesmen and stockholders and company officials and guests rose and togther repeated the fellowship pledge: "In the spirit of Jesus we unite ourselves in the Fellowship of the Golden Rule, pledging our utmost endeavor to make God's law of brotherhood the law of our lives."

Slowly, silently, the great gathering melted way, but some there were who found it easier to understand what happened on the day of Pentecost, when brethren were together in one place with one spirit.

The Church and Industrial Progress

By the Social Service Committee of the Northern Baptist Convention

THE industrial question is one of the most urgent and disturbing questions before society at this time. It is here that we find the chief stress and strain in society. It is certain that we cannot have peace among men till we have solved this question. It is evident that we cannot Christianize life as a whole till we have brought industrial relations into accord with the purpose of God and the other factors of life.

The Church's Stake

It is a fundamental truth of Christianity that the authority of Christ is supreme over all life. To the men of the world there may be lords many and ideals many; but to those who accept Christ as the Lord there is only one standard and one law. There can be no exemption from this law for anything beneath the stars. The Christian by his very faith is committed to the task of bringing every interest in life into accord with the spirit and purpose of Christ. His supreme concern is to know the will of Christ and to have the authority of Christ established in every relation and realm of his life. He has no option in this matter.

The Christ has come to be the great reconciler. He has come to bring men unto God: and he has come equally to reconcile men to one another. He has come to teach men to live as children of God and as brothers in a family. The continuance of this work he has committed to his church. It is here, therefore, to carry forward this reconciling work among men. To do this the church must know when human relations are broken and disturbed. It should seek to find the causes of estrangement and the obstacles to brotherhood; and it should do everything possible to remove these obstacles and adjust the relations of men.

Christian people are ever to seek new opportunities for expressing the love of Christ and the power of the gospel. As long as the Spirit is taking of the things of Christ and showing them unto men, as long as the ever-living vine of truth is producing a new vintage, so long there will be need of an open mind and for new expression of divine truth. Life is dynamic and not static. Truth is a seed and not a crystal. The scribe instructed unto the kingdom of God is like the householder who brings forth out of his treasury things new and old.

In all social and industrial questions there are human values at stake. Beneath the controversies that divide men today there are human hearts and wills. Behind the abstractions of labor and capital there are human beings who plan and toil. It is for Christian peoples to find human values and to consider human relations. It is for them to hold up these human values as the supreme concern, to seek to adjust these human relations in terms of justice and brotherhood.

The industrial question presents a direct challenge to the churches today and offers them a remarkable opportunity. It is a challenge to them to interpret the true function of industry and to show the human values that are involved. It is an opportunity for them also to prove that the truth as it is in Christ can give men a sense of direction and put them in the way of solving the problems of society. It is necessary for the churches to gain or regain a Christian view of industry, and then to seek to hold it true to its function. It is necessary for them to consider what changes the Christian ideal demands in industry. The Christian faith reveals its power in the life of persons; but no less it expresses its meaning in the life of the nation and in the processes of industrial activity.

Christian people believe that Christ alone can save the world from failure and that he alone holds the key to the unsolved problems of humanity. They have therefore a duty to make clear his authority over all life and to show men how to apply his truth to the problems of society. In a word, the time has come for Christian men to apply the gospel of Christ on a scale as large as the world. So far as Christian men are concerned, they are under obligations to find out what Christianity means and to apply it to the whole round of human relations. The ideal of Christ is a challenge to men to bring the whole industrial order in its methods and motives its processes and results, into accord with the spirit of Christ and the purpose of his kingdom.

The work before the churches is complex and demands effort along many lines. One aspect of the question is, however, of special concern to the churches. There are no doubt some serious defects in the present industrial system; and these must be found and remedied. But the primary defects are in the minds of men, in their misunderstanding of the issues, in their wrong attitudes in their ideals and principles. Our first task is therefore within men; it is to create a body of Christian ideals and principles on which to build a more Christian industrial order. Then we need to consider in what ways industry in its motives and methods, its processes and results, may more fully express the Christian spirit and thereby serve the whole kingdom of God.

Classes for Social Study

It is a large part of the church's work to win men to Christ and show them the social as well as the individual content and implication of the Christian life. The church is therefore called to interpret all life in terms of religion, and to interpret religion in terms of life. It should teach men how to apply religion to all life—personal, social and industrial—and should show men that all life is essentially religious.

That the people of the churches may be prepared for wise leadership and effective service in the kingdom of God, it is necessary that they be trained by study and disciplined by action.

In order that the churches may render the fullest service in this field it is hoped that there be:

(1) Lesson studies for classes in all grades, illustrative material for use of teachers, and guidance in expressional activities for teachers and leaders. Agencies are at work preparing these studies and material and suggestions as rapidly as possible.

(2) The use of this material by teachers and workers. The churches should be sure that their educational work is organized and adequate and that lessons in social study are used.

(3) The training of teachers of classes and leaders of activities. We commend to churches the use of correspondence courses and urge the holding of institutes as opportunity offers. The churches must train workers for the whole work of the kingdom.

The Christian View of Industry

Industry is the cooperation of men in serving essential human needs. But industry too generally is a field of strife and confusion. Its accepted by-law is self interest and its accepted method is competition. In view of this, the church has a very clear duty. It is called:

To interpret the true Christian and social meaning of industry;

To interpret Christian principles in their relation to industry and to show what is implied in these principles;

To make men know what are the implications of their faith in relation to industry and arouse them to establish Christian industrial practices;

So to teach and guide men that they will know what to do in order to organize all life, personal, social, and industrial, on a Christian basis.

The church can do much to elevate the plane of economic life by honoring the men, both employers and employes, who exemplify the Christian spirit.

Christian Industrial Ethics

In the Middle Ages and the early Reformation period, the churches made an earnest effort to interpret the religious meaning of work and to develop Christian standards for industry. But in the past 150 years, in what is called the pagan reaction, an attempt was made to exclude ethics from economics and to make it a purely naturalistic and non-moral science. The church became active in other fields, and it adopted an indifferent attitude toward economic questions. As a consequence little effort was made to show the ethical values at stake and to develop a comprehensive economic ethic. This suggests one of the supreme needs of today and indicates one of the most important tasks of the church. We can merely suggest several things implied.

Men need to realize that the function of industry is service; that its object is human well-being; that behind all industrial process are human hearts and wills; that men in industry sustain relations to one another; that the moral imperative is as wide as life and there is no exemption for anything human. They need to realize that human values are at stake in industry and that they may gain or lose the kingdom in the way they do work, pay wages, brand goods, and make profits. Men, both employers and workers alike, need to remember that to accept policies and practice methods that cause heart-burnings and division and strife is something more than a mere economic blunder; it is the very essence of sin. They need to remember that Christian men are to love their fellows in mills and factories and to seek after the things which make for reconciliation; that the peacemakers, whether in industry or in church, are to be called the children of God.

Thus far sin has been too much as an abstract idea, a theoretical term. The church must make men see that the sin is conduct which alienates one from his fellows, which causes division and strife in society. Men sin when they make their own interests supreme, whether in the mill or the prayer meeting; they sin when they form monopolies and make the child's loaf small; they sin when they break up into cliques and groups for selfish ends. They sin when they fill society with confusion and division. Behind the unrest and confusion, the social division and strife of the industrial world, lie the selfish hearts and sinful deeds of men. Men need to remember that to be righteous is to be in right relations with God and with one's fellows; in the prayer meeting, in the factory, and in the chamber of commerce. They need to remember that wrong, unjust, unbrotherly relations in industry are just as sinful as in any other relation in life. Men need an active conscience that as a flame of God will search their industrial practices through and through and bring them to the test of Christ's law. They need a discriminating and economic conscience which will make them quick to feel the inequalities and wrongs in our present system and will give them no rest till industry is in harmony with Christ's spirit.

Preparing Men to Accept Change and Promote Progress

This is a dynamic and not a static world. In the Christian conception we are given the idea of a new social order. In our present industrial system there are many things which are unbrotherly and are working at cross-purposes with the spirit of God. We are called therefore, to accept the Christian ideal and to do what lies in our power that it may be realized. In the words of the resolution adopted by the Lambeth Conference:

"An outstanding and pressing duty of the churches is to convince its members of the necessity of nothing less than a fundamental change in the spirit and working of our economic life. This change can only be effected by accepting as the basis of industrial relation the principle of cooperation in service for the common place of unrestricted competition for private or sectional advantage. All Christian people ought to take an active part in bringing about this change, by which alone we can hope to remove class dissensions and resolve industrial discords.

"Members of the church are bound to take an active part by public action and by personal service in removing those abuses which depress and impoverish human life. The church is bound to use its influence to remove inhuman or oppressive conditions of labor in all the League of Nations covenant which aim at raising, by international agreement, the status of industrial workers in all countries."

It is something for Christian men to attack and cure particular evils; but no

Five Hundred British Clergy Address the Labor Party

FIVE hundred Church of England clergy have presented the following memorial to Ramsay MacDonald:

"Sir: We, being priests of the Church of England, who have followed with deep sympathy the recent struggle of labor to secure more effective representation in Parliament, respectfully offer our sincere congratulations to you and the 144 members of Parliament who, under your leadership, now constitute the official opposition, a development which carries with it momentous and far-reaching consequences to the nation. As a result of this we look forward to the more serious consideration and more adequate treatment of the pressing problems and difficulties of our time, which such a combination of talent, earnestness, and first-hand experience will certainly secure. Our particular calling, with its pastoral experience, gives us direct knowledge of the sufferings and deprivations, mental, moral and physical, to which millions of our fellow citizens are subjected in our present social and industrial order, and to find remedy for which is the chief purpose and aim of the labor movement. It is therefore a matter of great satisfaction to us that this increased opportunity is now open before you in the great assembly of the nation, and we shall support actively, in whatever ways are legitimately open to us, the efforts you assuredly will make for the spiritual and economic emancipation of the people."

less must they discover and remove the roots from which evils spring.

The Moral Conquest of Industry

Industry has sadly misread its meaning and so has lost its way to the kingdom of God. It has become a means of private profit rather than of public service; it has divided men into separate and competing groups and has sanctioned the law of selfishness as the base of their action. The economic world is filled with confusion and torn with strife because of the pagan ideals and practices that have dominated it. Men have thought of industry as a means to their own personal ends; they have believed that selfishness was the fundamental law of economics, and that they were free to do one another to the death, provided only the arena was a market and the instrument a bargain; they have forgotten that men in industry as elsewhere, are brothers; they have measured success in terms of money, and they made life consist in the abundance of the things one possesses; they have accepted an unbrotherly method and organization in industry because they believed they were under natural law and so were inevitable; they have even tried to build a home for humanity on the foundation of selfishness. And the home has collapsed around them. The prevalence of these pagan ideals and principles foredooms the industrial world to be a scene of strife and division.

Industry can be saved from failure and confusion only as it is delivered from these pagan principles and comes under the dominance of the law of Christ. Much may be done and will be done to improve industry and to relieve friction points. But one thing only can save industry from endless confusion: it must emphasize its true function and come under the power of the Christian ideal. There is little use of a direct attack on industry, for that only awakens the opposition of men, and it really builds nothing. There is another way, the Christian way; and that is to bring it under the power of a higher ideal. This moral conquest of industry means a change in the ideals and principles of men, and this brings us to the very door of the church.

The church holds in trust the one gospel that contains hope for our world. Then the church must hold up before men the great ideal of Christ; it must seek to create in men a Christian state of mind; it must interpret the true meaning and inspire men to follow the true law of Christ. The church can do much by bringing men under the power of the highest ideals; by creating in them a spirit of confidence and cooperation which will unite them in making industry a service of all in behalf of all.

By all means possible, the churches must labor to create in men a Christian conception of industry and a Christian attitude towards wealth. By precept and example, by instruction from the pulpit and studies in the Sunday school, by the lives of their people, by the spirit of humanity and generosity which they show, the churches must set forth the true meaning of industry, exalt the true spiritual values and promote fellowship in industry.

A Spiritual Appeal from the American Labor Movement, 1923

THE following statement is issued by the American Federation of Labor: This is a notable utterance and is worthy of study.

"Having regard for the need of keeping constantly before the masses of our people the highest ideals of our labor movement and the requirement of our people for the complete fullness of life in all things, the executive council of the American Federation of Labor declares as follows:

"The labor movement of America demands for all of our people the full benefit of the life-giving forces of our marvelous civilization through constantly increasing wages and improvement of working conditions and through a reasonable and proper reduction in the hours of work.

"The labor movement of America demands for the wage earners and for all who serve usefully in any capacity, a sound and just economic basis for life and freedom in the fullest meaning of those terms.

"The labor movement of America has ever had a high regard for the development of the ethical and the spiritual in life, realizing the right of all humanity to partake freely of the great satisfaction that comes to enrich life as a result.

"The labor movement of our country, recognizing the fact that all freedom and all higher development of life, rest upon first providing assurance of the essentials of existence, has first demanded economic justice as a basis for all other things.

"The labor movement has always taught that the material is essential to something higher, and that the inspiration of our movement has its deepest springs in something above and beyond the material.

"The labor movement strives for economic improvements with unrelenting zeal and fidelity because economic improvement is the first fundamental requisite; but it holds out to all mankind a flaming torch lighting the way to a greater fullness of life, to complete realization of the finer and nobler aspirations of the mind and soul.

"The labor movement fixes as its goal nothing less than the complete richness of life, without limitation of any kind, the attainment of the human ideal, in all of its economic, ethical and spiritual implications.

"Through the inspiration of our labor movement, the Sunday preceding Labor Day, which is the first Monday in September each year, has come into general national observance as Labor Sunday. On this day it is fitting to give thought to the aspirations of labor and to find in what way the soul of labor may give thought and expression to its longings.

"Because of the aims and aspirations here set forth, we hold it fitting that all churches draw close to their altars the soul of labor on the coming Labor Sunday, and that the men and women of labor everywhere make special effort to cooperate with the churches and to secure the cooperation of the churches with them, in order that there may be in the churches everywhere on that day a great unison of expression in behalf of a higher, nobler life for the masses of our people; and in order that there may be everywhere a concentration to the cause of human betterment, particularly in those things that lead to ethical and spiritual growth—in those things that give flower and fruit to the greater ideals of our labor movement, the embodiment and the expression of the idealism of our people.

"May Labor Sunday each year bring home to the masses of our people the great good that humanity may yet achieve, the lofty heights to which it may climb, the inspiration and the enrichment to be found in the great American labor movement which is the hope of the millions who toil.

"We ask also that Labor Day, the great holiday of the toiling masses, dedicated to them and to their cause, be ennobled and enriched by an expression of the same spirit, the same high idealism and purpose, the same uplifting, inspiring search for all the fulness of life and the same determination to achieve triumph over all ills and wrongs through our great movement in its ethical and spiritual aspects, as well as through its purely economic operations."

Ramsay MacDonald's Advice to Labor

THE writings of Ramsay MacDonald in the British Socialist Review, of which he is editor, have acquired additional interest since he became a leader of His Majesty's Opposition in Parliament. In the sixth article of his series, "The Outlook for Trade Unionism," in the February number, the editor says: "Capitalism is the existing system by which production, marketing, selling, are carried on. The working of that system keeps the community supplied with every-day necessaries, and if all that labor when fighting does is to attack the employer against whom it has a grievance by bringing the system to a standstill, it always enters the battle half defeated because it brings into the fight millions of people who feel none of the points at issue, yet feel all the grievances of a beleagured population. The spirit which is in reality that of labor, if it felt that it could afford to express it, is whole-hearted social service. Let it express it, for the expression of it, though military-minded men think it a weakness, is indeed strength in the long run, and it is the one thing that will completely change the fortunes of labor. Trade union leaders trained too exclusively in ideas of defense against grasping and encroaching employers and managers, run the risk of becoming short-sighted as to consequences—like professional military men who are the very last advisers whom anyone should consult in the problems of national security. We should all school ourselves severely into frames of mind which love work, which feel injured when we scamp work, which demand work of intellectual and artistic interest which takes pride in production. When we strike, we can strike but it is a quite different thing from a habitual withholding of a part of labor and from the encouragement of a habit to regard work as an essentially unpleasant task. As the guild in its best days watched the honest quality of production, so should trade unions meet capitalism in a final challenge, because the worker who made his demands would be a man who was fully equipped with right and not a slave thinking mainly of his chains and the hardships of slavery."

The New Opportunity for Baptist Women

Address delivered before the Baptist World Alliance at Stockholm on July 26

BY HELEN BARRETT MONTGOMERY

JESUS Christ is the great Emancipator of woman. He alone among the founders of the great religions of the world looked upon men and women with level eyes, seeing not their differences, but their oneness, their humanity. He alone put no barriers before women in his religious teaching, but promulgated one law, equally binding upon men and women; opened one gate to which men and women were admitted upon equal terms.

A striking illustration of his casteless, sexless attitude is found in the story of his conversation with the Samaritan woman by Jacob's well. She was only an ignorant woman of the town, of loose virtue, and yet to her Jesus opened up the deep places in his gospel, revealing to her that which he had not yet told to any of his disciples, —"I that speak to thee, am he;" "He who drinks of the water that I will give him shall never thirst;" "God is a Spirit, and they who worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth."

No Area Fenced Off for Men

In the mind of the Founder of Christianity there is no area of religious privilege fenced off for the exclusive use of men. In this attitude Jesus Christ stands absolutely alone among religious teachers.

The new implications in regard to the position of women had an immediate effect upon the practice of the rising Christian church. So great was the change that expressions of the new liberty had to be checked by the Apostle Paul, in the interests of the reputation of the church and the decent and orderly conduct of its business. But the significant thing is not the caution to the women, but the presence of a new driving force in the rising Christian community, revealed in the activities of the women; the seven daughters of Philip who prophesied; Priscilla and her husband, who had a church in their house, and who took Apollos and instructed him; Phoebe, servant of the church, who carried under her robe the manuscript of the letter to the Romans, and that long list of women who find a place in the closing greetings of Paul's letters.

As the up-gushing spring of the new life in Christ mingled with the turbid stream of Greek and Roman civilization, much of the beautiful simplicity and freedom of the way was lost, and women were shut up again in the prison of inhibitions and conventions. But Christianity never wholly ceased to feel the powerful upthrust of the Master. His ideals and ideas were working like yeast in the lump of Christian civilization. Today they emerge into open view in the growing power of democracy, and in the enlarging sphere of women. Back of all the urge of democratic ideals as regards state and sex, stands Christ, the Emancipator.

It is but natural that so democratic a body as the Baptists should be among the first to further and to recognize the emancipation of women. For hierarchies, of every name, have an instinctive reaction consistently opposed both to democracy and its handmaid, the emancipation of women. It has been the radical Christian groups who have seen most clearly and maintained most fearlessly the separation of church and state, and the full participation of woman in all the activities of organized Christianity.

What, then, are the opportunities of Baptist women in this great new day? I shall mention but three: Education, organization, service.

Today, for the first time on any world-wide scale, women have opened to them the educational facilities of civilization. The new generation can hardly realize what were the educational disabilities of women in the past, shut out as they were from the great universities, from the professional training schools and from the practices of the liberal arts. Most of the great civilizations of the past have builded themselves upon a foundation of ignorant and repressed womanhood and motherhood. Shut out from the kingdoms of education, art, philosophy, literature, government, and society, the mothers of men have led their cramped and thwarted lives. Civilizations builded on such foundations could not stand; they carried within themselves the seeds of death.

But now at length the spirit of Jesus has triumphed. He has said to the sleeping spirit of womanhood: "Little daughter, I am speaking to you. Rise!" And the women of the world are today stirring with a new life.

If Baptists would maintain themselves in this new age, they must heed this voice of the Master. If both boys and girls cannot be given the fullest training, then let the girls receive it first, in the interests of the race. For it is to the mothers that we commit absolutely the training of the coming generations during the first six most significant and impressionable years of life. Ignorant and superstitious mothers can render largely futile the best plans of education and the boldest ideals of reform. If we are to build the coming kingdom, we must begin with the women. The answer to the petition of the Lord's Prayer, "Thy kingdom come on earth," is dependent upon the Christian education and training of the mothers of men.

Although this ideal is recognized by a few advanced thinkers, it is but dimly discerned by the vast majority. The Indian women who are in training are only a fraction of the pupils in Indian schools. Even our Baptist schools have many more boys than girls. If the terrible problems of India are to be solved, we must see to it that we have as many and as thorough schools for girls as for boys; that every Christian man has the opportunity to select for his wife an intelligent, trained Christian woman. In China the number of women in schools falls short of the number of male students. In many churches in China the proportion of women church members is only one-fourth or one-half that of the men. In Africa a similar need exists; in fact, in all lands except those most thoroughly gospelized, the same bad discrimination exists, in varying degrees. The slogan for Baptist women in the new day ought to be: "Educate the women of all lands. When you educate a man, you liberate an individual; when you educate a woman, you liberate a family."

Schools in the Orient

One of the most hopeful and significant examples of the new educational opportunities for women is seen in the founding and support of the seven schools of higher learning in the Orient, by the women's boards of foreign missions. These women's boards of Scotland, England, Canada and the United States have united in their support—some eighteen in number—of every divergence of church organization and viewpoint, but united in one purpose, to provide a Christian, trained leadership for the women of the Orient. These schools are all young; almost all of them founded within ten or twelve years. Three of them are in India, three in China, and one in Japan. They are the Isabella Thoburn College at Luck-

Woman's Kingdom

BY EMMA L. MILLER

WOMAN'S coming to her kingdom
'Tis the year of jubilee,
May the banner of her freedom
Float o'er every land and sea.
While the cruel chains yet bind her,
In the lands of the oppressed,
Woman's coming to her kingdom
In the empire of the West.

* * *

She has stood for education
Over all this western world.
And the standard of her progress
Everywhere has been unfurled.
College doors now gladly open,
She has stood their keenest test,
Woman soon shall find her kingdom
In the empire of the West.

* * *

While we hail her larger freedom,
And believe it great and good,
May she evermore remember
Home should crown her womanhood.
Home is still her queenly province,
Lo! 'tis heaven's high behest,
May she ne'er despise her kingdom
In the empire of the West.

If for self she hoards her treasures,
Gathered at such pain and cost,
If she boast in pride of conquest,
All advantages may be lost.
If she pass not on to others
What is highest, richest, best,
Woman, too, may lose her kingdom
In the empire of the West.

now; the Madras Woman's College and the Woman's Medical School at Vellore; Ginling College at Nanking, Yenching College at Peking, and the North China Medical School for Women; and the Women's College at Tokyo.

An attempt has just been successfully completed in the United States, under the inspiring leadership of that great Baptist woman, Mrs. Henry W. Peabody, of Boston, to raise $3,000,000 for these colleges. The colleges are growing, enthusiastic, Christian to the backbone. They are destined to play a great part in furnishing to two-thirds of the women of the world, a trained and Christian leadership.

The Field of Organization

The second great opportunity before the Baptist women of today is in the field of organization. Indeed, women have a genius for organization, as has been evidenced in the fields of temperance, suffrage and missions. It was in 1861 that the first organized woman's board of missions was founded—an interdenominational organization established in New York. Soon after the close of the Civil War, denominational boards were organized in all of the leading Protestant denominations. These all began in weakness, but in faith, with a sense of a heavenly call to carry the gospel to the women and children of the non-Christian world. Today these national women's boards number over forty, with a combined annual income of more than $6,000,000. In addition to these, nearly as many women's boards of home missions have been organized, with an income almost as great. The two largest boards, those of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in the two fields of home and foreign missions, have each an income of $2,500,000. It is doubtful if the whole field of organized enterprise in the Protestant churches of America can show anything so successful. These women's societies have a great army of volunteer workers in county, state and nation. They are able to maintain a direct line of communication with the smallest and weakest local auxiliary. They carry on schools, hospitals, dispensaries, orphanages, asylums, Bible training schools, normal schools and colleges. They send out evangelists, nurses, teachers, doctors, editors and Sunday-school specialists. They build buildings, hold property, send out and sustain thousands of missionaries. They print magazines in many languages, among them the only magazine for children in all China; they publish books; they found and supervise a great system of training classes and institutes for the study of missions in every state in the union. They have banded themselves together in a Federation of Women's Boards of Foreign Missions, and in a Council of Women for Home Missions, which they vigorously support.

Now this great organization which the women have built up in a short half century is only an instance of what women have accomplished in the field or organization. It is a stimulus to Baptist women to extend still further the field of our organization. We must harness up this woman's genius for organization to the great claims of Jesus Christ. He is the Light of the world. It is only as we make his ways and words workable in the world that we are of any deep or permanent value to the world. A warning ought to be given to the leaders of the church, not to look coldly upon this out-reaching purpose of the women. If the world outside is more hospitable to the claims of women, offers them larger opportunities of initiative, responsibility and self-expression, than does the church, then the church must bear the consequent loss of power, as it sees its members turning from its work to that which summons them with a more persuasive voice. The church—our church—needs the services of its women. Let it summon them with a generous and compelling voice, to the service of Christ.

Third, there opens before Baptist women a great new opportunity of service. God has liberated and equipped them in order that they may offer their whole mind and soul and body in the service of this Saviour in whom alone rest the hopes of the world.

The fields of our service are various. More and more the world is turning to women to be the teachers of its children. The fear lest the preponderate influence of women in the schools might tend to enfeeble and feminize the boys was proved by the late war unfounded. American and English boys in the bloody trenches of France and Belgium showed valor never surpassed. Today the call to be teachers comes to women fragrant with the sense of service and of patriotism. It does not offer high salaries, it cannot compete with the voices of the market-place calling her, but in the school room the woman of today will find one of the callings that shape the future.

A new profession—that of director of religious education—summons her. In the glare of the world war we saw clearly the desperate need of that strong arm of the church militant, the Sunday school, for trained leadership. Already a new day has opened for our Sunday schools; a new army of supervisors and leaders is being trained. This is evident, not only in America and Europe, but in Asia. The child is the key to the situation. We must put him in the midst, as Jesus did, and bid the whole world gaze on him as the hope of the future. By encouraging the little ones to come to Jesus, we shall make unnecessary much toil now needed to win men to turn from their evil ways.

The great mission fields of the world are summoning the Christian woman of today with a mighty voice. We who have received everything from Christ are debtors to all, to share our blessings and privileges and our salvation. The need of all mankind is at bottom one—the need of a Saviour. We know that Saviour. We must carry that knowledge to the uttermost parts of the world.

The home is calling, as never before, for women to adopt and to glorify into a vocation the one absolutely essential profession. God is calling for mothers! —women who shall dedicate themselves and their children absolutely to him We need to say, as Mary did: "Behold God's handmaiden. Let it be to me according to thy word!"

The profession of motherhood, being the highest in the world, is also the most difficult. It demands the abjuring of self and the daily following of Christ. It takes youth and strength and beauty, and gives toil and heartbreak, oftentimes; but its wages are eternal. To the brave soldiers of the kingdom who, turning their backs on fame and glory, shall find in a humble home their sphere of service, God himself shall stoop with a fadeless garland to place it on the brow of the mother!

One Way of Celebrating Bastille Day in France

By W. O. Lewis

SOME of our brethren en route for Stockholm who happened to be in France on July fourteen saw how the French celebrate this day. They usually commence celebrating the fourteenth on the thirteenth and keep it up well into the morning of the fifteenth. In all the cities there is dancing out on the streets more than half of the night, and of course certain liquids not easily obtained in prohibition countries are partaken of freely. But there are some people in France who celebrate it in a different manner. This was true especially in Roubaix this year.

Roubaix is an industrial city of 130,000 in northern France, about six miles from the Belgian frontier. The city was not bombarded during the war, but much of the machinery was taken from its factories and conditions were not altogether pleasant during the four years of occupation. The city is nominally Roman Catholic, but the vast majority of the working classes have no sympathy for the Catholic church. Many are inclined toward socialism and even communism, and are without religion. One reason they are so is that their employers are strong Catholics and do all in their power to win the laboring class to the church. Recently when the Jesuits held a great celebration in honor of the Sacred Heart, many employers gave their employees a holdiay on full pay to enable them to take part in the celebration. There is only one other Protestant church in the city besides our Baptist church.

Our church there is forty-five years old, but has made little progress because it has never had a regular place of worship. It has been driven from one rented hall to another. During the war some of its members died of privation, and many were scattered never to return. There are at present thirty-five members, among whom are not over six or seven heads of families. One sister who died during the war left a small sum of money to be used to get a permanent place of worship. A little American Baptist money was added to this. A piece of property was bought which needed much repairing and remodelling to make it into a suitable place of worship. But the amount on hand was too small to finish the necessary repairs. The little flock was almost in despair. When they reached the limit of their resources, they did not know what to do. They had paid a fair share of the salary of their pastor; they had taken a generous collection for our French theological seminary; and in their poverty they had made great sacrifices for the completion of their building. They held a special prayer meeting to pray about the matter.

The pastor, Rev. Paul Pelcé, soon after this prayer meeting told one of our French laymen about the situation. This layman said:

"I have the answer to your prayer in my pocket."

"How is that?" asked Brother Pelcé.

"Here's the answer to your prayer," said the laymen handing over a check for 20,000 francs.

This layman is a skilled engineer. Recently a representative of a foreign corporation doing business in France asked his advice about some matters of a technical nature. The advice was freely given with no hope of reward. The foreign corporation profited by this advice and saved thousands of francs. The company felt it was nothing more than fair that it should share what it had saved through this advice with the man who gave it. A representative of the corporation again approached our Baptist engineer and told him how the company felt about it. He replied that he had given his advice freely with no expectation of pay, and that he would take nothing for his personal use. But he said there were causes in France dear to his heart and if they cared to give him anything, he would turn it over to one of these causes. They gave him a check for 20,000 francs, and it was this sum that enabled the church to complete the reconstruction of its place of worship which has cost 160,000 francs. The money will be paid back into a building fund to help other churches in like circumstances.

The chapel was near enough to completion to be dedicated July 14. Representatives from our churches in northern France were there. The B. Y. P. U. profited by the occasion to hold a convention in connection with the dedication. The pastor of the other Protestant church in Roubaix, who was unable to be present, sent a letter of congratulation in which he said he hoped the time would soon come when there were ten Protestant churches in Roubaix instead of two. Dr. J. T. Proctor consented to give a part of his sight-seeing trip with a party on the way to Stockholm to attend this meeting and to speak about the progress of the kingdom in China. Altogether July 14, 1923, will long be considered a memorable day by the Baptists of northern France.

Steps to Christ and Service

By C. S. Miao

THIS article is the substance of an address delivered on board the "America" on Sunday evening at a general religious meeting. It made a deep impression upon the hearer. It is a straightforward statement of the steps which led a Chinese boy to Christ and later to dedicate himself to Christian service. Doctor Miao has recently received from the University of Chicago his doctor's degree and high honors as a scholar. He goes back by the way of Stockholm to China where he will give himself to the work of religious education. With his own boyhood experiences vividly before him he will be able to render a far-reaching service to his people and to the kingdom.

MANY of my American friends who have deep interests in me like to know my religious experience. They are especially anxious to learn what my present religious attitudes are as the result of my four years' studying in America. It is for the interest of my dear friends that I have attempted to give the following sketches. As I do not want to overburden them with a detailed autobiography, I have tried only to point out a few high spots of my religious life in order to give them some ideas as how I have passed through some of the crises.

Probably it is proper to start my story with a picture of my early environment. I was born and brought up in a middle-class family. Being a business man in Shanghai, my father had picked up some brand new ideas. While others were dealing with the traditional religious customs reverently, he would treat them in such a way that could only satisfy his personal tastes and meet his conveniences. In spite of all oppositions and ridicules he would not allow his two daughters to have bound feet. His most cherished ambition was to give both his daughters and sons education, for he believed that it was much safer and more beneficial to give us education than money. My uncle is a Confucian scholar. He has a natural outlook toward the universe. To him the greatest thing in the world is to be a gentleman. It was in his school where I started my classical education. It was he who often took me to the Confucian temple. And it was my greatest joy in those days to spend most of my time in making imitative temples of Confucius.

When I was twelve years old, my father suddenly took me out of my uncle's school and put me in a Roman Catholic school in Shanghai. Indeed I was very much excited in the first few days at the school, for everything was new to me. But soon I found out that there was a great similarity between the images, pictures, candles and elaborate rituals in the Catholic church and those in Buddhist or Taoist temples. And I could not understand why the priests should call Buddhism or Taoism idolatrous religion and claim the superiority of their religion at all. To me they were all on the same boat. Among many pictures which I used to see in the halls, that of the devil had attracted most of my attention. It had long horns, sharp claws and a body as red as a steamed lobster. I was scared when one of the priests told us that the devil might appear in any night as it used to do in the past to drag people from their beds to the hell. We were also told that if we would make a sign of cross or had a picture of Mary or some other saints with us the devil could not do us any harm. I was so disgusted with such a religious life that I wanted to quit the school as soon as possible. But my father would not allow me to do so, for he was very much afraid that I might get a habit of changing schools too often. Furthermore he thought that the school with rigid disciplines was the very place for his son. However I had waited and waited until I saw there was a fat chance for me to get out of that school. Some of the bigger boys had started a strike. Although I did not understand the real cause of their strike, I was ready to walk out with them. My scheme indeed worked very well, as I was immediately fired by the school authority.

My father was so angry with me that he would not give me any advice as to which school I ought to go to. I had therefore to confer with some of the big boys who had been dismissed with me from the Catholic school. They told me that they were planning to enter a school near Yangtsepo and asked me to go with them. I took my entrance examination there and was accepted. But to my surprise I found out after a few days in the new school that I was again in a Christian environment. We were required to attend the chapel every morning, the Sunday school and service every Sunday, and to study the Bible like other subjects on the week days. I did not like such a compulsory religious education, but I could not complain to my father or change my school again because that time I chose the school myself. The only way to open my safety valve was to study the classics as hard as I could and to join the gang that would kick the Bible as a football and make fun with the poor Christian students. I was closely attached to a Chinese teacher who was a scholar as well as a gentleman. Besides these I was very much interested in the natural science. What did I care about becoming a Christian? Why should I give up everything we have in our civilization? Did I want to be one-hour-a-week religious man? Why should I be a tool of some missionary or preacher who would proudly take the number of baptisms as the idex of their work? Did I like to go to a church that had no interest whatsoever in the young people? Did I want to listen to a preacher whose sermon was as dry as dust and whose accent was more like that of a missionary than that of a Chinese? With these and many more objections in my mind, I was always ready to walk out from the chapel with other boys whenever in a revival meeting an untactful evangelist would say that those who did not want to become Christians could leave that room.

It was not until my junior year when I first time heard a prophetic message. Mr. Sherwood Eddy came to address to all students of the city of Shanghai. He wanted us to be real, good Chinese citizens. He told us—in a language that we could understand—the various social, industrial, political, and educational problems that we had to face and solve if we wanted to save China. And he was brave enough to say that unless we had the sacrificial spirit of Jesus Christ on the Calvary our sheer intelligence could not do much good to China. It was that frank and simple talk that had set me to think very seriously about the meaning of becoming a Christian, that had extended my spiritual as well as my intellectual horizon, and that had started my experimentation with the teaching of the talents. I discovered that the more I would forget myself and work for the welfare and happiness of others, the stronger I could be spiritually and the more abundant life I could get. It was that satisfactory experimentation that led me to become a Christian.

After graduation I remained in the college teaching in the department of physics. I was indeed very happy with my new job, for I liked very much to work in the laboratory. But soon Mr. Eddy came to Shanghai again. This time he picked me up as his interpreter. We had gone to many schools in Shanghai. The eagerness of the students in looking for light and their readiness to respond to Mr. Eddy's appeal were of an inspiration as well as a revelation to me. I began to ask myself what my life job should be and how I could serve Christ and China in a most effective way.

The result of my meditation was that I gave up my teaching and came over to America for advance study in religious education. I entered the University of Chicago simply because she was one of the leading universities in America. I did not know it was a "dangerous place" until one of my good missionary friends kindly gave me a tip. I still had some uncertainty about entering into ministry, and the prevalent theological quarrels had but added another impetus to my uncertainty. Many a time I was ready to quit my study; for I could not see that was the kind of message I ought to bring back to my people at home, that was the kind of profession I wanted to learn, and that was the kind of religion which the world needs.

However I had made up my mind that I wanted to study the life—the best life—of American people. Since then I have met and listened to many greatest preachers America has, visited the strongest and the most active churches and Christian centers there are in America, associated with the creams of young people from different parts of the world, and got a personal touch with the strongest professors in the university. I have been kindled by their zeal, inspired by their noble personality, and strengthened by their faith in Jesus Christ and their loyalty to the kingdom of God. I have now a Bible that is not only living but also most interesting, the Christ whose teaching is simple but profound, whose religion is not one-hour-a week but twenty-four-hours-a-day religion, and who is not a metaphysical or theological figure but my real Master and Saviour. I can bring back to my people now something that is not what we can debate about, but vital and practical; not to destroy the best in our civilization but to add that which we have not to our spiritual life.

A Bible Study on Divine Healing

By A. B. Reese

DOES the Bible teach the healing of the body by anointing with oil, laying on of hands and prayer as a general practice in the church? This is a fair question and one that should receive careful investigation before answering. Many good people honestly believe it does, many others just as good and just as honest, believe it does not.

As one of those who find no authority for this practice in the Bible, I wish to make a statement of the reasons which cause me to reject it and I hope they will be received in the same spirit of devotion to truth in which they are given.

The Bible is a sufficient rule for our faith and practice. To be correctly understood it should be interpreted by the following rules: First, who is speaking; second, who is spoken to; third, the subject spoken about. When this rule is observed it will throw light on many otherwise dark sayings of scripture. We shall use this rule in the study of our present subject.

There is no place recorded in the Old Testament where this doctrine was ever taught or practiced. In the New Testament there are two texts which some believe teach it. Mark 6:13 and James 5:14-15. Let us now examine these texts each in its turn. Mark 6:13 is the only text in the Bible where the anointing with oil is recorded in connection with the healing of the sick. In this text the evangelist is giving a report of a special mission on which the apostles had been sent by Jesus. A record of this mission is found in Matt. 10:1-15; Mark 6:7-14; Luke 9:1-9. You will observe that none of these give Jesus as authority for this anointing. If Jesus authorized it the scriptures are silent, and we frankly admit that we do not know. But this we do know, for on this point the Bible speaks plainly, this was a restricted mission (Matt. 10:5-6)—a mission restricted to "the lost sheep of the house of Israel." Had Jesus intended this anointing to become a practice in his church, he would not have restricted it (on this, the only occasion on which the anointing of the sick with oil is mentioned) to any particular class, but would have made the mission and anointing as broad as his church in the world.

Let us now examine the other text, James 5:14-15. To whom does James write these words? He does not write them to the church nor to the elect nor to the saints, but to the "twelve tribes scattered abroad," James 1:1. Evidently another case of "the lost sheep of the house of Israel."

Paul had founded churches among the Gentiles, in which churches those scattered Jews had their membership and were causing divisions, trying to compel the Gentile Christians to be circumcised and keep the whole Jewish law. (Read Paul's letter to the Galatians.) In Paul's first letter to the Corinthians (11:18-20), he refers to these divisions as unfitting the church to partake of the Lord's Supper and after naming other sins he says (1 Cor. 11:30): "For this cause many are weak and sickly among you and many sleep." Paul's letter to the church and James, letter to a faction in the church were both written about the same time, namely, the year 60. It was for this sickness of which Paul writes that James prescribes a remedy—a sickness visited on those who suffer as a punishment for their sin, sin against Christ and his church.

The thought James wishes to convey in his letter is this,—if these scattered Jews are ready and willing to repent, God is ready to heal and pardon. If we would apply this scripture to ourselves, we must first find ourselves in like condition to those to whom it was written for in no other way can we claim the promised healing. Had James intended this as a general practice in the church for all manner of disease, he would have written to the church and not to a faction in the church who are justly suffering for their sin. Had the church ever practiced it there would have been a record left to us, of some time, some place where it did so. As there is no such record, we may be sure, this doctrine was never taught or practiced in the early Christian church.

Let us now take a look at the other side of this question. The Bible does teach, both directly and by inference, the use of medicine as God's way to heal the sick. When God would heal Hezekiah. Isaiah prescribed a plaister of figs (2 Kings 20:7; Isaiah 38:21). When he would have Moses compound an anointing oil the formula given contained five ingredients, each a medicine (Ex. 30:22-26). Solomon says "a cheerful heart doeth good like a medicine" (Prov. 17:22). Jeremiah alludes to the healing qualities of the balm of Gilead (Jer. 8:-22). Ezekiel tells of a tree whose leaves shall be for medicine (Ezek. 47:12). Jesus tells us the sick need a physician (Luke 5:31) and taught the Pharisees they ought to tithe mint, rue, anise, cummin and all manner of herbs (Matt. 23:23); Luke 11:42). Most of these were of no value except as a medicine. He also commends the good Samaritan for pouring oil and wine into and binding up the wounds of him who fell among thieves, saying, "Go, and do thou likewise." (Luke 10:15-35.) Paul prescribes a remedy for Timothy's stomach's sake and other infirmities (Tim. 4:23). Let us now examine this case in particular. First it was about the year 66, or six years after the Epistle of James was written; second Mark, the one who gave us the only record in the Bible of anointing the sick, is the companion of Timothy. Luke, the beloved physician, is with Paul (2 Tim. 4:11). Timothy from a child, had known the Holy Scriptures (1 Tim. 3:15). He was pastor of the church at Ephesus, and had the Bible taught or the church practiced healing according to the rule laid down (Jas. 5:14-15), Timothy would have been both preaching and practicing it. Why, then, this advice from Paul? There is but one reasonable explanation, James' advice to the "twelve tribes scattered abroad" did not reach Timothy's case and this doctrine was never taught or practiced in the church.

Confirming the Word

I wish to call your attention to the fact that divine healing is placed among those signs which were given to confirm the word (Mark 16:17-20). By prophecy and miracle we know the Bible is a revelation from God to man, for by these very signs has he sealed it. The prophetic office of Elisha was confirmed by miracle and healing (2 Kings 2:14-15; 2 Kings 5:8). In like manner was Jesus recognized as a teacher come from God (John 3:2; John 5:36; Acts 2:22 and many other texts).

God could sustain us as well without food as heal us without medicine, but he does not. He will not use supernatural where natural means can as well be used in carrying forward his purpose in the divine plan. The supernatural never has and never will be used for any other purpose.

There are some real cases of what is

(Continued on page 958)

The General Board of Promotion of the Northern Baptist Convention

Financial Needs from May 1, 1923, to April 30, 1924

| | |
|---|---|
| 1. Operating Budgets | $ 8,409,096.00 |
| 2. Indebtedness | 1,853,685.37 |
| 3. Underdrawings | 1,848,740.30 |
| 4 Contingent Fund | 50,000.00 |
| Total needs for the year | $12,161,521.67 |
| Less estimated income from invested funds, legacies, matured annuities | 689,555.00 |
| Balance to be secured from donation sources | $11,471,966.67 |

Column 1 distributes this $11,471,966.67 between the states on the percentage basis of their contributions to the New World Movement in the three previous years.
Column 2 indicates the amount due by July 15 this year on the basis of the churches paying one-twelfth of Column 1 each month.
Column 3 shows the amount collected from May 1 to July 15 of the current fiscal year.
Column 4 shows the amount collected to July 15 last year.
Column 5 indicates the percentage relation of collections to July 15 this year to collections in same period last year.
The order in which the states are listed is determined by the percentage relation of amounts collected (Column 3) to amounts due (Column 2).

| RANK | STATES | 1 | 2 | 3 | 4 | 5 |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| 1 | Missouri | $ 74,200.00 | $ 15,458.34 | $ 14,725.83 | $ 8,450.58 | 174.26 |
| 2 | Arizona | 28,500.00 | 5,937.50 | 2,693.11 | 651.48 | 413.38 |
| 3 | Delaware | 14,200.00 | 2,958.33 | 1,320.17 | 1,066.88 | 123.74 |
| 4 | Michigan | 360,000.00 | 75,000.00 | 33,371.20 | 24,844.35 | 134.32 |
| 5 | Nevada | 5,300.00 | 1,104.17 | 477.71 | 451.12 | 105.89 |
| 6 | New Hampshire | 130,700.00 | 27,229.17 | 11,552.28 | 11,419.94 | 101.16 |
| 7 | New Jersey | 714,100.00 | 148,770.83 | 56,298.59 | 23,982.82 | 234.75 |
| 8 | New York State | 1,167,800.00 | 243,291.67 | 90,394.00 | 77,875.64 | 116.07 |
| 9 | Pennsylvania | 1,104,500.00 | 230,104.17 | 82,992.51 | 77,721.73 | 106.78 |
| 10 | Connecticut | 340,600.00 | 70,958.33 | 25,042.06 | 15,733.20 | 159.17 |
| 11 | Indiana | 385,600.00 | 80,333.33 | 25,545.40 | 7,469.41 | 342.00 |
| 12 | Wisconsin | 137,900.00 | 28,729.17 | 8,717.38 | 5,638.63 | 154.61 |
| 13 | Rhode Island | 203,600.00 | 42,416.67 | 12,700.98 | 12,828.77 | 99.00 |
| 14 | Nebraska | 133,100.00 | 27,729.17 | 7,937.95 | 11,306.88 | 70.20 |
| 15 | Vermont | 120,900.00 | 25,187.50 | 7,120.53 | 6,804.68 | 104.64 |
| 16 | *Oregon | 105,500.00 | 21,979.17 | 6,202.00 | 3,739.01 | 165.87 |
| 17 | Kansas | 261,000.00 | 54,375.00 | 15,234.59 | 10,229.84 | 148.92 |
| 18 | Illinois | 679,300.00 | 141,520.83 | 39,482.85 | 32,553.64 | 121.29 |
| 19 | Maine | 199,000.00 | 41,458.33 | 11,342.58 | 13,253.62 | 85.58 |
| 20 | Utah | 3,700.00 | 770.83 | 210.74 | 118.47 | 177.88 |
| 21 | Wyoming | 12,600.00 | 2,625.00 | 703.26 | 805.14 | 87.35 |
| 22 | Minnesota | 230,200.00 | 52,125.00 | 13,889.47 | 12,361.37 | 112.36 |
| 23 | Montana | 22,300.00 | 4,645.83 | 1,186.81 | 1,766.27 | 67.19 |
| 24 | *Colorado | 144,100.00 | 30,020.83 | 7,641.65 | 6,315.75 | 120.99 |
| 25 | Idaho | 29,700.00 | 6,187.50 | 1,531.87 | 2,858.48 | 53.59 |
| 26 | Washington, East | 84,100.00 | 17,520.83 | 4,195.88 | 2,889.86 | 145.19 |
| 27 | Massachusetts | 1,023,600.00 | 213,250.00 | 51,031.82 | 54,458.85 | 93.71 |
| 28 | South Dakota | 66,000.00 | 13,750.00 | 3,280.12 | 3,248.55 | 100.97 |
| 29 | Ohio | 734,900.00 | 153,104.17 | 32,054.49 | 37,716.47 | 84.99 |
| 30 | *District Columbia | 43,800.00 | 9,125.00 | 1,038.70 | 20.00 | 9,193.50 |
| 31 | Iowa | 278,200.00 | 57,951.33 | 11,280.09 | 15,872.39 | 71.07 |
| 32 | Washington, West | 109,100.00 | 22,729.17 | 4,259.02 | 5,426.14 | 70.49 |
| 33 | California, S. | 615,700.00 | 128,270.13 | 23,428.81 | 10,885.72 | 215.23 |
| 34 | West Virginia | 246,600.00 | 51,416.67 | 9,220.89 | 14,023.10 | 65.75 |
| 35 | *California, N. | 191,400.00 | 39,875.00 | 6,230.00 | 5,348.59 | 116.48 |
| 36 | North Dakota | 37,500.00 | 7,812.50 | 1,219.99 | 1,366.37 | 89.29 |
| 37 | New York Metropolis | 1,412,500.00 | 294,270.63 | 22,083.65 | 17,059.91 | 129.45 |
| Miscellaneous | | | | 5,368.00 | 7,360.49 | |
| Total | | $11,472,000.00 | $2,390,000.00 | $653,800.98 | $545,924.74 | 119.76 |

*July 15 collections not included.
Amount of collections to July 15, 1922, not complete.

Facts, Impressions, Comments

(Continued from page 932)

Doctor Rushbrooke commended America for its "moral leadership and idealism" and pointed to its prohibition laws as an example. He expressed the feeling that courtesy and good sportsmanship should lead the British Embassy in Washington to respect the law of the land. This statement met with tremendous applause. We could not but wonder what in the minds of Europeans was the effect of the drinking of beer and light wines by Americans in Europe. Will such a course tend to increase respect for us and for our laws? Some folks seemed to interpret Doctor Rushbrooke in this wise: "Let the British in America do as good Americans do and let Americans in Europe do as they please."

* * *

We heard a great deal about the peril to civilization of European politics and secret diplomacy. We wonder if Baptist politics and secret diplomacy are less perilous to true Baptist democracy. It seemed strange to us to see the pictures circulated of men supposed to have been nominated for high positions in the alliance before a nominating committee had so much as been named. What are nominating committees for? To rubber stamp journalistic candidates we judge.

* * *

We rejoiced in the fact that when an opportunity was given for prayer our brethren from Russia, Roumania and other European countries who had but little opportunity to speak before men could not be kept from speaking to God. We must say that we had too few such prayer meetings in which together we might pray. These folks by hardship and suffering have learned to pray mightily. It did us good to hear them with earnestness, though in words we did not understand, call upon God for help.

Religious Education

The Hindering Good Man

Nearly all churches and Sunday schools are more or less familiar with him. One finds him in offices for the duties of which he has little capacity, but once entrenched in that office there he sometimes remains for years. One finds him in the person of the Sunday-school superintendent who is a man of irreproachable character, but who has not kept abreast of the times in his reading or thinking, and who is hopelessly antiquated in some of his views. He has no use at all for such "new-fangled" things as class organization, graded lessons, graded schools or any modern thing that has come into the Sunday school in the thirty or more years that he has been superintendent. He opens and closes the school today exactly as he opened and closed it thirty years ago, and as his father opened and closed it before him. Only recently it was said of a superintendent of this kind:

"You know that he has been superintendent for thirty-four years, that no one would think of suggesting a change, although ours is the deadest Sunday school in town. But what can we do? Mr. Blank never hints at resigning and no one has the courage to suggest that he do so. He is such a good man!"

Visiting a men's Bible class once very large and flourishing, it was found to be small and of little value as a community force or a help to the church and Sunday school. Investigating as to the reason for this one of the members said:

"Well, the plain fact is that we elected the wrong man leader of the class when it was organized. He was known to be one of the very best men in our town so far as character was concerned. The class grew all right for a time in the first enthusiasm of organization, but after awhile the men began to drop out, and I feel sure that it was partly because of our leader, who was also the teacher, and was not qualified for either position. Our class constitution does not put any limit to the time any one should hold office and ours is a case where a limitation of that kind would have been a good thing, although there are times when it works ill by ousting really capable men from office."

It would not be at all difficult to cite other instances of men holding important offices in the Sunday school almost solely on the claim that they are such "good men" that no one can think of having them removed and they are too obtuse to be aware of their own limitations. The writer knows of a weak little Sunday school having for a superintendent a woman who has held the position for forty-three years and who announces that she wants to "round out a good fifty years" before retiring. She will have reached the age of eighty when that times comes. But she is good and she "means well," two reasons for keeping in office many a hopelessly inefficient officer or teacher in the Sunday school. It is easier to state these facts than it is to suggest a remedy. Superintendents who have been tactful enough to remove "good" people of this kind from office without creating a "rumpus" would do well to make known their methods for the benefit of other superintendents who are often sorely perplexed in regard to what to do in situations of this kind.—Paul Creighton in Organized Class Magazine.

Are You a Teacher or a Leader?

The junior teacher should not be content with simply teaching her class. She should be the class leader. The teacher who comes into the Sunday-school room just in time to take charge of the lesson period and leaves as soon as it is over may be an excellent teacher, so far as imparting the lesson is concerned, but she is not a good class leader.

The teacher should sit with her class from the moment Sunday school starts till the very close. She should be there in her place to greet the children before Sunday school opens and to speak to every member of the class at its close.

If she is going to be the best leader possible for her charges she will be present at the church service, and, if possible, sit with her class during church.

Much of reverence and love for church service can be taught by the teacher who considers that her job is not done till church services are dismissed. She can set the children in her charge a good example in reverence by bowing her head during the worship period and sitting in perfect repose. She can lead them to pay attention to what the teacher says by asking them from time to time for their interpretation of parts of the sermon and by calling attention to particularly good parts that she thinks might apply to the pupils' own lives. She can make some credits possible in class work for church attendance. She can speak a word for the church service on every occasion.

The teacher who stays with her class can watch that every child takes part in the singing and in the responsive readings and all the other parts of the general service. If any do not she can speak to them privately and make it a point of honor with every one of them to do what they can to help the school out.

Of course the teacher will strive to know her pupils outside the Sunday relation. She will meet with them as often as possible on week days. She will know the things they are interested in and will strive to be interested with them. No teacher can be a leader unless she is thoroughly in earnest and on the lookout all the time for better methods and better things to bring to her class. This does not mean she must spend all her time on her class. Few could do that, but the class should be in her thoughts many times a day and in her prayers always.—C. Grace Moreland in Junior Teacher.

International Sunday School Lesson for September 9

JOHN MARK

Lesson: Acts 12:12, 25-13:5; 15: 36-40; 2 Tim.: 4:11

Golden Text: Ecclesiastes 9:10

Introductory

Ten verses in the Bible supply us with what we know of Mark. He was a nephew of Barnabas the great-hearted whom we studied two weeks ago. Paul refers later to Mark as his fellow worker. Mark's mother was a wealthy woman of Jerusalem whose first name was Mary.

The Lesson

Following their mission of carrying the funds contributed by the Christians of Antioch to the poor of Judea, Paul and Barnabas returned to Antioch where they were two of the leaders at the church. They took with them John Mark. During special services the church at Antioch felt inspired to send forth missionaries to the Gentiles, and Paul and Barnabas were consecrated to this work. They sailed for Cyprus, taking John Mark with them. But when Paul suggested a revisiting of the churches founded on their previous visit, he did not wish to have John Mark accompany them, probably because the young man had left them previously when they reached Pegra. This difference helped to make a breach between the two older men which later was healed, although this was the end of the joint work of Paul and Barnabas. Barnabas left Paul then and went into Cyprus with John Mark. He had faith in his nephew and later this was confirmed by the work of Mark. Paul also saw that he had been mistaken in his estimate of the young preacher, for through Timothy he sent for Mark, saying in his letter to Timothy, "Take Mark, and bring him with thee; for he is useful to me for ministering."

Leading Thoughts

1. The ministering Mark whom Paul desired was no doubt the result of the faith the great-hearted Barnabas had in him. 2. Faith in a man binds him to fulfill that faith. 3. Mark might have withdrawn from the work rebuffed; instead he went with Barnabas, took his second chance and made good. 4. There is always a second chance for the man who is sincere and who has the humility to take it.

The Chimney Corner

Fall Styles for Church Members

YOU must please forgive this tale. It is horribly personal. Not that I am in it myself, and perhaps you won't find yourself in it, either; but in case there are places where you wince, just grin and bear it. He had to! Ministers are doing it every day and especially on the seventh day of the week.

The truth of the matter is that the church in question ought not to have expected him home for Labor Day Sunday. You and I, of course, belong to churches well enough versed in kindliness to realize that any minister would naturally dread beginning anew on that day of inevitable let-down due to absentee week-enders. But "they" did not realize. He sometimes thought with exasperation that "they" never would realize anything of his real problem: he trudged uphill and downhill on his idle vacation days, laying best-laid plans for his winter's work, as pastors will, making lists. . . .

But into every plan there leaped the specter of future conscientious objectors. Deacon Hard-shell, Mr. Trustee Nothing-Changes here, Mrs. Ladies-Aid We-Never-Have. . .

"I'll make another list," he kept murmuring during those enchanted days of sapphire skies and emerald hills. Each new day saw new deterrents added, until the lists had grown shockingly complicated, and the glory of a vacation was clouded by the salary-payers back at home. It was with considerable private amusement therefore that—two evenings before Labor Day Sunday—in a village not far from his hotel, he attended a traveling Chautauqua and, in listening to a performance of "The Mikado" heard Ko-Ko sing:

"As some day it may happen that a victim must be found,
I've got a little list—I've got a little list
Of social offenders who might well be underground,
And who never would be missed—who never would be missed!
There's the pestilential nuisances who write for autographs—
All people who have flabby hands and irritating laughs—
All children who are up on dates, and floor you with 'em flat—
All persons who in shaking hands, shake hands with you like that—
And all third persons who on spoiling têtes-a-têtes insist—
They'd none of 'em be missed—they'd none of 'em be missed."

On and on the Lord High Executioner proceeded, naming pet aversions of his own; there was one clap in the audience which expressed more rapt appreciation than any of the bucolic audience could possibly understand, and even on returning to his hotel the minister had not done with applause, for hardly had his head touched the pillow that night than he began making lists recklessly: "I've got a little list—I've got a little list."

"Who's on it?" asked the Lord High Executioner curiously.

"The People Who Persistently and Insistently Sit on Back Seats in the Synagogue," said the minister, carefully noting some names.

He's got 'em on the list—He's got 'em on the list—
They'll none of 'em be missed—They'll none of 'em be missed," chanted the gleeful Ko-Ko.

"Oh, but they will be missed," groaned their pastor in an agony of truest devotion, "Some of my best friends, so-called, sit back there; but they haven't yet gotten into close enough sympathy with me to put themselves in my place and realize what a ghastly sensation it is to shout a sermon across a forest of wooden pews to those rear seats. Some day they'll have a dawning glimmer."

"Who's next?" asked the Lord High Executioner.

"The People Who Come to Church Late," wrote the pastor, sighing.

He's got 'em on the list—He's got 'em on the list—
They'll none of 'em be missed—They'll none of 'em be missed."

"Missed?" ejaculated the poor minister, "Why, if they didn't come, the janitor and I would be doing duets all morning long. But there's a world of wasted preparation poured into opening exercises, and untold anxiety while I sit there counting noses."

"Discourteous, to say the least. And inefficient. Who's next?"

"The People Who Never Sing in Church."

He's got 'em on the list—He's got 'em on the list—
They'll none of 'em be missed—They'll none of 'em be missed."

"That's where you're sadly mistaken, smiled the pastor, "for we'd miss those silent souls frightfully, but I'd rather hear a person sing off-key than to see him simply stand and stand and stand. Moreover, sir, there's an element of communion and fellowship that steals over a person while singing that can never come from merely looking at the printed verses. I wish I could painlessly extract all self-consciousness from the people who are afraid to sing and all indifference from the persons in whose hearts hymns are not spontaneous outbursts of joy."

"Next?"

"Well, I believe that next I will list the People Who Never Close Their Eyes During a Prayer."

He's got 'em on the list—He's got 'em on the list—
They'll none of 'em be missed—They'll none of 'em be missed."

"Look here, my friend, that little refrain of yours is singularly inappropriate, for not only would they be sadly missed from my church, but they little dream what they themselves are missing: a heart that never sends forth its little ship of desires and thankfulness into God's great ocean of plenty is indeed stranded on a lonely desert island. Even if the minister fails to pilot their cargoes into channels of blessing, their closed eyes alone might steer them into some silent haven of communion, of separation from earthly sights and sounds. It is not a pleasant feeling for any pastor to feel that his auditorium is full of persons so out of tune with the Infinite that God's work is not their work; they cannot even spare five minutes to commune with him over the affairs they share in common."

"Anybody else?" sighed the dream-voice.

"Alas, yes; the People Who Want to Leave It to George!" sighed their pastor, writing fast as the names came to his mind. For behold, they were legion!

"He's got 'em on a list—He's got 'em on a list—
They'll none of 'em be missed—they'll none of 'em be missed."

"This nightmare has gone on long enough," said the loyal man of God, forcefully bringing himself back to consciousness, for full well he knew that if he lost from his membership all the persons who wanted "George" to do it instead of themselves, his pews would be deserted, his church doors nailed up. With the nobility of kindliness which his members took for granted, he said humbly:

"There's so much good in the worst of us,
And so much bad in the best of us
That it doesn't behoove any of us
To find any fault with the rest of us."

And with that, he slept! For it is written of God in the Bible that "he giveth his beloved sleep." But if you are on this pastor's list, his sleep could be made more refreshing by adopting a new fall style!

This department is conducted by Miss Margaret T. Applegarth. Communications to her may be addressed in care of THE BAPTIST.

---

Alice for the first time saw a cat carrying her kitten by the nape of the neck.

"You ain't fit to be a mother," she cried scathingly. "You ain't hardly fit to be a father!"—Youth's Companion.

The Young Reserves

Contest Award

IT has been the most interesting day possible reading over the Japanese stories which you have entered in our summer contest. The stories have never been so well done or so carefully prepared, it was a real joy to read them and I do wish it were possible to award prizes to every single Young Reserve who competed. It was interesting to find how many sets of stories came from one town. From a certain Sunday-school class came four stories, all very, very short however, so brief that they could hardly be considered among so many splendid long stories. Then from Genoa, Nebr., came three stories all of them fine—one from Hazel Young, one from Hertha Pope, and one from Nina Anderson. They were very well done and the fact that there happened to be no boys competing this time has led me to decide to send the boy's prize to these three girls! The girls' prize goes to Frances McNutt of Worcester, Mass., who sent the following story:

My Little Japanese Friend

By Frances Athlene McNutt
(Age 10 years.)

When I read that there is to be a story about a little Japanese girl or boy, I at once thought of my dear little friend Susie King Ju. I want to tell you all about her. We always called her Susie King because that sounded more like an American name, than Susie Ju. Susie is now ten years old. She was born way over in Japan and came to America when she was a wee little girl, with her father and mother. Her father had business in Worcester and they moved here and that is how I became acquainted with Susie. She started at once to come to our Sunday school and she was in my class. My mother was the superintendent of the department. Everybody loved Susie from the beginning. She was very bright and cheerful, and could speak, read and write English as well as any of the children in our department. If any of the teachers wanted anything nicely done, they always called on Susie. Once when our church had a White Christmas program, Susie was trundled down all dressed in white, in a white covered wheelbarrow. You see this was Susie's American "jinrikisha." All around her, in the wheelbarrow were bags of rice, gifts to the church from her Japanese friends. She climbed out on the platform and sang, "Jesus Loves Me This I Know," one of her favorite songs. Susie was a very sweet singer.

But once there came a sudden change in Susie's life. Her father got sick and the doctors told him he would have to go back to Japan where he might get well. He had a little farm in Japan, but it was way off from any Christian church or school. They did not want to take Susie there. Her father and mother wanted her to grow up to be an educated woman and a good Christian. They asked our church to take care of Susie for them. How could a good missionary church refuse to do this for such a fine little Japanese girl as Susie? A good home must be found for her, where she would not be lonesome, and could go to school and church.

Her father, mother, little sister and baby brother went way off to Japan. I am glad Susie did not have to go. Since I know Susie I have been interested to read about Japan. I have read about some things that do not make little girls very happy over there and I should not want it to happen to Susie. In a book I have just read, "Little Sister Snow," the little girl knew only about a god called Buddha and he did not answer some of her prayers which she wanted answered so much. Then her father decided to have her married to a rich man when she was only eleven years old. Of course there are many lovely things in Japan, too. The mothers love their little children just as they do here. The little girls wear such beautiful flowered kimonos often made of silk. They have such pretty parasols and fans, too. I would like to see their stores, over there for even here in America they have such odd little things that they make themselves. The flowers must be lovely, especially the cherry blossoms, chrysanthemums and wistaria. I think it would be fun to live in paper houses. But they do not know or talk much about Jesus or God.

So Susie was sent to a good home in Maine, where two other children live. Our church takes all the care of her, sends money and clothing. I get letters and cards from Susie and she is happy as a little lark. She loves her school and Sunday school. Last year at Christmas time the primary department sent her a big box of Christmas things, and we had heaps of fun getting it ready. This is real missionary work and Susie is getting along fine, but I wonder when dear little Susie's father, mother, sister and brother will be able to come back to America. I know Susie will be glad and so will I. Won't you?

Our Youngest Contestant

You will notice that Frances, who won the prize, is ten years old; but a little six-year-old girl sent me the following letter:

"Dear Miss Applegarth:

"I read the story of the Japanese Fan. I know the pictures by heart. I wish all the Japanese had Bibles. I pray for them at night. I love them. I love you, too. Goodbye.

Your little friend,
Alice."

Isn't it the loveliest letter? All printed in big square letters, with one or two E's facing the wrong way around, like this Ǝ, exactly as I used to make them myself. I am so sorry that "Alice" could not print all of her name, for I would like to write to her, if some one in her family will send me her name and address. The letter had an adorable little Japanese girl at the top, with a fan in her hand; but although she looks so attractive she can't speak any English or tell me more about Alice! Contests are great fun, aren't they?

M. T. A.

B. Y. P. U. Convention Impressions

The messages of the various speakers would bring out the best that is in us and fill our lives with the "attractive Christ."—Tom Riches.

This B. Y. P. U. convention has meant a world of good to me and has inspired me to establish in the hearts of my fellowmen the word of God.—Joseph Small.

The "attractive Christ" has grown more and more attractive to me during this convention and I shall return to my society with a firmer zeal for Christian work.

This convention is the first that I attended, but by the grace of God it will not be the last.—Pauline Fitzgerald.

If only it might be the privilege of everybody to have the opportunity of receiving the inspiration which I have received from my stay in Boston attending this convention. Christ has been made more attractive than ever before to me.—Lois Brown.

After attending this convention and seeing the hundreds of Christian young men and women I have determined to (by God's help) live a better life.—Iona Spainhauer.

The big thing the convention has done for me is to awaken a realization of what wonderful possibilities are opened to us as Christians when our lives are fully surrendered to God.—Pauline L. Munday.

Conception of the B. Y. P. U.—the young disciples of Christ.—L. E. McAllister.

Although this has been my first convention, I am quite sure it will not be the last. I have received a great inspiration which I shall carry back to my local.—Lillian Hopkins.

We have received the ammunition, now we go back to use it, and may its use result in something besides a report.—Wm. Johnson.

When I try to express the inspiration I have received from this my first convention, words fail me.—Beth Wing.

A reconsecration to an attractive Christ whose great power can only be felt by the world when he may work through us so that we may live and help others live.—Minnie Macauley.

This convention has proved to me there is work for each of us to do. By the grace of the Heavenly Father I am determined to do my best for him.—Julia McCrory.

This convention has given me more inspiration than any other convention I have attended.—Elva McDaniel.

Young People's Work

Topic for September 9

DIFFERENT FORMS OF GAMBLING, AND THE EVIL OF IT

Prov. 16:8; Jer. 17:9-11

"Better is a little, with righteousness, Than great revenues with injustice."

There must be something measurably fascinating about a game of chance, else so many people would not take part in the game. Gambling is carried on from the flip of the coin on the corner lot, up through the baseball parks, around the race tracks, into the fashionable parlors, into the stock markets, etc. It has sometimes been named as one of our great national sins. Some forms of gambling:

1. Games of chance. They are numerous—cards, dice, machines at race tracks, etc. How easy it is for young people to fall into the gambling habit! During the war boys and girls, men and women simply went wild over crap games. It was no uncommon thing to witness games going on right out in the street, with but little interference.

Under this head would fall the pernicious schemes sometimes fostered at fairs of different kinds. Tickets are sold with a chance, say on an automobile. And, the suckers bite, good, bad, and indifferent. I have heard supposedly good church members boast that they came pretty close to winning.

Again, there is the criminal business carried on even by some ecclesiastical organizations. Little children are sent far and wide selling tickets with a chance on various things. It would seem that the courts of the land would stop this business of making criminals out of the childhood of the country.

2. Playing for a stake. Practically the same thing, of course. But, there is a group of people who are mighty big sinners, and they think they are respectable folks. At least, they do not go to jail. At the same time if a poor black man is caught in a crap game in the back alley, he goes to prison. I have reference to that group of so-called society women who meet in fashionable homes and play for prizes of one sort or another. They play with the same zest as the blackleg gambler plays for his money, and in my opinion, they are just as great criminals. Think of the influence upon the childhood—upon such childhood as may be found in such homes, for, fortunately, they do not have many children to be spoiled.

Probably it is not necessary to discuss those forms of gambling ordinarily thought of as so outrageous. We need to turn our attention to the evil of the thing.

These various games of chance have a very deteriorating effect upon character. The desire to get something without giving value received is essentially dishonest. One cannot engage in this sort of thing without becoming a thief and a criminal, it makes no difference whether he be a professional, or a so-called highly respectable individual. The preachers and leaders of young people today can render a great service by preaching old-fashioned honesty in no uncertain terms.

These pages are for all Baptist young people's organizations. Send news items on activities, organizations, plans and methods of work for publication in THE BAPTIST to James Asa White, General Secretary 143 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago.

Convention Impressions

It has meant a reconsecration of my life to my work at the home church.—Florence Cookson.

I had determined to give my life in full time service for our Master before coming to the convention but I am going back with more courage to go on and a stronger determination to go where he wants me to go and to do what he wants me to do. The fellowship of those who are his servants and the realization of his need of me to help them bring his kingdom here to those who do not know him has a grip on me which it is impossible to get away from. —Sadie A. Raycraft.

The strength and union of the young people and God's help to people—Alice Sanders.

It has been an inspiration to me to be in this great convention and to realize anew the great possibilities wrapped up in our young people. God grant that they may have a vision of the great work and its needs.

I have watched our delegates outside the halls and I am convinced our young people have that consciousness in them which was also in Christ Jesus.—Ellsworth O. Birber.

This has been my first convention and I thank our Father God for having brought us together in such a great Christian fellowship. These few days spent here in Boston have been the greatest days of my life.—Susan Thurber.

A great inspiration, a quickened appreciation of the value of these annual conventions to the young life of our denomination.—Rev. W. C. Whataker.

My first convention, has meant more than I can say, and hope I won't miss another one.—Grace Wright.

The attractive Christ—our vision splendid. Loyalty to Christ—our motto glorious. Service for Christ—our task victorious.—Helen Morse.

These meetings have meant to me an inspiration, especially Doctor Taylor's address.—George Mackie.

The convention was very inspirational to me and taught me to go forward with "the attractive Christ" through the coming year.—Chas. J. Haas.

This is the first convention that I have attended and I hope not the last. I will go home to my people with more faith and I will be ready to do all I can.—Frances Brockway.

The convention has meant so much to me that words cannot express my feeling—H. Benner.

Heaven to me. All for Jesus. God bless you.—E. A. Tracy.

The convention has meant the greater consecration of my whole life to "the attractive Christ."—Susie Rock.

I only fear that I'll not do justice to the messages I have received.—E. McDaniel.

This convention has meant much to me in encouraging me to go on in the work for Christ even to the end of the world.—Elizabeth Marcy.

This is the first convention I have ever attended. I certainly have enjoyed every address I have heard.—G. Irwin.

A great spiritual uplift.—J. R. Quick.

This convention has given me a greater vision of Jesus Christ.—M. B. Gossner.

This is my first convention but not my last. I have enjoyed it very much.—Sylvester Wells.

More friends; a greater vision of the power of young people for Christ; a determination to help them to do more for him.—Elgin Smith.

This is my first convention but I hope not my last. The speakers have given me a great inspiration.—Clifford Baker.

This has been a great day for me. I have got enough spiritual food to last me all my life.—Ada J. Porter.

The convention has brought me the realization that the B. Y. P. U.'s of America can accomplish anything they undertake for our attractive Christ.—Eva McDowell.

I have received an inspiration during this convention that I hope will enable me to help to make Christ more attractive than ever before to the Baptist young people of Washington, D. C.—Bert Starnes.

The convention brought to me a clearer vision of "the attractive Christ."—Helen M. Clark.

This great Boston convention has helped me to see the Christ in a more attractive light; it has caused me to gain a fuller conception of my duty as steward—as steward of my time, talents, and life, which all belong to God.—Stella Mae Adamson.

This convention has given me the greatest inspiration of my life, and caused me to promise my Lord and Master that I will use this inspiration at every opportunity.—Tate Culberson.

Our Own Folks

Fifteenth Annual Czecho-Slovak Convention

By M. B. Listiak

The fifteenth annual Czecho-Slovak Baptist Convention was held at Cicero, Ill., June 30—July 5.

The convention opened Saturday evening. Rev. J. Fort, pastor of the Third Bohemian Baptist Church, extended a hearty welcome to the delegates and guests. Following the addresses, each delegate was called upon to make a short speech. On Sunday, July 1, the pastors were invited to preach at the different Czecho-Slovak Baptist churches of Chicago.

The first two days, July 2 and 3, were devoted to the addresses of the convention, the themes of which were "The Gospel." Each session was opened by a prayer service. Rev. G. M. Hadraba spoke on "The Gospel and our Time;" Prof. J. J. Zmrhal, on "The Gospel and Education;" Rev. S. J. Herban, president of the convention, on "The Gospel and the Preparation of the Minister;" Rev. V. J. Vita, on "The Gospel and Modern Inventions;" Rev. E. Catlos on "The Gospel and Its Power in our Age." A discussion followed each address.

Inspirational addresses were given by our American brethren. Dr. B. Otto, in his address, on "The Gospel of Christ," struck the keynote of the convention. Dr. A. H. Gage gave an address on "Evangelism of Youth." At a special celebration held in honor of John Russ at Havlicek Tyrs Hall, Dr. E. Burton, president of the University of Chicago delivered an address on "Christ as a Thinker," which dealt with the remarkable career of Jesus.

Evenings were devoted to evangelical services. Rev. J. Kejr, one of our oldest pastors, preached Monday and Thursday evenings, and the church was filled at every meeting.

Fourth of July came in the midst of our convention week, so we turned out 1,000 strong to an old-fashioned picnic. Thursday, July 5, was devoted entirely to business, and one of the main features of the convention's program was the organization of the women. The convention feels that this step was a necessary one and is confident that the women will do more and greater work for the spreading of the gospel, being united. A plan has also been proposed for a similar organization of the Czecho-Slovak young people, which will undoubtedly be accomplished at the next convention.

A spirit of brotherly love was prevalent throughout all the problems that came before the convention, and those of us who were present felt a desire to make the coming year a greater one in His service. This convention was the largest in the history of the Czecho-Slovak Baptists. There were present twenty pastors, sixty-two delegates, and forty-five guests. During the past year, there were 175 new conversions.

The convention for 1924 will be held at Cleveland, Ohio. Rev. S. J. Herban was again elected president, Rev. E. Catlos, secretary, and Frank Leiner, treasurer.

GRAND ISLAND COLLEGE CAMPUS AFTER THE STORM

Restoration of Grand Island College

The work of restoring Grand Island College gymnasium will be postponed until after May 1, 1924. The reason for this is that the Northern Baptist Convention is seeking to raise over $12,000,000 during the present denominational year. This is next to the largest sum that the denomination has raised in a single year. Part of these funds will go to the college.

The college, of course, is disappointed in the delay. In fact, steps had been taken to put on a campaign to raise funds in the near future. The governing board of the Grand Island Chamber of Commerce and the executive committee had endorsed the plan of the college to restore the buildings destroyed by the tornado, and had planned to assist in raising the needed funds. Before putting on the campaign outside the city with the Baptist churches, it was necessary to secure the consent of the leaders of the Northern Baptist Convention. This permission was asked from the secretary of the Board of Education who replied as follows: "As to your suggestion regarding an appeal in the state of Nebraska on a special campaign this year, I am compelled to say that I hope this will not be undertaken by Grand Island College. At Atlantic City the convention in a whole-heated way indicated its intention to get back of a big program for this last year of the New World Movement, and it outlined its efforts in a determined and satisfactory way. I have strong convictions that if nothing occurs to interfere we shall be able to collect more money than we have collected any year save possibly the first. But if we are going to succeed in this effort there must be no side issues, and we have a feeling that an appeal for $25,000 among the Baptist people of the state during this year would be a very great mistake. I think it would seriously militate against the success of the campaign in Nebraska and would militate also against Grand Island College."

President Wells conferred with business men of the city interested in the project and also called a meeting of the executive committee of the college. The necessity for delay is deeply regretted. The new heating plant and gymnasium are greatly needed but the men consulted realize that the college should fully and heartily cooperate with the Northern Baptist Convention, and should do nothing in its own separate interest to endanger the full success of the larger campaign. The improved financial condition of the college is due to funds received during the past few years from the Baptist denomination and a part of the funds of this year's campaign will go to the college. The men who have been consulted have, therefore, advised that the campaign be postponed until after the New World Movement period, which is May 1, 1924. The only way that the funds could be received until after that period, is through voluntary personal gifts and in loyalty to the denominational program the college feels it should not seek such gifts, but should rather assist the denomination in every way possible to raise the $12,000,000 budget.

The college, meanwhile, must be heated and the old heating plant is being rebuilt so that it will serve for a year or two. In order that the dormitories and the administration building may be even warmer than in the past, metal weather strips are being placed on all the windows in the boys' dormitory, on some of the windows in the girls' dormitory and on fifty-four of the windows in the administration building. The repairs which are being made during the summer vacation will put the buildings in the best condition they have ever been. The interior work consisting of painting and papering has been done in both dormitories. New furniture has been purchased and a large refrigerator has been built in Hibbs Hall which will improve the services of the dining room.

Laymen's Sunday, Sept. 30

By R. O. Jasperson

While the lines of communication from the National Council of Northern Baptist Laymen to the state organizations and thence into the individual churches are as yet incomplete, nevertheless word has gone forth and it has been widely received that Sunday, September 30 is to be Laymen's Sunday. It is to be a day for stressing the new laymen's movement, creating the necessary atmosphere, recruiting men for definite tasks and laying the foundation for future effort.

The National Council does not seek to command but to suggest activities for men. Leaders of men's groups who are truly concerned about providing activities for their men will see the value of this rally and make plans to make the most of the opportunity. Pastors who often wrestle with the problem of getting more men into active service should welcome the occasion because it is designed specifically to enlist the man power of the churches more fully in carrying the tasks of the individual churches and of the denomination. If we are to have a laymen's movement worthy of the name it must start somewhere and the best possible place to start it is in the local church where the work is to be done.

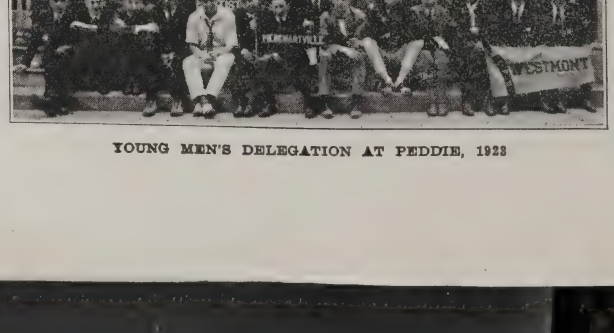
Throughout the Northern Baptist area on that day, if only the active men assemble, there will be a total of 183,000 men in the pews to learn that a laymen's movement is being conducted. Here is the way we have arrived at the figures. Roughly, we are told, there are 1,267,000 Baptist in the area. Of these 325,000 are non-resident, on the books, but absent and supposedly not functioning. This leaves 940,000 and of these it is estimated that 400,000 are non-participating. Thus we have 550,000 live, active Baptists and we are told 34 per cent of these are men, which gives us 183,000.

The above sifting process has been pretty severe, no doubt, but it serves to give us some idea of what we have to work with. All organizations of men throughout the Northern Baptist area are asked to participate, use their own resourcefulness and energies to secure a large attendance, and to plan the program for the day along with the general lines suggested by the National Council. Wherever possible laymen will seek permission of their pastors to have a layman on the platform for a ten or fifteen minute address, to be followed by a sermon by the pastor especially for men.

It is to be the occasion for recruiting the men's Bible classes, men's clubs, brotherhoods and other organizations. It is to be the occasion for arousing a consciousness among men of the part they can play in advancing the welfare of the church, the state and national conventions. It is designed to focus attention for one day on the men. It is to be the starting point for future activities. It is to be a notice to the Baptist world that Northern Baptist laymen are organizing and that the slogan in future will be "Let Me Do It." It is to develop points of contact between the national, state and local bodies. If present facilities for getting information down the line are defective, this will provide a test to show up the weak spots. To be strong, we must know where we are weak.

On that day presidents of men's organizations will, if they make the most of the opportunity, have some definite plans for the coming season's work, for which they can call for recruits. It is to be a call to arms, but when men are called to arms it is customary to tell them what they are to take up arms for. World affairs are such as to challenge the best thought of every man in the world. These world affairs relate to the nation, the state, the city, even in the ward and precinct. President Harding says: "I tell you, my countrymen, the world needs more of the Christ; the world needs the spirit of the man of Nazareth. If we could bring into the relationships of humanity, among ourselves and among the nations of the earth, the brotherhood that was taught by the Christ, we would have a restored world; we would have little or none of war, and we would have a new hope for humanity throughout the globe. There never was a greater lesson taught than that of the Golden Rule. If we could have that one faithfully observed I would be willing to wipe out the remainder of the commandments."

This should suggest to men in our churches that they study how to bring the spirit of the Master to bear upon these affairs. Men's organizations in our churches may well plan their activities to include the wider application of Christian principles in civic affairs. If they attack the problem with the intelligence usually displayed in business, they will find a way to impress themselves upon affairs outside of the church.



Laymen's Sunday should stimulate men everywhere to align themselves with the forces for good, and should bring home the realization that the impulse back of the every great forward step since the time of Christ had its genesis in his teachings.

New Jersey Young People's Assembly

The ninth annual young people's summer assembly opened June 30 at Peddie School, Hightstown, with an address by Rev. Paul Hayne of Haddonfield, setting forth the keynote of the assembly, "Training for Service."

On Sunday morning a demonstration Sunday school was conducted with classes for beginners and primary workers under the direction of Mrs. L. L. Pinkham; young people, Rev. Isaac Higginbotham; teachers, Mrs. E. M. Finn; and adults, Rev. C. E. Tilton. At the close of the Sunday-school period the delegates marched to the First Church where a sermon was delivered by Dr. J. R. Wood on "Eternal Life." In the afternoon enrolment and organization of delegation meetings took place. At seven o'clock the vesper service was held in the Greek Theater and was conducted by Rev. H. E. Owings, pastor of the Hightstown Church. At eight o'clock a communion service was conducted by Dr. C. E. Goodall, executive secretary of the convention.

The assembly proper began on Monday morning with a chapel service lead by Dr. C. E. Goodall. Forty-one courses covering the fields of Bible, missions, Sunday-school and young people's work were offered to the delegates. The total enrolment including the faculty was 287. A series of vesper services was held at seven o'clock under the direction of Dr. I. G. Matthews, Revs. Albert E. Bretschneider, C. H. Frank, G. D. Allison and W. S. Booth. The evening address on Monday was delivered by Rev. D. G. Haring who brought a stereopticon message on the people of Japan, their habits, customs and religion. On Tuesday the young people listened to Rev. Harold C. Phillips. Thursday evening was devoted to life conferences and forward step. Group conferences were carried on, the girls meeting under the leadership of Mrs. E. M. Finn, and the young men under Dr. G. D. Allison. After the conferences the young women marched to the chapel and were followed by the young men. There was no break in service and as they came to the chapel they were met by the assembly pastor, Dr. R. M. Traver, who conducted a series of devotions. Rev. O. W. Henderson, pastor of the Grace Church of Trenton, challenged the young people to a life of service for their Lord and Master. The power and spirit of this service may be gathered from the following returns: thirteen dedications to missionary service, thirty-three to other Christian work, two to the Christian ministry, forty-four to Christ, 130 to practical service in the local church.

YOUNG MEN'S DELEGATION AT PEDDIE, 1923

On Friday evening, the last one of the assembly, Dr. J. Y. Aitchison, brought the young people face to face with their responsibility in the great denominational task.

New Jersey is proud of the assembly and especially the character of work that was achieved by the young people. Out of 246 student delegates, 244 took four courses and passed in notes on all those courses and were granted certificates. Such work and training cannot help but have a marked influence upon the churches represented at the assembly.

A Letter from Latvia

Dr. S. W. Cummings, professor of Bible and missions in the University of Redlands, writes the following from Riga, Latvia, to President Duke concerning the conferring of the degree of doctor of divinity on Rev. John Alexander Frey in behalf of the university: "I write to report the meeting held yesterday afternoon for the special purpose of making formal announcement of the conferring of the degree upon Mr. Frey, and the presentation to him of the diploma. It was a time of marked importance to the Latvian Baptists, and was a great red-letter day in their history. As far as I know it is the first D.D. presented to anyone in this country from America. There was a very large audience present including many Baptists from outside points and prominent men of the city. The president of the University of Latvia, a government institution, accepted an invitation to be present and preside. Being called out of the city he sent the dean of the theological faculty to represent him. The department of education in the government sent a representative. The pastor of a great Lutheran cathedral here in the city accepted a place on the program. The city and other interests were represented. I called upon the minister of the United States to Latvia who gladly accepted an invitation until he found he had an engagement with the prime minister out of the city. He said he was keenly disappointed at his inability to be present. I think the university may well be satisfied in granting this recognition of a worthy Baptist abroad.

"I am about closing up my special mission prior to going to Stockholm for the congress. I have had wonderful experiences and I believe the time has been spent to good advantage. In the two weeks in Esthonia I gave four addresses before their annual convention, visited and preached in many of their churches, spoke to a large audience in the biggest theater in Revel, the capital, laid the cornerstone of a new church, visited and spoke to the inmates of four prisons, and also did the same at a leper colony. In Latvia our meetings have been of a marked order. In all I have spoken to twenty-eight audiences in nineteen days, traveling by rail, by steamboat and by horse. We have covered all the large cities, some of the towns and the country districts. I have been in many places where they never even saw an American before. In some country districts they left their farms at the busiest time of the year, and gave up the day, driving as far as twenty-five miles to attend the meeting. Many of the scenes around these country churches represented market mornings in the cities with the crowd of horses, wagons and people. At one country church where the service was held at twelve o'clock noon, I had a choir of over 200 that was made up of representatives from seven country churches that had come for miles to attend. In all I preached to nearly 25,000 people. Not only were Baptist churches open to us, but I preached to two Lutheran churches; in one, a great cathedral, to 5 000 people, and in a Greek Orthodox church. Hundreds stood in the meetings expressing a purpose to live the Christian life."

Church News by States

Atlantic Coast

MAINE

Saco: Rev. Harold W. Curtis, for four and a half years pastor of the Main Street Church, has resigned in order to accept the unanimous call of the church in Rumford. Mr. Curtis is a graduate of Newton in 1916, and after a short pastorate in Pittsfield and Lanesboro, Mass., he entered the Y. M. C. A. war service. He has always been active in young people's and Boy Scout work. The Main Street Church has been built up in every department during his pastorate.

Bar Harbor: Rev. Chas. W. Turner has resigned the pastorate of the church in order to become the superintendent of the Sea Coast Mission. This mission sends its yacht, the "Sunbeam" and other boats to small hamlets among the islands and on the mainland, and its missionaries preach the gospel to those who otherwise would have no opportunity of hearing it.

East Wilton: In accord with the findings of a council called by the East Wilton Church, Mr. Warner T. Gifford, of Bates College, was ordained, July 10. The sermon was delivered by Rev. J. Chas. MacDonald of Auburn. Mr. Gifford accepted a call to the church at Kennebunkport and has already begun the duties of his pastorate.

CONNECTICUT

It is a matter of interest that Rev. John Hunter Stearns has reconsidered his resignation and will remain with the Montville Union Church for the present. The expression within and without the church from all sides was so great that Mr. Stearns was constrained to regard the wish and will of the people. Mr. Stearns has been on the field less than a year, but in that time good work has been done in the church and community. On July 29 the pastor baptized ten persons. During his pastorate there have been thirty-seven additions to the membership. The eightieth anniversary of the church will be celebrated by meetings in October.

Willington: On August 2, Mrs. Annie A. Preston, long a resident of Willington Hill, passed to her eternal rest after a two weeks' illness, at the age of eighty-two. Mrs. Preston made for herself a place in the literary world. Not only was she a regular contributor to such dailies as the Hartford Courant and the Springfield Republican, but articles and poems from her pen found their way into leading magazines. She was a member of the West Willington Federated Church. The Golden Rule epitomized her philosophy for the solution of all problems looking toward the securing of world peace. The funeral services were held on Monday, August 6. Rev. Wm. V. Allen, assisted by Rev. Earle W. Darrow, a former pastor, officiated.

Hartford: The friends of Rev. Manford W. Schuh, pastor of the Memorial Church, were shocked to learn of the sudden death of Mrs. Schuh, at the House of Mercy Hospital, Pittsfield, Mass. The family were spending the summer in Westboro, the childhood home of Mrs. Schuh, when she was suddenly taken ill. She was forty-one years old, a graduate of Dana Hall and Wellesley College, and a woman of rare Christian character and delightful personality, deeply interested in all phases of church work. Funeral services were held in Westboro, Saturday, August 11.

NEW JERSEY

The work at the First Church, Bayonne, has progressed during the summer. New members were received at both the July and August communion services. The church was closed for two weeks for repairs but will be reopened Aug. 26, when Pastor C. H. Rannels will return home.

Mississippi Valley

INDIANA

Mr. G. C. Brenneman, a recent graduate of Rochester Theological Seminary, has accepted a call to the pastorate of the Immanuel Church, Fort Wayne.

ILLINOIS

Pastor L. P. Cassel, of the First Church, Utica, for four years, recently resigned and is already on his new field as pastor of the First Church of Rocky Ford, Colo.

WISCONSIN

Dr. William T. Dorward, for twelve years pastor of the Tabernacle Church, Milwaukee, will supply the First Church, Madison, until a regular pastor is settled. Mr. Dorward recently returned from Camp Douglas, where he encamped as chaplain of the 120th field artillery for two weeks.

MICHIGAN

The First Church, Bay City, has suffered a loss in the death of Joseph H. Belknap, who had been an active member for many years and had served as deacon.

NORTH DAKOTA

The Minot Church has made some needed improvements upon its property.

Rev. John Melmaker recently closed his pastorate at Glenburn and departed for California.

PASTOR-AT-LARGE H. H. GUNDERSON and Mr. Olaf Seivertsen recently closed a successful tent meeting at Coteau.

ROGER WICKSTRAND, student supply at Coleharbor, is extending the influence of the church by adding an outstation at Ingersoll.

THE IMMANUEL AND FIRST SWEDISH churches of Fargo recently conducted a joint vacation school.

MISS LOTTIE LUND, an evaneglistic singer in the service of the state convention, has been appointed postmistress at Power's Lake and has entered upon her new duties.

IOWA

EVANGELIST C. E. HILLIS of Kahoka, Mo., began a series of revival meetings with Dr. Frank A. Case of the Galilee Church, Des Moines, August 19.

Rocky Mountain States

COLORADO

REV J. WALTER FIELD, formerly pastor at Farnam, Neb., received a unanimous call to the First Church, Brighton. He had previously supplied the church for three Sundays.

EASTERN WASHINGTON

A RECEPTION WAS TENDERED DR. and MRS. JOHN NEWTON GARST July 30 by the Baptists of Spokane. Words of welcome were spoken by acting Mayor J. C. Argall; Dr. S. L. Divine, president of the ministerial association; Dr. A. H. Bailey, secretary of the state convention; Rev. A. B. Waltz, a Baptist pastor of the city; R. A. Koontz, president of the board; Mrs. R. L. Bogardus, president of the Woman's Union; Miss Hazel Sorenson, B. Y. P. U. president, and C. E. Brown, Sunday-school superintendent.

Pacific Coast

WESTERN WASHINGTON

PROF. H. D. BENNINGHOFF was a speaker at the Seabeck Missionary Education Movement Conference, which was held recently at Hoods Canal, near Seattle. Miss Belle Crawford gave the opening address on her work among the Kiowa Indians.

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

The Assembly at Asilomar

The summer assembly of Northern California and Nevada was held at Asilomar, Cal., July 20-30. The committee reported 328 paid registrations on the grounds. Probably that many more were visitors.

The assembly day began with a voluntary morning watch on the beach at a place called God's Temple. Scores of young people attended these meetings to sing and pray and read the Bible together. Family prayer was always conducted at the breakfast table. Then came conferences of the faculty and executive committee. Educational work occupied five periods during the forenoon covering the following subjects: Bible, principles of young people's work, Sunday-school methods, mission study, church vacation schools, denominational life and church night.

A word about the faculty members some of whom were Rev. Louis J. Sawyer, Mr. Hugh W. Thomas, Miss Sallie Lee Hackley, Miss Myrtle M. Love, Dr. A. W. Rider, Miss Naomi Fletcher, Rev. Dean Hamilton, Rev. Thos. F. Frizelle and Mrs. Norman F. Turner. All were capital teachers. Recreation and inspiration meant much to the assembly. Here is another galaxy: Rev. Harry A. Kern, director of recreation; Mrs. F. I. Drexler, camp mother; Rev. C. Aaron King and Miss Margaret Wickliffe, directors of music; and Rev. Geo. F. Phillips, James S. West and Theodore Fieldbrave, evening speakers. Mention should also be made of Mr. Hugh W. Thomas, commander of the good-night parade.

Sunday was an inspiring day at the assembly. Doctor Rider delivered the assembly sermon, while Rev. Thos. B. Frizelle preached the life-work sermon. When the invitation was given thirty-seven young people offered themselves for life service. A distinct attraction on Sunday at Asilomar was the model Sunday school and young people's meeting.

The most important occasion of the summer assembly was the state B. Y. P. U. convention which met Saturday and Sunday evenings. Mr. Clyde Howden is the new president.

Commencement exercises, held July 29, closed the assembly. Dr. Orville Coats made a brief address before the credits were awarded. Twelve credit cards, eighty certificates and ten diplomas were given. The faculty had graded 1,789 papers. This years' assembly was considered the best numerically, physically, financially and spiritually.

SERVICE DEPARTMENT

EVANGELIST H. P. HOSKINS is acting as stated supply for the church at Charlevoix, Mich. He will return to evangelistic work in the fall and is already booking churches.

REV. GEO. L. COLLINS, 446 Harrison, Hillyard, Wash., is open for another pastorate. He will be glad to correspond with the secretary of any church.

CHAPLAIN WELLS has open dates for the fall. He can be addressed at the National Military Home, Leavenworth, Kansas.

Obituary

ZONA DARNELL READING

Zona Darnell Reading was born at Centerville, Iowa, Dec. 9, 1886, and departed this life at her home in Churdan, Aug. 6, 1923, at the age of thirty-six years, seven months and twenty-eight days. Her father, L. F. Darnell, survives her, Mrs. Darnell having gone on in 1906. In 1910 she was united in marriage to Waite Reading at Centerville, Iowa, and removed at once to Churdan where she made her home. There were born to this union three children, Luther, twelve years old; Roll, eight; and Bettina, six. These three children, her husband, father, one brother and one sister, a missionary in China, survive her.

Zona Reading transferred her membership from the Presbyterian church to the Baptist church when she established her home in Churdan in order that she might more completely unite herself and husband in definite Christian service. Her influence brought Luther into like fellowship. Her Christian activities were not confined alone to her home church, having served for several years on the board of the state convention and interested in every advance program regardless of denomination and affiliation. Her positive Christian character was a vital factor in every Christian enterprise with which she identified herself. She belonged to the community, in its educational work, club life, musical circles, and in the example of her home environment. She gave herself unstintedly to friends. Her home was the center of her keenest interest, and she was a real mother to her children. Her influence upon her husband was most wholesome. Her years have been few, but the contribution of her service to the world has been large. The funeral service was held from her church and was in charge of her friend and former pastor, Dr. A. C. Hageman of St. Paul.

REV. SINGLETON NEISSER

Rev. Singleton Neisser died suddenly at his home in Logan, Philadelphia, Saturday evening, Aug. 11. He was born in Philadelphia, Feb. 24, 1877. He united with the church when he was about fourteen years old and was baptized by Dr. Russell H. Conwell on the opening day of the Baptist Temple, March 1, 1891.

His education was secured in the public schools of his native city, Temple College and Crozer Theological Seminary from which latter school he graduated in June, 1902. On Sept. 5, 1904, he was married to Miss Laura Mae Benson, a teacher at Girard College.

Mr. Neisser held pastorates at Tom's River, New Jersey, and at Patton, Westover, La Jose, McKeesport and Reading, Pennsylvania. While pastor at McKeesport he was chosen a member of the first commission council of that city and served as commissioner for four years, superintending the department of streets and public improvements.

Mr. Neisser had been an invalid for more than two and a half years. He is survived by his wife and three children.

MRS. LUCRETIA WHIPPLE

Mrs. Lucretia Whipple, wife of the late O. M. Whipple, passed from this life March 9, 1923, while visiting a nephew at Lansing, Mich.

Her life's example will ever be uppermost with those with whom she mingled. It was a round of service for her Master. For over forty years she served untiringly and uncomplainingly in the First Church, Novi, Michigan. Her memory will continue to grow in the church and the surrounding community.

Industrial Japan

IN 1914 the Japanese government was in danger of bankruptcy but with the increase in exports over imports from 1915-1918 the national debt was reduced until it is now the smallest among the allied nations. Within twenty-five years there has been a tenfold increase in her foreign trade and a 400 per cent increase in the volume of business done by the banks. The per capita wealth which was $250 in 1904 was estimated at $765 in 1919 and the national wealth at $43,000,000,000. Yet with this tremendous increase in wealth, in 1918 92 per cent of the population had an increase of less than $250 per year. In the slums of Tokyo, Kobe and Osaka thousands of people are crowded into little alleys with one room hovels for entire families. Osaka and Kobe have the highest death rate in the world.

Working conditions in Japanese factories and mines are very bad. The ten to twelve-hour day is prevalent though a few progressive employers have granted the eight-hour day. Many of the cotton mills still keep the fourteen to seventeen-hour day. Child labor is general. Wages are very low (though we have not at hand the means of comparing "real wages" in Japan with those of the United States). Women workers receive an average of twenty cents a day. According to a study made by one of the leading economists of Japan the average wage in Tokyo is less than fifty cents a day with a minimum of twenty cents and a maximum of one or two dollars a day for skilled labor.

The labor movement is growing slowly with much opposition. The first unions were started about forty years ago under Christian leaders. Most of them are now under radical leadership. Labor unions have no legal status, so that the number of unions and their membership fluctuate with conditions in the country. The latest returns give 300 organizations with 365,700 members. The employers have several organizations with large sums of money for propaganda. There are some forty radical groups in and near Tokyo which have been much affected by the Russian revolution. The labor movement is greatly hindered by laws which decree jail sentences for strike-leaders. The police, labor spies, and gangsters are used to break up the unions.

The labor leaders are chiefly state socialists, guild socialists or communists. One of them is reported as saying: "To be frank with you we are all radicals and out to abolish the present system, because the government, the capitalistic courts, and the business men are all united against us. We have arrived late upon the scene in the labor world and we have started with advanced ideas and principles. We are persecuted, hounded, and betrayed, but we will win." —Sherwood Eddy in International Trade-Union Movement.

Key Books and Pamphlets on the Industrial Problem

For students and readers.

Minimum List of Books

For an understanding of the social books: "Causes and Cures for the Social Unrest," by Finney. Macmillan, $2.

Getting the mind of labor: "What's on the Worker's Mind?" by Whiting Williams. Scribner's. $2.50.

From the point of view of progressive politics: "Liberalism and Industry," by Ramsey Muir. Houghton Mifflin. $1.75.

For a grounding in economics: "Economics for the General Reader," by Henry Clay. Macmillan. $2.50.

For religious teaching: "The Church and Industrial Reconstruction," by the Committee on the War and the Religious Outlook. Association Press, Paper. $1.

For Christian social reconstruction: "The Reconstruction of Religion," by Ellwood. Macmillan. $2.25.

For critical estimate of present system: "The Collapse of Capitalist Civilization," by S. and B. Webb.

Minimum List of Pamphlets

"Constitutionalism in Industry," 10 cents; "Recent Tendencies in Bringing About Improved Relations Between Employer and Employee in Industry," free; "The Wage Question," 10 cents; "The Social Work in the Churches", 50 cents; "The Denver Tramway Strike", 15 cents; "The Coal Miners' Insecurity", 50 cents; "A Christian Industrial Program", free; "Report of the President's Second Industrial, 1922," free; "Progressive Christianity", 5 cents; "Report of the Commission on Social Service, 1922-1923", free; "Profitism, Slackism, and You", free; "The Church and the Industrial Problem," the Archbishops' Fifth Committee, 50 cents; "Representation in Industry," by John D. Rockefeller, Jr., 1918. J. D. Rockefeller, Jr., 26 Broadway, N. Y., free.

Additional Books for Reading and Reference

"Labor in the Changing World," by R. M. MacIver, E. P. Dutton, 1919. $2. "The Aims of Labor," by Arthur Henderson. B. W. Huebusch, Inc., 1918. Cloth. $1.; paper, 50 cents. "Industry and Humanity," by W. L. Mackenzie King. Houghton Mifflin, 1918. $3. "Wealth and Income in the United States," by W. I. King. Macmillan, 1916. $1.50. "The Acquisitive Society," by R. H. Tawney. Harcourt, Brace, 1920. $1.40. "The New Social Order," by Ward. Macmillan, $1.50. "If America Fail," by Batten, Judson Press. $1.60. "An Introduction to the Study of Labor Problems," by Watkins. Crowell. $3. "A Living Wage," (new edition), by John A. Ryan. Macmillan, 1920. $2.25. "Instincts in Industry," by Ordway Tead. Houghton Mifflin, 1918. $1.40. "Organizing for Work," by Gantt. Harcourt, Brace. $1.25. "Industrial Government," by Commons. Macmillan. $3. "Man to Man," by Leitch. B. C. Forbes. $2. "Trade Unionism in the United States," by Hoxie. Appleton. $2.50. "Increasing Human Efficiency," by Scott. Macmillan. $1.25. "The Normal Life," by Devine. Survey Company. Macmillan. $1.50. "Self Government in Industry," by Cole. G. Bell and Sons. Macmillan. $1.75. "Citizens in Industry," by Henderson. Appleton. $2.25. "The Town Laborer" by Hammond, Macmillan.

Social Study Courses

"What is the Christian View of Work and Wealth?" Association Press, New York. 85 cents.

"The Christian Ideal in Industry." Lessons for Adult Classes, etc.

"The Industrial Order," in "The Bible and Social Living." Graded Lesson Series.

"The Work in the Churches," by Holt. Pilgrim Press. Cloth, 60 cents; paper, 35 cents.

"Christianity and Economic Problems." Page, editor. Association Press. 50 cents.

"Christianizing Community Life," Ward-Edwards. Association Press. $1.25.

Our Book Shelf

The Understanding of Religion, by Edwin Tenny Brewster. New York: Houghton Mifflin Co. $1.50.

We read this volume from "cover to cover." It is from a literary viewpoint well prepared and presented. Its rambles in science, history, literature and theology afford the author unlimited sources for observation and inferences, even of notions and fancies. These are largely decorative. The volume is also interesting and attractive to read, even as a wide-awake industrious incendiary is always more interesting than a dozen plodding and laborious architects and contractors toiling to build a school, a hospital or a home for the general good. Our versatile author lets himself loose among the faiths and religions of the ages, prancing like the famous "wild man of Borneo" with a torch in hand, burning and destroying everything the hearts of ages have held sacred. No vandal ever had more fun in tumbling down and smashing the statues and edifices of ancient Rome than this erudite writer has in annihilating what myriads of the best men and women that ever lived, loved and trusted more dearly than life. He is as sarcastic as Mephisto. In the well-rounded sentences are fermentations of exaggerations and distorted presentations that might awaken the envy of a Blatchford or an Ingersoll. If there is one constructive paragraph in the whole book it has eluded our attention. His torch is a sheaf of negations and cynicisms. What if such talents could take a constructive bent! If his torch would only light the way to some restful Utopia—but it does not! The volume closes with a sigh of despair and resignation suggesting that the only thing a wayfaring man can do is but trust the general consensus of the "learned and pious experts of the theological faculties." The strangest thing about this book is that publishers of the character of Houghton Mifflin Company should foist it on the public "as a notable aid for the understanding of the Bible!"

The Apostle Paul and the Modern World, by Francis G. Peabody, New York: Macmillan.

Realizing that there are more than 2000 volumes dealing with the life and letters of the Apostle Paul already in print today the author feels that recent discoveries portraying the nature of the Roman empire in Paul's time afford a basis for further writings. No one can read this carefully written and most scholarly treatment of the life of Paul without being convinced that a real contribution has been made in this field. Doctor Peabody undertakes to show that there is a real Paul whom hitherto we have not been able to separate from the complex environment of his time; a real Paul whose authority and leadership can be felt in the solving of present-day problems; that far more potent than the thing he said and did was the power of his personality; that like the Master we can behold him not primarily as a source of dogma, not as a personality waiting to be defined but as a person whose very power is transforming as it is brought into touch with the modern world. Possibly no one statement contains the vision of the author more than the following. "If religion is to survive in the modern world it must be not through consent to dogma, but through consecration of life." A complete index makes the book most convenient for reference work.

Want Ads

For sale—100 acre farm, 12 acres in fruit, all good land and well watered. Natural gas. One-half mile from Denison College. J. A. Riedle, Granville, Ohio.

Wanted—Public speaker; man capable interviewing executives and organizing committees; must have A1 references and broad experience in addressing audiences; straight salary. Address N care BAPTIST.

Wanted—Man for clerical work in elevator office. Also woman stenographer. Good wages for right parties. Baptist preferred. Write James Kerr, Box 103, Melvin, Mich.

Wanted—Teachers for colleges and universities. American College Bureau, Chicago Temple, Chicago; 1254 Amsterdam Ave., New York.

Wanted—A pastor by small town church. Apply, stating experience, training, salary expected, to DeLoss Grantham, R. No. 5, Hartington, Neb.

A Bible Study on Divine Healing

(Continued from page 947)

known as divine healing today, we do not doubt, but they are not so numerous as many believe nor will they compare with the cures wrought by Christ and his apostles. These were complete and instantaneous and had no failures to record. Those Christian ministers who contend the Bible teaches this mode of healing fail in many cases, and they are those where God would get the most glory. In fact, they can claim no more wonderful results than the Christian Science practitioner, who denies the divinity of Christ and affirms that all pain, sickness, suffering and death are only illusions of the mind; nor are they greater than that other school of philosophy which claims as its source of power autosuggestion, or the using of the subconscious mind. What we believe is that all such cures as are really accomplished are wrought by the same cause, namely, the power of mind over matter, will over weakness, or the getting of such control over our will power and vital forces that nature can do an efficient work.

Let us then use the means God has so bountifully given, seeking his blessing on their use and with thanksgiving, remember that the effective, fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much and that the power of such a prayer is limited only by the will of God and the measure of our faith (1 John 5:14-15; Mark 11:24).

Bandon, Ore.

If Some One Should Ask You About a Will

And when you make your own Our Corporate Name is:

The American Baptist Home Mission Society

CHARLES L. WHITE, Executive Secretary
SAMUEL BRYANT, Treasurer
23 East Twenty-Sixth Street
New York, N. Y.

WE TYPEWRITE Sermons, lectures, stories manuscripts, letters, books, etc. Price 1 cent per line. Minimum charge $1. PRINT 500 Bond Letterheads 8½x11 and 500 envelopes $5. FORM LETTERS that look like typewritten, 30 lines, $4.50 per 1,000. Special prices on larger orders. Neat, accurate work. Prompt service. Satisfaction assured. Be sure to write in plain letters. Proceeds go to Christian work. Postage extra.
AMERICAN ADDRESSING CO.
Golden Rule Service
3147 S. Millard Avenue Chicago, Ill.

Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society
(CORPORATE NAME)
ALICE M. HUDSON, Treasurer
276 Fifth Avenue New York City

PICTURE SERMONS DRAW CROWDS
We have over 250 religious lectures, travelcures, illustrated hymns, etc., for sale or rent. Special lectures on the life of Christ—1922 Passion Play—
Special Easter Services—Just Out
Five lectures by Marion Lawrence on Japan, the beautiful. Write for slide bulletins. Complete line of stereopticon and projection machines.
GEO. W. BOND SLIDE COMPANY,
27 Years Supplying Churches
Room B, 6 E. Lake St., Chicago, Ill.

When Making Wills and Legacies Remember
Our Corporate Name Is:
"WOMAN'S AMERICAN BAPTIST HOME MISSION SOCIETY"
Mrs. Mary E. Bloomer
Treasurer
276 Fifth Avenue, New York City

T R A L L E
Service in Religious Education, Sermons, Lectures, Addresses, Conferences. Churches saved from costly mistakes in building. Some open fall and winter dates.
HENRY EDWARD TRALLE
150 Claremont Ave., New York City Tel. Morningside 3930

Carry the Battle to Bethcar

"And the men of Israel went out of Mizpah and pursued the Phillistines and smote them until they came under Bethcar"—1 Sam. 7:11

BY J. W. WEDDELL

"HOW is it with you?" I said to a young man once, met by the way. "It's 'all the way to Bethcar' with me," he said with a bright face, and I recognized him as one of the young men who had come out in the deep, stirring revival at Lewisburg (Bucknell) in 1896 when the motto was "Carry the battle all the way to Bethcar," and victory crowned the efforts with forty converted. Every member of the senior class took his stand.

What was the secret of it? Wholehearted, thorough-going work. We carried the battle to Bethcar, and to every man seeking a new consecration of himself, wonderful conquest was given, and the enemy was driven out of the land. Here was a fight to the finish.

Get the scene before you: Israel had been having a hard time of it; half victory at the best since Eli's day; very much as it is today—a few saved, a half-hearted battle, no victory, the enemy made to hold us in derision; we get things ready, and Philistines sweep down, and take it all away. But one day there was a change. God sent Samuel, the people rallied, Philistia marched over the hills on the old plan, and the stragglers at home watched for them to come back laden with their usual booty. But look, something has happened. Here they come, and they are running, and Israel is after them. The cry goes up: "Their God is in their midst! Up and away, flee for your life!" Away they fly, driven by Israel, on to Bethcar, on the far border of the land.

That is what we want—to establish a new coast line and rid ourselves of the border foes. Carry the battle to Bethcar! We want to do it for the sake of the church, which has become so mixed up with the world that you cannot tell the line of demarcation. We need today to establish a new frontier. It ought to be farther on than ever before.

Our fathers drove the aborigines back, and back and back, pushing new settlements and civilization all the way and all the time. So ought it to be now, and in two respects. We ought to be carrying the banner of Christ farther and farther into the enemy's country and pushing our frontier posts farther and farther on. We ought to be establishing ourselves more and more in high ethical living, or as our fathers called it, "holiness unto the Lord." Our standard ought to be higher than ever. "Be ye perfect" is the ideal. We must do it for the sake of ourselves as Christians.

Who is there that is living a thoroughly happy Christian life? We have lost the old exhilaration of living. Who is it that is a thoroughly useful, fruitful Christian? I will tell you the truth. We have left too many of the enemies' ramparts untaken. We have too many enemies inside the border. As of old they become thorns and pricks in our eyes. They keep us down and in subjection when we ought to be victorious and rejoicing. Enough of this, make thorough work, clean work. The Chinaman said he came "clean out." Come out clean and whole—"Lord open the door or I perish!"

We need it most of all for conquest and for soul-winning. The church is not itself that is not continually gathering converts. The Christian is not happy and successful who is not adding stars to his crown.

Something is wrong, radically wrong. What is it but that we have hidden our swords because the enemy is left in the land to browbeat us and hold us in subjection and fear? Away with him. He has no part with us. Out with your sword and drive the Philistine out of the land. Clean out, till thou comest to Bethcar.

How shall we do it? The Scripture tells us very plainly. They brought the neglected ark back and set it up on its base where it belonged in the midst of the people. The ark was the receptacle and vehicle of the divine disclosure. The old Book is what it represents to us. Long enough has it been given over to the enemy. Get it back, put it on its bases, a four-square book. Believe it, respect it, love it, exalt it, make it light and lamp and pledge and potency of victory. Sweep doubt out of your mind, drive peradventure away. Take the sword of the Spirit which is the Word of God in your strong grip and go forth. Carry the battle to Bethcar.

They put away the strange gods—i. e. the ways and fashions of the world, the things on which the world relies and which the world loves. There needs to be a new clearance today. Every age has its marks of worldliness, this age as much as others.

Every age must make a new slaying of Philistia and a new demolishment of its idols and gods. Out with them today, the whole bundle of them; dash their idols in pieces, stride resolutely over them. Carry the battle to Bethcar.

They gathered together with Samuel to Mizpah, that was the place of prayer and consecration. The place of utter and complete devotion. There they fought the battle on their knees. There they bound the sacrifice to the horns of the altar in a conscious and visible surrender of themselves to the Lord, and there they made a new self-dedication and strengthened themselves for victory, then arose and drove the enemy to Bethcar.

Do you want it friends? Have you had enough of defeat? Do you want victory? Come then gather in new surrender about the altar of prayer and consecration. Come to the front in acknowledgement of weakness and loss. Come for new endowment. Pray for the baptism of the Sprit and fitness for service.

OUR MUSIC CORNER

CONDUCTED BY WILLIAM LESTER

SOME FINANCIAL COMMENTS

The vexed question of organists' salaries is continually coming to the front. It would appear from advertisements that church officials are becoming more reasonable (we almost said liberal) in this country. In parishes of importance the stipend of the organist is about one-third of that of the rector—although this rule has many exceptions. The influence of the cinema theaters in drawing musicians of ability from the churches has something to do with the matter. We think, however, that the ratio we have just mentioned holds good in parishes of any prominence.

The fact that a great number of clergymen are underpaid is, therefore, of definite though melancholy interest to organists.

It was stated recently by Mr. W. H. Hays, who is a lay commissioner of the Presbytery of Indiana, that ten thousand Presbyterian clergymen receive an average salary of $34 per week. Unless we are in error Episcopal clergymen receive less than that.

Mr. Hays did not mince matters. We quote: "Clergymen are asked to lead us to the kingdom of heaven. In our joys and perplexities and griefs we ask them to interpret to us the laws of eternal life. But we say to them, you shall not only show us the light; you shall not only serve us and our children day in and day out, but you shall know poverty and want; your wife shall work from early morning till late at night; she shall have no help; she shall wash her own dishes, sew her own clothes and her children's clothes, or be dependent upon the generosity of parishioners for their cast-off garments. And all the while she shall serve the parish. She shall be the leader among the women, at her husband's right hand, the first in good works. Together you shall receive, to keep you and your family clothed and fed, about $30 a week—scarcely more than the wage of the garbage collector, one-half the wage of a carpenter, one-third the wage of a mason. For a builder of the walls of the temple, one-third the wage of the bricklayers of an apartment house."

Rather strong language! If not particularly encouraging to would-be clergymen, what must it be to young organ pupils who are destined to receive two-thirds less than their spiritual shepherds?—New Music Review.

ALFRED HOLLINS

By Roland Diggle

I do not think I should be far wrong in saying that perhaps the most popular and best-loved recitalist in the British Isles today is Alfred Hollins, the celebrated blind organist and composer of Edinburgh. We, in America, have been suffering from so severe a case of "Frenchitis" that we have forgotten that in England are four or five of the most brilliant organists living. Chief among these is Mr. Hollins. Those of us who heard him when he was in America some twenty years ago have not forgotten his splendid artistry and his wonderful improvisations. Perhaps the best picture of the man can be obtained from the following tribute to him written by his friend, the Rev. W. Fiddian Moulton:

"To those who know him, Alfred Hollins is one of the outstanding phenomena of the musical world. So artistically gifted, so sublimely courageous, so many-sided, he indeed merits the designation applied to him by W. T. Best—Alfred the Great; and when to these public manifestations of quality there is added the infinite grace of a humble, buoyant, unselfish, spiritual personality, you have a man of very big moral calibre, as well as an artist with dazzling gifts. Blindness came upon him so early that he may be said to have been born blind, and yet he has not only surmounted all technical difficulties, but has developed a special sense which is perfectly uncanny in its operation. He describes with accuracy and vividness the scenery of the countries he has passed through; when I was with him at a friend's house he was absorbingly anxious to 'see' some new incubators which his hostess had put up, and it was deeply interesting to watch him examine them, and he who has never seen the light of the sun has written that loveliest of morceaux, 'The Song of Sunshine.' The psalmist speaks of idols which 'have eyes, but they see not.' This distinguished man has not eyes, but, lo, he sees!

"On the organ seat this sense is amazingly manifest. Mr. Hollins never gives a recital upon an organ which he does not know, but that is only because by the time he has been at an organ for ten minutes he does know it. I have watched him play at the opening of a large organ fitted with 'transformers' and all the other devices for tone-grouping—sixteen in all—and he never stumbled over them, neither did he ignore them as many a player would have done when coming just for the day. But he availed himself of all the help they could give him, and never once forgot which was which. His wonderful manipulation of complicated instruments, his satisfying sense of tone-color, his remarkable gift of contrapuntal treatment, shown in his extemporized interlacing of themes—these and many other qualities would, under any conditions, have marked him as a genius, but in his situation they also witness to the wondrous scheme of compensation whereby the nerve force debarred from entering its normal channel is sent by God to reinforce the rest."

Of his compositions one need say little, for they are known wherever the organ is heard. Many of them have become standard works, notably the Overtures in C minor and C major, the Spring Song, Intermezzo in D flat and the charming Allegretto Grazioso. There are others that deserve a much wider hearing. Is there a finer piece of organ writing than the Theme, Variations and Fugue? It is worthy a place on any program. Then there are the Concert Rondo, Scherzo and Minuet, and for the church organist the delightful Morning Song, Andante in D, Pastorale, Epithalamium.—The Diapason.

---

Music is the art of the prophets, the only art that can calm the agitation of the soul; it is one of the most magnificent and delightful presents God has given us.—Luther.

CROZER THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY

Seminary is located within thirteen miles of Philadelphia, to whose churches, libraries and art collections students have ready access. Near-by rural districts furnish opportunity for Christian work under the supervision of the department of Practical Theology.

Tuition and Room-rent free. Scholarships available to qualified students.

Seminary's relation to University of Pa. warrants offer of the following:

1. Regular Course for Preachers and Pastors, Seminary. Degree of B.D. or Diploma.
2. Course with emphasis on Religious Education. Seminary and University. Degrees B.D. and A.M.
3. Training for Advanced Scholarship. Seminary and University. Degrees Th.M or Ph.D.

For Catalog—
MILTON G. EVANS, LL.D., Pres.,Chester,Pa.

EXTENSION COURSE

Seminary maintains a Correspondence department for men unable to take a course in residence. Cost, including books, $10 a year. Certificate on completion. Address—
ELI S. REINHOLD, A.M., Dir., Chester, Pa.

PILLSBURY

Academy for Boys

Seventy miles from Minneapolis; large campus and seven modern buildings; military training, all athletics; high standards of scholarship and conduct; small classes insuring individual attention; terms reasonable; illustrated catalogue on request.

Milo B. Price, Principal

Box 397F Owatonna, Minnesota

THE BAPTIST INSTITUTE FOR CHRISTIAN WORKERS

Exceptional opportunity in Bible study, Religious Education and in Practical Methods. For catalogue write

J. MILNOR WILBUR, D.D.

1425 Snyder Ave. Philadelphia, Pa.

A Permanent Income

Life Annuities on One or Two Lives

On one life the rate of income varies from four to nine per cent a year, payable semi-annually.

On one or two lives the rate varies from four to eight and three-tenths per cent a year, payable semi-annually.

A survivorship agreement provides a permanent income for two lives.

For annuity booklet and samples of single and survivorship agreements, please address

CHARLES L. WHITE
23 East Twenty-Sixth Street
New York City
The American Baptist Home Mission Society

CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL

Ask for Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 10
ESTABLISHED 1858
THE C. S. BELL CO.² HILLSBORO, OHIO

McSHANE BELL FOUNDRY Co
Baltimore, Md
CHURCH, CHIME AND PE...
BELLS Memorials a Specialty

PIPE ORGANS

of any size or construction. Estimates cheerfully submitted. Also Reed Organs for Church or Home.

Electric Organ blowing outfits for organs of any make.

Write, stating which catalog is desired.

Hinners Organ Co., Pekin, Ill.

The Social Creed of the Churches

Action taken by the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America at a special meeting held at Cleveland, Ohio, May 6-8, 1919.

Resolved: That we reaffirm the social platform adopted by the first Quadrennial in Chicago, 1912, and ratified by the Second Quadrennial in St. Louis, 1916.

That the churches stand for:

1. Equal right and justice for all men in all stations of life.

2. Protection of the family by the single standard of purity, uniform divorce laws, proper regulation of marriage, proper housing.

3. The fullest possible development of every child, especially by the provision of education and recreation.

4. Abolition of child labor.

5. Such regulation of the conditions of toil for women as shall safeguard the physical and moral health of the community.

6. Abatement and prevention of poverty.

7. Protection of the individual and society from the social, economic and moral waste of the liquor traffic.

8. Conservation of health.

9. Protection of the worker from dangerous machinery, occupational disease and mortality.

10. The right of all men to the opportunity for self-maintenance, for safeguarding this right against encroachments of every kind, for the protection of workers from the hardships of enforced unemployment.

11. Suitable provision for the old age of the workers, and for those incapacitated by injury.

12. The right of employes and employers alike to organize; and for adequate means of conciliation and arbitration in industrial disputes.

13. Release from employment one day in seven.

14. Gradual and reasonable reduction of hours of labor to the lowest practicable point, and for that degree of leisure for all which is a condition of the highest human life.

15. A living wage as a minimum in every industry, and for the highest wage that each industry can afford.

16. A new emphasis upon the application of Christian principles to the acquisition and use of property, and for the most equitable division of the product of industry that can ultimately be devised. Facing the social issues involved in reconstruction.

Resolved: That we affirm as Christian churches:

1. That the teachings of Jesus are those of essential democracy and express themselves through brotherhood and the cooperation of all groups. We deplore class struggle and declare against all class domination, whether of capital or labor. Sympathizing with labor's desire for a better day and an equitable share in the profits and management of industry, we stand for orderly and progressive social reconstruction instead of revolution by violence.

2. That an ordered and constructive democracy in industry is as necessary as political democracy, and that collective bargaining and the sharing of shop control and management are inevitable steps in its attainment.

3. That the first charge upon industry should be that of a wage sufficient to support an American standard of living. To that end we advocate the guarantee of a minimum wage, the control of unemployment through government labor exchanges, public works, land settlement, social insurance and experimentation in profit sharing and cooperative ownership.

4. We recognize that women played no small part in the winning of the war. We believe that they should have full political and economic equality with equal pay for equal work, and a maximum eight-hour day. We declare for the abolition of night work by women, and the abolition of child labor; and for the provision of adequate safeguards to insure the moral as well as the physical health of the mothers and children of the race.

"If I Had a Billion Dollars"

WHAT is characterized as "an unpublished letter" by former Secretary of the Interior, Franklin K. Lane, dated Dec. 18, 1915, and addressed to a correspondent in Washington, is printed in the Nation's Business for June. It follows:

"I have your note asking me what I would do if I had a billion dollars. My mind is not large enough to understand what a billion dollars is, but I think my first duty should be to spend some portion of it in trying to make people of the United States understand that I should not have a billion dollars. It is not good for any one man to have that much money. Then, I have a notion that with what I had left I would go out to such states as Idaho, Nevada, Utah, Arizona and Mexico, and build great irrigation works, divide the dependent lands into small tracts, clear and level the land, and then say to any competent farmer who came along that I would build him a home and furnish him implements and stock, if he would pay me 3 per cent interest upon investment. I would generate power at the dam site that would heat and light a house, chop the feed, run the sewing machine and cook the meals. I would make the school the center of the community life, teaching two things primarily; how to make a farm successful and the value of living in democracy. I would have a business manager selected by the community who would buy and sell for the community, and he would have as much brains and be paid as good a salary as the traffic manager of a railroad. The school would have matrons to teach the women how to care for children, as well as farmers who would teach the men how to care for hogs.

"And this is not much of a dream, because this is the very thing that I would do if I had the money on our reclamation projects and our Indian reservations."

A Voice From Japan

BY SHOZO HASHIMOTO

Mr. Hashimoto, a Japanese Christian, graduated from Newton in June and has returned home. He attended the Atlantic City convention and, expecting to speak, wrote out his brief address. He was crowded out of the program, but we think our readers would like to see his message to his American brethren.

I STAND here as a loyal witness to the salvation of Jesus Christ, our Lord, and to the splendid work of the missionaries in Japan. I stand here as a link between America and Japan, which have been friends since the days of Perry's expedition and should be eternally united by a thousand ties of fellowship and love.

Attending this great convention, I feel a wonderful joy and hope, for here I see the vision of the conversion of the world. Truly, my heart is burning among you who "expect great things from God; attempt great things for God."

Friends, we are living in a new world. When Columbus discovered this continent, historians called it a new world, but that world was not so new as the one in which we now live. This is the entirely new world of transportation, communication, neighborhood and brotherhood. Consequently, our tasks and problems are tremendously great. That is to say, the harvest time of the kingdom of God is coming, and you surely realize that in the harvest time we need more hands.

It is true that the Burmese, Chinese and Japanese churches are coming to independent self-consciousness, self-support, self-government, self-propagation, which is the token of your achievement, but that does not mean that missionaries are not needed and are no more welcome. No! We need you more and more, perhaps in a different way or of a different kind. I sincerely hope you will "come over and help us."

Open the map of the world and on the east coast of Asia you will find the beautiful country of the islands. That is Japan, the "Golden Gate" of Asia. Its noble Fujiyama, the Hermon of the empire, is the pride of all the Japanese, and has made them artists. All of Japan's good seaports are facing the Pacific Ocean and all its peninsulas are stretching their hands toward America. They are indeed waiting for your coming with expectant eyes and longing hearts. Why can you not hear their earnest voices?

In spite of their many shortcomings I, as a Japanese, have a great hope and faith in my people and most unselfishly ask you to pray for my native land.

Lastly, I wish to thank you personally for your great help financially and spiritually for my studies in America the last two years. Now I am going home with strong conviction to be a servant of Jesus Christ our Saviour, and a preacher of the gospel. I appreciate your Christian kindnesses and pray God's blessing upon you and America forever and ever.

---

The Y. M. C. A. has opened a vocational school at Sofia, Bulgaria. There are 330 students, mostly refugees. The Bulgarian government is studying the school with a view to establishing similar training for the young men of the nation.

Volume IV Septemb[illegible] No. 31

Univ. of Ill. Library
Urbana
Ill.

The Baptist

Published Every Week by the Northern Baptist Convention

UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS
SEP 1 1913

THE new one-million-dollar Baptist hospital of the Northwest to be erected in the near future in the Twin Cities. The general plan of the building is along the line most efficient for administration—that of a cross. A solarium is at the top of the building. It will be an institution that will be a contribution by Baptists to the ministry of healing.

Fresh from the Field

The Baptist World Alliance calls upon mankind to "quench the worship of military heroes." Amen, say we! And perhaps men are more ready to do this than we imagine.—Unity.

Are we living in an age when men are more serious than women? Dr. John A. Hutton of Glasgow, successor to Doctor Jowett in Westminster Church, London, made a statement to that effect in a recent address.

Rev. T. B. Hughes of Damariscotta, Me., has accepted the combined pastorate of the Baptist church at Kennebunk, Me., and the United church, Alewine, Me.

Friends of Fanny Crosby, the blind hymn-writer who died at the age of ninety-five eight years ago, are planning as a memorial to her the erection of an old people's home in Bridgeport, Conn. "Safe in the Arms of Jesus" and "Rescue the Perishing" are two of her many hymns.

Members of the First Church, Middletown, Conn., have secured an option on residential property, with a view to taking it over for a parsonage for the new pastor, Rev. Henry Speed of Houlton, Me., who will take up his work in Middletown this month.

As a protection against the possible extermination of many varieties of wild flowers, the Sunday-school board of the Ambridge, Pa., M. E. Church has adopted a resolution against the use of rare wild flowers and tree branches for purposes of decoration.

New York has 142 radical Sunday schools where children are taught to despise the American flag, Dr. B. L. Scott, Pittsburgh, stated during the Christian Citizenship conference recently completed at Stony Brook, N. Y., under National Reform Association auspices.

Among the graduates at the recent one hundred and thirtieth convocation at the University of Chicago were six Chinese, two Filipinos, one Greek, three Japanese, one Panamaian and one Syrian.

Rev. Smith Thomas Ford, Wheaton, Ill., for many years pastor of the Englewood Church, Chicago, has accepted the position of professorial lecturer on pastoral theology at the Northern Theological Seminary, Chicago. He will take the place of Dr. James P. Abbott who, because of advancing years, will become professor emeritus. Mr. Harold D. Hayward has been appointed instructor in biology.

Rev. A. W. Fleischman, pastor of the First Church, Sterling, Ill., has been elected professor of systematic theology and professor of Greek in the theological department of Virginia Union University, Richmond, Va. Mr. Fleischman is a grandson of Dr. Konrad Fleischman, for many years pastor of the First German Baptist Church, Philadelphia. Doctor Fleischman and Dr. Augustus Rausenbausch were the pioneer leaders of the work among the Germans who came to America during the middle of the last century. Mr. Fleischman is a graduate of the Northern Theological Seminary of the class of 1920. Rev. Miles Fisher, also a graduate of the Northern Seminary, has been transferred to the chair of church history in the Virginia University.

Among the subjects which the assembly of the League of Nations will discuss at its September meeting in Geneva are the opium question, Greek refugees, Austria, disarmament and the Saar administration.

Reports from the Pan-Presbyterian Alliance conference held in Zurich indicate a small attendance of Americans, but the large gathering of Europeans indicates a growing feeling of brotherhood.

Plans for closer cooperation between Canada and the United States in prohibiting the smuggling of liquor into this country, will be worked out in an international conference to be held early in September.

A bill taxing foreigners remaining in France more than a week, 1,000 francs for each head of a family and other persons 200 francs each, has been submitted to the finance minister by a deputy.

Dr. Seth Reed, of Flint, Mich., is perhaps the oldest minister in the country. He is now a retired Methodist preacher and has passed his one hundredth birthday. His entire ministry has been in the state of Michigan, where once he was a circuit rider.

"Here is a news item that ought to put a good many people, especially women, to thinking," says the Christian Evangelist. "At a Molly Pitcher meeting in Philadelphia 'more than 150 women, half of whom puffed leisurely on cigarettes, applauded the denouncement of prohibition as a terrible curse."

The spire of the new First Methodist Church building, now nearing completion and known as the Chicago Temple, rises majestically above Chicago's noisy Loop, and is a thing of beauty and inspiration to all beholders. A cigar store desired to rent space on the first floor at a goodly figure, but was refused.

(Continued on page 964)

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

HAS MADE AS RAPID PROGRESS IN THE LAST 100 YEARS

as has been the material development of the nation from the STAGE COACH to the LIMITED TRAIN.

One hundred years ago there were NO SPECIAL HELPS for Bible Students.

Today OUR SOCIETY ALONE provides 63 of the HUNDREDS OF SUCH HELPS.

Every one admits that Baptist Sunday-school helps have QUALITY.

QUALITY always costs JUST A LITTLE MORE.

Why?

QUALITY is the result of a STANDARD.

Our STANDARD continually advances to a little beyond the best; but no STANDARD should be too high for a Baptist Sunday-school.

OUR FIVE-FOLD TASK IN RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

1. To give thorough graded instruction in the Bible.
2. To lead the pupils to Christ our Saviour.
3. To help the pupils form Christian ideals of Character and Conduct.
4. To express Christian life in missionary and philanthropic service.
5. To secure the acceptance of the Lordship of Jesus Christ throughout America.

$12,161,521.67 is needed this year to care for the work of all organizations participating in the New World Movement

American Baptist Publication Society

1701-3 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Established 1824

THE GENERAL BOARD OF PROMOTION OF THE NORTHERN BAPTIST CONVENTION

The Baptist

Vol. IV Chicago, Ill., Sept. 1, 1923 No. 31

THE BAPTIST, founded in 1919, is published every Saturday by the Northern Baptist Convention at 417 South Dearborn Street, Chicago, Illinois. Entered as second-class matter, February 4, 1920, at the post office at Chicago, Illinois, under the Act of March 3, 1879. Acceptance for mailing at special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized February 4, 1920.

Managing Editor: Edgar L. Killam
Committee on THE BAPTIST
EMORY W. HUNT, Chairman
CLARENCE A. BARBOUR HUGH A. HEATH

RATES: Single subscriptions, $2.50 a year; church clubs equal to 10 per cent of church membership, $2.00; single copies, 10 cents. In foreign countries the postage is $1.04 extra; in Canada, 52 cents extra. CHANGE OF ADDRESS: Both old and new addresses should be in our hands at least two weeks before the change is to go into effect. Always give key number as it appears on your label.

REMITTANCES: Should be made payable to THE BAPTIST. Acknowledgment made through change of label date. If check on local bank is sent, please add exchange.

SPECIAL: Renewal notice will be sent each subscriber previous to the date to which subscription is paid. Subscriber should give attention to notice by sending in renewal promptly, or, if paper is not desired for the coming year, should send in a discontinuance order.

ADVERTISING: Display: Rate per agate line, 30 cents; full page (420 agate lines), $125. No time or space discounts. Classified: 6 cents per word. Obituary notices: One hundred words free; 4 cents per word for additional. Cash to accompany order.

CORRESPONDENCE relating to subscriptions should be addressed to THE BAPTIST, Subscription Department, 417 South Dearborn Street, Chicago, Ill.

BRANCH OFFICES: The office of the state director of promotion in each state is an office of THE BAPTIST.

Table of Contents

| | Page |
|---|---|
| FRESH FROM THE FIELD | 962 |
| EDITORIAL | 965 |
| A WORLD POLICY FOR BAPTISTS, BY GILBERT LAWS | 968 |
| STRENGTHING THE CAUSE | 969 |
| NEAR EAST RELIEF—A CLOSE-UP VIEW, BY GEORGE W. CHASE | 971 |
| A NOBLE KING, BY CORWIN S. SHANK | 972 |
| SAVING ELEVEN THOUSAND LIVES, BY W. O. LEWIS | 973 |
| BACK TO THE HILLS, BY CHARLES L. WHITE | 974 |
| A LIVING WAGE FOR CHRISTIANS, BY BERNARD C. CLAUSEN | 975 |
| AERATED RELIGION, BY LESTER GEORGE SIMON | 976 |
| THE RELIGION OF THE SMALL TOWN, BY PAYSON LEE CURTISS | 977 |
| AN ADDRESS TO THE RULERS OF THE WORLD | 978 |
| AN OPEN LETTER TO AN UNKNOWN MILLIONAIRE, BY RAY GILES | 979 |
| RELIGIOUS EDUCATION | 980 |
| YOUNG PEOPLE'S WORK | 981 |
| THE CHIMNEY CORNER | 982 |
| OUR OWN FOLKS | 984 |
| OUR BOOK SHELF | 989 |
| OUR MUSIC CORNER | 990 |

Who's Who

Bernard C. Clausen, who gives us "A Living Wage for Christians" in this issue, is minister of the First Church of Syracuse, N. Y. Lester G. Simon of Tremont Church, New York City, is responsible for "Aerated Religion." Payson Lee Curtis, who discusses "The Religion of the Small Town," is minister of the United Church at Garrettsville, Ohio. W. O. Lewis is special representative of the American Baptist Mission Society in Europe—these are a few of the many who have helped to make this number such a good one.

Killam's Kollum

Choice Pickings

"THE BAPTIST isn't everything I would like it to be, yet I would hesitate to say my individual wishes would make it better should I see them go into effect. I am like the farmer's cow—I eat the good hay and leave everything I do not appreciate for those who like it. By so doing I realize that the $2.50 does not begin to pay for all the good I get."—H. Grimwood, Erie, Ill. What one discards another may accept as the choicest pickings, so there's no waste apparently —"nothing left but the squeal."

No "Jollying"

"Certainly I want THE BAPTIST—I do not how I could do without it. I am afraid that if I said all the good things I have a mind to say, you would think me sincere—merely 'jollying' you. But I am not. . . . I am using all of my influence to get THE BAPTIST into the homes, for I know you can do more good than I can," writes Rev. Frank Day of Hannibal, N. Y. We want to do all the good we can in every way we can to all the people we can at all the times we can. Give us more opportunities. Get THE BAPTIST in all the homes you can.

Prepositions and Prayer

"How few realize the awful responsibility that rests upon an editor's shoulders! He is supposed to know everything when in fact———never mind that. I greatly desire information on a matter that I discovered in THE BAPTIST of such and such a date where in the items from such and such a state it is stated that such and such a minister offered prayer to an audience of 30,000. My query is, "Did that prayer arrive at its destination?"—thus writes an earnest inquirer. That long dash in the second sentence above relieves us of the responsibility of answering. Prayers are made to, at, before, over, above, for, with (and sometimes without) audiences—depending entirely upon the mood of the one who is doing the praying and what he is after. If subscriptions to the New World Movement fund, or a building fund or to THE BAPTIST are his goal he no doubt does pray to his audience—and let's hope the prayer arrives. A mean man might pray at an audience; one who delights in verbiage is likely to pray over and above the audience; another who has a wandering fold pleads for them; the perfunctory prayer prays before an audience; and the one whose prayers reach their highest destination is the one who prays with his congregation—carries their inward longings and strivings along with his own up to the throne of grace.

Fresh from the Field

(Continued from page 962)

Rev. Sabine Baring Gould, author of the hymn "Onward Christian Soldiers," recently celebrated his eighty-ninth birthday.

Prof. John R. Brown of Rochester Theological Seminary is now general secretary of the United Charities of St. Paul, Minn.

A nation-wide drive on behalf of religious education is scheduled by the Sunday School Council of Religious Education for Oct. 14-21.

The city of Toronto, Canada, gives free transportation on street-cars to those who are totally blind.

The "Dearborn Independent" states that in America there are 1,500,000 unable to speak the English language, and 3,000,000 more who cannot read it. There is work for some one to do!

Once more has Lady Astor demonstrated her true womanhood. Through her efforts a bill prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors to persons under eighteen years has passed the House of Commons by a majority of 257 to 10.

It is pertinent for one to ask why any church should run down at the heel, or look like the last rose of summer. God's temple is worthy of our best attention.—Religious Telescope.

Dr. Henry Frederick Cope, well known in the field of religious education, died at Little Point Sable, Mich., on Aug. 3. Doctor Cope came to this country from England in 1891. Besides being the author of numerous books, since 1907 he has been general secretary of the Religious Education Association.

That President Harding was esteemed by the Jews is evidenced by the fact that the United Jewish congregations of Milwaukee recently decided to raise enough money to have his name inscribed in "The Golden Book" which is kept by the Jewish national museum at Jerusalem.

The signing of the Lausanne peace treaty establishes harmony between Turkey and the European powers, and gives Turkey just about what it wanted. The signers of the treaty were Great Britain, France, Italy, Japan, Roumania, Greece and Turkey. The Armenia problem has been left unsolved.

Bates College, Lewiston, Me., was featured in the September issue of The American Magazine. The debating team of the college, composed of three students, won a decisive victory over the team of the University of Oxford in the first college debate ever held in this country between England and America. In six years Bates College has triumphed over Harvard, Yale, Cornell and Pennsylvania universities, and has never suffered defeat.

"The American Baptist Home Missionary Society now maintains a number of directors of town and country work in various states of the Union. These men are trying to standardize the latest methods in the conduct of such churches. Conferences are conducted in various parts of the state in which rural pastors assemble to learn of the latest and best things for their work. Rev. William H. Thompson, of Ohio, has a circulating library on rural problems for the benefit of the pastors of the state. Under his leadership fifteen men made surveys of their parishes during the past year. From his office goes a considerable volume of literature on the new rural movement."—The Christian Century.

Harold C. Jacquith of Darien, Conn., managing director of the Near East Relief in Constantinople, has been made a commander of the Order of King George I by the Greek government in recognition of his work on behalf of the Greek refugees from Smyrna.

The Tabernacle Church, Waco, Tex., will celebrate Sept. 14 the completion of its new building, which was built almost entirely by the free labor of the members. The main auditorium will seat 2,000 persons as will the roof garden. The Sunday-school department is equipped to accommodate 2,000 pupils. Rev. A. Reilly Copeland is pastor.

Tell Him Now

IF with pleasure you are viewing
Any work a man is doing,
If you like him or you love him,
tell him now;
Don't withhold your approbation
Till the parson makes oration
And he lies with snowy lilies o'er his brow,
For no matter how you shout it
He won't really care about it;
He won't know how many teardrops you have shed;
If you think some praise is due him
Now's the time to slip it to him,
For he cannot read his tombstone when he's dead.

More than fame and more than money
Is the comment kind and sunny,
And the hearty, warm approval of a friend;
For it gives to life a savor,
And it makes him stronger, braver,
And it gives him heart and spirit
to the end;
If he earns your praise, bestow it;
If you like him, let him know it;
Let the words of true encouragement be said;
Do not wait till life is over
And he's underneath the clover,
For he cannot read his tombstone when he's dead.

—Boston Transcript, Author Unknown.

"There are too many vacant churches," says the Herald and Presbyter. "There should be none. One vacant church is too many. If any church cannot have services for full time, let it accept half time from some minister. This will be bearing witness for Christ, and will afford opportunity for the families and children of the community to hear the gospel preached."

A Correction

In "A Message of the Baptist World Alliance," on page 905 of the Aug. 18 issue of THE BAPTIST, third column, line fifteen from the top, the word "defense" should be "defiance."

Report of Northfield Conferences

BY EDWARD F. LOOMIS

Baptists were again prominent this summer at the religious conferences at Northfield, Mass., which have been conducted along interdenominational lines for more than forty years since founded by the great evangelist, Dwight L. Moody. In practically every one of the six conferences, Baptists were either first in numbers or second to the Congregationalists, in the center of whose stronghold the conference grounds are located

The season at Northfield this past summer opened on June 25, when the young women's conference convened, and closed on Aug. 20, and the Massachusetts Christian Endeavor Institute closed its seventeenth year. In between came the Women's Interdenominational Home Missions Conference, the conference of women's foreign missionary societies, and the General Conference of Christian Workers, the most important of the group, at which five prominent British speakers and several from this country were present. Rev. James Reid of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, Eastbourne, England; Dr. John A. Hutton, successor to Dr. J. H. Jowett at Westminster Chapel, London; Rev. Lionel B. Fletcher of the Wood Street Congregational Church, Cardiff, Wales; Rev. G. Hartley Holloway of the historic Above Bar Congregational Church, Southampton, England; and Rev. Charles Englis, a British evangelist once associated with Dwight L. Moody, were those who came from across the water. Dr. Henry Sloane Coffin of Madison Avenue Presbyterian Church, New York City, and Melvin E. Trotter, evangelist, were the leading speakers from this country.

Doctor Hutton is a Northfield favorite, a man of the intellectual type, who has written more than twenty helpful religious books—yet who possesses unusual power in presenting his message. His course to ministers upon St. Paul's Epistle to the Corinthians was interlarded with bits of sage advice for meeting ministerial problems.

The simple and only test of theology is in its soul-winning power, according to the message brought by Rev. G. Hartley Holloway. He preached the doctrine of the interdependence of man, which means the interdependence of nations.

Mr. Reid was entrusted with the task of making two addresses each Sunday for three weeks before an audience of 2,500 at each meeting in the big Moody auditorium. Mr. Fletcher has had evangelistic experience in Australia and Great Britain, and his message had a decided old-fashioned evangelistic trend, although he was not backward in placing emphasis upon the need for Christ's social ideals. Doctor Coffin also accented the same need which he described as paramount at present.

Among the leading speakers to address the Christian Endeavor Institute, the last conference of the summer at Northfield, were Dr. Dan A. Poling, associate president of the United Society of Christian Endeavor and Dr. J. C. Massee, pastor of Tremont Temple, Boston.

The Northfield schools, Mount Hermon and Northfield Seminary, are to reopen for the fall term on Sept. 11, each with a registration of about 500. Profits, if any, from the holding of summer conferences at Northfield help reduce tuition and living expenses at the schools so that deserving and needy young people can get the benefit of a Christian education.

The Baptist

The Recreation Road to Learning

THE story is told of a colored lad assisting in the preparations for a Christmas entertainment who found great difficulty in getting the Christmas tree up a narrow stairway until it was pointed out to him that instead of attempting, as he had been doing, to take it up bush-end first he should turn it about and take it up butt-end first. The almost impossible job then became simplicity itself. The tale is a great pedagogical parable.

We are finding out that education may be hindered by being made unnaturally and unnecessarily difficult; that in education as in mechanics there is such a thing as working at an advantage or at a disadvantage. Educational, like physical forces, in general tend to follow the path of least resistance. So education today attempts, somewhat more effectively than in some other ages, to find and follow the aptitudes of the human mind generally, of special classes and ages also, and even as far as possible the varying aptitudes of the individual. Here is where we strike the recreation road to learning. Aptitude will be shown by interest in a study, and what interests us most we remember best and enjoy most. Learning then becomes a pleasure, so that to a certain extent the enjoyment of a task may be a test of its fitness.

But there are natural aptitudes which do not at all tend to progress. If students are allowed freely to follow their own inclination in the selection of their studies too many would wish to major in athletics or social life and minor in mandolin or college yells with a concession to literature in the way of a library course in recent detective fiction. Not to jest about it, the human nature in all of us tends to make us, where it is possible, elect what the student terms "soft snaps." The result if unhindered would be to graduate too large a proportion of apostles of rest, specialists in inertia, connoisseurs of leisure; for as the immigration officials would say, the quota for these classes is already filled, with a long waiting list. And so our educational institutions do not leave the student to an absolutely free election of his studies; certain courses are prescribed, and in the electives there is usually the wise advice of an instructor to supplement the judgment of the student.

It is probable that the old saying, "There is no royal road to learning" expresses a great truth. Easy learning like easy money is a delusive and elusive thing. The effort, the steady application, the discipline of hand, brain, and heart; the capacity for sustained mental toil and for the elimination of side-issues; the concentration on a single essential point or a single process until the desired result is secured —these are things not to be accomplished off-hand, nor is there always much fun in doing them. In fact the only easy learning and the only real money which comes easily and consents to linger with us for an appreciable time are results of stored-up effort; they are interest on a capital fund of steady hard licks; they are brought about by the subconscious, automatic but sure repetition of processes that the brain and hand have long practiced, until a definite modification of nerve-cells, a definite path in the brain, has been formed, such that the process is carried on swiftly, accurately, and apparently with little or no effort. The deft, sure movements of the skilled surgeon, occupying but a few moments, but saving a life—and perhaps bringing an enormous fee; the facile and astounding feats of an expert gymnast; the ability of a speaker or writer in some emergency to extemporize literature or oratory of genuine and permanent worth, are all usually cases where one is simply realizing dividends on a previous investment. They are not gifts nor treasure picked up by the roadside; they are payments for value received.

True enough, there are certain marked natural aptitudes for artistic or mechanical or literary achievement which are rarely met and which are called genius. These enable one person to do with ease what seems a matter of extraordinary difficulty to another. Some one asked such a genius if it was not very hard to perform his special feat of exquisite artistry and received the oft-quoted answer, "No, it's either easy or it's impossible." It is what old Horace meant two thousand years ago by his assertion that poets are born, not made, nascitur non fit. But geniuses are rare, while many have potential talents of a high order which may be elicited and developed by persistent practice, and not otherwise. Indeed, genius itself has been defined by one who was credited with its possession as consisting chiefly in "a capacity for taking infinite pains," and by another as "the ability to toil terribly."

THAT which is the snare of the elective system in education, besets also the newspaper, which is master of the psychology of human interest but which is tempted to cater to the less worthy human instincts, to its dislike of serious thought and its liking of the sensational and the sensual. Magazines and books yield to the same lucrative lure. Even the pulpit sometimes yields to a suggestion to substitute the sensational for the spiritual, to provide an entertainment instead of a saving message.

But there is no sanctity in stupidity and no virtue in dullness or abstruseness. We rejoice in the present tendency to make religion attractive, to make the Sunday school bright, interesting and charming; to have public worship appeal to the intellect and the sense of the beautiful while it uplifts the soul and stirs the conscience; and to have the prayer meeting a delightful social function as well as a spiritual comfort and stimulus. The great Lincoln highway of learning, secular and sacred, is built and traveled with toil and purpose and cost, yet the pleasant recreation road is one of its important feeders—for the children especially; but for us all an occasional detour by it will prove that a longer way around may be the quicker way home.

Our Task

ON every hand we see today the need of the gospel of Jesus Christ but just now we have in mind the particular need revealed by those who earn their living by labor in the various skilled and unskilled lines of work.

No man or woman who toils in the shop, factory or elsewhere need ever be ashamed of the fact that they earn their living by the sweat of their brow, for the greatest man of all the ages, Jesus of Nazareth, the only begotten Son of God, was a carpenter in Nazareth. We honor and respect any one who gives a good honest day's work to an employer and expects to be treated in return in a good honest way by his or her employer.

We want to point out several facts to the employer and the employes, for upon them both depend very largely the issues of prosperity and progress both in our own country and around the world. We refer not alone to financial prosperity but also to the spiritual prosperity in peace and brotherhood. Wherever people work for or under the direction of others the first great need is for a spirit of justice to be in all their dealings with each other. We do not refer to the justice of wordly tribunals, but to that godly justice which emanates from the gospel of Jesus Christ. An onlooker is greatly puzzled these days to place the blame for many of the troubles which constantly agitate the world of labor. Many God-fearing workmen place the blame upon the union leaders, but if they are right those same Christian workmen must be reminded that they are partly responsible for putting and keeping their leaders in their places of leadership. Others place blame upon the employer or employes and cite various injustices as the cause of the various troubles. We do not attempt to fix the responsibility for whatever troubles there are, but we do know that most of them could be cured at once if both parties would deal with each other in a true spirit of Christian justice.

The second observation we have to make concerns the spirit of cooperation. So long as employer and employe are lined up in different groups there will be many troubles. Whenever the gospel spirit of brotherhood comes into action and both employe and employer are united for cooperative service the troubles of capitalist and laborite will be largely solved. Both parties are essential to each other and neither can expect to prosper for any length of time without the cooperation of the other. It is becoming increasingly evident that modern society will no longer permit the capitalist to exploit labor for unjust and selfish gains. It is just as evident that labor can no longer limit output and delete the efficiency of the best men in order to put them all on the level of the least competent. Cooperation, therefore, is greatly needed to solve these matters of large importance to a vast group of worthy working people. But it must be Christian cooperation built upon the basis of the brotherhood of man in the spirit of Jesus Christ.

We believe in organized labor just as we believe in the employment of capital, upon a proper basis. But we deplore the improper use of the labor organization for unjust and selfish ends just as much as we despise the capitalist whose only goal is to pile up personal gains at the expense of those in his employ. Whenever a true spirit of Christian justice and cooperation upon a basis of brotherhood rules the world of both capital and labor, we shall have taken a long step forward. To produce this spirit of Christian brotherhood with its justice and cooperation is part of the task of every child of God and of every local church. Let us get at our task, to delay is dangerous.

The Up and Down Church

THERE is far too much variation in the life of the average local church. A pastor comes to the place of leadership and the work of the church gathers headway and some real progress can be counted. Then the pastor is called to some other field of labor and in the interim between his going and the coming of the new man, most of the progress made under the leadership of the former pastor is lost. Then the new man must begin afresh to build up the work to where it was when the other man resigned. This sometimes takes a year or more and during that period valuable possibilities are lost to the life of that local church.

We want to suggest two remedies for this unfortunate situation. The first remedy we believe to be the development of trained lay leaders. No pastor has any right to do so much of the work of a local church himself that the lay forces find no place for the development of morale and experience. A wise pastor, instead of doing the work, will spend his time in training the men and women in his membership to become capable workers and leaders. Then when he resigns from the field he will leave behind him those capable of sustaining the work, and that is one of the great achievements of a pastorate. The second remedy we suggest is a set of standardized methods for doing the essential things in the life of a local church. We refer to such tried and tested methods as an every-member canvass and then a system whereby every church member is grouped with a small number of other members and the group is placed in charge of a deacon or deaconess. Then lay officers are supposed to help all in their group to maintain a worthy standard of worship life, or service, of witnessing and of giving. We have lately heard of some members where this simple method has been used for a number of years with evident worth-while results.

A Page of Opinion

The Labor Party Moves on Disarmament

THROUGH Mr. Ramsay Macdonald, the labor party expressed itself in the House of Commons on July 3, by the following motion: "This house deplores ıe enormous and growing expenditure on the naval nd air forces and on other military preparations ·hich is beginning once more a competition in armaıents and is depleting resources that should be availble for expenditures on education, public health, and imilar social and human services, and, recalling the ledges of political leaders and the expectations of the ation that the great world war was to end war, urges ıe government to take immediate steps to call an ıternational conference to consider a program of ational safety based upon the policy that by disarmaıent alone can the peace and liberty of small and ırge nations alike be secured." He said that it must e a subject of the most profound regret in all parts f the house that today the expenditures on preparaons for the next war had mounted up to such colosal figures. The time had come for the house to say uite definitely whether it meant to ask the governıent to pursue an unbroken and unsleeping policy or peace or not. Leading politicians in 1914 and 915 said they were asking the nation to enlist in a ·ar to end war. That was now the most sacred of all ledges—a pledge given to the dead. * * * Paıiotism was not enough. It was quite true that the ıere existence of a nation might be kept by military xpenditure; but the mere existence of a nation was nly justified in so far as that nation meant the moral nd intellectual qualities of its own people and meant great moral lead to the other nations of the world.

—London Times

"Honesty in the Pulpit"

REV. HARRY EMERSON FOSDICK, preaching recently in the First Presbyterian Church, New ·ork, on "Honesty in the Pulpit," said in part:

"The problem of the ministry in the matter of honsty is very difficult. For one thing, the minister is public speaker, and that is a dangerous thing to be. 'he whole possibility of glowing and effective public peaking depends upon the sympathetic response of ıe audience. In consequence the pressure is contantly on the minister to give the people what they ·ant. In theology, in social and industrial questions, ı international affairs, he is tempted not to speak ·hat he really thinks, but to give the people what ıey want. . . .

"Presumably the minister is a family man. He has wife and children whom he loves. He is dependent nancially on the good-will of his congregation, and goes hard with his conscience sometimes when he aces the possibility of proclaiming a disturbing ruth. . . . .

"The minister is not only a public speaker and usually a family man, but he is a gentleman. And gentlemen never like to be the cause of a disturbance. . . .

"Elemental truth and candor are important in any realm, but there is no realm where the lack of them is so fatal as in religion.

"This, then, is the appeal to the church: Make it easier, not harder, for your ministers to think freely, bravely, truly about the deep concerns of the spiritual life. . . .

"But whenever you find a minister trying to think through the truth of Christianity in terms that can be apprehended by modern minds and lived in modern circumstances, you would better back him up, for he is doing constructive work."

Given to Hospitality

HOSPITALITY is commendable, but there is a time for all things. That visiting may be a real detriment is contended by E. L. Middleton in his recently published book, "Building a Country Sunday School": "Sunday visiting is one of the greatest barriers to country Sunday schools. All of us from the country know the monotony and humdrum life in the separateness of the homes. The right kind of social life ought to be cultivated, but not at the expense of Sunday schools. We violate two of God's laws by Sunday visiting. We do not keep the day holy and we fail to assemble ourselves together.

"The coming of the automobile is adding to this difficulty. While we are getting so many people to pledge money for the kingdom we need to get some pledges to use automobiles to carry ourselves and others less fortunate than ourselves to Sunday school. The beautiful country hospitality often becomes a real sin in keeping many people away from Sunday school and preaching services."

The Tendency in Fiction

Anent the trend of much of the modern fiction of the day, the Lutheran says: "Is it not true, that (with few rare exceptions) the tendency of modern fiction writers is to present pictures of the odd and abnormal, and to hold up what is exceptional as representing what is general? Especially is this the case where writers, who do not know what Christianity essentially is and who are indifferent as to its claims, set themselves up as teachers of religion. Most of them have scarcely touched the hem of the garment of Christ's teachings, and yet fling their satire at those who are ready to make every sacrifice of what the world highly prizes to preach unto men the unsearchable riches of Christ. They stand in marked contrast with the old masters of fiction who, even when they made no special claims as to religious profession, had some respect for it and drew true and faithful portraits of Christian character."

A World Policy for Baptists

An article inspired by the Congress of the Baptist World Alliance and first published in "The Baptist Times and Freeman."

By Gilbert Laws

THE primary need of the Baptists of the world is cohesion. There are no insuperable obstacles to the achievement of Baptist solidarity on a world scale, and therefore with patience and good will it can and ought to be secured.

The Baptist is a true catholic. His faith has nothing merely national in it; he has not been in the way of using racial or geographical adjectives in definitions of his spiritual fellowship. His organization is not wedded to the name of any human founder, nor is it formed with a view to easy alignment with patronising governments. He believes intensely that both his faith and his polity are not after man but divinely given in the New Testament. Whenever any new light on the New Testament shall show him any defect in his faith, his practice or his polity, he is not merely at liberty to revise them, but is positively bound by his principle to do so. By his principle, therefore, he is at one with every Baptist on the globe. He is cohesive by nature and by principle, and our world leaders should plan to give his cohesion expression.

Where Baptists Flourish

The Baptist people are found in many lands; they can and do exist and flourish under any political regime that does not attempt to coerce conscience—a monarchy in Britain, a republic in America, a commune (or whatever it is) in Russia—it matters not, Baptists will obey the powers that be and give tribute to Cæsar, while reserving for God that worship and obedience which no state can either compel or justly proscribe. As there is nothing in their faith or polity to hinder Baptist world unity, so there is no hindrance in the variety of governments under which our people live.

The spirit of the Baptists is unworldly, their emphasis falls upon personal religion, as is inevitable from their making conversion the organizing principle of their churches. With all respect to those ardent political reformers whose names are honored now where once they were roundly abused—and, in any case, are safe from reflection at our hands—we take leave to say that political action was never more than a Baptist byproduct, and must not be elevated into a staple of our output or regarded as a model and ideal for general imitation. The Baptists place the emphasis upon conversion, devoutness, evangelical obedience and holiness of life, all of which make for cohesion with the like-minded of every land.

THE first World Congress in London, 1905, with the second in Philadelphia, 1911, and two European Congresses in Berlin and Stockholm, 1908 and 1913, have created the beginnings of a world consciousness in Baptists which we hope to see greatly deepened through this first post war rally, the Congress of the Baptist World Alliance at Stockholm, July 21-28, of the Baptists of all nations. We venture to say that the time is very near when the fraternal fellowship illustrated in such gatherings as these will lead to a demand for the formulation of a world policy, capturing the imagination, constraining the conscience and commanding the will of all our people.

If the Baptists of the world can achieve cohesion, it follows that they will thereby preserve distinction. Our distinctive witness must be preserved in every land because we have received of the Lord that which we deliver unto men, both in the way of saving doctrine and sacramental practice. We can do no other way, so help us God—as Luther would have said. We have nothing we can give away, nothing to bargain with in the ecclesiastical market. Our fathers scraped all the rubbish clean off the rock and built only upon the immovable foundation. With an irreducible minimum of essential principles the Baptist gives liberty and love and goodwill to all who differ, but never yields an inch on his fundamentals; they are not his to yield.

Our continued existence as a distinct Christian community, universal in character and without racial barriers or limits, is, furthermore, a reasonable proposition because of the antiquity of our origin. The true place of the Baptist in the expansion of the Christian church is not what uninstructed people imagine it to be. He is not a poor relation of that tepid state Protestantism which allowed itself to be modified by sixteenth century princes who cared nothing for divine truth, but cared much for church lands, plate and jewels which the Reformation threw into their greedy hands and those of their flunkeys and favorites. The ancestry of the Baptist is more ancient than that, and in many respects more honorable. He was in existence outside popery before Luther had left the cloister, and felt the cruel weight of the German princes whom Luther urged to stamp the Baptist into the earth.

Not an Offshoot of Puritanism

Nor is the Baptist a mere offshoot of English Puritanism. His root was firmly fixed in the continent of Europe and his branches were spreading long before English Separatists were planted as cuttings from English Protestantism.

The Baptists are an embodied spirit, and if the earthly house of their present denominational tabernacle were dissolved, their spirit would weave around itself a new body, and it would repeat this process any number of times, if necessary, simply because the Baptist faith is an original, essential and inevitable interpretation and expression of Christianity.

The Baptist, in his distinctiveness, stretches out pathetic hands toward his fellow religionists in other countries, craving their countenance and fellowship, for few besides his own folk show him any hearty affection. Many there are at home here who will steal his people, profit at his expense, snap up eagerly the good workers and givers they can detach from him, and give fair words in cheap exchange; but they love him not.

On the continent, especially, from Roman Catholic contempt and heavy-handed Greek Orthodox oppression, from atheistic and materialistic and semi-barbarous environments he looks to British and American Baptists to stand by him and with him in his grave struggle for his soul, and for a polity and a fellowship which shall express his convictions and nourish his faith.

Cohesion and distinction, by logical necessity, lead to aggression. Aggressiveness is a necessity of life to the Baptist. He has had a bitter struggle for existence, for toleration, for liberty to utter his convictions; and still he must be doing, he must be fighting—like Bunyan for liberty to preach, like Fuller for the heathen, like Knibb for the slave, like Spurgeon for the faith, like Clifford for the bottom man, like Lloyd George for his country. His revered names, his typical personages, are all fighters. The Baptist lives in his armor and sleeps upon the field.

In places where the Baptists are not aggressive it is a hard matter to keep them alive. It would be invidious to mention names of countries, but Dr. Rushbrooke can tell us of fields where considerable imported labor and financial aid have had but the poorest result, because the people on the ground have no spirit of aggression. On the other hand, there are fields, like Russia, for example, where heroic labors and sufferings have been performed and endured, and where the results have matched the labors. The labors and results, we do not hesitate to say, are worthy to stand beside anything that history knows; yea, anything that holy scripture itself records.

We must go ahead on the continent of Europe. We venture to declare the great hope we cherish concerning Russia, the new nations that once were Russia or Austria, and the East of Europe generally. It is this: No reformation has touched that vast region yet and a spiritual reformation is due, overdue perhaps. The Greek church has had a fearful shaking at the hands of Lenin and his agents, with which sort of shaking we have no sympathy. But another shaking from a spiritual source will come, and our hope is that the eastern reformation shall be thoroughly scriptural, evangelical—in a word, Baptist! Why not? The Swiss Reformation would have taken a Baptist form if Zwingli had not bargained for magisterial support and trimmed to please the authorities of Zurich. And what nearly happened then in the Alps may really happen now farther east in the more favorable conditions of twentieth century civilization and scholarship. Why should we not aspire to guide on evangelical lines the religious development of those nations whose incomplete civilization and education afford such an opportunity?

We must go ahead on the mission field and in order to that advance, and to make it possible we must go ahead at home. We must believe in ourselves, our principles and our calling more and more. We do not advocate proselytizing, and have no desire to force our views upon unwilling fellow Christians. God knows there is a field for advance in the vast multitudes of the careless and indifferent people all around us and in the rising generation in our Sunday schools. How skilfully we Baptists can plan for funds! What labors our leaders have undergone, and what sacrifices our people have made for our financial efforts! Can we not plan and labor and sacrifice for the salvation of the lost at home and the heathen abroad with comparable skill, initiative and devotion? When it can be said with any truth that Baptists are good at raising money, but poor at saving souls, Ichabod may be written upon our portals. * * *

We must raise our flag higher, believe in and propagate our distinctive principles more boldly and imitate the loyalty of our American brethren whose decided attitude on Baptist principles has apparently aided rather than hindered their rapid growth in numbers and influence.

Strengthening the Cause

THE third meeting of the Baptist World Alliance, held July 20-27, in Stockholm, Sweden, brought together more Baptists than have ever met at any one time in the European continent. The total enrolment was upwards of 2,500, of which the largest group was from Sweden, followed by the Baptist Union of Great Britain and Ireland and the Northern Baptist Convention with 481 and 480 delegates respectively; and by the Southern Baptist Convention with a delegation of something less than 100. Too much praise cannot be given our Swedish friends for the way in which they entertained this great body of guests. The press of the city paid far more attention to the daily proceedings of the congress than would have been the case in either the American or English capitals, and it is safe to say that for the first time in history the Baptist cause got on the front page in the press of Europe. The importance of this cannot be overestimated in that part of the world where Baptists have still to suffer for conscience' sake and where they belong to the feeble and socially insignificant religious minorities. The influence of the Stockholm Congress will be felt for many years to come, although it is doubtful if any immediate effect will be had upon those governments where the ruling castes are still as arrogant and autocratic as they were previous to 1914.

What We Can

THE common problem, yours, mine, every one's.
Is, not to fancy what were fair in life
Provided it could be, but, finding first
What may be, then find out how to make it fair
Up to our means: a very different thing.
"My business is not to remake myself,
But to make the absolute best of what God made."

Robert Browning.

The Baptist World Alliance has been a sort of quinquennial talk-fest, the last five-year period having been of necessity stretched out to twelve years because of the great war. That there is a place for such a talk-fest no one can doubt. It gives an opportunity for mutual acquaintance which ought to be both illuminating and chastening. It ought to be illuminating to a Baptist who has set a great store by anti-alien-immersion to discover large sections of Baptists who have never heard this doctrine, and who, when it is explained to them instantly repudiate it as something utterly un-Baptistic. It is chastening to a Baptist who knows only theoretically that his spiritual ancestors had to bear in their own bodies the marks of the Lord Jesus to see and talk with many living Baptists who have suffered one or another kind of martyrdom in order that they might remain true to our Baptist heritage. The Baptist World Alliance, in bringing together from the ends of the earth many types of Christian experience, keeps us from becoming provincial in our Baptist point of view.

It was natural, in view of the world situation, that the chief interest of the congress should have been focused on Europe. As the years go by, however, it is inevitable that we should more and more take into consideration other continents. Otherwise the name, Baptist World Alliance, will have little justification. One of the purposes in meeting in Stockholm was to strengthen the cause on the continent. This same motive was dominant in the selection of Toronto for the meeting in 1928—to help the Baptists of Western Canada where they are relatively weak. One of these days we shall have a meeting of the Baptist World Alliance in India or China. Then this organization—hitherto somewhat too predominantly Anglo-Saxon—will become really international and ecumenical.

The Horn of Angel Gabriel

So far as the program at Stockholm went, our British brethren repeated what they did at Philadelphia twelve years ago. For clear-cut thinking, careful preparation, and well-balanced appeal to heart and head, they easily took first place. The congress was very definite in its adherence to the time-honored Baptist position as to credal statement. The only unpleasant incident was that of a brother whose zeal for credal statement blunted his ethics so seriously that the entire audience was under the necessity of howling him off the platform to prevent further larceny of precious minutes which did not belong to him. Several other speakers had such aural difficulty in giving heed to the bell announcing that their time was up that we feel prompted to advise a larger horn for the Angel Gabriel, for if they chance to be delivering addresses on the last day, some of them will fail to respond. In spite of minor faults like these, and possibly a slight diminution of interest toward the end, most of the sessions were on a high level. Indeed, it was difficult to reach a higher plane than that of the opening sermon of the congress by Doctor Cameron of Toronto. This will appear in full in THE BAPTIST.

Could there have been larger opportunity for personal fellowship during the congress, more would have resulted. It was unfortunate that our British friends lived on board their ship, the "Marloch," and were somewhat inaccessible. One of the "high spots" not on the program was a visit of about seventy-five Americans to the "Marloch," with free and frank interchange of views, much more significant than the ordinary "hands-across-the-sea" affairs with which some of us are familiar. The next program must provide definitely for groups like these to get together—especially where different languages are spoken. There should be fewer set addresses, larger opportunity for discussion from the floor and more fellowship apart from the formal sessions.

The street outside the great Immanuelskyrkan was constantly filled with a picturesque and varied throng. It was Babel in miniature, but with this difference: Every one spoke the language of the kingdom. The one word that everybody understood was "hallelujah." Christ was the great magnet which drew all these people together from the ends of the earth. As we looked into their faces, particularly those from Czecho-Slovakia, Roumania and Russia, and saw how solid and substantial on the one hand and how devoutly spiritual and terribly in earnest on the other were these good Baptist brothers and sisters, we felt that we of America in our relatively comfortable circumstances had much to learn from them. Much as we have a right to be proud of the Baptist fathers, we have quite as good reason to be proud of our Baptist cousins across the sea. We have much to learn from them.

The Baptist World Alliance has to solve the problem of its relation to the several missionary societies which have for many years been working here and there throughout the world. By reason of its history, and also because of developments in Europe due to the great war, it is natural that its chief emphasis has been European. This will no doubt be the case for some years to come. The alliance was never intended to function as a super-missionary organization, but it nevertheless has a very definite place in our Baptist life. It brings Baptists of rather varied types together; it makes them more sympathetic with each other's problems; best of all, it is of the greatest assistance in giving them a world outlook. Those who felt the atmosphere of the Stockholm Congress came away with a new confidence in the Baptist cause and a new pride in their spiritual heritage.

Drawing by Henry N. Kost—Courtesy "Union Signal."

Near East Relief—A Close Up View

By George W. Chase

WHEN during the past year I responded to appeals in behalf of the Near East Relief work, I did not dream that I should soon have the opportunity of actually witnessing some of the activities of that beneficent organization. But this summer there came to me the unexpected opportunity of spending two months in classic Greece, and along with the thrill of inspiration that the sight of the ancient monuments and storied scenes brings, I have found a source of equal interest in meeting the devoted men and women who are administering America's splendid contribution to the work of relief and reconstruction in the war-devastated regions. I want to pass on some of my experiences to the readers of The Baptist, so that with me they may realize more vividly just what is being done with their generous gifts.

I found the Athens headquarters of the organization in the old royal palace in the heart of the city. This building, once the residence of the kings of Greece, has been turned over wholly to various philanthropic organizations, of which the Near East Relief is the most important. Passing the tall soldier at the entrance, uniformed in the gorgeous and fantastic blue and crimson and gold of the royal guards, I climbed a marble staircase and came to the corridor lined with the offices occupied by the headquarters of the N. E. R. Each room was a place of steady activity and every one seemed very busy, but in view of the magnitude of the business transacted by the organization the total number of the personnel was surprisingly small. Evidently there are no drones in that hive, but only earnest workers. Outside the doors were clustered groups of pathetic refugees. (The number of these poor people in Athens mounts into hundreds of thousands, and terribly strains the resources of a city impoverished by the costly war.) Within, it was delightful to see wholesome American faces and hear the sound of our native tongue.

Introductions

A bright faced young woman answered my inquiries and told me that Mr. Acquith, the head of the work, was at present in Beirut, and referred me to Mr. Morris, the assistant director, who gives his whole time to the work in Greece. Mr. Morris is one of those Americans whom it does you good to meet. A journalist before he entered the Near East Relief work, he hides beneath an offhand, breezy exterior a heart warm with human kindness and a tremendous enthusiasm. His good sense and humor, his tact and ready sympathy and his practical efficiency make him an ideal administrator.

By great good luck for me Dr. John H. Finley of the New York Times the well known educator and former college president, was in Athens looking over the activities of the N. E. R., and Mr. Morris invited me to accompany himself and Doctor Finley in a two days' trip by automobile to visit some of the orphanages; for the distinctive work which the organization is doing in Greece is to care for the orphan children of Greeks and Armenians who perished in the terrible massacres in Asia Minor.

Shoemaking is one of the leading industries in the Near East Relief orphanage at Jebail. The boys particularly like to make hob-nail shoes.

There have been about 16,000 of these orphans under the care of the N. E. R. in Greece. Nearly 4,000 of these have found homes in Greek families who have adopted them or have been apprenticed for a term of years, leaving about 12,000 still in the orphanages. This number is likely to be increased again soon by one or two thousand who are yet to be brought to Greece from Constantinople. The children are distributed among a number of orphanages on the mainland of Greece and on the islands of Corfu and Syra. The number ranges from about 2,500 at the Corinth orphanage down to less than a thousand at Corfu.

Our first day's excursion was to Corinth, by way of Eleusis and Megara. Besides Doctor Finley, Mr. Morris and myself we had in the party two prominent journalists—Mr. Maurocordatos, the Greek representative of the Reuter news agency and the Associated Press, and Captain Elliardi, correspondent of the London Times. I shall never forget the beauty of the scenery as we skirted the shore of the Gulf of Aegina. We passed the scene of the Battle of Salamis, and Eleusis, the place where the Eleusinian Mysteries, so significant in the religion of ancient Greece, were celebrated. Modern Greeks believe that the rites of masonry were derived from those of Eleusis. We took time to visit the ruins of the temple of Demeter. There are still altars carved with sacred symbols, fragments of exquisite sculptures, and a marble stairway winding down to the temple. Next came Megara, noted for the picturesque costume of the women and their wonderful Easter dances. Here in the village square we were welcomed in English by a Greek who had spent many years in the states. He regaled us with fresh cheese made from sheeps' milk, a toothsome brown loaf of bread made from wheat home grown and baked in a beehive-shaped oven in the courtyard, and long snaky cucumbers. Then on, along a narrow shelf between the mountains and the sea, with constant views of emerald, sapphire and turquoise waters and beyond them the pale blue range of the Peloponnesus. Crossing the canal which cuts straight as an arrow across the Corinthian Isthmus, we were soon at the modern village of Corinth. I wish I could stop to tell of all the interesting things we saw on an excursion which we made to the site of old Corinth, at the foot of Acrocorinthus. There are very interesting ruins, including the famous fountain of Pirene, an ancient temple of Apollo and the market place where Paul's feet doubtless daily trod, also glimpses of the peasants harvesting their grain with sickles and threshing it by driving teams of horses round and round the threshing floor, much as they did and do still in Palestine. Returning to New Corinth we came to the orphanage which occupies the spacious site of a government barracks just opposite the village. The ground is perfectly level, the soil dry and sandy, and fresh breezes temper the heat of the sun. The long barracks buildings formerly occupied by soldiers have been turned over to the orphans, and are used as schoolrooms, dormitories for boys, store rooms for food, etc. Besides these a long wooden mess hall has been built, and smaller buildings for kitchen and laundry. As soon as possible another building will be constructed to shelter the girls, who at present sleep out in the open air—a thousand of them—in a great square, beds for the older girls around the outside and mattresses for the younger ones in the center. This arrangement is not really a hardship in the summer, as it almost never rains and the spacious grounds make it possible to have this sleeping place at an ample distance from the buildings. Everywhere were the children, from tots of three or four years up to boys and girls of fourteen or fifteen. They all radiated happiness, contentment and well-being. Some were helping in the laundry and the kitchen, others in relays were pushing the sweep of the well so that a constant stream of water might be supplied—for it is the purpose to have each child at work for about four hours of the day and at school for an equal period. The work arrangements are not yet fully organized, for it is only four months since the grounds were taken over, and material and equipment of all kinds had to be assembled.

A Pitiful Lot

The children too on their first arrival were a pitiful lot, exhausted and listless after the horrors of a four weeks' march from the interior of Asia Minor to the sea, and a large proportion of them suffering from trachoma, favus and scabies. Many are still on the sick list, but they are being cured as rapidly as possible under the care of a skilful and faithful Armenian physician. This doctor, with Mr. Myers, a modest young American in charge of the construction work, a lady in charge of the hospital and Miss Cushman the superintendent of the orphanage, with her two assistants, make up the entire staff. They are aided by about twenty-five native assistants, some of whom teach the children and others have charge of various parts of the work. Although this small number of people care for 2,500 children, it is evident that the work is being well done and the boys and girls thriving. Of course all the workers are overtaxed, for they have to be on the job ten or eleven hours a day seven days in the week, but among them all there was nothing but cheerfulness, courage and enthusiasm, the spirit of Christian soldiers who sing as they fight. We can indeed be proud of these brave, plucky representatives of our finest American Christian manhood and womanhood, who are giving a new demonstration of consecrated efficiency and joyous self sacrifice.

A call for luncheon at Cavalla, the ancient Neapolis where Paul landed in response to the call "Come over into Macedonia and help us." One thousand boys and girls are quartered here under the care of the Near East Relief. Most of them came from Anatolia.

We stayed long enough to see the eager children marching to the mess hall where they were fed simply but abundantly. They are very fond of shredded wheat biscuit, but have not yet learned to like cocoa. We visited the hospital, where we admired alike the patience of the little sufferers and the serenity and competence of the lady in charge. I must not take time to tell of our ride back to Athens in the evening, and our supper in the village square of Megara, while the population of the village looked on and Doctor Finley and I ate from a single plate and shared a napkin between us. I must omit also the details of our trip the next day up over Mt. Cithaeron, through the quaint village of modern Thebes, through pastoral scenes to Chalcis, where there is an orphanage with 1,500 boys, and then down to Oropus. We arrived there about an hour before sunset. As we approached the buildings we had a glimpse of the youngest children in dainty light blue uniforms, playing on the sea beach. Then our car entered the lovely gardens in which the buildings of the orphanage stand. Leaving the car there we went on a little distance to an open field where all the children were gathered for sports and dances. Seldom have I seen a lovelier landscape. We were in a hollow surrounded on three sides by soft hills, where fields of deep green alternated with golden wheat-fields and with fresh ploughed red soil dotted with trees of luxuriant foliage. On one slope far away huddled a flock of sheep. Behind us was the calm sea with the mountain of Euboea rising over beyond. And here, all around a great oblong carpeted with soft clover were sitting or standing the 1,000 girls who make up the membership of the Oropus orphanage. When we arrived, a group of Greek maidens in graceful costumes of white were going through a charming folk dance. Then a group of Armenian girls, also robed in white, performed an elaborate and beautiful dance in the course of which they waved to and fro long wreaths of green leaves. They were followed by a band of young girls who gave a most spirited and amusing dance which they learned from the Kurds while they were marching to the seacoast of Asia Minor. Then came sports —relay races and ball games, under the charge of the physical director, who is a graduate of Wellesley. The zest and the "pep" with which the girls entered into these was just like that of American college or Y girls. Then there was a song sung by a large number of fresh girlish voices to one of our familiar Y. W. tunes. The company broke up and the girls trooped away to supper while we sat on the shady veranda with Miss Corning and the delightful young women who are her assistants. Presently we were regaled with a genuine American tea, where we were made to feel quite at home, with conversation in which serious and intellectual themes mingled in just the right proportion with jest and mirth. It was with reluctance that we bade farewell to this abode of peace and beauty, and set forth on our lovely moonlight ride back to Athens, over the wooded mountains and past the noble groves of the summer palace of Tatoi.

Henceforth Near East Relief will be no more an abstract thing to me. It will stand for the finest Christian manhood and womanhood consecrated to loving service, for happy children, being trained under wholesome influences for future usefulness and worth. We can rest assured that the dollars we give are being made to do their very utmost. The workers are all living on salaries which mean nothing more than bare subsistence. Supplies are purchased and distributed with intelligent forethought and the steamer Parnassus owned by the N. E. R. cruises from station to station (all are on the sea in order to be easily accessible) replenishing supplies.

There is a splendid esprit de corps, a loyalty to the cause and to one another that unites all the workers. The cost is kept down to $5 a month for each child, and yet out of that small sum (and Greece is at present an expensive country in which to live) all are fed wholesomely, clothed cleanly and neatly, tended in sickness and provided with good schooling and preparation for life. With all humility and gratitude I thank God that I am an American, that it is my countrymen and countrywomen who are doing this noble work and that you and I may help in assuring its continuance.

Lewiston, Me.

A Noble King

Address at the mausoleum of Gustavus Adolphus, Stockholm, July 2

BY CORWIN S. SHANK

ON the battlefields of Lutzen, 1632, in defence of Protestant Christianity, there fell, while fighting hand to hand with his foes, the noble King Gustavus Adolphus II, whose glorious deeds have attracted the attention of the world, and in humble recognition of which we today solemnly garland his tomb. That day and the thirty-four years of his reign are pregnant with significance, surpassing in importance any like period of time as it affects the freedom of religious thought and worship of mankind throughout the world.

Gustavus Adolphus came to the throne when but seventeen years of age and was at once plunged into war against the Danes, Russians and Poles to vindicate the work of his father, Charles IX, and his grandfather, Gustavus Vasa. These nations were all superior to Sweden in wealth and population. It was during the reign of his grandfather, Gustavus Vasa, that the first determined stand was taken against Roman Catholicism, and with the same daring a success that has ever characterized t Gustavus dynasty, in two years and half the founder of this noble ho forced the Danish king southward acr the channel and became the first m arch in Europe to break all relati with Roman papacy and declare Protestant Christianity, thereby mak Sweden the first Protestant Europ country.

Roman Catholicism was not to easily pushed aside, and after colo ing religious forces in Poland, ag Sweden was vexed with religious c quest, so that between the years of 1 and 1600 it became the dominant q tion of the times. Duke Charles, af wards Charles IX, youngest son of G tavus Vasa and father of Gusta Adolphus, summoned the ruling pow of the realm and there was passed the Reichstag a law declaring Swede Protestant country. This only serve fire the opposition of the Catholic ernment beyond the Baltic, and it was following the battle of Stangebro, 1598, that Gustavus Adolphus undertook to establish on a sure foundation the work of his noble ancestry. This he accomplished after no small amount of sacrifice and effort, but, standing, as he believed, upon a principle held sacred by his fathers, he not only made Sweden free from the power of the Roman church, but gave to it a position in history that has justly entitled him to be regarded not only as the greatest of Swedish rulers, but as one of the outstanding historical figures of all time.

He possessed personally a measure of piety that endeared him to all with whom he came in contact. He was known, as have been all of Sweden's rulers down to this day, as a man whom any subject, whether noble or peasant, might approach with perfect freedom. He possessed the vision of a statesman who could look down through the corridors of time and estimate the strength and the weakness of his nation, and cope with the problems that certainly lay in its pathway. Although the Danes had been driven back to the south, and the Russians pushed from the eastern shores of the Baltic, he saw with the eye of the prophet that unless he again took the sword against Catholicism the victories of the past would be lost to his people. The Austrian emperor having marched to the shores of the Baltic, Gustavus Adolphus again, in 1630, with an army of but 13,000 men, crossed the sea, struck a staggering blow to the on-coming forces, and within one year, in a great and decisive battle at Breitenfeld, victoriously defeated the enemy, destroyed forever the last great plan of the Hapsburgs for a universal Catholic empire, and this noble Protestant King of Sweden was for the time master of the whole of Germany. The Austrian army attempted to swing its forces from the south against the Swedish army, and it was while meeting this attack, Nov. 6, 1632, in a fierce hand-to-hand conflict on the field of Lutzon, that Gustavus Adolphus fell. His army pushed on and followed the riderless charger of the king to victory.

Although this war did not end until 1648, the friends and adherents of Gustavus Adolphus, in cooperation with France, under Richelieu, were able to bring about the Westphalian Peace Congress, which brought to an end the religious wars in Europe. Since that day, religious liberty has been a growing reality, and the noble king of Sweden has been enshrined in the hearts of men everywhere as the hero who valiantly offered up himself as a sacrifice that nations might be free.

There seems to be an eternal fitness in Sweden's flag, the cross. It was unfurled alone as staggering blows were struck against the Danes, Russians and Poles. It advanced over the hills and through the marshes to meet the enemy at Breitenfeld and Lutzon. It served as the shroud of Gustavus Adolphus as he was borne by his sorrowing army back to his native soil. This cross of Sweden, emblematic of freedom and a willingness to sacrifice, stood for centuries as the beacon light to the nations of the world, bidding them to follow in Sweden's footsteps. No longer, however, does this flag float alone as significant of the principles for which it so long stood and for which noble monarchs died. It is still leading on, and today as we gather at this tomb the flags of all nations wave with the cross of Sweden; their folds are lovingly entangled as the breeze catches the spirit that was set loose by Gustavus Adolphus, and the world hails him, not only as the king of Sweden but also as the monarch who set free the world from the bondage of religious intolerance.

Nor indeed does the riderless charger that left a king dying upon the battlefield any longer lead an army of but 13,000 souls. The spirit of this monarch rides on before the millions of Protestants in every land under the sun. It is fitting that we, the representatives of this great body of people, should lay a wreath upon his tomb.

O king, rest on, take thy sleep. Thy spirit still lives in the hearts of the peoples of all lands gathered here at thy tomb; thy cross, that of the Man of Galilee, is being carried by the millions of Protestant Christians throughout the world who are marching on with a tread that sounds like the voice of many waters that cannot be turned back.

Saving Eleven Thousand Lives

The story of Baptist relief in Russia.

By W. O. Lewis

THE Baptists of the world are entitled to know what was done with the money they gave toward relief work in Russia last winter. Let me outline briefly the general plan of distribution. First of all, a certain sum was set aside for the feeding of students in the universities. The rest was divided into two almost equal parts, one part being used for food packages which were sent to various groups of Baptists and evangelical Christians during the winter and for the purchase of seed for farmers in the spring. Although most of this was used for Baptists, many others were assisted. With the other part of the money, help was given to all in need in a district stretching to the east from Melitopol. This is not a large territory compared to the whole of Russia but there was no needier field, for it had already suffered much from the World War and civil war which followed even before the famine came. During the summer of 1921 there was a drought, during the winter that followed there was practically no snow and during the summer of 1922 there was scarcely any rain. When I visited the region in April, 1923, we were actually supplying food to 11,000 people!

Some of the 20,000 Near East Relief orphans removed from the interior of Turkey to Syria and Greece. Many of these children walked 500 miles to the coast.

Where Is Melitopol?

Some of my readers may not be sufficiently acquainted with Russian geography to place this district. Melitopol itself, a city of 18,500 inhabitants before the World War, is on the main railroad line between Moscow and the Crimea and was a sort of center for the trade of the German colonies in the district. The region in which we conducted relief work stretches eastward from Melitopol and lies just north of the Sea of Azov. If you have access to any of the famine maps made last year, you will find the Melitopol district at the southwest end of the worst famine belt stretching from the Volga to the Black Sea. There are few trees in the district. It reminds me of the plains stretching from the middle of Kansas westward. When there is rain, this is a fertile grain country. A small fish like a sardine that the Russians call kumsa comes into the Sea of Azov to spawn and is caught in large quantities. But the same year that the rains failed, these small fish, upon which the people depend for a part of their food supply, did not appear. So, with all reserves gone and land and sea refusing to yield, thousands starved before help came.

What It Means to Feed 11,000 People

But what does it mean to feed 11,000 people? Does it mean that 11,000 of the poorest were picked out and given enough to keep them from starving while all the others were able to get along without help? No, it was not as simple as that. To show our method let us take a typical case,—that of a family consisting of a husband, wife and three children, five in all. They have a small quantity of flour (if we may call it that) made by grinding up the hulls of sunflower seeds, grass, weeds and a little rye. They also have a few chickens, a dog and a poor lean cow. If all this is eaten it will keep the entire family alive during the winter months but about Easter time there will be nothing more and the entire family will die of starvation. If some members of the family eat enough and save enough food to keep them alive until the next harvest, the others will starve to death a little sooner. But if enough food can be supplied to this family to keep one member in good condition until the next harvest, the extra food will enable all five of them to live. I feel perfectly safe therefore in saying that in feeding 11,000 we kept alive considerably more than 50,000 people who would have been dead by this time unless some one else had fed them. We not only kept these people from actual starvation but we also enabled them to keep alive a few horses and cows which will make it possible for them to put in larger crops and thus increase their chances of taking care of themselves during the coming year.

How It Was Done

The American Relief Administration and the Nansen committee had been working in the district before we assumed the responsibility. A well-educated lawyer (lawyers of the old régime in Russia have little chance of making a living from their profession now), the son of a Baptist preacher and a man of sterling character, was appointed to look after the details for us. A large vacant store was chosen as a warehouse. This was filled with flour, rice, corn grits, sugar, canned milk and other things bought from the American Relief Administration at wholesale prices. Our relief work was under the wing of the American Relief Administration, though we were allowed large liberty in administration. They kept check on us however, and could have stopped us if they had felt at any time that we were not acting according to the general principles of the agreement with the soviet government.

Many of the citizens of the community cooperated with us. One of the men who helped us most was a broad-minded Jewish banker. When our Baptist lawyer was compelled to be away this banker was practically in charge. Among others whom we could always rely upon for help in distribution were the Molokans, a denomination resembling the Quakers. The doctors and school teachers were glad to work with us and the few Baptists here of course helped all they could. The general needs of each village or group were studied and a certain amount of food alloted. Men came into Melitopol once a month and hauled the allotment out in wagons. Every effort was made to see that what we gave actually reached the people for which it was intended. From time to time there was inspection and the reports were checked up.

Besides the warehouse where the food was stored, we had another place in Melitopol which was used mainly for the storing of clothing. Both Northern and Southern Baptists sent clothing for distribution here. The homes for the famine orphans received a generous share of these supplies.

Back to the Hills

BY CHARLES L. WHITE

ONE day a great desire came to an honored minister to return to the home of his childhood. He arrived unheralded, a stranger to all, longing to drink again from the old bucket that hung in the well near the elm tree.

After a quiet night at the village inn he strolled out to the old farm where he was born and walked again the paths he had trod with children whose names even he could not recall. Other boys were driving the cows to pasture, fishing in the stream and gathering nuts for the winter. Strangers were working in the old fields, hallowed forever by tender associations, and he found an Italian family with eight children dwelling under the old roof.

Diligent inquiry revealed the fact that only a few who were there when he was a boy were living in the community. With these he talked over again the years that had passed.

It was Friday when he arrived in the village, and the next day after roaming over the pastures and hillsides which he had not seen for forty years, he called upon the pastor, a young man who had just entered the ministry. At the parsonage he found an aged woman who had been his teacher when he was a little fellow in the Sunday school. She had come in from a farm several miles away to pass the week end with the new minister and his young wife. Late into the evening they talked and lived over again the years of long ago. The Sunday that followed will never be forgotten by the little congregation on the hillside. About sixty persons were present and the visitor preached the sermon.

Among many other things he said: "The mountains round us look smaller, and the river seems narrower than when I was a boy, but the mountain peaks of scripture truth seem higher and the river of life broader than in the early days. Here I was led to Christ. At this altar I came forward and surrendered my life to God. While sitting in one of these pews I heard his call to preach the gospel. Very often when I have been pursuing my ministry in distant parts of the world, I have thought of you all, and at such times a great peace and fresh power came into my life. It has seemed all these years as if in some spiritual way I have been blessed by the ministry of this church, and that in a manner which you did not know, you were supplying me with strength."

As he said this the white-haired friend with whom he had passed the previous evening at the pastor's home, dropped her head on the pew in front and wept. When she raised it her face shone with a new light as she drank in the message of the preacher. She felt she had not lived in vain, although she had been hidden away in the hills, toiling at tasks far different from those which she had earlier selected. Indeed, she had been keeping the divine appointment during all these years though saddened by a disappointment that had left her alone and heavy-hearted.

For over forty years she had prayed for this man and had followed his ministry in special intercession at the throne of God. His life had been very fruitful, but little did he know how large a share she had in it all. When she bade him goodbye she told him about it, and he went away from the scenes of his boyhood confident that among the greatest of the unrecognized gifts that God had bestowed upon his life were the unselfish prayers of this lonely saint, hidden among the mountains.

The mission of the church is to produce leaders, and one leader trained in a little rural community, in the wide world may chase a thousand, and two such leaders may put ten thousand to flight. The little boy in the Sunday school of the church where the sky line runs high may some day be an eminent leader in the Kingdom of God and stand in the front of the battle for righteousness.

What happened in this boy's early life has been repeated a thousand times in our country. He was a barefoot lad and climbed the hills until at length he met Christ and his feet became shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace. Later he went away to an academy and never returned because his family moved from the community during his period of study.

When he entered the ministry he was called to a work far from his birthplace, and for four decades he toiled right manfully. Again and again the breadth of his wisdom widened, and he became a spiritual leader. Indeed, for many years he had a large share in training young men for Christian service. Heavy burdens were borne, and he continually did his work with increasing ease and joy.

Meanwhile the little church far among the hills ministered to groups of young people who almost always went away into the wider world. This rural church has, to a great extent, trained leaders for city congregations, and has given a large proportion of her sons and daughters to guide the spiritual and educational forces of the world.

The privilege of every such church is twofold. Not only may it introduce the boys and girls in the congregation to Christ, and train them for noble service, but if the church does the best work for them, it will always remember that its most important ministry is one of intercession for these young people after the providence of God has thrust them into the larger world. The ministry of intercession of the rural church for those who were born under its roof and are battling for righteousness beyond its vision is a ministry which the quiet of the hills, the strength of the surrounding mountains, the delicacy of the drifting clouds, the blue of the heavens and all the voices of nature together encourage it to perform.

---

Rev. Charles S. Keen, who died recently in China from typhoid fever, had been for ten years principal of the language school of the University of Nanking, where missionaries of many denominations study the Chinese language.

Before returning to America, Al Jolson, well-known comedian, is reported to have said, "I'll joke about anything but prohibition in the future. Prohibition is the best thing that has ever happened to America."

A Living Wage for Christians

The average wage of a Christian is exactly one-fortieth of a soul a year.

By Bernard C. Clausen

THE greatest game in the world is business. And the richest thrill which life holds must come to the man who plays a fine, rule-abiding, sportsmanlike game and wins. It is a thrill which no mere preacher can ever share. Two years in big business taught me that before I began to preach.

To be able to keep costs down, prices low, dividends attractive and quality excellent, is no mean achievement in these madly competitive days. To search the world for raw material and buy it skilfully at decent advantage; to complete a product which can compete with others in the same class on the basis of price demand; to balance the factors of production so that with price still competingly low you are enabled to attract capital for supporting your enterprise by the profit you pay; and at the end to be able to sink back with the assurance that you have not cheated in quality, that your labels have not lied, that no shoddy goods nor poor workmanship will be revealed in the tests of use—this game brings its own reward in joy. At least, it did in days gone by.

Is the Zest Gone?

The most amazing thing to me about modern industry is the apparent loss of the game's thrill. I think it has come about because competition has fixed the lines of its four fundamental demands, and has erased that sense of creative energy in the organization of production. Men have no choice now. They must keep costs low, prices right, dividends attractive and quality high, or they will be throttled by economic pressure. The rules of the game have become prison laws, and men are locked up in cells of competitive necessity. It is no wonder that the zest has gone from the sport of business.

There is one field however where the competition which is the life of trade may yet have its place. It is the field of wages. These industrial generals who simply must keep prices low and costs moderate and dividends steady and quality high, are allowed free scope in one sphere of the problem. They may have the supreme sport of doing all the necessary things, and at the same time paying good wages. And the old thrill will come back if they are vying with one another in the quality of life they produce for their workers.

A New Industrial Idea

This is a new concept—the living wage. It is to our shame that the concept is new. We have allowed economic law to force industry into obedient respect for costs and prices and dividends and quality, while the greater spiritual law of decent life has been silent by default. It is for the church to insist that no industry be allowed to survive in self-respect while it erects its structure of success upon the broken bodies and shattered lives of its employes. It is for the church to point to this new sport for ambitious millionaires—the sport of adding to all their other products the product of happy life for the workers.

I have recently read a paper-covered book issued by the Ford Motor Company, celebrating Ford's pride in his achievements. Of the sixty-four pages, twenty-eight are given over to his pride in his car and his factories. Intricate descriptions of processes and results fill the pages. But the remaining thirty-eight pages out of sixty-four treat of his pride in his men. The words describe his joy in the wages he is able to pay, his insistence that once a man enters his shops he be given a chance to make good in every department of the works until he finds some place where he fits, and that no employe be discharged until he has failed to fit anywhere. The story of his school for foreign workers, the description of his attempts to fit crippled veterans somewhere into his industrial process—these things reveal a man who has found intense satisfaction in this new sport. He is aglow with the joy of making men. Ford men seem more important to him than Ford cars. Does that surprise you? Your very surprise is a commentary on ordinary industrial callousness. Who first taught mankind the monstrous lie that human life could be outweighed by any product?

Earthly Immortality

By Charles C. Earle

WORK hard today, and pray,
Be resolute and say,
"I will not fail in work of mine
Though I must strive till bright stars shine
And midnight falls."

Tomorrow when the sun
Shines on thy duty done,
Thou wilt rejoice, and gladly sing,
To thee sweet peace thy task will bring
And rest complete.

Thy finished work abides
Thy toil doth crystalize
The thoughts of brain
And acts of will,
Thy very life continuing still Beyond life's span.

What About the Church?

The church must assume responsibility for insisting that the living wage is a proper and necessary industrial concept. It has been exaggerated and caricatured almost beyond recognition. But the idea is fundamentally correct. Below a certain level of economic compensation, life is an intolerable, beastly drudgery. No industry has a right to crush life into that drudgery. If an industry menaces the level of costs, price, dividends or quality, it is automatically ruined by the operation of economic law. It cannot maintain its market. If industry for the sake of costs, prices, dividends or quality, menaces the level of human living, the church must lift its voice in rebuke. Such an industry cannot maintain its self-respect.

More important than that, if the industry refuses to hear the voice of the church, then Christian sentiment, after fair warning, has a right to call a strike that will insure just action.

I am about to call a strike today—a strike for higher wages on behalf of the lowest paid workers in the world. I shall demand decent compensation for a down-trodden class.

A Strike for Ministers?

You may surmise that I refer to the ministers. I might make out a fair case for them. For it is a mere matter of statistics to establish the shameful facts. In the recent railroad strike, four classifications of employes went out, demanding higher rates of pay. Three of these classifications were at that time receiving higher annual wages than the average annual salary of the ministers in the highest paid denomination in America. I am not insisting that railroad men should not strike. I am insisting that ministers have a fair case themselves.

But there is a class of workers which interests me far more than the ministers—a class now attempting to survive on pitiful starvation wages. Something must be done for them. I call a strike involving all CHRISTIANS!

Starvation Wages

What are the wages of a Christian? The answer may be put in one word—souls. Do you remember the old days when the coming of a new pastor was regularly preceded by a prayer from a deacon, "Lord, give him souls for his hire." That prayer reached deep into the reality of Christian compensation. Do you recall that prophetic allusion to the Christ, "He shall see of the travail of his soul and be satisfied." It was another picture of the same truth. Jesus was to look back upon the issues of his life, and be content with the wages for his efforts. And these wages were to be paid in the currency of souls redeemed.

What, then, is a reasonable minimum wage in souls? Let us be very modest. Think how long a year is. Think how many people throng around us, who know not the Christ. Surely a decent wage cannot be less than one soul a year won to Jesus.

Now consider this fact. What is the actual average wage of a Christian? Exactly one-fortieth of a soul each year. Statistics point the way to accurate computation. This is the mathematical fact. The average Christian receives just one-fortieth of a minimum expectation needed to support decent life. He must live forty years before he wins one soul to Christ. And this without allowing for the stupendous contribution to the general average recorded by those magnificent evangelists and fishers of men who number their returns by thousands each year.

Is it any wonder that life withers and dies? Are we surprised that Christian societies and churches and individuals are spiritually starving? They simply cannot exist on such ridiculously low pay.

Why Faith Is Jaded

I am not now considering the problem of evangelism in the midst of the great need of the world. I am not now discussing how much sinners need a savior, nor how much the church needs new supplies of personnel and power.

I am thinking about how much Christians need the wages of evangelism; how we are deprived of our just returns in souls for our hire; how we starve in the famine of spiritual drought. We have forgotten how it feels to be re-created by the experience of soul-winning.

There was a day when Jesus, worn by a long journey through the hot sun, sat on the wall of a well outside a Samaritan city. His shoulders were drooping with fatigue, his hands hung limp, there was no sparkle in his eyes, his voice was hoarse and tired, as he sent his disciples into the village to buy food.

When they came back with their purchases they were amazed at the change in him. He was a new man. He sat erect and ready, his shoulders straight, his eyes flashing, his voice vibrant and eager.

Jesus, Master, tell us, what has given you this new strength? What has re-created you?

He has talked with a sin-stained woman, and has claimed her life in fealty to the things of God. Only this. But it has transformed him.

Re-Creation

I have seen Billy Sunday stagger from the conclusion of a sermon, utterly exhausted. No shred of energy left. Then the old trombone began to play, and the invitation hymn floated out like a cloud of sweet incense, and people began to come down the saw-dust trail. A flood of power swept into that limp body, his eyes brightened. Billy leaped to his feet and grasped outstretched hands with a fervor of joy.

O you jaded faith! O you whose lives have withered into dry hopelessness! O you to whom Christ's figure seems a misty thing of distance and doubt! Try this experiment. Find some one who knows less about Jesus than you do. Begin quite simply and frankly to speak a word of testimony for him. Waves of joy and strength will engulf your soul. You will begin to collect your just wages.

A strike then! Up with the red flag of rebellion! Down with this cowardly laziness which robs us of our just deserts! Away with this devil's device called modesty which makes us dumb before our brother's need. Let us free ourselves forever from these sneering cheats who starve our lives. We shall gain our rights! A living wage for Christians!

Aerated Religion

"There are degrees of natural influence, from the quarantine powers of nature, up to her dearest and gravest ministrations to the imagination and the soul."—Emerson

By Lester George Simon

WANDERING is good for the preacher when it is done in the open air and not in the unfenced fields of thought while delivering a sermon.

Herein are contained the reactions of one who consents to the urge of the "wandering foot" and takes extensive hikes along back roads and mountain trails. So keen is his delight in such uncharted freedom, and so powerfully does adventure work upon his fancy that he finds thought and feeling occasionally tending toward sublimation. With an adieu to routine and the familiar, he dons knapsack and ultra-slow boots—not the seven-leagued kind—and goes forth as conscientiously as Abram who heard the voice of Jehovah calling him out from kin and country to a land whither he would show him. Abram received the blessing: so does this pilgrim.

To pretend that leisurely vagabonding in the open country will in every case give spaciousness and tolerance to thought, sanity to religion, quickening to the imagination, and optimism to vision, is undoubtedly to claim too much. But perhaps a modicum of the claim will stand, and it is sure to be an increasing modicum as we come to a fuller knowledge of the therapeutic value of open-air treatment for both body and soul.

One must go forth with faith and feeling, for these are means of seeing. Life holds much for him who has capacity to give response to things. One sits at home reading with rapt attention the entrancing description of a bit of mountainous country. It is covered with romance and beauty. He longs to go: he does go. Arrived there, he sits before the landscape, a disappointed pilgrim. The dullness from which he fled is with him here. The panorama is just so much rock, earth, forest, and sky. The glory visible to the author fails his eyes. Why is this? It must be remembered that the author carries something within that becomes a part of everything he beholds, and if we lack his appreciation, his lighted mind, his enthusiasms, we shall see only the commonplace. The panorama furnishes much, but the romance and feeling that clothe it are his who has seeing eyes.

Nature is not God's "second best," after the collapse of an original paradise. It does not bear the curse, nor is it the unbaptized pagan thing some would have us believe. Rather, it is holy in view of its origin and ministry. They say it has miserably failed in its service to unenlightened portions of the race. But so-called heathenism is not the black thing once pictured. A fairer scrutiny and judgment will show a commendable education rendered humanity by nature. Her laws are reliable and serviceable. She gives an unfailing foundation for life, honest teachers, unforgettable lessons, useful secrets. She has so disciplined man in the school of mystery and struggle as to sharpen hope and response to the highest. She has nourished a natural soundness in life that lies as an adjacent substratum to the higher soundness. "First that which is natural, than that which is spiritual." Conceived as subservient to the higher order, she appears but another transfiguration robe adorning the God of wisdom, power, and love.

Nature's appeal is spiritual. The recurring miracle of springtime is a divine call to the deepest within one. It is an affair lifted out of the physical and is surcharged with spirituality. It takes hold on the feelings and evokes a response of soul—"deep calleth unto deep." These things without, as well as the moral law within, inspire reverence.

Religion needs nature's best ministries. The rock book and the other inerrant records of nature will furnish a commentary both critical and expository on the divine being and activity. Blot from the psalms the great open spaces and you will rob David of that spaciousness of thought so vividly felt in "Who hast set thy glory above the heavens. . . . When I consider thy heavens, the works of thy fingers, the moon and the stars which thou hast ordained." The open country does push back the horizons. It is conducive to high thinking. It awakens the incipient poet and philosopher in susceptible souls. It dredges the mind's channels and makes them navigable for big thoughts. Prof. Charles Foster Kent in a recent article stresses the sacrament of nature thus: "Most of the world's prophets have been men of the out-of-doors. They have lived so close to God that they needed no ritual or symbolism. Today the majority of men live in great congested centers, out of touch with nature. There is need, therefore, that the church supply that lack even though it be through imperfect symbolism. With true insight the medieval church met this need. It built the naves of its great cathedrals so that they represented the branching trees. As the light of the sun came through the richly colored windows, it suggested the green of springtime, the gorgeous tints of autumn, and the resplendent glory of the sunset. The rich tones of the great organ recalled the still richer melodies of

Town Waif

THEY talked of flowers, at school—of birds that sing,
Of grass, so soft and comforting and green,
Of running brooks that babble over stones,
And fish that leap. I wonder how they look—
Themselves, not pictures living in a book!

I'd love to press bare feet into the grass.
At night, they say, it's cool, and wet with dew!
I've heard that winds blow freshly on your face,
All full of flowry, piny smells . . . and dreams.
And oh—I'd love—I'd love to see a cow!
And baby chicks, alive—and hills, with sheep!
And butterflies, with splendid shining wings!

I dream sometimes that I have really gone
Far out into the country . . . Seems to me
If God was real he'd make my dream come true. . . .
I waken all a-shiver with delight,
And quick, oh, quick—I close my eyes again
And try to go on dreaming! Once I did—
Two cool, sweet country dreams—in one hot night—
One hot and dreadful . . . dreadful city night!

—Barbara Young,
in New York Times.

nature. Here the dwellers in hovels and palaces forgot their unnatural and distracting daily life and felt themselves in the presence of God." True! And since nature may so powerfully assist worship, let us not depend too unduly on the substitutes. Throughout all the changes of the centuries nature has remained available and continues to offer herself on terms equally free to all.

A good ramble will aerate a man's religion. An excursion among the silent forces and symbols of the Divine Worker will inspire wholesome religious conceptions and feelings. Suffocation, whether physical or spiritual, is relieved by "more air." Making all allowance for fancy, I have an idea that exposure of the soul to the great solemnizing objective mysteries of God will tend to make us immune to sectarian thought. Lamb once said, "I am an Englishman, Londoner, Templar. God help me when I come to put off these snug relations, and get abroad into the world to come." It may be that getting abroad into the larger world that now is, into the great open temple of God, will tend to discourage cramped processes of thought and strip us of snug relations. We shall come to feel our common humanity and shall cease that fractional thinking wherein we deal with men only in terms and labels. When applied to a man no label covers the entire case. Fairly exposed to the expansive influence of far vistas, divine dimensions, elemental might and mystery, we shall pass over the unworthy divisive thoughts and terms. Thought finds it difficult to follow again the old narrow courses.

Happily there is an increasing group of those who show an esthetic interest in nature. With larger capacity to feel the holiness of beauty we shall be richer in heart and mind. The shame which the adult has been inclined to feel in the indulgence of the esthetic faculty is passing. Mr. A. Clutton-Brock does well to insist on the exercise of this faculty in his "The Ultimate Belief," where he reminds us that when Jesus bade the people "consider the lilies of the field," he assumed they could appreciate an absolute beauty which makes the garish glory of Solomon's royal raiment pale into insignificance. We do well to remember that it was Jesus who put lilies and birds and fields into the New Testament.

I think it inheres in a wholesome soul sometimes to delight passionately in the mere joy of living. God pity the man bereft of such moments!

"How good is man's life, the mere living! how fit to employ
All the heart and the soul and the senses forever in joy."

Dear old Theocritus will gladly stand with Browning on that creed. I have sometimes envied that delightful pagan his simple joy and abandon. Free from all melancholy, in him the warmth of the Sicilian midday sun, the peacefulness of sunny Sicilian fields, and the freedom of the Sicilian hills have conspired to produce an unalloyed joie de vivre which pours itself into simple and beautiful pastorals loved after two thousand years. Had he known Jesus, who loved the sanctuary of nature, he might have said "Verily, thou persuadest me to be a Christian."

The man of large out-of-doors appreciations, large stores of earth lore and healthful interests, is rich indeed. He is not dependent on others for amusement. Drop him off at any crossroads and he will find ample and entertaining employment for resourceful, curious and instructed faculties. A fossil is a teeming history to him. A new form of life, with its curious habits, will fill his inquiring mind and imagination to bursting. After announcing to a friend a proposed trip to Gaspe, he remarked "Well, and what is there to see and do after you get there?" He would think the trip worth while if there were one of the seven wonders of the world, or an exposition, or the newly discovered treasures of a Tutankhamen at the end of the journey. But, do the flora, fauna, local legends, history, customs and industries of a land apart from the traveled highways count for nothing? In any corner of the world there are more than seventy times seven wonders. Life has become lamentably warped through a failure to see it whole.

There is a happiness in "going on," especially in care-free gipsying, with no set course and beckoning goal to arouse the demons of haste and anxiety. "To travel contentedly is better than to arrive." I recently heard a missionary with two score years of service to his credit say that if he could have a thousand lifetimes on the earth, he would gladly devote them all to missionary work and thus postpone, by God's grace, going to heaven.

And there is no real discomfort to the contented adventurer. The effort and inconvenience incidental to progression are mere play. The true pedestrian walks from sheer delight. Break his contact with mother earth and he is as helpless as Antaeus in the same plight. Furthermore, this world of wonders has time to enter his senses on intimate and revealing terms, and is henceforth a part of him. His course across the earth and years is not run in unholy hurry.

Thus I find passage to the Fortunate Isles. Thus I find a philosophy that accepts the universe. Thus I find simple and durable pleasures, and emancipate myself from dependence on sterile ready-made amusements and the ecstacies of restless emotions. Thus I find much that is companionable and helpful. How? I search out a congenial friend and we take a leisurely walk over the mountains. Then, airwashed and purged of the ill humors of the driven life, you may write me down as a man whose sufficient delight and wealth is in loving God, his creatures and his creation.

The Religion of the Small Town

"God and man working together are making and remaking the small town"

BY PAYSON L. CURTISS

THERE is a popular saying that "God made the open country, man made the city and the devil made the small town." One evening in the city I was watching a basket-ball game where there was too much wrangling. The referee stopped the game and said in anger, "You fellows cut out this small-town stuff." "Small-town stuff?"—was he fair to the small town? "Main Street" is a book describing some very small people living on the main street of a small western town. Is the book true to life? Religion in small towns is often pictured to be narrow, anemic, provincial and full of petty dissensions. How about it?

My first comment is that small towns are as different as people are different. Some towns resemble "Main Street" about as much as William Taft resembles Tom Thumb. There are scores of villages in America where culture and refinement and education are almost at their best; where the men and women take the best magazines and read the best books; where there is cultivated a love of the best music and the young people are earnest and ambitious. The presence of a small college or group of strong churches or some splendid schools or a few strong leading families has lifted the level far above the city average. There is a quality of life in some of our great Americans—Longfellow, Whittier, Hawthorne, Margaret Sangster and their present-day successors—that points not to the confusion of the city but to the restful culture and literary riches of village life.

I am writing from a small town in northern Ohio. Four miles away is Hiram College and the people in both towns and in the country about here are mostly native Americans and almost entirely Protestant. They are intelligent people, sons and daughters of pioneers who came from New England to settle the Western Reserve. Their churches have had an honorable history and have been ministered to by able men who have gone to or come from the large city churches. I do not say that these towns are typical of the American small town—no one type of small town is typical. But I am convinced from a fairly wide observation that they represent a far from insignificant proportion of the small towns from the Dakotas to Maine.

In these small towns religion has a fair chance to be much above the average. For one thing the distractions are a little less distracting and the noise not quite so noisy as in the city. Neighborliness and friendship and helpful worthwhile conversation have here their best chance. Strong men and capable women learn here to know each other better. Sharing their best in conversation these men and women of refinement give sanity and stability to the religious life. There is very little gossip or small talk at least among the well-to-do church people. For seventy-five or a hundred years one or two or three churches of high grade have been building their ideals into the common life of the community. School men and women of ability and devotion have been leaving their influence. The result is that the church life is wholesome and an inspiration to the whole town.

Religious fads do not thrive in such towns. Freakish phases of religion have a far better chance in Boston or Chicago or Hollywood. The best methods of religious education have been adopted in the Bible schools and when week-day religious instruction was introduced into four grades of the public schools last year the voluntary response was almost 100 per cent. The saloons were banished years ago and last fall the drys were three to one ahead of the wets. When Frank Crane credited the eighteenth amendment to the little church on Main Street he must have headed the list with the church leaders in these prosperous, forward-looking small towns.

There is good reading in two books recently published by the Federal Council Committee on Social and Religious surveys. "Churches of Distinction in Town and Country" gives the life stories of fourteen especially successful churches in small towns and the open country. "Tested Methods in Town and Country Churches" tells more briefly the story of forty successful churches. Here are small towns with big ideas and ideals. Here we have moderate-sized churches with splendid visions and large programs. Out in a little Ozark plateau village is a Methodist Episcopal church which has recently lifted the town into a new class. Before the new day church life in this town was at low ebb; the church buildings stood neglected and in poor repair; denominational feeling ran high and church attendance low. Then there came an optimistic, friendly, forward-looking young minister who was sent here to build up a "demonstration parish." A peaceful revolution followed which changed radically the program of the church and the spirit of the town. This "small town stuff" began to give place to broader ideas and a healthier outlook.

Up in the Boise Valley in Idaho is another church which caught the vision of doing big things in a small town and imparted that vision to the town. In the early days when pioneer miners and land owners were building the town there was no adequate church leadership. Church people followed the old grooves of denominational thought and preference with the result that a few little groups were pulling in as many different ways while most of the people were on the side lines watching the show. Here was the setting for plenty of "small town stuff." A few men, and especially women, including some valuable new comers got together on a new program. A future lieutenant governor in leaving his former Illinois home resolved that the new church in the new town should have his first consideration. "Before we go out to Idaho to develop that country, I want a distinct understanding that we join the church and boost that too. I do not want to raise my family without a good church. We all want to get in and help." A group of newcomers fell in line and theirs became the "church of the open door" in a small town. Its ministry became a permeating and determining influence for culture and broad ideas as well as vital religion. The community moved up into another class. And there are other communities changing class or remaining for generations in the upper grades because of the churches in their midst.

The church is a big factor in determining the character of the small town. Wherever there are prosperous churches, and not too many, teaching vital religion in modern terms you may look for a sample of American civilization at its best. Economically, socially, morally, spiritually the signs in these favored towns are encouraging and looking upward. President Roosevelt in his instructions to the Country Life Commission set up in 1909 said "The country church of the future is to be held responsible for the great ideals of community life as well as of personal character." And Governor Gifford Pinchot of Pennsylvania, a member of that commission, believes that the forty successful small town churches referred to above are accepting this responsibility successfully and pointing out the solution to one of America's important problems. There is need of a new appraisement of the church in the small town and a new rating of its ministry. When that is done the time may come when the saying at the beginning of this article may be changed to read "God made the open country, man made the city, and God and man working together are making and remaking the small town."

"An Address to the Rulers of the World"

Unanimously issued July 7, 1923, by the Consultation Christian Citizenship Conference held under the auspices of the National Reform Association at Winona Lake, Ind., July 1-8.

"HUMANITY is staggered by the possibilities of another world war. Homes in every land, over which the shadow of sacrificial death still hovers, are saddened by the prospect of still further heart-break and suffering. The people in these lands have already given millions of their sons in the belief that their supreme sacrifice would make the world safe for democracy, create a high idealism which would make the world a fairer place in which to live and end war for all time.

"None of these hopes have been realized. Men hate each other as intensely as ever. Chaos reigns in every human relationship. Economic and political conditions have sunk to low levels. Nations have been guilty of promoting selfish and ignoble loyalties.

THIS message was cabled on the day of its adoption to the rulers of what the National Reform Association deemed the leading nations of the world. Following this it was to be put in printed form and sent to each of the eighty-three ruling heads of the world, all the members of the cabinet of the President of the United States, the entire membership of the United States Congress and to the governors of the States of the Union.

"Efforts have been made to avert the disaster which is inevitable if present tendencies continue. Every such method for adjusting these difficulties has failed.

"The time has come to try Christianity. It has never failed in any field when given a fair chance. And civilization is entitled to every opportunity to free itself from its present predicament. There is an inescapable obligation on the part of every nation to make its contribution to consummate this desired end, even at great sacrifice to itself.

"The nations of the world must depart from selfish individualism and inhuman isolation. They should unite in creating new standards which are based upon the teachings of Jesus. He must be acknowledged as the Supreme Arbiter in every national and international difficulty. Loyalty to him should be the chief desire of the nations.

"It should be recognized that nations are accountable to the same Christian principles as those which pertain to all Christian men and women as individuals. There is no double standard of morality and ethics—one for men and another for nations. There is only one morality, one honor, one righteousness. We believe that the state belongs to God, and that he is the ultimate source of all civil and political authority.

"We believe that the divine right of sovereignty and civil authority is vested in the nation, and that the nation is an intelligent moral entity which God holds responsible for the use of the sovereignty and authority which he has vested in it.

"We believe that God's judgments can be averted only by national repentance for sin and by national obedience to the laws of love and brotherhood and fair play, as taught by Jesus, and that such obedience will bring peace to the world, and a restoration of prosperity and happiness to all the peoples.

"We further believe that civil rulers are his ministers as certainly as are the rulers of the church, and that these rulers are directly and immediately responsible to him for their official conduct.

"It is because nations and rulers have held themselves above all moral law, becoming a law unto themselves, as far as their civil lives are concerned, that present day world conditions have become so chaotic.

"We, therefore, an assembly of 2,000 Christian men and women, constituting the Christian Citizenship Conference, coming from many parts of the United States and representing many different nationalities and practically every Protestant ecclesiastical organization in this country, as well as officially representing the governors of twelve sovereign states, who have been in session at Winona Lake, Indiana, U. S. A., for the period of a week to discuss these problems, unite in asking the rulers of these United States and of the world to join in setting up the kingdom of God on earth, acknowledging Jesus Christ Lord of lords and King of kings, so that justice and happiness and brotherhood and peace may prevail throughout the whole earth."

---

The number of cases of alcoholic insanity has more than doubled in Germany since the war. Probably some of the increase is due to after effects of the war. According to a German paper, the alcoholic insane in Berlin in 1921 were nearly double the number in 1917, while in Baden and Munich the number was trebled.

An Open Letter to an Unknown Millionaire

Written to the "Advertising Fortnightly" and republished here by special permission

By Ray Giles

AS THE letter is an open one and will be read by many besides yourself, certain statements must be made to avoid misunderstanding.

The letter is not written from any denominational standpoint, nor in the least spirit of criticism of any denomination, church or other effort to promote Bible study. The writer acknowledges that his acquaintance with the Bible is far from complete. The thinking which prompted this letter includes such points as these:

1. We live in an age when the "practical" is glorified. The Bible has been criticised as "theoretical" largely because its practical nature of idealism is overlooked. Bible advertising as suggested here aims to present with particular emphasis the more transparently practical teachings of the Bible.

2. The multiplicity of denominations arises from differing interpretations of Bible passages. In your Bible advertising we would aim to present ideas or texts which are so plainly put as to make various interpretations difficult or impossible. A fresh and thoughtful reader of the Bible often feels that he will get further by living up to the simpler teachings than by bewildering himself with attempts to interpret the more difficult points or accept certain statements which lie outside the range of his present understanding. So we want to present the most easily understood texts which invite the reader to act. The mission of Jesus seems to have been to lend impulsion to doing rather than speculating, dreaming, or mere familiarity with texts. "But be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiving your own selves."

3. It is possible to advertise churches so thoroughly that the unthinking feel that it is more important to go to church on Sunday than to try to live up to the Bible on every day.

4. The broad and spiritual success of the church depends upon the public acceptation and appreciation of the Bible. In a certain sense, then, Bible advertising is more important than church advertising. The church without the Bible would be a failure, while the Bible without a church would still remain the outstanding instrument by which man attempts to understand the Infinite.

5. The questions arise: Has the Bible been advertised adequately to the present generation? and: Can it be too heavily advertised at any time?

6. Finally, it is said that there is at present a most unusual interest in practical religion. Religious and semi-religious books enjoy unusually large sales. Now is a particularly fine time to advertise the Bible.

* * *

I said "advertise the Bible." I mean, rather, to help the Bible advertise itself. We might speak of the campaign as one of sampling. Let us give the public texts without personal interpretation. That is exactly what seems to be missing in the program for the spread of Christianity.

While many are gilding the lily, let us simply set the lily where it may be seen by the millions and carry its own message.

According to one writer, Gladstone had lettered across the foot of his bed, "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace, whose mind is stayed on thee." On awakening in the morning these words greeted him each day. The constant repetition and companionship of this single Bible text from Isaiah is said to have accounted largely for the poise, serenity and confidence which were exhibited in the life of that great statesman.

In his autobiography, Franklin writes: "My original habits of frugality continuing, and my father having, among his instructions when a boy, frequently repeated a proverb of Solomon, 'Seest thou a man diligent in his calling? he shall stand before kings; he shall not stand before mean men,' I from thence considered industry as a means of obtaining wealth and distinction, which encouraged me, tho' I did not think that I should ever literally stand before kings, which, however, has since happened; for I have stood before five, and even had the honor of sitting down with one, the King of Denmark."

Theodore Roosevelt's constant use of Bible quotations shows plainly his thorough familiarity with the Book and his acceptance of it as a practical handbook in meeting the problems of every-day existence.

We were told during the war that Woodrow Wilson read the Bible daily. Foch was daily on his knees. After the turning of a particularly dark hour into victory Kitchener said, "Somebody has been praying."

Churches today are turning to advertising as never before. But churches must necessarily advertise as individual organizations. Church advertising tends to deal with announcements of individual services, which, after all, are but passing details in the program of Christianity. Back of the churches is the Bible. That which increases interest in and acceptance of the Bible will increase interest in and acceptance of the churches.

This letter will be about advertising the Bible.

* * *

Ask a hundred men and women on the street "Who is God? What is God? Where is God? How will I know God?" and you will probably get 100 different answers. And yet most of these hundred have at some time given extended and sincere thought to the question.

Why not present the definitions of God that we have and let them make their own appeal?

For one of the series of advertisements, I would suggest a billboard on which we present the following Bible texts:

"God is a spirit." John 4:24.

"God is light, and in him is no darkness at all." I John 1:5.

"God is love." I John 4:16.

"He that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God, and God in him." I John 4:16.

It is fully understood that the quotations given here are only a few of many which would be appropriate. All we say for the advertisement as it stands is that it presents a fair idea of the Infinite and a test by which a man may know whether his life is in some measure an exhibition of his unity with God.

* * *

Has Christianity a program? What is it? Is the program inviting? We will never know how many millions have wondered about that. Yes; Christianity's program was announced very clearly by its Founder. It is expressed in a modern translation which we suggest for use in large newspaper space:

The Program of Christianity

To Preach Good Tidings Unto the Meek:
To Bind Up the Broken-Hearted:
To Proclaim Liberty to the Captives and the Opening of the Prison to them that are Bound:
To Proclaim the Acceptable Year of the Lord, and the Day of Vengeance of our God:
To Comfort all that Mourn:
To Appoint unto them that Mourn in Zion.
To Give unto them—
Beauty for Ashes,
The Oil of Joy for Mourning,
The Garment of Praise for the Spirit of Heaviness.

This advertisement has been suggested by one of Henry Drummond's essays.

* * *

How do we know a Christian? How does one become a Christian? By reading a Bible? By going to church? By praying?

There is at least a thought and a challenge in this message which you might put into print:

"Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works and glorify your Father who is in heaven." Matt. 5:16.

"If we love one another, God dwelleth in us." I John 4:12.

"Let us not love in word, neither in tongue; but in deed and in truth." I John 3:18.

Yes, these sentences are being read in the churches. But the churches are not open every hour of the day, nor every day of the week. And the churches are not reaching all of the people that we can reach through outdoor and periodical advertising.

* * *

Again, there is a force to the printed word that does not always exist in the spoken word. And there is a force in sheer size of type. For example, take this statement of John's:

"If a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar: for he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen?"

We get one impression when this is printed in the small type. Now compare it with:

"If a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar: for

(Continued on page 988)

Religious Education

A Little Different—A Little Better

An artist friend told us once the principle upon which she worked. "I try," she said, "to make every picture a little better than the last." Her work showed it. She never allowed herself to be completely satisfied. She was always trying something a little different. Sometimes it turned out well, sometimes it didn't. But always she was learning something new. If she had lived, she would never have grown old. The spirit of youth was in her blood. She could not get into a rut. Simply because she was determined to have each picture a little different and a little better, she was bound to grow. The one fitting epitaph for her tombstone is that of the Alpine guide: "Died climbing."

How much it would mean for our church work if we took as our motto, "Everything a little different and a little better!" Suppose the teacher should say, "Every lesson a little different and a little better," what an amazing growth would result! It would mean more study, more careful preparation. It would mean a constant search for better ways of doing things. It would take the teacher to institutes and conferences and conventions and teacher-training classes. But how that teacher would grow! And how that class would grow in interest, enthusiasm, knowledge, spiritual life, numbers.

"But," you say, "would you have me constantly straining after novelties? Wouldn't that defeat its own purpose?" It would. Nothing will so quickly bring trouble as straining after novelties. That is not at all what we are urging. Read the motto carefully: "Every lesson a little different and a little better." Set up that goal and you have success ahead of you.

Suppose the class president should say, "Every class-meeting a little different and a little better," and then set to work to make his motto come true! It would mean the careful planning of each meeting. It would lead to frequent conferences upon better ways of doing things. It would lead him out to the rallies and assemblies where these things were discussed. Yes, all that would mean work, but it would also mean success. Do you crave success? Here is the pathway to it.

Suppose, again, the leaders of the young people's society should say, "Every meeting a little different and a little better!" Of course to adopt a motto is of no particular value unless you intend to follow it up. But granting that you really mean to make this your motto and to carry it out into practice, what a change it would make! In the first place, you have a new set of talking points. As you plan this new feature and that new feature, you have something worth while to invite folks to attend. Instead of berating people because they do not come, and instead of filling your meeting with groans because of the lack of interest, you would have to bring in extra chairs. Try it and see.

Your difficulty will come when you reach the place where you think further effort is unnecessary. The crowds are coming, everything is going finely, and you say, "Let us take a rest." When you say that, you deny your motto and you invite failure. And you can be sure failure will come.

This motto of ours, "Every meeting a little different and a little better," would revolutionize committee work. It would transform some committees just to have an order of business prepared in advance, and adhered to. Most committees would be shocked if they began on time and continued for a certain definite, limited time. There have been committees that have devoted about one-tenth of their time to their own business and nine-tenths to utterly irrelevant matters. Try the better way: "Every committee meeting a little different and a little better."

The Sunday-school superintendent greatly needs this motto, "Everything a little different and a little better." He needs it in his opening service. Without straining after sensation, he can make a number of slight changes to the great advantage of his service. There are still superintendents who do not pick out their hymns until it is time to begin. There are still superintendents who pray at their school instead of praying with their school.

The superintendent needs to get in touch with what is going on in the Sunday-school world. Some superintendents are like the tramp who wrote to a soap manufacturing company: "Gentlemen: Five years ago I used a cake of your soap. Since then I have used no other." So some superintendents read a book on Sunday-school work five years ago. Since then they have read no other. Five years ago they went to a Sunday-school convention; since then they have gone to no other. Five years ago they made an opening service for their school; since then they have made no other.

The superintendent can apply this motto to his workers' meeting: "Every meeting a little different and a little better." It is not enough for it to be different; it must also be better.

Everything can be done a little different and a little better by the same people who are now at work. The main thing is to realize that it can be done and that it ought to be done. The minute any person stops growing he begins to retrograde. And the one way for adults to grow is consciously to put oneself into the attitude of growth, to seek for better ways to do your work. You will find them. Your work will be better done. You will have more joy. And you will grow amazingly.—Intermediate Teacher.

International Sunday School Lesson for September 16

LUKE, THE BELOVED PHYSICIAN

Lesson: Luke 1:1-4; Acts 1:1-5, 16:9-18; Colossians 4:14; 2 Tim. 4:11

Golden Text: Proverbs 17:17

Introductory

Luke was a Gentile, a native of the town of Antioch. He was a physician, "the beloved physician" Paul calls him, which alone would imply that he was a man of education and culture and also of means as the medical profession was a profitable one. He was with Paul on his second missionary journey.

The Lesson

Luke's life of Christ, written chronologically and only according to that which was learned from "eye witnesses and ministers of the word," was recorded primarily for "the most excellent Theophilus," that he "might know the certainty concerning the things wherein "he was instructed." But, according to the Greek custom, this was probably the dedication of the book to a friend, and Luke had as well in mind all Christians when he wrote. Nearly ten consecutive chapters of the Gospel of Luke are not found in the other Gospels (9:51-19:28). In Luke alone is recorded much of the life and teachings of Jesus which the other Gospels have not. Following the Gospel bearing his name, Luke recorded the Acts, which continue to tell of the teachings and works of Jesus, and of those who worked to spread the good news. The history covers thirty years and Luke is never at fault in his records although it was a time of many political changes. Historically, Luke comes into prominence when he begins his association with Paul. He accompanied Paul to Philippi from Troas, by way of Samothrace and Philippi. He was with Paul at the prayer meeting beside the river where Lydia, seller of purple, was converted and baptized. And with Paul he abode in the house of Lydia. And at the last, when it was a likely to be a dangerous thing to show friendship for Paul, during his second imprisonment, Luke went to him and remained with him.

Leading Thoughts

1. There seem to have been no buried talents in the life of Luke. 2. Culture, wealth, talent, faithfulness, accuracy—all of these Luke gave in his service to Christ. 3. "The beloved physician" earned the greatest of epithets—friend.

Young People's Work

Topic for September 16

HOW APPLY RELIGION TO MANNERS?
Prov. 1:8; Luke 14:7-11

"And he spake a parable unto those that were bidden when he marked how they chose out the chief seats."

It was meal time and the Master went into one of the Pharisee's house "to eat bread." The parable which he spake on this occasion might well be called one of Jesus' table talks. In a most searching way he strikes at one of humanity's greatest sins, namely, the desire to get ahead of the other fellow, even at the cost of good manners.

It has been the privilege of the writer to belong to that well-known tribe of "Gad" for a number of years. Perhaps the most interesting thing connected with travel is the insight which comes to one as he watches how "other" people "act." Of course, it takes all sorts of people to make a world, else this would be a mighty monotonous place in which to live.

"Manners" simply means our way of doing things. Just who sets the pace, it would be difficult to determine. For example, just who started the Chinese to eating rice with chop sticks? And yet, I presume "good manners" would call for eating rice in this way. Like most preachers, I have found myself somewhat at sea as to just which fork to use; as to whether it were ever permissible to use a spoon instead of a fork. In short, I really sympathized with the unlearned man who said he had read about Burbank having grown peas which could be eaten with a knife because of a flat side.

Good manners cover more than mere action. One's attitudes and motives must be taken into account. You can get a Christian's measure pretty quickly by observing just how he treats the help around the house; how he talks to the Pullman porter, or how he deals with the waiter in the dining-car.

To answer the question: Religion can be applied to manners only when there is a recognition of the value of human personality. This involves an acceptance of the teachings and principles of Jesus—a gentleman and a gentlewoman under any and all circumstances.

Questions for Discussion

1. Do you make friends easily? 2. Do your friendships last? 3. Are your friendships limited to your own small group, or are you democratic? 4. Do you honestly prefer to be democratic or exclusive. 5. Is your natural reaction to those who wait upon you in the stores, on the cars, etc., one of equality or superiority? 6. Do you have any racial antipathies? 7. Do you belong to any social clubs? 8. Do you help in the social service work of your church or Sunday school? 9. Do you have a number of friends of the opposite sex, or have you narrowed down to one? 10. Do you have definite ideals about the one who will be your final choice? 11. Do you live up to these ideals yourself? 12. Do you do any individual social service work; how much?

These pages are for all Baptist young people's organizations. Send news items on activities, organizations, plans and methods of work for publication in THE BAPTIST to James Asa White, General Secretary 143 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago.

Convention Impressions

I am determined to try earnestly to make my Christ the attractive Christ of those who do not know him wherever I go.—G. Ford Porter.

"The attractive Christ" is more attractive to me and my desire is stronger that all may realize that he is the Saviour of the world.

This convention has meant more to me than any other factor which has entered my life in making "the attractive Christ" more attractive.—Nita Trethemey.

I have received a great spiritual inspiration during these meetings, and I am going back home to do a greater work for the Master. You will find me in Denver next year, God seeing fit.—Leto J. McDonald.

To me, this convention has meant a new awakening, the first realization of my own powers and responsibilities, a real vision, a reconsecration; and it has made me determine not to cease my labors until every young person has been told of "the attractive Christ"; I feel it my duty to see that our attendance next year shall be greater, especially from our Southland.—Rowena Fairrd.

As one of thirteen from St. Louis, we have been singing ever since we left St. Louis "St. Louis will shine tonight." We are going to make it shine from now on under the leadership of "the attractive Christ."—Mattie B. Gross.

After five days on the mountain top let us not go back to the valley but with Christ be lifted up.—Mary Frances Ruthven.

The convention has made me feel that I have truly been with God and his people and made me realize more than ever the attractiveness of Christ.—Lola M. Hornbacker.

This convention has been my first convention. My C. E. Society sent me here. I am going home to take a larger part in my society. Last year I was really afraid to get up and speak. Every time I was called on to pray I began to wish that I hadn't come, but now I feel as though I could not only pray but lead a whole meeting. Now I am going home and tell my superintendent that in the fall when the meetings start again that I want to take a bigger part. This is what the convention did for me.

A bigger and better light for Jesus.—Verne Deach.

I have come to believe during the days of this convention in the Christ whom I have always tried to serve.—Edith Benjamin.

This convention has been the means of drawing me closer to "the attractive Christ" and given me a greater desire to serve Him more fully.—Elsie E. Bromfield.

A great convention supplying new ideas and making one determined to do "something more for God" and our ever "attractive Christ."—J. W. McCrossen.

This convention has meant my making a great decision. That has been on my heart for some time and that is giving my self for Life work.—Ruth Scott.

I have been much impressed with the harmonious combination of enthusiasm and reverence and worship that has existed throughout the convention. It has made Christianity seem bigger than ever before to me.—Helen A. Moss.

To me this convention has meant a renewed consecration of my life to Christ, a deeper spiritual experience, and a determination to do all in my power for our local B. Y. P. U.—Mabel Bloomberg.

The immensity of our task. Our sufficiency "in him."—W. E. Hodgson.

This convention has meant a great deal to me. I have been inspired to go into the Lord's work more deeply to serve him to the end.—Paul Schlichting.

This convention has renewed and strengthened my belief in Christ Jesus, my desire to serve and realizing the need for the best preparation possible, I am willing to wait though I am eager to go.—Ruth Irene Guttery.

This is the first convention that I have attended but by the grace of God it will not be the last as I received the greatest inspiration spiritually that I have ever received.—F. Coggin.

This convention has been to me more than I can express and as a pastor I will go back to Plaster Rock, New Brunswick, to my church with a great ambition to bring young people to Christ. It is my first convention.—Chas. E. Strothard.

"Nineteen hours a day of good solid sight-seeing, garnished with convention, and served a la Tremont."—Clyde L. Ferguson.

I am a Nova Scotian and this is my first convention. I have received an inspiration at this convention that will remain with me forever, and inspiration which I hope will be felt in my B. Y. P. U. when I reveal it at home to them. —C. W. Shaffner.

The Chimney Corner

Paint Did It

IT was on an evening in July that Mrs. Dolittle picked up a certain new little book (of which Chimney Corner readers will hear more within a few weeks) and on page sixty-one read the following last will and testament of Charles Lounsbury, who died some years ago in the Cook County Asylum in Illinois:

"That part of my interests which is known in law and recognized in the sheep-bound volumes as my property, being inconsiderable and of no account, I make no disposal of in this, my last will.

"I leave to children exclusively, but only for the term of their childhood, all and every flower of the field and the blossoms of the woods, with the right to play among them freely according to the custom of children, warning them at the same time against thistles and thorns. And I devise to children the banks of the brooks and the golden sands beneath the waters thereof, and the odor of the willows that dip therein; and the white clouds that float high over the giant trees, and I leave the children the long, long days in which to be merry in a thousand ways; and the night and the moon; and the train of the milky way to wonder at.

"I devise to boys jointly the use of the idle fields and commons where ball may be played; all pleasant waters where one may swim; all snow-clad hills where one may coast; and all streams and ponds where one may fish, or where, when grim winter comes, one may skate; to have and to hold the same for the period of their boyhood. And all the meadows, with the clover blossoms and the butterflies thereof; the woods with their appurtenances, the squirrels and the birds, the echoes of strange noises; and all the distant places which may be visited, together with all the adventures there found. And I give to the boys each his own place at the fireside at night, with all the pictures that may be seen in the burning wood, to enjoy without let or hindrance and without cumberance or care."

Suddenly the words made her think of Ted. They pictured so vividly the environment in which Ted's father had grown up, an environment the mere description of which would be meaningless to Ted.

Ted was a problem. He was everything he ought not to be: he was careless, he was rude to his sisters, he was indifferent about appearances and home duties, he seemed to feel no family ties. The mere sight of his room was a trial to the neat Mrs. Dolittle when she attacked it anew every morning—clothes dropped haphazardly, dirty collections of earth and pebbles in odd corners of the room; oh, it was deplorable the lack of interest Ted took in his home. It was a resort in which to eat or to sleep. But unloved. Talk about environment——

But the morning after she had read the penniless man's will she gazed with new eyes at Ted's littered room and familiar as it was, she was amazed at it: those odds and ends of bruised, broken furniture—an ugly oak bureau—a battered iron bed—a scarred old walnut table with a moth-eaten felt top—a spindle chair with a flapping cane seat. Oh, a depressing room with its faded water-stained paper, its dull, threadbare carpet in holes. It shocked her to see how she hated it herself, no wonder Ted hated it; no wonder he felt no incentive to consider it as anything more than a cell in which to sleep. Abominable mother that she was!

She looked with new eyes at the untidiness; that mound of paper scraps—foreign postage stamps, small lengths of strings, evidently valuable; a butterfly mounted on a cork, a moth inside a glass; a pile of pebbles, evidently precious. Did Ted have a secret personality after all? Was he trying, in spite of this unsavory room, to build an environment of his own for his queer, unfriendly, reticent little soul—a soul born to the heritage of the big outdoors but cribbed into a hideous third floor room in a deadly block of red brick city houses.

It was July. She had intended to spend the entire week canning. Ted was spending a week at a camp. Mr. Dolittle was thriftily spending his vacation at home; it slowly began to dawn on her that well-stocked pantry shelves were not to be compared with the possibilities of Ted's room. That awful room. She stood in the doorway contemplating the ugliness of oak and walnut and soiled white iron. The artist in her rose like a lark.

"Paint" she murmured enthusiastically, and hurried downstairs to consult Mr. Dolittle, who seemed to be spending his vacation aimlessly wandering around the apartment like some unhappy caged animal.

"Dory," she said, "you're a terrible parent! And so am I! We have given Dolly a rosebud room; as for the twins, they are gloriously housed amid yellow-hung draperies. But our poor little Theodore Junior, being only a boy, has to inherit the odds and ends of our two parental homes in his horrible room. It's no wonder he can't abide the place! It has just come over me like a flash and I want the full pathos of it to burst on you, too; come on up there with me."

Mr. Dolittle, somewhat dazed by this onslaught, obediently climbed the stairs and viewed the wretched room from the doorway.

"Nothing extra!" he said dryly, but added the warning: "Just remember, however, that I'm no millionaire to go buying a new outfit even if this is a regular old junk heap. I'm saving money this summer, my dear."

Mrs. Dolittle squeezed his arm: "Dory, could you spare $5 or $10 or even $15? Especially if it meant the future happiness, pride, and family devotion of Theodore Dolittle Junior?"

"If you put it like that!" he murmured. "But $15 won't go far, my dear."

"Oh, it will buy a quart of paint and yards upon yards of unbleached muslin. I see it buying them! I see them stencilled in jolly little designs. Oh, Dory, let's have some fun! Let's be undignified and original and unusual for once in our lives! Let's invest our vacation in Ted. For I think that if we paint every inch of this furniture the same color it will make a really remarkable dwelling place for a small boy. How about blue?"

"Blue?" repeated the still dazed Mr. Dolittle. "A blue bed? A blue bureau?"

"It's done in the advertisements every day," she cried blithely, "Sort of a dull Chinese blue, darling, with gorgeous gold-rose and black butterflies stencilled in the center of each big flat surface. Come on, Dory, warm up!"

Mr. Dolittle mopped his brow: "Oh, I'm warm enough!" he sighed." And I don't think it can be done. Not with junk like this."

"Watch! Look! Listen!" she beamed, and began making lists. The first thing Mr. Dolittle knew he was suggesting tan cartridge paper and in a sudden spurt of vanity boasted that he, even he, could paste it on. He knew how! Once before he was married, he had—

"Fine!" said she. And by luncheon-time the plans were so well-laid that the jubilant Dorothy, Martha and Pauline fought for their fair share of the chores.

"Not that we think it will impress Ted," sang Dolly.

"Or improve Ted!" sighed Molly.

"Or make Ted love home!" groaned Polly.

"But, nevertheless, me for stencilling the unbleached muslin for bedspreads and scarves," warned Dolly.

"The paintpots! The paintpots!" shouted the twins.

Oh, there never was a vacation like it!

"We're living advertisements for any art department," the girls would cry a dozen times a day as soiled white iron bars shone forth dull blue and lovely under their brushes. As for the unbleached muslin, fragile-winged butterflies chased each other delicately around the borders of the curtains and hovered dreamily in the center of the bedspread, their wings of rose and blue and soft jade green—tipped here and there with gold and black. The sisters oh'ed and ah'ed all day as the heterogenous lot of furniture emerged, piece by piece, into a genuine bedroom suite of soft dull blue.

They even began to seek new worlds to conquer for the absent Ted: It was Dolly who salvaged some uniform cigar-boxes and painted them in blue with the same rose-gold-black butterfly design on top of each. She printed neat black signs: "String," Pencils," "Paper," "Rubber Bands," "Odds and Ends." She arranged the boxes in a row across the back of the blue table; she even painted the glass ink bottle so that in blue it could stand guard over the boxes behind it. She mounted a big blue blotter on a piece of heavy corrugated cardboard, with strips of unbleached muslin along each length. From her own savings she bought blue pencils, elastics, and seals at the five and ten-cent store to fill the appropriate boxes. The cumbersome old walnut table was no more! In its new dress, with its new coverings, its moth-eaten past was forgotten.

It was Polly who thought of the lamp. She painted a cooky-jar blue, with a rose-gold-and black butterfly on it. She, too, invested in wares at the five and ten-cent store, where she found lamp-shade frame, bulb and card. Stencilled muslin covered the frame, and an electrically-inclined neighbor turned the cooky jar into a bone-fide lamp to stand on one corner of the desk-table, with book-ends at the corner—book-ends made from bricks, blue-painted, with the inevitable butterflies on top. Ted's little scraggly heap of books took on new dignity when held between these bounds.

Mr. Dolittle's walls had long since emerged in their tan paper—the quaint blue furniture stood ready—the cooky-jar lamp was lighted—the shiny floor boasted a small new rug. The entire room waited.

Ted came home from camp, tanned, indifferent, bored at the smallness of the dull city world. It was bedtime before he could be lured up to his room. He went alone. But five breathless detective Dolittles trailed up the stairs on tip-toe behind him.

Ted stood in the doorway, speechless. Inch by inch his eyes solemnly took in every astonishing detail.

"Well?" queried Dolly, after a pause that had grown positively painful.

Ted turned listlessly, the spell broken. Ignoring the girls, he said to his father in a dull weary voice, as man to man: "Where've they moved me to now, pop?"

Dory Dolittle flung an arm around the small shoulders, and gulped down the marble that seemed to fill his throat: "Ted," he said huskily, "we hoped maybe you'd like keeping this same old room made over specially for you, my boy."

Ted stiffened. His eyes stared unbelievingly around, and he gave a feeble but none the less dramatic sweep with his arm, as if he tried to say something to fit the action. But words failed. The sheer beauty of it overcame him.

"Don't you like it, dear?" his mother asked anxiously.

Ted turned and flung his arms around her neck. He nearly choked her, but she loved it. He clung there for a short eternity it seemed to her. Then in a small awed voice he said the appalling words that compensated for every hour of toil: "Looks like I sort of belong here now, don't it, Mums?"

Molly and Polly and Dolly crept downstairs, crying sympathetically. But Mr. and Mrs. Dolittle went joyfully with their son into his—heritage.

The Young Reserves

Who?

THIS body likes to climb a tree,
Though she's but one year old—
She walks the top rail of the fence,
Was ever child so bold?
Her voice is loud, she sings at night,
She never wears a hat;
Now say the name of anything,
Her name will rhyme with "hat."

Things I Can Make

By Peggy

WHEN I read the story "Paint Did It" I began wondering if I could make anything for Bill's room, although Bill belongs in our home just as much as I do, and he never, never, never feels left out. However it's always fun to do things to astonish people and so I set to work to astonish Bill. I painted a pair of glass candle-sticks to go on his bureau. The candle-sticks came from the five and ten-cent store. I painted them yellow to match the wallpaper, and I bought him yellow candles. He thought it was lots of fun! So then I stencilled a piece of muslin with black elephants walking under green palm trees with yellow bananas in them. This was really very pretty, and the cover just fitted on his bureau. I hemmed it on the sewing-machine. I made him a pillow to match, only there was only one elephant, one tree and one banana in the center of the pillow.

When Bill came home from Uncletim's farm he was really dreadfully surprised to find his room all fixed up, and Timothy said he thought it was about time somebody did something for him. So now I'm busy making Timothy a shoe bag to hang on his door! He will simply love it, because now his shoes are all over the closet floor and he never can decide which shoes are mates. Shoe bags are easy to make, for one piece of goods just has to be sewed in straight lines along another piece of goods to form the pockets. I am going to stencil rabbits and lettuce leaves on the pockets. Probably you can make much better things than I can.

---

Live Books on Living Topics

By Helen B. Montgomery

WHILE the texture of present-day fiction seems steadily to disintegrate, the output of books on serious topics has never been greater nor better that it is today. Side by side with the flood of meretricious novels pours forth from another fountain streams of good biography, essays, historical and scientific books. It would even seem that many readers, disgusted by the eroticism of present-day fiction, are definitely turning to other sources of supply. Certainly there is no lack of really good books.

The author of the little book, "The Charm of Fine Manners," that had such a vogue, has recently put out "The Charm of a Well Mannered Home," Starrett (Lippincott). To read these agreeable, sensible counsels is like listening to a gracious and well-bred woman as she opens freely to some young friend the rich stores of her experience. A subtle charm pervades the book, like fragrance.

"Freedom and Christian Conduct," by J. A. W. Haas (Macmillan), is intended by its author to be used as a textbook on Christian ethics, in colleges and seminaries. There is a great place for such a book. The study of formal ethics has been neglected of late years, in our schools. The essay on "Freedom and Religion" is a vigorous discussion of the realization of moral freedom through the fullness of the Christian faith. The old problem of free-will receives a treatment that will settle for many minds the perplexities raised by the thoroughgoing determinist. The most valuable section of the book is that which deals with the functioning of freedom in the individual life, in the family, the church and the state.

"Psychology and the Christian Life," T. Pym (Doran). The science of psychology was certain to be explored to find its relations to the Christian life and experience. Some early observers were frightened by what seemed to them its negative results and destructive conclusions. But further study has found the new science by way of being transformed into an ally of religion. While few may agree with Chaplain Pym in all his conclusions and theories, few will fail to find considerations of value in the practical task of making the Christian gospel really operative.

"The Promise of His Coming," C. C. McCown (Macmillan). Professor McCown has endeavored to give the ordinary reader a historical survey of the sources of the millennial hope. He writes with the sure touch of assured scholarship, as he traces the growth of the millennial hope. Those who come to the book hoping that it will bolster up some favorite doctrine, will probably be disappointed. Others will be helped to a fresh understanding of the whole subject of millennialism.

Our Own Folks

A Big Baptist Enterprise

Baptists of the Northwest will, in the near future, erect in the Twin Cities a hospital costing $1,000,000. Swedish, German, Danish-Norwegian, Czecho-Slovakian conventions, and English-speaking Baptists of Wisconsin, Minnesota, Northern Michigan, North and South Dakota, Iowa and Nebraska are joining hands in the building of this edifice which will be dedicated to such worth-while Christian service. The erection of the hospital will be an accomplishment in which all the Baptists of the Northwest should have a justifiable pride. It will be a structure that will indicate in a concrete way the striking growth of Baptists in the great Northwest.

From the very beginning, when plans for the new structure were being formulated, the Twin Cities were selected for the location of the new Baptist hospital. On account of their railroad connections, these two cities, St. Paul and Minneapolis, are readily accessible to all of the northwestern states. The building site comprises eight acres on beautiful University Avenue, the arterial boulevard between the two cities, extending from the state university, Minneapolis, to the state capitol, St. Paul. The ground rises gently from the boulevard so that the building is set off advantageously to the twenty-four million, who annually pass upon this famous street. Near at hand are a number of beautiful stone edifices, among which is the new $4,000,000 Montgomery Ward northwestern distribution house.

Not a New Field

This striking location, the "growing Midway" as it is called, is not a new field to the Baptists. Two small hospitals have been conducted here for several years. These hospitals are so limited in capacity, however, that they could never serve the growing need of northwestern Baptists. They served only as a start. The staff and the employes of these two hospitals will be retained when the new structure supercedes these two institutions.

The new hospital (pictured on the cover page of this issuc) will be fitting in its architectural expression, shaped in the form of a cross, with a solarium towering at its vertex. Not only will the edifice present a unique design but it will lend itself to ease of operation, and pleasantness and sunshine will be had in every part of the building. There will be no unnecessary ornamentation, but the structure will preserve its individuality through sturdy design, harmony in line, and clean-cut building surfaces. The general plan is along the most efficient line for administration purposes. The type of the cross has been widely endorsed by the medical profession. The administration will radiate from the center of the cross affording a strategic point of control. The type of edifice lends itself also to further development as any and all of its converging portions may be extended and still maintain the architectural unity of the structure. The preliminary plans call for a hospital large enough for economy in administration and to serve the growing needs of northwestern Baptists.

The hospital will be thoroughly equipped with every practical facility known in modern medicine. It will be an institution that will adequately serve, and become a real contribution by Baptists to the "ministry of healing."

The hospital will be erected by the Northwestern Baptist Hospital Association, whose board is composed of leading Baptist pastors and laymen of the northwest. This association was formerly the Mounds Park Sanitarium Association, a Baptist organization which was formed some twenty years ago to erect the Mounds Park Sanitarium. The new enlargement program of this hospital organization has been approved by Baptists of all groups in the Northwest. Congratulations are in order not only upon this new undertaking but as well upon the achievements of the past.

Prominent Baptist pastors and laymen are heartily back of this enterprise and are meeting almost daily in forwarding the program. The Baptist hospital of the Northwest, "The Midway," will be a long step forward by Baptists in taking their place with others in this practical Christian work.

Warren G. Harding

In Memoriam

By Bertha Francis-Emery

NOT death—'tis but the glorious sunset of a well-spent day.
Earth's little day of struggle, storm and strife, the Brief beginning of that life which blesses, through
God's measureless eternity.

Because he lived full many a starving soul the Bread of Life
Received. Because he lived the naked souls of men
Will sooner clothed be with righteousness;
And peace and brotherhood crowd out the curse of war.

Not death! A glorious commencement, with all eternity
Ahead in which to gain vast knowledge here
Undreamed of. In God's great universities pursuing
An onward, upward course, from "glory unto glory."

Not death! An honored entrance to higher halls of learning.
Earth's credits gained.—And now for him the Teacher's Welcome words. "Well done, my son, for thee there waits
An entrance to the joys prepared, from the foundation
Of the world, for those who love the Lord."

A Letter from India

Dear fellow workers:

The greater part of this quarter has been spent in tents in the villages. Nearly 1,000 converts have been baptized since January 1. In December it was delightful to travel through the growing fields of Kaffir corn which was sometimes as high as my head. In February, when Mrs. Kurtz was with me on the long tour of the year, it was good to see the happy people trying to store their grain. The crops were so abundant this year that the old grain pits were insufficient and everywhere new grain pits were being dug to care for the extra grain.

We camped frequently under the lovely mango trees. In shape these are like the maples at home though they are not generally so tall. They make excellent shade. This year the blossoms were very plentiful and before we finished the tour some of the trees were loaded with green fruit the size of hickory nuts.

Promises Kept

The fact that the people were so busy with the harvests interfered somewhat with the attendance at our meetings. Large gifts are being made for the work this year. The family that began to give a tenth to the Lord two years ago, giving Rs. 40 and Rs. 60 last year, have not gathered all their harvest yet, but the Lord's share this year is already worth over Rs. 100. The Lord has certainly kept his promise. The caste people have been watching the family during these two years and are now filled with astonishment for they have often thought it did not "cost" much to be a Christian. Several caste men have recently declared their intention of becoming Christians.

We spent part of December getting ready for the mission conference in Hanumakonda. Sixty-five people attended, the largest number we have ever had. We have 115 missionaries but the distances were so great that many did not feel they could spend so much time away from their fields or the money necessary for the high railway fares. We found that fifteen had come back from furlough during the year 1922 and last month three women returned to the work. We have never had so many workers on the field, but in spite of this some of the stations are still without resident missionaries. We were delighted to have with us at the mission conference Rev. W. H. Stenger from Pasadena and Mrs. Cohoon from Chicago. Both have for many years been great workers for our Telugu mission and have given not only money but their children and relatives. We enjoyed their visit very much.

After helping take down the tents which the conference people occupied, I made a short tour with the Ford car up on the new railway line north of Hanumakonda. It is interesting to note how the railways follow the missionaries. Thirty years or more before the railway was even discussed several of our missionaries used to camp in what is now the railway station compound twenty miles north of Hanumakonda. There we have a flourishing church and during the year we put a tiled roof on the church building. It is the first tiled building I have been able to get erected in the Nizam's territory.

We have just returned from our association at Bapatla where we had the best meetings yet. One-third of the Christians of our mission reside in this association territory and we have more church buildings and self-supporting churches than any other part of the mission. Beginning December 1 another church began to pay half its pastor's salary. We have seventeen missionaries in the associational field, the most we have ever had. Rev. and Mrs. J. A. Curtis are just now sailing for America. The addresses at the meetings were of a high order. Sadhu Nelson was present and made able addresses in both Telugu and English. He was particularly eloquent when he addressed in English a meeting attended by all the leading people in Bapatla. Quite a number of Christians are now striving to imitate Sadhu Sundar Singh, the great Indian evangelist.

With all good wishes for the work at home.

F. Kurtz,

Madira, Deccau, India
March 14, 1923

Dedication of Calvary Church

In July, 1919, the old Walnut Street Church of Youngstown, Ohio, was abandoned and its members joined the Mission Bible School of the First Church and organized Calvary Church.

The new building of Calvary Church was dedicated July 29, six years after the Mission Bible School was started by the First Church. The architecture is colonial in type, the building is modern in every respect. It is equipped with a pastor's study, many class rooms, recreation room, etc. Provision has been made for the erection in a few years of a religious education plant. The edifice cost in the neighborhood of $100,000.

Since its organization in 1919, the progress of Calvary Church has been marked. It now has a membership of nearly 550 and a Bible-school enrolment of 500. With its new building the church expects to render even greater service to the community. Rev. J. H. Lloyd is the present pastor.

A Look Backward and Forward

By Janie Prichard Duggan

The following facts of somewhat ancient history, will doubtless find their way to the eye, perhaps to the heart of certain readers in the "Land of the Sundown Sea." For a recent issue of the Baptist News, the little periodical which tells of our church work in Southern California, contained an article relating to the present status of the Spanish-Italian mission work in the city of San Diego. As all of the workers in that mission have changed since its inception ten years ago, these lines may serve to recall the facts of the beginning of the Spanish work of our denomination in that city in the waterfront shack on Date street.

First things in mission endeavor are always interesting. But the value of such things can be proved only by their endurance and growth. And the Date Street Mission has not only endured, but prospers.

The family of Martinez in whose kitchen the first Mexican Baptist "Sunny School" was held in February, 1913, has now moved to Fresno, Cal., where mother, father and ten young sons and daughters are growing in the faith. Gone also is the poor, patched-up shack on the Bay shore at the corner of Date Street, along with other ragged edges of the old waterfront road of those days, a decade ago.

It was a very small beginning of two mothers and a dozen or so little children. A day or two before, Faustina had stood inside the wicket-gate of the shack looking up into the missionary's face with soft, trustful eyes, and had readily responded to the newcomer's question, "What is your name, little girl?"

"Blessed the day when you stopped at our gate and asked our little Faustina's name," wrote the mother Martinez years later.

After a time measles in the family drove the "Sunny school" out of the Martinez shack, and another cottage had become too inadequate for use. The ample chapel on the corner of Date and Columbia streets, four blocks from the waterfront, the property of the First Baptist Church of the city, was offered to the missionary to the Mexicans. The chapel had been in disuse following the closing of the American mission formerly held there. From that time, May 25, 1913, Doctor Geistweit and Mr. Finn, pastor and assistant pastor respectively at that time of the church named, gave sympathetic and wise support to this real opening of the Spanish mission after it was proved that there were enough Spanish-speaking people in the neighborhood to warrant conducting a mission.

At once an industrial class for little girls on Saturday afternoons was begun in the front room of the chapel which soon teemed with the dark-eyed little women at their sewing. The boys, fewer in number, helped clear, grade and plant the neglected premises outside the chapel. An English class for young working women met once a week at night, and for a time another such class for Mexican young men was undertaken with help from the downtown church. The Bible school on Sunday mornings grew in interest and after some months a Spanish pastor was sent to the mission. Several baptisms occurred, the first being that of Mrs. Vincenta Rivas whose Christian death a year ago, was noted in THE BAPTIST. She had become well read in the Scriptures, was gifted in prayer and untiring in her efforts to show others the way.

CALVARY CHURCH, YOUNGSTOWN, OHIO.

From the beginning the work was difficult and of slow growth, though never quite failing. The first missionary was obliged by broken health to leave seven years ago; two other ladies in turn succeeded her, earnest, faithful workers among the people. Each was forced to leave after a time of service. A supply pastor died; one or two later pastors were transferred to other fields; Rev. L. E. Trozer, always the interested supervisor of the mission and frequent visitor, passed away in Los Angeles. But the mission lives and now thrives under the able leadership of Rev. A. B. Apra. A few years ago, the missionary, Miss Tourner, combined work for the Italian children in the neighborhood with the Spanish mission on Date Street. And now the article referred to in the Baptist News tells of the installation of a baptistry in the chapel and of other improvements under the auspices of Mr. Apra, the American church downtown, and the City Mission Society.

A picture of the new chapel being built in Chollas Valley, a suburban settlement three miles from San Diego's center, has come as a joyous surprise to that first missionary. The mission was opened in 1913 and was held in a tiny, blue, rented cottage of one room set in an enclosed but desolate little lot. Perhaps no small beginning ever entered the heart of the missionary quite as did this one at Las Chollas. This settlement was composed chiefly of Mexicans and Italians, most of whom owned their cottages and were of a thrifty sort. The children of both nationalities swarmed in the little blue house for industrial work on Friday afternoons, and it was not long before the cottage stood in a blooming garden of geraniums, nasturtiums and poppies. The children themselves kept the place neat, flourishing, and well irrigated by their own carefully constructed ditches. The pastor of the Date Street chapel held a service in Las Chollas on Friday evenings of each week and directed the afternoon Sunday school. To her great sorrow, therefore, the writer heard a year or so ago that the Chollas Valley mission had been given up. Lo, with real joy she reads of the building of a new chapel there and of the hearty interest of the pastor, Mr. Apra, in both missions and of the continued cooperation of the American Baptists of San Diego in this home and foreign enterprise. May the seed sown during ten years in this interesting work bear fruit in the lives of many of these new Americans freed from superstition and sin by the truth of God.

Want Ads

Wanted: Teachers for Bishop College, Marshall, Texas, an American Baptist Home Mission school for negroes. Piano, $900; high-school chemistry, physics, science, $1,035; librarian, $900; hall matron and campus chaperon with some teaching, $900; college physics and mathematics, $1,125; for coaching athletics, $125 additional. Furnished room, board, laundry for $3.50 per week. Address C. H. Maxson, Marshall, Texas.

Wanted: Pastor for church at New Straitsville, Ohio. Address H. Spencer, clerk.

Wanted: A pastor by small town church. Apply, stating experience, training, salary expected, etc., to DeLoss Grantham, R. No. 5, Hartington, Neb.

For Sale: 100 acre farm; 12 acres in fruit; all good land and well watered. Natural gas. One-half mile from Denison College. J. A. Riedle, Granville, Ohio.

Wanted: Teachers for public and private schools, colleges and universities. Education Service, Steger Building, Chicago; Southern Building, Washington; 1254 Amsterdam Avenue, New York.

Wanted: Position as pastor's assistant or church visitor by young woman with training and experience. Address C, care BAPTIST.

A Permanent Income

Life Annuities on One or Two Lives

On one life the rate of income varies from four to nine per cent a year, payable semi-annually.

On one or two lives the rate varies from four to eight and three-tenths per cent a year, payable semi-annually.

A survivorship agreement provides a permanent income for two lives.

For annuity booklet and samples of single and survivorship agreements, please address

CHARLES L. WHITE
23 East Twenty-Sixth Street
New York City
The American Baptist Home Mission Society

When Making Wills and Legacies Remember
Our Corporate Name Is:
"WOMAN'S AMERICAN BAPTIST HOME MISSION SOCIETY"
Mrs. Mary E. Bloomer
Treasurer
276 Fifth Avenue, New York City

Church News by States

Atlantic Coast

NEW YORK

RECENT CHANGES OF PASTORATE: Rev. S. H. Thorpe of Suffern has accepted a call to the Patchogue Church; Rev. W. D. Chipp of Trumansburg has become pastor of the church at Deposit; Rev. Chester C. Winter, pastor of the Cazenovia Village Church for four years, has accepted a call to the church at Interlaken.

WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA

DR. I. G. MATTHEWS of Crozer Theological Seminary supplied the pulpit of the First Church, Seattle, Sunday, Aug. 12.

THE PULPIT OF THE FIRST CHURCH, Monessen, is vacant. The church desires to get in touch with those looking for an opportunity to fill such a vacancy. Communications may be addressed to the church clerk, Mr. W. B. Waite. Only those believing in the fundamentals of the Bible need apply.

VERMONT

FOR SIX YEARS THE NEW PRINCIPAL of Vermont Academy, Mr. John B. Cook, served as teacher, dean of men and vice-principal of Slippery Rock State Normal School, Pennsylvania. Previous to his connection with the Slippery Rock School he taught at Keystone Academy.

Mississippi Valley

INDIANA

REV. C. J. CASEY has resigned as pastor of the church at Hope.

REV. A. E. CHASTAIN began his pastorate with the Forest Hills Church, Evansville, Aug. 12. As the result of an every-member canvass $1,000 was pledged toward the pastor's salary.

DR. E. Y. MULLINS recently supplied the pulpit of the First Church, Indianapolis.

OHIO

REV. ISAAC HIGGINBOTHAM of Portsmouth, N. H., supplied the Tenth Avenue Church, Columbus, Aug. 5 and 12. Secretary T. F. Chambers of Granville preached Aug. 19 and 26.

MICHIGAN

PASTORS OF THE STATE are invited to send the names and addresses of families moving to Ann Arbor to the pastor of the First Church, Rev. R. Edward Sayles, 215 Packard St. Names, and if possible, the addresses of students who will attend the University of Michigan for the first time should be sent to Mr. Howard Chapman, Guild House, Ann Arbor.

ILLINOIS

SUNDAY, SEPT. 9, REV. S. J. REID will begin his pastorate with the Tabernacle Church, Chicago. For the past few years Mr. Reid has been acting as superintendent of evangelism for the state of Oregon under the auspices of the Home Mission Society.

MISS GLADYS MARSH TOPPING, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. P. Topping of Elgin, was married Aug. 11 to Edwin Ewart Aubrey at the First Church, Elgin. The service was read by the father of Mr. Aubrey, assisted by Dr. J. M. Powis Smith, of the University of Chicago. Mrs. Aubrey was director of the W. W. G. of the state for two years and was national field secretary for the Missionary Training School, Chicago. For the past year she was religious director of the Harlem branch of the Y. W. C. A. in New York City. Besides being a graduate of Bucknell University, Mr. Aubrey did graduate work at Cambridge University, England, and at the Universityof Chicago. For the past year he has been professor of sociology and Bible at Carleton College, but recently accepted a position as professor of psychology at Miami University, Oxford, Ohio.

WISCONSIN

REV. ROBERT W. SHAW, pastor of the South Church, Milwaukee, is spending his vacation in Kansas. On July 29 and Aug. 5 he preached at Ottawa. On Aug. 19 he delivered the anniversary sermon at the golden jubilee celebration of the First Church, Cherryvale, where he was pastor for more than five years prior to going to Wisconsin. On Aug. 26 he supplied the First Church, Topeka.

SOUTH DAKOTA

REV. C. ESBERN PETERS has resigned as pastor of the First Church of Madison because of poor health.

KANSAS

ON AUG. 18, HENRY BONDURANT, a student of Kansas City Seminary, was ordained by the First Church, Elwood. Three deacons were also ordained. Rev. G. G. Riggan was moderator and J. H. Lusk, clerk. The candidates for the office of deacon were James Livingston, Herman Livingston and O. T. Daily. Dr. P. W. Crannell preached the ordination sermon.

The Assembly

The Kansas Assembly which met on the campus of Ottawa University August 6-16, was in many ways the best in all the nine years since its organization.

Program

The program showed much wise planning on the part of Miss Edna Umstot, director of religious education, and Dr. W. P. Behan, dean of the assembly. The total registration including the vacation school and visitors was 752. Special mention should be made of the fine work among the boys in Camp Tauy Jones, under the leadership of Rev. Ollver Potter. The daily vacation school under the direction of Rev. and Mrs. C. S. Osborn of Kansas City had an enrolment of fifty with increasing interest until the last day. Miss Grace Summers had charge of the craft work and basketry.

Faculty

The faculty this year was composed of about twenty-five members. If space permitted, special mention should be made of each member. Among those from outside the state were Dr. Charles Durden of Galesburg, Ill., a favorite with Kansas Baptists. He taught New Testament, Christian doctrine, and had charge of the chapel service each day. Dr. E. B. Pratt of Denver taught the class in evangelism. Dr. O. C. Brown of Philadelphia was one of the popular men this year. His classes in Old Testament, and training the devotional life were largely attended. Mrs. J. L. Peacock of Shaw University for the home work, and Miss Mary Claggett of Japan for the foreign work, were leaders with the Women's Union. Miss Vera Rice of Minnesota, and Miss Hazel Boyd of Iowa led the young people. Prof. Paul R. Utt of Ottawa, and Rev. E. F. Muir of Arkansas City, had charge of the music.

Next Year

A much larger program is being launched for next year. Miss Umstot will have more space in the Kansas Baptist each month, and in this way will keep in touch with the young people of the state during the entire year. It is hoped that the new Commons Building will be finished by next year in order to take better care of the increased attendance. The people of Ottawa opened their homes to the members of the assembly, but larger facilities are needed next year.

Closing Scenes

The vesper service held each day on the campus proved to be the time of all the day when everyone was on the mountain top with the Master. On the last evening Doctor Behan gave the call for life service, and the response was gratifying indeed. About 200 answered the call. Many will prepare for foreign and many for home service. Three young men said they felt that God had called them for the gospel ministry.

At the commencement 174 certificates were given to those who had finished the first year's work. Quite a number received certificates for the second and third year.

Awards

Ottawa University gives three awards each year. This year Kansas City received the pennant for the largest delegation, Wellington the one for the greatest number of miles traveled, and a small country church received the third for having the largest percentage of its membership present. This was the Bethel church in Miami Association.

It should be said that Dr. and Mrs. Charles Manley of Nellore India were, with Miss Mary Claggett of Japan, the honor guests of the assembly this year. Their presence and messages were inspiring.

NEBRASKA

Custer Association

The fortieth anniversary of the Custer Association was held Aug. 18-19 with the Broken Bow Church. Roy M. Lewis of Broken Bow presided. W. E. Darrow was selected temporary clerk in the absence of A. E. Pixley, who has removed from the state. I. M. Morgan of Sumner preached the annual sermon on Saturday morning. On Sunday morning W. E. Darrow delivered an address on "The Mission and Message of Baptists."

The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: Moderator, Roy M. Lewis; clerk, W. E. Darrow; treasurer, John G. Eloe; president woman's organization, Mrs. A. B. Cornish; secretary and W. W. G. director, Mrs. R. M. Lewis. W. E. Darrow was selected as representative of the association on the board of managers of the state convention. Ansley was decided upon as the meeting place for the next anniversary with R. M. Lewis as preacher of the annual sermon. A committee consisting of the officers of the association and a representative from each department was selected to encourage the work of education among the churches of the association and to plan for rallies during the year. Fred Eloe of Cumro, W. E. Darrow, Mrs. A. B. Cornish and Miss Opal Irving of Arnold were designated as a committee on promotion and evangelism. Resolutions on temperance, cooperation with Grand Island College, support of the denominational papers, the completion of the task begun at Denver were unanimously adopted.

MINNESOTA

Dr. Geo. Earl of the Earl Clinic, St. Paul, has been elected to membership on the executive committee of the National Laymen's organization.

Rev. R. W. Babcock has begun his work as pastor of the Temple Church, Minneapolis, with a favorable outlook.

Rev. John Swanson has spent two weeks in New England visiting the Swedish Baptist Conference and giving addresses at the summer assembly at Bethel Beach.

Bethel Academy opens its eighteenth year Sept. 18. Bethel Seminary opens it fifty-second year Sept. 25. Indications are for a large enrolment at both the academy and seminary this year. Prof. Arvid Gordh begins his second year as dean of the seminary.

Rev. Carl Antonson, pastor of the First Swedish Church, Los Angeles, Cal., stopped over to visit his former parishioners in St. Paul on his return from Stockholm.

Rev. John G. Briggs, pastor of the Woodland Park Church, St. Paul, and Rev. J. J. Runyan, executive secretary of the Baptist Union of Minneapolis, enjoyed

TRALLE

Service in Religious Education, Sermons, Lectures, Addresses, Conferences. Churches saved from costly mistakes in building. Some open fall and winter dates.

HENRY EDWARD TRALLE

150 Claremont Ave., New York City Tel. Morningside 3930

CHICAGO LAW SCHOOL 27 YEARS' SUCCESS

Three Years' Resident Law Course gives LL.B. or J.D., prepares for admission to Bar in all states. Chicago B'd of Education credits. C.L.S. units for promotion. Ill. St.U. conducts our entrance exams. COLLEGE EXTENSION 34 courses by Correspondence lead to Ph.D. Ph.B., A.M. and D.D. Address

Chancellor J. J. TOBIAS
111 W. Jackson Blvd., Chicago

CHURCH FURNITURE

Pews, Pulpits, Chairs, Altars, Book Racks, Tables, Communion Ware—EVERYTHING. The finest furniture made. Direct from our factory to your church. Catalog free. DeMoulin Bros. & Co., Dpt. 17 Greenville, Ill.

THE NINE transcontinental railways of the Twin Cities make readily accessible the only Baptist Hospitals of the Northwest, located in Saint Paul—

The Mounds Park Sanitarium
The Midway Hospital
The Merriam Park Hospital

The

NORTHWESTERN BAPTIST HOSPITAL ASSOCIATION

General Offices: INDIAN MOUNDS PARK, SAINT PAUL

READ "THE FUNDAMENTALIST"

An out and out, unequivocal, uncompromising, undaunted champion of the Bible and historic Christian faith. Every issue a militant and mighty message against all foes of the Master. Plain facts stated and information given regarding denominational conditions that our people ought to have. The Fundamentalist knows how to "speak the truth in love," yet it dares to speak the truth. Issued monthly. Price $1.00 a year. Edited by Rev. John Roach Straton and Rev. H. Grattan Dockrell. Published by

The Baptist Fundamentalist League of Greater New York and Vicinity for Ministers and Laymen
123 West 57th Street NEW YORK CITY

a two weeks' motor and camping trip through the anglers' paradise of Northern Minnesota. Mr. Runyan was invited to supply the pulpit of the Central Church of Duluth, Aug. 19 and 26.

Rev. Carl D. Case, pastor of Oak Park Church, Chicago, was a visitor on the assembly grounds during the summer.

Mound Assembly Notes

The Minnesota summer assembly grounds at Mound have been the scene of much activity during the summer months, several groups having met there at different periods for both study and recreation.

The Minnesota German B. Y. P. U. held its first annual summer assembly July 5-11, with a registration of sixty and a program that was worth while.

The Twin City Association held its annual one-day conference on July 13 with a strong program and over 100 persons in attendance.

The state World Wide Guild house party was held July 14-18 with seventy-five girls registered from all parts of Minnesota. The girls not only had a fine time in a recreational way and in happy reunions, but were inspired and enthused by the leaders to achieve great things for the Master in their guilds during the winter. It was a privilege to the girls to have Miss Helen Hobart, national field secretary of the W. W. G., present during the entire house party, and also during the summer assembly. She presented some helpful methods for studying the home and foreign mission text books.

The B. Y. P. U. Assembly was in session for nine days, July 19-28, culminating in the state B. Y. P. U. Convention on Saturday and Sunday, July 29-30. Over 150 young people registered for the assembly.

The assembly program was a one of inspiration, study, methods, and recreation. Among the prominent speakers was Dr. Frank L. Anderson, president of the Baptist International Theological Seminary of New Jersey. His exposition of the book of Romans was an inspiration to all who had the privilege of attending his classes. Dr. Thos. S. Young of Denver, Colo., who supervises the D. V. B. S. work for the Publication Society, directed classes on the church vacation school and week-day religious education methods. "Fine Arts in Religious Education" was the theme of a series of lectures by Rev. C. A. Boyd, director of religious education for Wisconsin. Mr. Boyd has made an extensive study of suitable pictures and music for religious services, and his course was especially helpful to Sunday-school teachers and directors of music. Rev. E. A. Valiant of St. Paul was the assembly pastor and song leader.

Inspirational and helpful addresses were given by Dr. Franklin W. Sweet of Brandon College, Chaplain Rideout of the army, Rev. R. Wilbur Babcock, the new pastor of Temple Church, Minneapolis. A special memorial service was held for Dr. Lathan A. Crandall on the day of his funeral, Doctor Briggs and Mr. Valiant paying tribute to the life and work of this noted preacher.

Much of the success of the summer assembly was due to the untiring efforts and consecrated service of Rev. Arthur J. Hansen, director of religious education for Minnesota.

Mr. Richard Hoiland, president of the state B. Y. P. U., was the official manager of the grounds and hotel. He was reelected president.

Obituary

IN MEMORIAM

Torrence White, a brother beloved, a deacon of the First Church of Arvada, Colo., a wise counselor, a lover of his Lord and of his brethren, loyal to the church and all kingdom enterprises, was called to his reward July 15, 1923, at the age of eighty.

The members of the church wish to express their affection, love and appreciation of his work in the church, to extend sympathy to his bereaved wife and children, and to pray that the grace of our Lord be with them and uphold them in the hope of a blessed reunion beyond.

REV. GEORGE BOARDMAN ILSLEY

Rev. George B. Ilsley, a member of the Baptist ministry of Maine for sixty years, died suddenly in his boyhood home at Limerick, Me., on July 30, 1923, at the age of eighty-four. He was born at Limerick Aug. 17, 1839. He fitted for college in the academy in his home town and entered Colby College in 1859. He belonged to one of the Civil War classes and graduated in 1863. Thirty years later Colby honored him with the degree of doctor of divinity. At the time of his death he was one of the oldest living graduates. He graduated from Newton Theological Institution in 1866.

Doctor Ilsley's entire ministry was spent in Maine. He served five churches during forty-seven years. They were as follows: Springvale, 1866-1873; Yarmouth, 1873-1879; Lewiston, 1879-1881; Bangor, 1881-1900; Westbrook, 1900-1913. His most notable work was his pastorate of nineteen years at the Columbia Street (Second) Church in Bangor. During his service this became one of the strongest churches in Maine; a new building was erected following a disastrous fire, and a daughter church was established largely out of its membership in Brewer, across the Penobscot River. His ministry was always warmly evangelistic. He had unusual power in winning men to Jesus Christ. His churches were fountains of deep spiritual power.

Doctor Ilsley was a markedly good man. Gentle in spirit, generous of heart, he gave himself unsparingly to his people. He proved by his experience the old adage that a house-going minister makes a church-going people. He won the affection of his people to an unusual degree as is proved by one pastorate of fourteen years and another of nineteen. "He lived in a house by the side of the road and was a friend to men." He had a peculiar affection for his brethren of the ministry and passionately loved their association. During his long ministry in Bangor he held many positions of trust and honor and was frequently the recipient of gifts of honor from the Baptists of Maine.

Since his retirement from the active ministry ten years ago at the age of seventy-four, he had made his home most of the time with his son-in-law, Dr. Frank W. Padelford, at Newton Centre. He was happy amid the associations of his student days and among many of his old friends.

In 1866 Doctor Ilsley was married to Miss Jennie D. Lowell of Chesterville, Me., who went to her reward in 1914. There were three children, Reuben L. Ilsley, connected with the Internal Revenue Department in Washington; Grace C., deceased in 1919, and Gertrude L. Padelford of Newton Centre.

Funeral services were held in the old home in Limerick and at the chapel in Evergreen Cemetery at Portland, the latter service being conducted by Dr. A. B. Lorimer of Portland, Doctor Ilsley's immediate successor at Bangor, and by Dr. E. C. Whittemore, secretary of the Maine Convention.

Open Letter to an Unknown Millionaire

(Continued from page 979)

he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen?"

Now put the same words in the largest possible lettering on an outdoor sign, and you begin to see the difference in force and authority which large type alone can put into a text.

This may sound as though we were advocating outdoor advertising only. Such is not necessarily the case. We may want to print the Sermon on the Mount, and other longer texts which would require newspaper or magazine advertising space where the opportunity to read longer texts is more favorable.

* * *

"What relation has Christianity to my everyday job?" Another common question. Perhaps some suggestions may be found among the following:

"They helped every one his neighbor; and every one said to his brother, Be of good courage. So the carpenter encouraged the goldsmith, and he that smootheth with the hammer him that smote the anvil, saying, It is ready for the soldering: and he fastened it with nails, that it should not be moved. Isa. 41:6-7.

Would the workmen of today, sometimes be happier if the unity, cooperation and thoroughness pictured above were equalled or approximated in their own daily work?

These texts also suggest themselves:

"Study to be quiet and to do your own business and to work with your own hands." 1 Thes. 4:11.

"Commit thy works unto the Lord, and thy thoughts shall be established." Prov. 16:5.

"I have been young, and now am old; yet have I not seen the righteous forsaken, nor his seed begging bread." Ps. 37:25.

PILLSBURY
Academy for Boys
Seventy miles from Minneapolis; large campus and seven modern buildings; military training, all athletics; high standards of scholarship and conduct; small classes insuring individual attention; terms reasonable; illustrated catalogue on request.
Milo B. Price, Principal
Box 397F Owatonna, Minnesota

Gordon
Theological, Missionary, Religious-Educational College course of 4 years, college degree of Th.B. Graduate School of Theology, 3-year course, degree of B.D. An embodiment of the highest ideals of evangelical culture and unity.
NATHAN R. WOOD, President
Gordon College of Theology and Missions, Boston, Mass.

COOK ACADEMY 50th year. Prepares Boys for college or business careers. Graduates are successful in leading colleges. In Finger Lake region with splendid health record. All Bedy-building athletics. Swimming pool. Christian influence and training. Music advantages. For catalog address The Principal, Box B, Montour Falls, New York

DES MOINES UNIVERSITY
JOHN W. MILLION, A. M., LL. D., President
A growing university in a progressive city of the Middle West—standard courses—best of advantages, including access to great libraries, lectures, music, and contact with people of world prominence.
Join in the endowment of this institution—your gift will be a genuine investment in youth for time and eternity.
Des Moines University, Box N, Highland Park, Des Moines, Iowa

If a beautiful park, or beautiful pictures, or uplifting philosophy can ennoble men, what might we not expect from conspicuous posting of the basic statements of Christianity? Who can calculate the value of outdoor signs, street-car cards or newspaper space containing such texts as these:

"Owe no man anything, but to love one another, for he that loveth another has fulfilled the law. Love worketh no ill to his neighbor; therefore love is the fulfilling of the law." Rom. 13:8, 10.

"He that loveth his brother abideth in the light and there is none occasion of stumbling in him. But he that hateth his brother is in darkness and walketh in darkness and knoweth not whither he goeth, because that darkness hath blinded his eyes." I John 2:9-11.

* * *

The attempt has been made here to indicate the value of a more broadspread presentation of teachings which have been proved practical by people of all classes, and in all walks of life.

Many newspapers are finding that their readers welcome the presentation of such texts on their editorial pages. At least one newspaper has found that the Bible printed serially is considered a very attractive feature by its readers.

To dwell further upon the possible benefits of spreading this work along the lines outlined is to question your own intelligence and desire to be of service.

Our Book Shelf

Seven for a Secret, by Mary Webb. New York: Doran. $2.

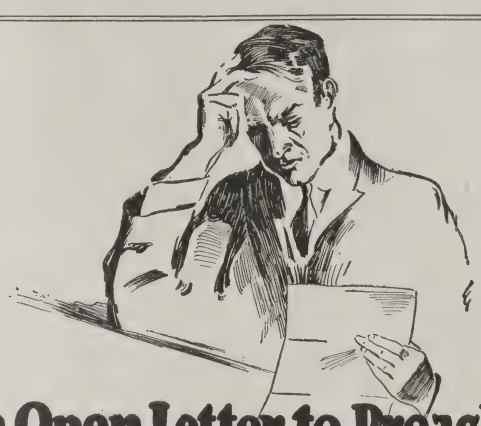
A story of folks living on the Welsh borderland. They are a rough people, close to the soil and things primitive. There is no veneering to gloss over unpleasant facts either in the lives of these people or in the recording of the author. Mrs. Webb has written true to life and has done a worthy work—with the exception of the title. That is a misnomer for a strong book.

Surprising Antonia, by Dorothy Foster Gilman. Boston: Page Co. Illustrated by Thelma Gooch.

Sprightly and interesting so far as the story is concerned, but not a book we would recommend for our girls—"darn thing," "darn lucky," "darn that thread," to say nothing of such expressions as "keep your shirt on," "for Pete's sake," "spilling the beans," sprinkle the conversation of the three college girls, who are the heroines of the story, far too liberally. A thoroughly good true-to-life girl's story can be written without such offensiveness.

The Story of the Hymns and Tunes, by Theron Brown and Hezekiah Butterworth. New York: Doran. $2.25.



"Story of the Hymns," by Hezekiah Butterworth, published a generation ago, proved so popular that there was a demand for a new edition. While this was under preparation, Mr. Butterworth died and Theron Brown carried on the work, a part of which was to combine the "Story of the Hymns" in one volume with the "Story of the Tunes." By no means all of the hymns are reproduced in the 550 pages that make up the volume, but as many as possible of the best known ones are given. The monographs of the writers and composers are of much personal interest. The illustrations from photographs greatly enhance the value of the volume.

The New Testament Today, by E. F. Scott, Union Theological Seminary. New York: Macmillan. $1.50.

No doubt this little volume is a fair reflector of the mind of the age concerning the New Testament—the critical and so-called "modern" interpretation of the book. It is written in a reverent spirit and in the best literary form, as might be expected from an author of international eminence.

We suggest two criticisms: The author implies that the different views and the controversies prevailing about the sacred writings are due to differences of conceptions the New Testament writers had of the principles and teachings of Jesus owing to their bias and education which gave rise to misinterpretations of the words. We believe that a fairer explanation would be that later students and expositors of the writings by their mental differences and bias have done much to refract the white light of inspired truth into colors corresponding to their own individual notions, so that many of the alleged contradictions in this spiritual classic may arise from theological aberrations in the mental bias of critics, hence many of the so-called contradictions are subjective in the critics rather than objective in the gospel.

In his treatment of the origin, contents and evolution of the book, the author ignores or eliminates any and all oversight of the Holy Spirit that was to guide the disciples into all truth. Probably he thought the necessity of the critical spirit compelled him to such a course, even providing that he accepted such a fancy as a verity.

An Open Letter to Preachers on Moving Pictures—

YOU'VE heard of many churches which have successfully used moving pictures. You've probably considered them for your own church, but if you're like thousands of others, you foresaw difficulties which have thus far prevented your taking action.

We realize your position. We know it is not a simple matter to install a moving picture projector, and thereby immediately solve all your problems. It takes careful study and conscientious effort to rightly use moving pictures in the church. But when properly applied, the results achieved far outweigh the effort required.

MAKE YOUR CHURCH FULFILL ITS MISSION

Now here's our proposition. Your job is to make your church fulfill its mission. Ours—stripped to its bare commercial side—is to sell projectors. You can't achieve real success unless you use every known means for advancing the Cause. We can't achieve real success unless we place our projectors so carefully that they will make their owners real boosters. Therefore, our aim and yours have one common point—to find, if possible, how moving pictures can profitably be used in your church. You know more about your particular problem than we or any outsider can ever know. But for years, we have been cooperating with churches in the use of pictures, and we have come in contact with many scores of cases in which widely varying problems have been solved. We freely offer you this store of experience.

YOU ASSUME NO OBLIGATION

You assume no obligation whatever in allowing us the privilege of consulting with you. All you do is sign the coupon, and mail it. We do the rest, and do it in a spirit of helpful co-operation. We can't afford to sell you a projector unless you're convinced that you can use it advantageously. We know that its special features, such as the combination of stereopticon and moving picture projector, and the gold glass shutter making possible stopping on a film, and showing a "still" at any point, particularly fit it for church use. But we want you to know even more than that before you buy. We want you to know where you can get film, how you can make the pictures promote the general program of the church, and how you can pay for such equipment. Our time payment plan will interest you, and our knowledge of the experience of other churches will shed light on your problems of application.

May we serve you? Now is the time to act—when you're looking forward to a winter of renewed activity. Mail the coupon now.

ACME MOTION PICTURE PROJECTOR COMPANY,
806 W. WASHINGTON BOULEVARD, CHICAGO.

Gentlemen:

I understand you are in a position to be of service to me in my consideration of moving pictures in my church. I would be glad to have concrete ideas applicable to this particular community. Understand, of course, that I do not obligate myself in any way.

Name: .....

Address: .....

CHURCH: .....

Extra Money for Your Church

Quickly and Easily Raised Selling Messenger's 1924 Scripture Text Calendars

This Church Made $51

Anna Holkeboer, 9th St. Christian Reform Church, Holland, Michigan, says: "We decided to try your plan in order to raise money for missions. The 300 Calendars were distributed among 20 members and sold in their spare time in 10 days. We recommend the sale of your calendars to any class or society."

Churches everywhere successfully raise money for budgets, pledges, etc., clearing net profit of $50 to $500. Easy to sell. Big profits. An article for church sale that has no equal. Every family needs one and buys on merit as well as the desire to help the church.

Kalamazoo, Michigan, North Presbyterian Church, says: "Our treasurer sent for one hundred calendars which were sold before they arrived. Afterwards sent for two hundred more which were sold quickly, and we are closing our year with a good amount of money in our treasury which we could not have had if we had not sold your beautiful calendars."

Plan Endorsed by Ministers

Ministers everywhere endorse our plan as a dignified method of raising money for the church. 1924 calendars now ready. Write today for Messenger's Money-Making Plan and Special Prices to Churches.

MESSENGER PUBLISHING CO.
314 W. Superior St., Dept. 24 Chicago, Ill.

IT IS A BURNING SHAME

that so many churches are without sufficient insurance and not properly safeguarded against fire.

Baptist Department
Mutual Insurance Corporation furnishes protection AT COST

FIRE, LIGHTNING and WINDSTORM

No assessments; easy payments; profits to policyholders; legal reserve for protection of policyholders same as stock companies.

Parsonages, Homes and Personal Effects of Church Members also insured.
No agents. Deal direct.

National Mutual Church Insurance Co., 22 years old under same management. Address Henry P. Maglli, Manager. 1500 Insurance Exchange Chicago, Ill.

If Some One Should Ask You About a Will

And when you make your own
Our Corporate Name is:

The American Baptist Home Mission Society

CHARLES L. WHITE, Executive Secretary
SAMUEL BRYANT, Treasurer
23 East Twenty-Sixth Street
New York, N. Y.

Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society
(CORPORATE NAME)
ALICE M. HUDSON, Treasurer
276 Fifth Avenue New York City

Van Duzen Bells
formerly Van Duzen & Tift

Guaranteed Genuine Bell Metal Bells made of Copper and Tin. Famous for full rich tones, volume and durability.

The E. W. Van Duzen Co.
Buckeye Bell Foundry
CINCINNATI, OHIO

Est. 1837 422-434 East Second St. Send for catalogue.

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS.

UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.

Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL

Ask for Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 10
ESTABLISHED 1858
THE C. S. BELL CO. HILLSBORO, OHIO

OUR MUSIC CORNER

CONDUCTED BY WILLIAM LESTER

HAVE YOU A JUNIOR CHOIR?

The hot summer months constitute a real problem for many of our churches. This problem is likely to become most troublesome in the hottest month of them all, the month of August. Then the morning congregations may still have somewhat respectable dimensions, but what a poor showing they so often do make in the evening! It is so poor that many churches simply give up their evening services during the excessively hot season and try to get on with only the one in the morning. In the language of the automobilist, it's "hitting only on one cylinder" for the time being.

Yet there are many churches in which that cannot be wisely done. The evening service has in many cases largely become a young people's service. This is especially true, of course, of the bi-lingual churches, where the morning service is conducted in the mother-tongue of the older folk, with the consequent absence of the younger element; while the evening service is conducted in the language of our land, which lacks the religious associations that the mother-tongue has for the older generations, so that they do not feel strongly drawn to the English evening service. In all such and similar cases, when the evening service has rallied the younger generation, that service cannot simply be given up without working a severe hardship on the young people by depriving them of the service that has become peculiarly their own. How is such a situation to be met?

It is always helpful to know how it has been met by churches in their endeavor to solve their summer problems, and we shall be glad to open the columns of our reading pages to any suggestions or plans that have been found practicable. (So also will THE BAPTIST Editor) "Manus manum lavat," the Latins used to say, that is, one hand washes the other. Let us practice that among ourselves and help one another all we can. Let us begin by telling how one church does it. The situation there is the one pointed out above. The evening service is a rallying-place and time for the young people. For the summer months this church has organized a large junior choir for Sunday evening work to still more emphasize the special character of this service. When the time comes for the evening service to be omitted, it is simply transferred bodily, special choir and all, to the Sunday forenoon immediately after the Sunday-school. The service is complete in all its parts, with a short sermon, the junior choir furnishing the anthem or anthems. The service is closed in the usual way and the congregation dismissed. Those who wish to can go home without feeling that they have been guilty of an impropriety. After a brief intermission, the second and usual Sunday morning service begins. That, of course, is somewhat shortened, which is usually more than appreciated on a warm August Sunday morning. It all is a bit harder on the preacher, but he can be depended on to do his part if it promises to be a solution of one of his big problems.

While the junior choir is a very important factor in this church's plan to meet the peculiar conditions of its summer work, it is a very valuable asset to any church, which can be realized on not only during the hot summer months. Such a choir will always be welcome for special occasions, and it can be used successfully now and then all through the year, quite often in support of, and in cooperation with, the regular church choir. It will give the youngsters something really worth while to do and will arouse their enthusiasm. They will be there to do their part, and they will not be there alone, for they can be counted on to see to that themselves. Where the youngsters are, the parents are also quite likely to be.—H. VON BERGE in The Choir Leader.

WHAT IS MUSIC

What is music, asks the director of the Erie Philharmonic Orchestra, and he continues:

Ask one hundred persons and you will probably get a hundred widely different answers.

To some music is that which is given in restaurants with meals. To others, it is an excuse for faddishness, a place to gather in the resplendency of clothes. And to still others, it is the gift of the gods, the nearest approach to the divinity in man, that which expresses where words leave off, the shade of emotions and meanings which cannot be spoken in any tongue.

There are some who, looking down from the heights of the symphony, sneer at all which bears no foreign name, all which seems to be stamped with popularity and simplicity.

There are some who in the midst of jazz and ragtime shun the beauties of the classics, believing them to be dry and uninteresting.

But music has no nationality, and no caste. It is not divided into popular and classical by any hard and fast lines. It is impossible to tell that which is on or the other, of course, accepting the words "popular" and "classical" in the accepted use of them by the people. And music which is sincere is real. If it be of today and here—of the vaudeville or the opera—if the emotion seems sincere it is music.

Music that is sincere lives. Music which is insincere dies. The popular songs which have a brief life, and then go down to oblivion prove that they were not real. The songs of centuries live because they say something you can believe. If you like a simple song do not be ashamed of it. If you like a great symphony, do not be afraid to discuss it with the crowd. Music is coming out of its mysterious shell.

---

W. A. Clark, Jr., president of the Philharmonic Orchestra of Los Angeles, announces that the orchestra will give a prize of $1,000 for the best symphony or symphonic poem and $500 for the best chamber music composition by a California composer. The judges will be Walter Henry Rothwell, Henry Schoenfeld, Charles Wakefield Cadman, Homer Grunn and Dr. Humphrey J. Stewart. The prize winning manuscripts will be given first performances by the Los Angeles Orchestra, but the composers may copyright them for the sake of royalties accruing from their use by other organizations.

An Open Letter to Our Pastors

ASSUMING that our pastors are ALL readers of our denominational papers we take this sure way to your attention.

First, we as laymen wish to acknowledge our debt to you---a debt we never can hope to repay. You have labored in season and out of season with us, seeking to bring us a vision of higher and better things and to a knowledge of God through his son, Jesus.

But we have been slow to respond. We have been commissioned, but often have failed to perform. We have regarded as duties opportunities for Christian work which we should have treated as privileges. Your consecrated patience, at which we marvel, it is our desire in some way to repay.

We are mindful of our shortcomings and seek now to pledge ourselves anew to do the will of our Father.

Your laymen are mobilizing. We need your leadership and your sympathetic interest in our purposes. On Sunday, September 30, the laymen of the Northern Baptist area are desirous of rallying in large numbers in all the churches, and we ask you to give us a special message on that day. Tell us how we can help you, and how we can help ourselves to do the work of the Master.

We have tried to reach the laymen of your church, but the field is very large and our means of communication are still imperfect and incomplete. If, perchance, your men have had word from us and should ask you to give them a special message, we ask you to grant their request. Should one of your laymen ask to share a portion of the time to rally the men for more active service, we hope you will regard the request with favor.

If the laymen of your church have not yet been reached, may we ask you to call their attention to the fact that Baptist laymen are undertaking to make Christ a more vital part of their daily lives and are seeking service in their individual churches as evidence of their desire to be useful.

We, as men, want to know, most of all, how we can apply Christ in our lives every day. Then we want to help those agencies that are dedicated to the extension of this knowledge. We want to build up the influence of our own churches. We wish to attend our State conventions in larger numbers to learn more about the larger plans. Likewise, we want to partake of the inspiration of our national gatherings and to learn more of the great aims of our denomination which can be carried forward most successfully by union of our scattered forces.

Will you help us in this effort to get into step with the purposes of the Master? Without your sympathetic co-operation we can do little. We want to be "Minute Men" in the service and we shall look to you for orders. May we have your orders on

LAYMEN'S SUNDAY SEPTEMBER 30?

If suggestions for observing Laymen's Sunday are desired, they may be obtained through your State Laymen's Chairman, care your State Convention Headquarters, or by writing to National Council of Northern Baptist Laymen, 17 East Forty-second Street, New York, Phone Murray Hill 6074.

NATIONAL COUNCIL OF NORTHERN BAPTIST LAYMEN

Headquarters,* 17 East 42nd Street, New York

R. O. JASPERSON
Executive Secretary

WILLIAM TRAVERS JEROME, JR.
Chairman

Chimes for your Church

Are now within easy reach

"The White Temple"
Miami, Florida

First Methodist Episcopal Church
The White Temple
320 N. E. Second Avenue
Miami Florida

May 24, 1923

J. C. Deagan Co. Inc.,
Berteau & Ravenswood Aves.,
Chicago, Ill.

Dear Sirs:-

Your Mr. Little has spent several days working faithfully upon our "Edwin Nelson Memorial Chimes" and the results are most pleasing to all of us. Mrs. Nelson and I are most enthusiastic. Our musical director, who is conductor of the strongest male chorus in the entire south, in addition to his work with us, and who was chime ringer for one of the best sets of bells in the middle west for many years, says that he has never heard such beautiful quality of tone in any other chimes, bells or tubes, as is now produced on our set. During the testing yesterday a number of musical people stopped their cars to listen and to give most hearty expression to their commendation of the music produced by them.

We wish to thank you sincerely for what you have done to give us the best chimes in the entire south, and many say, the best toned in the entire country.

Very truly yours,

W. A. Merrill

DEAGAN Tower Chimes have revolutionized Chime building. They are electrically played—no tugging at ropes. Your organist plays rich melody on them and blends chime music into the services.

Daily use of chimes brings a spiritual awakening that means much to the prosperity of your church. They are truly a Memorial Sublime which lives through generations to come and for all time perpetuates the memory of both the donor and the loved one in whose memory and honor they are placed.

Deagan Chimes are superbly musical, stately, dignified, perfectly tuned and flawless in pitch. They are a blessing on the entire community.

Our new Community Memorial Plan will enable you to secure Deagan Tower Chimes for your church. Fill out and mail the coupon for particulars.

Complete sets
DEAGAN TOWER CHIMES
$5,000 to $10,000

J. C. Deagan Inc.

Established 1880

Deagan Bldg., 1783 Berteau Ave.
Chicago, U. S. A.

COUPON

J. C. DEAGAN, Inc., Chicago
Send full particulars of Deagan Tower Chimes and the new plan which will enable us to purchase them.

Name _____
Street _____
City _____ State _____
Church _____
School _____

Volume IV September 8, 1923 No. 32

The Baptist

Published Every Week by the [illegible] Convention

Univ. of Ill. Library
Urbana
Ill.

The Essence of the Christian Gospel

NOW the essence of that spirit is like its fruit—love and joy and peace. God gave these things in the beginning, and in every beginning He gives them in embryo again. A little child possesses them. Love, instinctive and uncalculating and without reserve, that is love as you see it in a child, and it comes straight from God. Free-hearted, careless joy—we delight to watch that in a child, because it is so rare, rarer than it need be in these later days. The peace of a child is, or ought to be, unmixed with fear, because some one is at hand to guarantee security. That is the peace of God. "Suffer the little children to come unto me, for of such is the kingdom of heaven." What else can that mean but that we see in them God's spirit fresh from himself? Jesus demands that somehow it shall be retained. "Whosoever shall not receive the kingdom of heaven as a little child he shall in no wise enter therein."

Why do love and joy and peace suffer this dimming and cramping process in men and women even of the Christian world, till in the end the spirit grows powerless against the constraints and compulsions of old age? Because we have not yet quite discovered how to let them grow. Growth demands freedom and joy. There is too much still in education which stunts both. We still prefer many of us to impose on children things of our own which we have judged to be good instead of developing the gifts God gave to them.

To Jesus this work of development was an altogether hopeful and a joyful process. Its beginnings in the gospel story are bright with the radiance of human joy. There is darkness in the gospel, but the light is stronger. It begins with the songs of angels, and it ends with the glorious adornment of a bride worthy at last of the eternal love which has sought her from the first. There is pain and sacrifice in the gospel, and there is a sternness more terrible than the terrors of the law. There is tribulation in it, there is death. But its essence still is love and joy and peace, as even older folk can understand the words.

—The Right Rev. A. A. David.

Fresh from the Field

The church at Gainesville, Fla., has made plans for the erection of a building to cost $76,000.

John D. Rockefeller has made the University College Hospital, London, a gift of $6,000.

A "No More War" parade was recently held in London. The Quakers had the largest representation of any body. Maude Royden had charge of one section.

The National Baptist Convention, negro, convenes in Los Angeles, Cal., Sept. 5-10. Dr. L. K. Williams is president of the convention.

There are between 80,000 and 100,000 students in schools in Turkey. Paints are very seldom used in the schools although water-color painting probably will be taken up. Germany supplies most of the chalk and crayons.

A telegram received from the Foreign Mission Society just as we go to press: "Following cablegram just received from Japan have no reliable information concerning Tokyo, Yokohoma. As far as we know our own missionaries are all safe. Property damage not yet ascertained. Signed, Charles B. Tenny."

The First Presbyterian Church of New York City is to be equipped with a fire-escape, the first, it is reported, to be placed on any of that city's churches. It will be in the form of an iron stairway down the side of the building leading into the church yard. The necessity for a fire-escape is due to the drawing power of the pastor, Harry Emerson Fosdick, who attracts such crowds that such precaution for their safety must be taken.

The first report of the Laura Spelman Rockefeller Memorial funds brings to light the fact that in twenty years an aggregate of $186,832,574 has been pledged or paid out. The capital contained in the Rockefeller trust funds for philanthropy is at present $383,278,041, including an estimated $15,000,000 for the Rockefeller Institute for Medical Research. The total amount of gifts of the third big Rockefeller donating organization, the General Education Board is $97,216,774 in payments or pledges. Chronologically, the Laura Spelman Rockefeller Memorial is the last of the four important Rockefeller funds. Its purposes are charitable and philanthropic.

The twenty-ninth annual Bible conference at Winona Lake, Ind., was the greatest in point of attendance, sustained interest and program ever experienced. Among the speakers were: Lionel Fletcher, London; Wylie Blue, Belfast; Reginald W. Thompson, Liverpool; H. C. Morrison, Louisville; Simon Peter Long, Chicago; P. W. Philpott, Chicago; W. H. Griffith-Thomas, Toronto; John Timothy Stone, Chicago; Charles F. Wishart, Wooster; Bishop Edwin Holt Hughes, Boston; Bishop Warren A. Chandler, Atlanta; Charles R. Erdman, Princeton; Pres. M. G. Kyle, Xenia. The average daily attendance exceeded 4,500, although the registration was only 3,250. Plans have been made and speakers selected for 1924 and some for 1925. Dr. William E. Biederwolf was dean.

The Chicago Ministers' Conference will meet Sept. 10 at 125 N. Wabash Ave. George Martin will be in charge. The program will consist of B. Y. P. U. convention reports.

The American Bar Association has issued a pamphlet containing the program and suggestions for the celebration of Constitution week, Sept. 16-22. Ministers are urged to preach sermons on the first amendment to the Constitution Sunday, Sept. 16.

Grass is growing luxuriantly on the tops of thousands of freight cars lying in the railroad yards of the Ruhr Valley. Most of them are filled with merchandise and have not turned a wheel since the Belgians and French marched into the industrial area last January.—Dearborn Independent.

Baptists of the Maritime Provinces met in conference at the Wolfville Church, Nova Scotia, Aug. 30-Sept. 2. One of the features of the meeting was the addresses by Dr. F. W. Patterson, president of Acadia University. Dr. C. W. Rose of Peterboro, Ontario, is president of the United Convention, which was organized in 1846 with a membership of 14,177. There is now a membership of 61,000.

In a letter to the British Weekly, J. H. Maclean of Conjuveram, India, writes "In a recent issue a correspondent wrote: And there are 33,000 gods worshiped in India! I wonder if he would have found a single mark of exclamation sufficient had he known that the number of gods, according to a popular saying, is not thirty-three thousand but thirty-three crores; and as a crore is ten millions the number of gods is 330 millions. Perhaps it does not matter very much, for, after all, the real question is not how many gods are available for purposes of worship, or how many may actually be worshiped, but whether one believes in one God or in more than one. It is only fair to add, however, that there are many in India who maintain stoutly that there is only one God."

German Baptist churches of Western Canada recently held a conference at Leduc, Alberta.

The Pabst brewery property in Milwaukee, is to be converted into a cheese distribution depot operated by the Pabst corporation.

An award of $25 was announced for the best design to be used by the World's Sunday School Association in advertising the ninth convention of that association which will be held in Glasgow, June 18-26, 1924. The design selected was drawn by James Kelly of Glasgow.

The summer school of theology held at Winona Lake, Ind., July 20-Aug. 16, had an enrolment of seventy, forty-two of whom were ministers representing twelve denominations and eleven states. The faculty consisted of A. T. Robertson, George Stibitz, Leander S. Keyser, Arlo Ayres Brown, and Pres. M. G. Kyle. The success of the school has led to larger plans for next year with a faculty of eight professors from the leading theological seminaries.

Without a driver is a Ford car; without a leader is a vigorous sewing school of Indian men and women; without a teacher is a flourishing Sunday school; without a counsellor is an active B. Y. P. U.; without a guiding spirit is a flourishing Montana enterprise. The best years of a young woman's life have been spent building up this work. She had to leave. Some one trained in Christian service must take her place. Six such vacancies as this occur this year in Indian fields under the Woman's Home Mission Society. Young women should prepare now for next year's calls.

Dr. Charles A. Walker, of Dover, Del., has completed tabulation of the Baptists of the world for publication in the 1923 American Baptist Year Book. The figures show that in the United States there are 57,888 churches, 44,565 ministers, and a constituency of 7,774,862. To this total should be added fifteen bodies of miscellaneous Baptists, as reported by Dr. E. P. Alldredge, of Nashville, Tenn., superintendent of the department of statistics and survey of the Sunday school board of the Southern Baptist Convention, numbering 385,824 members, making the total in the United States 8,160,686. In Canada there are 761 churches, 680 ministers, and 135,590 members. In the United States and Canada there are 58,649 churches, 45,245 ministers, and 8,296,276 members. Central and South America, including the West Indies, as reported by the British Baptist Hand-book have 1,457 churches, 767 ministers, and 282,348 members. Europe has 5,327 churches, 3,776 ministers, and 636,246 members; Asia, 2,576 churches 1,722 ministers and 267,362 members; Africa, 375 churches, 239 ministers, and 32,763 members; Australasia, 401 churches, 322 ministers, and 31,224 members. Baptists of the world have 68,785 churches, 52,071 ministers, and a constituency of 9,346,219. Were it possible to secure accurate statistical information concerning the Baptists of Russia, who probably number 2,000,000, the Baptist constituency of the world, as Dr. George W. Truett, of Dallas, Tex., intimated in the opening sentence of his sermon before the Baptist World Alliance, in Stockholm, would exceed 11,000,000.

(Continued on page 996)

Rest and Work

WHERE is rest? In what isles of the summer-clad seas?
In what garden of balm? 'Neath what sleep drooping trees?
By what still-growing waters, what lily-fringed streams?
In what meadows of silence, what valley of dreams?
'Neath what thunderless skies, by what hillsides of sleep?
On what moon-lighted mountain or star-lighted deep?
Yes, where on the earth's or the ocean's wide breast
Is the home of release and the harbor of rest?

Why, here in the corn field—and take up your hoe!
Right here in this mill—make the paddle wheel go!
Right here with your engine—up steam and away!
Right here with your sewing machine every day.
Where there's work there is rest, and it's nowhere beside,
Though you travel all lands, and you sail every tide.
Where is rest? Go to work, and your spirit renew,
For no man can rest who has nothing to do.

—Sam Walter Foss.

The Baptist

Vol. IV Chicago, Ill., Sept. 8, 1923 No. 32

THE BAPTIST, founded in 1919, is published every Saturday by the Northern Baptist Convention at 417 South Dearborn Street, Chicago, Illinois. Entered as second-class matter, February 4, 1920, at the post office at Chicago, Illinois, under the Act of March 3, 1879. Acceptance for mailing at special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized February 4, 1920.

Managing Editor: Edgar L. Killam
Committee on THE BAPTIST
EMORY W. HUNT, Chairman

CLARENCE A. BARBOUR HUGH A. HEATH

RATES: Single subscriptions, $2.50 a year; church clubs equal to 10 per cent of church membership, $2.00; single copies, 10 cents. In foreign countries the postage is $1.04 extra; in Canada, 52 cents extra. CHANGE OF ADDRESS: Both old and new addresses should be in our hands at least two weeks before the change is to go into effect. Always give key number as it appears on your label.

REMITTANCES: Should be made payable to THE BAPTIST. Acknowledgment made through change of label date. If check on local bank is sent, please add exchange.

SPECIAL: Renewal notice will be sent each subscriber previous to the date to which subscription is paid. Subscriber should give attention to notice by sending in renewal promptly, or, if paper is not desired for the coming year, should send in a discontinuance order.

ADVERTISING: Display: Rate per agate line, 30 cents; full page (420 agate lines), $125. No time or space discounts. Classified: 6 cents per word. Obituary notices: One hundred words free; 4 cents per word for additional. Cash to accompany order.

CORRESPONDENCE relating to subscriptions should be addressed to THE BAPTIST, Subscription Department, 417 South Dearborn Street, Chicago, Ill.

BRANCH OFFICES: The office of the state director of promotion in each state is an office of THE BAPTIST.

Table of Contents

| | Page |
|---|---|
| FRESH FROM THE FIELD | 994 |
| EDITORIAL | 997 |
| A NORMAL RELIGIOUS CHILDHOOD, BY P. R. HAYWARD | 1000 |
| CHRISTIAN EDUCATION FOR THE TWENTIETH CENTURY, BY FRANK L. ANDERSON | 1003 |
| EXCAVATING THE HOME TOWN OF ABRAHAM | 1006 |
| ON THE TRAIL OF THE BAPTISTS, BY HELEN B. MONTGOMERY | 1007 |
| THE AMERICAN AMALGAM, BY CHARLES L. WHITE | 1008 |
| HEROES OF GOLDEN DEEDS, BY JULIA W. WOLFE | 1009 |
| THE NURTURE PROCESS IN MISSIONARY EDUCATION OF CHILDREN, BY FLORA JAMES COLLYER | 1010 |
| THE OL' CLO' MAN, BY S. H. KIRKBRIDE | 1011 |
| RELIGIOUS EDUCATION | 1012 |
| YOUNG PEOPLE'S WORK | 1013 |
| THE CHIMNEY CORNER | 1014 |
| OUR OWN FOLKS | 1016 |
| OUR BOOK SHELF | 1022 |
| OUR MUSIC CORNER | 1023 |

Who's Who

P. R. Hayward, author of "A Normal Religious Childhood," is general secretary of the Religious Education Council of Canada, with headquarters at Toronto. Frank L. Anderson, who contributes "Christian Education for the Twentieth Century," is president of the International Baptist Seminary at East Orange, N. J. Mrs. Montgomery, former president of the N. B. C., writes us from Europe. Laymen and pastors have been generous in sending good things—"boiled down" they usually are, hence full of nourishment. Sample them.

Killam's Kollum

Modesty

THE BAPTIST is read all over, although with our severe black and white face it would be difficult for you to comprehend that we are blushing—therefore we state it. We are forced to blush. We are so—so, not exactly shy, but modest! But we have had such good things said about us of late and such good things done to us and with us—2,000 extra copies of the Aug. 25 issue was one order alone, to say nothing of many lesser orders for that number and also for other summer numbers. And the good things they have said about the numbers "hitting the spot," et cetera! We are making the most of it, for but too well do we know that the "kick and the squeal" are lurking somewhere near to puncture any undue inflation of pride.

Anent Pens

"I always carry my gold fountain pen with me. I can't write with anything else. Nothing like a gold pen and smooth flow of ink!"

"Well, I'll take a steel pen every time—and a stub at that——"

"I'm for steel, but not the stub——"

(Incidentally, some other folks, not Baptists, are for the steal but not the stub). This was a listened-in-on conversation. But of how little importance is the pen as compared with what it writes! Gold, steel, silver, quill, wood—the best pen is the pen that pens the best words. And if one is forced to take a stand on the question, then perhaps a partiality may be admitted, for to us the best pen of all is the one that pens a subscription to THE BAPTIST.

A Repeater

Firms must advertise to get their first customers; but if they don't keep them there's something wrong with their policy or they're not delivering the goods. Repeat orders spell satisfaction. Mr. H. M. Remley of Anamosa, Iowa, is what might be called a repeater. He writes: "Enclosed you will please to find my check (we are properly pleased) in payment of my subscription to THE BAPTIST. . . . I have been a reader of THE BAPTIST and its predecessor for sixty-eight years, and during this time this is my fifty-first subscription. I appreciate your efforts to make a good paper and congratulate you upon your success."

Fresh from the Field

(Continued from page 994)

The religious drama committee of the Federal Council of Churches is conducting a summer school at Madison, Wisconsin, Sept. 4-15. The enrolment is limited to fifty religious workers.

There is probably no profile more familiar to Americans than that on the Buffalo nickel. The original, who bears the name of Chief Two-Guns Whitecalf, was lately converted and has become a member of the Browning, Mont., Methodist church.

By earning $89,899.58, Yale students set a new high-water mark for summer work. Besides including the usual camp and sales positions this work covered practically every type of employment a normal individual can fill.

Frederick Ralph Huggins, aged eleven, has been appointed organist at Emmanuel Church, Trowbridge, Wiltshire, England. A year or two ago, when with his mother at a concert, he observed: "I'm going to be an organist," and his wish has now been gratified.

There is in the suburbs of Berlin a theater that takes farm produce as the price of admission instead of money. The seats range in price from a pound of butter, or its equal in marks at the current butter quotation, down to two eggs. Whether the butter and eggs are tested as to freshness has not been learned.

Twenty-four Christian centers with more than fifty missionaries of the Woman's Home Mission Society are doing effective work among the foreign populations of our country. Christian centers demand women of education and broad sympathies plus technical knowledge and experience in social and religious activities. The Missionary Training School offers a course that in one year will equip a college graduate with enough knowledge and experience to carry on the work of a Christian center.

Dr. and Mrs. A. T. Robinson, well-known stewardship evangelists, have been secured by the stewardship committee of the General Board of Promotion for a limited number of months and will be available for engagements. They spend a week with a local church and present their messages in popular form. Any church desiring these workers for a weeks' campaign, should communicate promptly with Dr. F. A. Agar, stewardship secretary of the Board of Promotion, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York City. It is advisable to make prompt application for their services.

New college buildings have been dedicated at Cuttack, Orissa, the gift of the British Baptist Missionary Society to the Indian Church. The college has a wide compound of its own, extending to six acres, with numerous mango trees. It is in the heart of the student quarter of the city, in close proximity to the government college (probably destined in the early future to become a university), the government medical school, and the engineering college. The new scheme of buildings includes, besides the college itself, a house for the principal, two houses for Indian assistants, and a hostel for twenty to thirty students, together with necessary outbuildings. All these are now complete with the exception of one of the Indian staff houses and a few small outbuildings. The principal of the college is Rev. H. W. Pike.

According to the Jerusalem correspondent of the Daily Mail, Palestine Jews continue to emigrate to the United States. More than 300 vises were granted in five days.

More than 700 delegates attended the eighth Scandinavian Sunday-school convention which was held in Christiania, Norway. The presiding officer was Rev. Bishop Johan Lunde of Norway. The next regular Scandinavian convention will be held in Finland in 1926.

The Loubat prize of $1,000 has been awarded by Columbia University to Justin Harvey Smith for his book on "The War with Mexico" which is published by Macmillan. The prize is given every five years for the best work in English on the history, geography, archaeology, ethnology, or philology of North America.

The $1,000,000 Mormon temple at Cardston, Alberta, was recently dedicated. Elder Heber J. Grant of Salt Lake City, prophet and president of the church, officiated at the ceremony. This is the first Mormon temple to be built outside of the United States.

There's always a reason—but not always so good a one! Dr. J. T. Tucker has indicated this on a printed leaflet of the American Board Mission in Portugese West Africa: "The printing is poor. Our former printer was killed by a hippopotamus."

Will the prohibitionist nations unite to defend themselves against the action recently taken by the wine-producing states to force them to repeal their prohibition laws? This was the question placed before the antialcoholism congress recently in session at Copenhagen by the president of its permanent committee, Dr. Hercod of Switzerland. The question put especially to the American delegation was "Will you advise the prohibition forces in the United States to urge the government to protest to France, Spain and Portugal against their threat of a commercial boycott—amounting to a threat of starvation—against Norway, Finland and Iceland, whereby they have compelled two of these countries either to repeal their prohibition laws or make so many exceptions that the laws have become virtually inoperative? Or, will you remain passive while other European states strangle the prohibition attempts of the small nations?"

As an indication of deepening interest in the religious work in the army, Rev. Charles S. Macfarland, general secretary of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, has been requested to make recommendations to the military authorities as to religious work in the camps from the point of view of the churches.

"Pastor's salary, $1,000. Received during the first nine months, $223.91"—this was one of the replies, received indirectly by the Michigan Christian Advocate, to an inquiry as to why the publication did not have more subscribers in a certain district. Figures talk!

Kate Douglas Wiggin died in England Aug. 23. She was regarded as one of the most accomplished women engaged in literary and philanthropic work in the United States. Her first story appeared in 1878 and was called "Half a Dozen Housekeepers." Then came "The Birds' Christmas Carol" which met with unusual success. Several of her works, "A Summer in a Canon," "Timothy's Quest," and "A Cathedral Courtship" were translated into foreign languages and became popular in Europe.

When All Is Done

By Harold J. Hamilton

THE sun goes up and the sun goes down,
And a thousand years are the same as one;
And leaves grow green and leaves grow
brown,
And what is it all when all is done?
Aye, what is it all, if this life be all,
But a draught to its dregs of a cup of gall,
A bitter round of the rayless years,
A saddening dole of wormword tears,
A sorrowful plaint of the spirit's thrall,
The grave, the shroud, the funeral pall—
This is its sum, if this life be all.

But it is not all—beyond this shore
A sun goes up to go down no more;
The leaves that grow green are green
for aye,
And the flowers that bloom know not decay;
A thousand years are indeed as one!
But for bitterness, then, the soul hath none,
And this is it all when all is done.

National Father and Son Week for 1923

ATTENTION is called to an important change of date for the observance of National Father and Son Week. This was originated in 1917 by the International Boys' Work Committee of the Y. M. C. A. fixing its dates for Feb. 10-17, covering the week of Lincoln's birthday. That period has been observed up to this year. As the movement developed, and larger numbers of fathers and sons attended the events conducted by the associations and churches alike, it was realized that closer cooperation with the Sunday-school organizations was desirable. Conferences were held, and a joint committee of representatives of the International Sunday School Association and of the Young Men's Christian Association was appointed.

In response to the desire of the Sunday-school forces the observance has been changed to Nov. 11-18, centering it around Armistice Day. The change has been ratified by the committee of reference and counsel of the Sunday School Association and Sunday School Council of Interdenominational Churches, by the International Sunday School Conference of Religious Education, and the international committee of The Young Men's Christian Association, whose boys' work committee will continue actively to promote this idea, which has become of worldwide significance.

Father and Son Week in the coming November will be the sixth annual observance. Now that it has become an established affair and of national scope, it is felt that in order to accomplish the objectives desired, the father and son idea should be an all-the-year-round program. In view of this, the father and son movement is being introduced this year with the thought that a year's program will be launched annually at the time of each Father and Son Week in the future.

The Baptist

When the School Bell Rings

WE have before this called attention to the fact that American home life for the greater part of the year revolves around the ringing of the school bell (or the school program, since the school bell is a back number) more dominantly than under any other motivation, unless it be the universal insistency of our three meals a day. The small boy was not so far out of the way who, when asked if he could name the three graces, replied, "Sure! Breakfast, dinner and supper." Certainly his mother has to exercise faith, hope and charity to keep up the endless and exigent iteration of the three meals. Yet even the meal times of the family are subjected to the tyranny of the school program, for twenty millions of pupils and teachers set the meal hours in millions of homes for the greater part of the year. Even the schedule of the father often has to yield precedence to the school program while the mother is bond-slave to it, if she be a mother who puts the welfare of her children above social doings, her artistic, musical, political or literary longings, or the claims of some society for the prevention of cruelty to dogs and cats.

So we are a nation mobilizing each September. Families away on vacation hasten home in time for the opening of the public schools. Those engaged in some temporary summer employment cut it short and prepare to resume their studies. Railways change their summer excursion schedules and settle down to the regular regime of the year. The big stores drop the frantic bargain-sale methods whereby they have tried to stimulate the anemic summer trade and open vigorous fall and winter campaigns. Manual labor with one big holiday at the beginning of September signalizes the end of the slack summer season and the beginning of full-time service.

With all the rest the churches, and especially the Sunday schools, rally their forces with the coming of September, though the formal Rally Day usually comes later in order to serve as a peak performance and model for the whole year in point of numbers and also in order to avoid the heat which characterizes frequently the earlier half of September and to catch those who return late from vacation.

But the bulk of the population takes no vacation, or a brief one, away from home, especially since the automobile furnishes an almost constant and inexpensive vacation; the twenty millions of school children with their teachers and the millions who must adapt themselves to the school schedule, come flocking back home or from their vacation play or work in the first days of September; the minister almost invariably has finished his vacation; and business of all kinds has changed from a leisurely route step to the double quick. The church cannot afford to wait a month until a bigger showing can be made before putting on its complete schedule, making church and Sunday school fresh, vivid and appealing. There is everything in a good beginning and a tardy beginning is never a good beginning.

There will be new families, and often many of them, who have come with the approach of fall into the radius of the church's attraction. It means much to the newcomers and much to the church if these strangers are, within the first few days, sought out and welcomed. Sometimes they drop in quietly of their own accord to see what sort of a church it is. In any case it makes a world of difference whether they find church and Sunday-school services opening promptly, proceeding with brightness and business-like readiness, having a quick, cordial welcome and a fitting place for the stranger, or whether they find a mere handful of attendants and these dilatorily dropping in, classes disorganized, many teachers and officers—sometimes the superintendent himself—missing, a poor substitute organist or chorister with lugubrious singing, and in general a disheveled appearance like that of the humble home where the tactless minister has called on washday—once.

AND even more important is it that the young convert and others who perhaps came into the church in the previous winter or in the spring with a large number of other Easter accessions, who came to the summer time with its distractions and irreligious allurements before they were fully wonted to the obligations of a Christian life and of church membership, and who have come to the early fall at a critical period in their lives with great danger of lapsing into a merely nominal or even disgraceful wearing of their church-membership—that these should be provided with an attractive service at the very beginning of the fall, given some place and simple task of their own, sought out if they do not immediately appear and in general surrounded with such a wise cordiality of welcome and such sincerity of interest that the young convert will say, "If these people care so much, I must not fail them and my Master."

We appeal, therefore, for a Rally Month in every church, beginning when the school bell rings in the first September days, with a regular, business-like, fully equipped service in church and Sunday school, and gathering constant momentum for a Rally Day service a little later, which shall be not a spasmodic thing worked up for the day, but a model and a pace-maker for all the rest of the year.

The Cure of Provincialism

ONE of the benefits of the recent Baptist World Congress was its inevitable broadening of outlook. With the mingling of Baptists from England, Germany, France, China, India, South Africa, Australia, and America, one would be likely to have any lingering provincialism jarred or melted out of him never to return. But, for that matter, just so far as any one ever gets a complete conception and makes for himself a thorough adoption of Christianity, he sloughs off provincialism and becomes in the truest sense a world-citizen.

Christianity started under narrowest limitations, among the Jews who had but a negligible bit of territory scarcely larger than some American counties, and the Samaritans, occupying the heart of Palestine, were held by the Jews as outcasts and aliens, while every nation and people outside of Judea was treated as beyond human fellowship or divine mercy. So strong was this feeling that Jesus himself in the brief period of his ministry did not directly antagonize it but simply implanted the principles which must inevitably and soon displace provincialism. Fortunately the record of this revolution in religious and human conceptions took place within the New Testament period and we have the record of it. Peter in part yielded to the new principle, and Paul accepted it utterly—a world-gospel, proclaiming the salvability and the potential unity of all mankind.

But all the progress of so-called civilization has not cured the nations of provincialism. The crusades went far toward bringing the nations of Europe together and begetting in them an acquaintance with and respect for Asiatic foes whom they had hated and despised as brutish barbarians. Modern invention by facilitating travel and the means of intercommunication throughout the world has broadened men's minds and made them at least theoretically aware of the common humanity of all peoples. During the recent world war when so large a number of nations, comprising perhaps two-thirds of the earth's population, were brought into the closest cooperation, it was said that "after the war provincialism will be classed among the preventible diseases." But to look now at Europe and at nations closely allied five years ago one would decide that there has been a marked and dangerous increase instead of a decrease in provincialism, for provincialism is not a matter of intelligence or wealth or power but it consists essentially in an inability to look at world-affairs save in the light of self-interest.

The truth is that provincialism has always been a preventible disease, but that it has been difficult to get men to take the remedy. The example, the teaching and the sacrifice of Jesus Christ hold the potency not only of the world's salvation but also of its unification. The apostle Paul was not only the greatest of Christian preachers and teachers; he was the world's supreme statesman, even though he seemed little concerned with contemporary diplomacy or politics. He had what was a higher and broader type of statecraft for he viewed the world as a unit, mankind as a vast brotherhood, and all human history from the point of view of God's throne and the divine purpose.

Today, as ever, the missionary motive and the program of Christ's parting commission constitute the surest prophylaxis against provincialism, and are humanity's single hope of world-unity and world-peace.

Balance and Emphasis

EMPHASIS is a matter of great importance, but it is often lost sight of and in consequence things go wrong, and people also.

Certain types of mind are prone to lay emphasis upon their personal interpretation of a statement of the scriptures instead of laying emphasis upon the original statement as it has come to us in the inspired Word. Truth is often quite largely a matter of balance.

In consequence of this unbalanced and overemphasized personal viewpoint, there is developed in others divergent opinions and a lack of oneness. In the resulting atmosphere minds become obscured or obstinate because unbalanced and in the final outcome truth is made the background for an untruth and the whole cause of truth suffers greatly.

During the early ages of Christian history much emphasis was placed upon being "in the world but not of it," and the resulting conditions produced recluses and a monastic system that diverted men and women from normal Christian living and made their lives unnatural and partly impotent for dynamic Christian service and witnessing in a world of lost souls. Today we need to put a balanced emphasis upon that same scriptural truth and develop in consequence a race of Christians who live among people in the world but who live unworldly lives of Christian sacrifice and service.

We are sometimes led to wonder whether or not the churches have been placing a wrong emphasis upon salvation. In the great desire to build up the cause of the kingdom and the local church, we have often made salvation seem to be a very limited and cheap experience that begins with a birth and ends here below with a bodily death. The need of linking up all that goes on in the daily life from the date of the new birth to the time of the bodily death is obscured by the overemphasis of a phase of truth that is glorious when balanced with other truth, but is ruinous when overemphasized and unbalanced by lack of other teaching. We lose many a church member because we overemphasize the "without-money-and-without price" side of salvation, but when that gracious truth is balanced by "whosoever doth not bear his own cross—cannot be my disciple" we at once discover that while it is much less attractive at the start, it is vastly more enduring and productive all the way between the new birth and the setting free of the soul for its homing by the death of the body. We certainly think that the matter of emphasis and balance needs more attention in our Christian teachings. We must not make emphasis and balance a matter of like and dislike but a matter of inspired revelation.

A Page of Opinion

Avoided Individual Responsibility

THIS is an age of avoided individual responsibility. The criminal and shiftless classes are not alluded to, but our church members and "good citizens." Organizations now attend to so many things that the burden of religious and civic duties seems largely to have been lifted from individual shoulders. In many cases the board, bureau or committee is seldom rigidly checked up as to its performance of duty, so that, to a great extent it becomes a law unto itself. Both the church and the state suffer. We wail about corrupt politicians year in and year out, and yet there is probably not a political boss in the country who would not be dethroned or brought to his knees if the substantial citizens did their duty by the state in availing themselves of all the means provided for putting decent men in office, securing only sound laws, and having them enforced.

It is so in all things. Every one is so busy in his own affairs that he hopes to get out of his obligation, as a social being, to serve in any public capacity. The Saturday Evening Post, in a vigorous editorial on this point, makes these remarks, that might well be repeated in sermons upon our social duties:

"This is an age of high standards in which much is demanded by many people, few of whom are willing to give up anything in return. The delegation of work and inconvenience to others is becoming a social disease. Men wonder what is the matter with the church, the real trouble being that they take such a light dose of religion or church attendance that it doesn't count. Their idea of religion, of church, is to be ministered to, not to minister to others. Religion, the church, is something for the clergyman to attend to, or perhaps a few societies and guilds. Anyway, it is something for the other fellow to keep going.....

"It was a long time ago that the Apostle Paul said that the body is not one member, but many, and all subsequent efforts to delegate to others the functions of the members have proved futile. Size and complexity of organization have obscured this truth, but nothing can disprove it."

—Biblical Review.

The Woman Movement Abroad

"THE most significant thing in Europe and the East today," according to Miss Sarah S. Lyon, who recently returned from a seven months' tour of Europe, Asia and Africa under the auspices of the National Board of the Young Women's Christian Association, "is the way in which the women of different races, creeds and political convictions are successfully overlooking war antagonisms, even to the point of working together under the same roof. One cannot help feeling that there may be more hope for the healing of war scars through the newly enfranchised women than through the men. This is partly because women of all creeds and classes have a common and dominating interest in the welfare of their country's children, but also because they have lived apart from politics and therefore attack the problems of state from a fresh viewpoint. Everywhere one feels the strength of the woman movement, and nowhere more strongly than in the groups of ambitious girls who flock to the local Y. W. C. A.'s."

An Imposture that Works

WRITING of the Catholic Congress in Birmingham, R. H. Coats says in the Baptist Times and Freeman: "What is this thing in Catholicism which persists through the ages, and survives every attack to which it is exposed? Is it the pagan element in it, so dear to the natural man, and older even than Christianity itself? Or is it some leaven, some salt of the spirit of Jesus Christ, preserving from corruption what would otherwise decay? Perhaps it is a mysterious mingling of the two. Catholicism is an imposture, says Dean Inge, but it is an imposture that works—that is the strange, bewildering paradox of history. It works because its advocates believe in it. They know what they stand for and where they stand. It behooves the upholders of a more enlightened faith to show a like staunchness and intensity of conviction.

Prepare for Peace

UNDER this title the bulletin of the Rochester church federation, Dr. O. T. Price, executive secretary, says:

"Our government is doing much to prepare the country for war. Propaganda is in the movies, in the press and in the air. What is Washington doing to educate for peace? Does any one know of anything? Eighty-six per cent of our federal budget is going for past and future wars, and 2 per cent for education, and somebody is blocking the way to every sort of international cooperation, the only hope for peace. How much longer is the church going to stand by while politicians shout, "Hands off! International relations are political issues, let the church keep out."

Is not the time nearly ripe for a religious crusade for peace, amity, international friendship, the World Court and the League of Nations? The Locomotive Engineers' Journal for April says:

"Edison says that London can be wiped out in three hours and that there is no way of preventing it. Bywater says that the French have now enough airplanes to lay waste half the cities of southern England, including London. The next war will be the twilight of the white civilization. The jackals and the coyotes will be barking amid the ruins of the great cities of the earth when its clouds lift for God to look down."

And still one party does nothing lest glory come to another party. "God, give us men" in Washington who will put humanity and country before party."

A Normal Religious Childhood *

By P. R. Hayward

IF one could imagine that only one human being had ever lived in all the history of the world, the problem of human conduct and the spirit that underlies it would still have been the issue of paramount importance. When, however, there are added to that individual, on this relatively small planet, one and a half billion other people like himself, with all the new issues and complicated social relationships that are involved, then the conduct of human beings each to each and the attitudes that underlie conduct become the supreme issues of the world.

The central problem of human life becomes, then, this: How can human conduct be made stable, dependable, predictable, and subservient to certain great ends of life itself? How can man be made so obedient to certain imperial ideals and loyalties that it can be said of him, in Milton's words,

"Faithful found,
Among the faithless, faithful only he;
Among innumerable false, unmoved,
Unshaken, unseduced, unterrified,
His loyalty he kept, his love, his zeal.
Nor number, nor example, with him wrought
To swerve from truth, or change his constant mind"?

Under the Sway of Religion

The central determining influence in creating and sustaining moral standards has always been religion. "The constant mind," dependable and high-purposed, has always found its inner spring and stay in a religious experience and a religious outlook upon the world. I read the other day the record of a tribe of primitive people, uncivilized, as we understand it, ignorant, and yet these people died of starvation in the midst of plenty because the food within their reach was declared taboo by the dictates of their religion. I talked not long ago with a man who visited Europe and he told me that the most upright, moral communities he had found were in out-of-the-way places where the people were completely under the sway of a religion that he himself could not accept. He saw that the lives of these people were given direction and sustaining power by a religious purpose and experience. In a recent publication was the record of a well-educated, competent, successful man of business, who opened up his heart and revealed the presence there of an empowering religion at the basis of a manifold relationship that bound him to others. The most consistent and effective living is in the lives of those who in some fashion have been brought under the sway of religion. History attests this; literature affirms it; the vagrant wills of those who appear in our courts of justice give to it a sinister illustration; the president of the United States saw this when he reminded the parents of America that if their interest in the welfare of their children went no further than their minds and bodies they may be only adding to the destructive forces of society; the deepest experience of our own hearts but bears out this statement; and from every hand there comes overwhelming and imperious evidence that it is only as human lives are girded and buttressed by religion that they are equipped for worthy living.

The power of religion in life is such that especial care should be exercised to secure a wholesome religious experience. To secure this end in childhood three essentials are urged: (1) a normal religious environment, in home, school, and community; (2) normal religious information, involving the correlation of religious ideals with sound scientific and social knowledge; (3) a normal religious training, to secure the expression of religious motives in everyday living.

How can this necessary element become part of a human life? What is the process through which some go and thereby possess it, and missing which, others are forever denied the boon of religious experience? My topic has been subdivided into three parts and for the sake of convenience we may consider them separately, remembering always that, in actual experience, they continually overlap and merge into each other.

Unseen Worlds of Influence

I. A normal religious environment is a necessity. I presume that we all look upon this as an axiom. We are part of all that we have met. And yet to the human mind in recent years there has come new and startling light upon this which is to a large extent a mystery. I have recently felt myself obligated to read many pages written by psychoanalysts and to wade through the murky records of depraved, dwarfed and twisted minds. When one of these books is finished I always feel the need of a moral, antiseptic bath and a season of fasting and prayer. And yet, in the midst of many forced and strained interpretations, there is, I believe, this invaluable guide for us in our service to childhood; the years of early life are not simply impressionable — we have always believed that, they are vastly more plastic than we have ever supposed and in ways that we have never dreamed. We have always recorded the conscious impressions for good or ill made upon young children, but we are learning now that, in addition to this, there is a vast unseen world of unconscious influence whose power no man has yet calculated and whose depth the plummet of human science is just beginning to sound. "The hitherto unobserved impressions of childhood," says one writer, "control the later development of the normal individual, even the peculiarity of his style, his choice of a vocation and of a wife, as well as the most insignificant affairs."

The effect of these facts upon the teaching of something so spiritual as religion must therefore be tremendous. A normal religious childhood demands a home life every moment and motion of which are stamping an indelible impression upon the child's soul. Not simply the establishment of a family altar, and the ethical standards that prevail in a father's business conversation are important, but also the very atmosphere itself as expressed in the tilt of the head, the smile, the frown, the elevated brow that expresses approval or disgust for the passing event, the arrangement of furniture, the pictures, the literature, the standard of humor, the table conversation, the dress, forms and symbols of speech, and all the manifold and intangible somethings that make up a child's encircling world. Of the school the same things are true. The standards that prevail in the community are all equally important. And what shall we say as to the possibility of teaching religion, religion in a real sense, to a boy in a Cape Breton mining town where the air is so gaseous that not a flower or a vegetable can grow in his back yard and an open gutter is the only sewer, whose father comes out of the mine at the end of a shift after a three-mile walk in a passage so low that he emerges in the open air stooped into a position that makes men look, as they have described themselves, like apes? Religion presupposes the dignity and the grandeur both of the human form and of the human soul and when our social system allows one group of men to dwarf and deform both of these in their fellows, then religion has to fight its way against many submerged, unknown, but powerful antagonists in the deep places of child nature. By the normal environment, then, we bind all the factors of life, home, school, play-ground, industry, and all, into one bundle and say that it is only as these are transformed according to wholesome standards of life that the soul of a child can become progressively and sanely religious. To establish a baby clinic is one thing; to teach a Bible story or a church creed is another; to put a youth in a factory is still another. But in the deepest sense, all are but aspects of the same thing, and that is the providing of a normal environment in which to nurture a religious life.

*Reprinted by special permission of "The Journal of Religion."

Information to be Given

II. Normal religious information is also another necessity. This also is the right of childhood. There are two things that occur to us, perhaps, as soon as we think of this theme—in the past there has been a tendency to place too much emphasis upon the possessing of the right ideas in the field of religion, and in the present, in certain quarters, there is not enough importance given to this vital necessity. We have learned that the two notions of faith and works, as set forth in the New Testament by Paul and James, are after all but expressions of a continual conflict in the individual soul, and that as we effect a reconciliation between these two we attain into poised and satisfying living. There are those who will tell us that ideas always precede action and that according to our ideas will our conduct be shaped; these are probably "intellectuals," the simon-pure product of our regimental memoriter system of education in which the verbally nimble-witted have devised the standards by which their motor-minded fellows are dubbed forever "unlearned." In the other camp are those who claim "action precedes thought" and that it is only in accord with experience that we really think at all; these are probably those who have meditated so long upon the practical barrenness of much of our purely intellectual culture that they have spewed it out of their mouths. With these two confusing and surging currents in modern education what shall we say as to the information to be given to children? These, it seems to me, are vital:

1. We must recognize that pure information, unadulterated facts, glib, memorized knowledge, denied any contact with real experience by the law of satisfying associations, is one of the most barren possessions of life. In religion this is especially the case. The possessing of a complete knowledge of the facts and customs of the church is in no sense a guaranty of a religious attitude of life, and, lacking certain other life-building processes, is as meaningless as knowledge of myths and ceremonies of the primitive peoples of Central Australia.

The Pet Fling

2. Information, however, is a necessity and must be provided. It will be secured whether it be provided or not. Unless the leaders in religion impart to our youth a reasonable intellectual conception of God, of his relation to his world, and of the laws by which the human life that he projected is best lived, our young people will get a distorted theology and a warped philosophy of life.

3. The information that we are to impart must be in accord with the best in the world in which our young people live and with the sane conclusions of reasoned and deliberate science. It is the pet fling of many of our modern youth that we leaders in religion, as one of them phrased it, "sidestep the scientific." Do we? If we do, it is either because we are indifferent as to the issues involved or too fearful to face them, and, in either case, we are unworthy leaders of young life.

4. Our information must be such that at no stage in this progressive grappling with the problems of life must the maturing youth say to his reasoning process, "Thus far—and no farther." There are many in our generation who will reason admirably, consistently, fearlessly, upon every question that appears—until certain problems appear—and then their sum total of philosophizing is, "Oh, well . . . you know . . .," and, finis. A normal religious childhood of today makes many severe demands upon us when a child of eight returns from Sunday school to declare a bitter hatred of the God who could send a flood to drown all the people in the world.

Mastering Circumstances

THERE is more cause for joy than for complaint in the hard and disagreeable circumstances of life. Browning said, "I count life just a stuff to try the soul's strength on." Spell the word "discipline" with a final g—"discipling." We are here to learn Time's lesson for Eternity's business. What does it signify if the circumstances about us are not of our choice, if by them we can be trained, learning the lessons of patience, fortitude, perseverance, self-denying service, acquiescence with God's will, and the hearty doing of it! Circumstances do not make character. The noblest character can emerge from the worst surroundings, and moral failures come out of the best. Just where you are, take the things of life as tools, and use them for God's glory; so you will help the kingdom come, and the Master will use the things of life in cutting and polishing you so that there shall some day be seen in you a soul conformed to his likeness.

—Maltbie Babcock.

III. A normal religious training, or experience, is the third necessity. Here it is that we find, I believe, our answer to the antagonism between those who overemphasize ideas and those who overemphasize conduct. The answer, or the reconciliation, is this: It is only as ideas become incorporated into satisfying conduct and attitudes that they become vital parts of life.

Many centuries ago some men and women got hold of an idea that they called democracy and in sundry ways and in diverse places this idea has been promulgated ever since. We have discovered, however, that it is possible for a man to gain a national reputation as an oratorical advocate of democracy and yet be a simon-pure autocrat in his own home. That is, democracy is an idea that he has never been taught to enjoy in any course of action. In thousands of Canadian communities today groups of boys and girls have been organized into variegated clubs in connection with their religious organizations, and in the activities of these clubs they receive not so much instruction in democracy or mere courses in morals and civics, but actual training in the practice of a democratic process itself. They share in an enterprise the goals and ideals of which demand of them an obedience to a democratic principle, and this obedience they gladly give even though they have never been told exactly what they do. This is real education. In order to make such a process complete there must be ideas as to what democracy means, but these ideas interwoven with experiment and experience in actual self-government, in loyalty to a majority decision, in devotion to a group enterprise, and in a shared life.

Demand for Directed Experience

Childhood demands this sort of directed experience in the field of religion. I heard not long ago a group of small children who were taken to the platform of a great auditorium and led in the recital in concert of the New Testament parable of the Good Samaritan. They did it beautifully, of course, because they had been carefully drilled and their voices rose and fell over the vast audience as if they were one. It was a fine exhibition of verbal memory, of coordinated sounds, of vocal control, and of careful instruction, but as a bit of religious education, it meant, under the best interpretation, little. Contrast with this that scene from the classic of our childhood, "Little Women," where the March children come down to their Christmas breakfast only to find it packed up by their mother and the maid, ready to be carried to a poor family just discovered down the street, and where the children delightedly make the most of a makeshift meal of bread and milk and trudge off as gay as larks to carry their food and some toys to those less fortunate than themselves. They do it with real pleasure, with a satisfying experience, and in so doing have been really educated in the meaning of a great parable. This is what I mean by an idea that has become a vital part of life through being worked into a satisfying experience. This conception of a vitalized education is with considerable rapidity making its way into the teaching of our so-called secular subjects and must be given its place as rapidly as possible in the teaching of religion.

> NOT on the vulgar mass
> Called "work," must sentence pass,
> Things done, that took the eye and had the price;
> O'er which, from level stand,
> The low world laid its hand,
> Found straightway to its mind could value in a trice:
>
> But all, the world's coarse thumb
> And finger failed to plumb,
> So passed in making up the main account;
> All instincts immature,
> All purposes unsure,
> That weighed not as his work, yet swelled the man's amount:
>
> Thoughts hardly to be packed
> Into a narrow act,
> Fancies that broke through language and escaped;
> All I could never be,
> All men ignored in me,
> This, I was worth to God, whose wheel the pitcher shaped.
>
> —Browning.

I may in closing make some suggestions as to ways in which a normal religious training can be provided.

1. Every possible effort must be made by all the agencies that touch home life to bring to bear there the influence of religion as a formative power in the lives of children.

2. For certain sections of our population we must strive for a larger amount of time to be given to religious education. This is particularly the case with our Protestant and Jewish people, with whom this amount of time is much less than is the case among our Catholic people. Week-day religious instruction, the midweek activities of boys' and girls' clubs, the daily vacation Bible school movement, and other lines of effort, seem to meet this need.

3. There must be among us all a better use of the time now at our disposal for instruction in religion. We must emphasize in our training a less intellectual and a more practical aspect of religious truths. We have too often judged the value of a process in religious education by a question as to what it has taught a child to know about religious things, while in the future we must ask more, what has it led a child to do and to become?

Submerged in Materialism

4. We will need to extend our teaching of religion to new groups not now reached, in any effective way, by any of us. The great danger facing our civilization today is not that one religious group among us is going to gain some advantage over the others, but that the very outlook of religion itself, religion and the idealism that it involves, may become submerged in the tide of materialism, selfish nationalism, group hatred engendered by class conflict, arrogant wealth, and social injustice that seem to be involved in our very social fabric. This is our danger, and to meet it there must be mobilized all the people, of all agencies and of every creed, who believe in the supremacy of the moral and the spiritual in human life. With this in view, then, I appeal confidently, not for this detail of practical method or that, but for a willingness to face the fact of the centrality of religion in life, the fact of the imminent danger facing the wills and spirits of our childhood, the fact of an urgent and serious responsibility resting upon those who deal in any way with children, and the fact that, as go the motives, the purposes, the ideals, and the habitual tendencies to action of the childhood of today, will go the civilization of tomorrow.

Christian Education for the Twentieth Century

Address before the one hundred and third annual meeting of the Connecticut Baptist Education Society.

By Frank L. Anderson

THE subject to which we shall give our attention has three organizing ideas. There is the word "education" which is the more general thought. "Christian" expresses at least quality and point of view; while "twentieth century" relates the subject to the life we now live. Without any further preliminary we shall proceed to discuss the theme before us.

I.

It is easier and more profitable to describe the educated man than to define education. President Nicholas Murray Butler in introducing his famous address on "The Meaning of Education" says, "It seems to be a fact that when a term is somewhat unusual and remote from our experience and our interest, we are apt readily to be able to assign to it a definite significance and a concrete meaning; but when it is a term with which we are familiar in our every-day experience and conversation, we often feel its significance and its import, and yet find great difficulty in logical or in scientific terms." Education belongs to that class of familiar terms and ideas. The lawyer in the parable asked for a definition of "neighbor;" Jesus described the behaviour of a man who may in justice be called a neighbor. With your permission I shall follow the Master's method.

A Lover of the Truth

We are wise if we heed the concise statement of Professor Horne, "Education is not a creator; there is but one Creator. Education is a developer," and, "The brain cannot be born again through education." Educational means, be they the world of nature or the world of persons, merely awaken the latent capacities with which we are born, develop them to their utmost possibility in order to fit into the place which God in terms of heredity has appointed us. Education means then "the world at work developing a man into the fulness of his stature." The normal man has capacities to know, to feel, to do, to be. These capacities are educable, they yield to the wise means selected by society for their growth.

1. The educated man is a lover of the truth. He would rather be right than be honored. He seeks for the truth as the man in the parable sought for the precious pearl. He will subordinate all temporal interests to his loyalty to the truth which he has found. But there is a vast difference between professed love of truth and the actual love of truth. Too many men are more ready to declare their allegiance to truth than they are to give time for careful study and search. Such men are hypocrites. There are men, many of them, in the pulpit who condemn what they have been too indolent to investigate. They bear false witness against their fellows. They send forth pronouncements on every subject imaginable from microbes to mountains, from evolution to spiritualism, without the most painstaking investigation before they speak. They are like Macaulay of whom Lord Melbourne said, "I wish I were as cocksure of one thing as Macaulay is of everything." In many, too many instances, it does not take a long search before we discover that the preacher was merely illustrating the omniscience of the grossly ignorant. I am reminded of a letter Sir Thomas Moore wrote the governing body of Oxford University. Referring to one of a group of men who opposed the study of Greek and the pursuit of a liberal education, he said among many other wise and sharp things valuable to us today as well as in the days of the Reformation, "What right has he to denounce Latin, of which he knows little; science of which he knows less; and Greek of which he knows nothing?" By way of contrast one who, heart-broken over the death of his only son and not being able to affirm what he would gladly have done, faith in the doctrine of immortality, said, in view of all these circumstances and emotions, "I have searched over the grounds of my belief, and if wife and child and name and fame were all to be lost to me, one after the other, as the penalty, still I will not lie." He classified himself as an agnostic. The man in the days of Sir Thomas Moore classified himself as a Christian and a defender of the truth. Any truthful man, who places the one by the side of the other, will respect the agnostic and despise the hypocrite who passed judgment on what he did not know nor understand.

Our schools, our churches, Christian men and women, especially, should recognize that the loyalty to truth—the truth that is a result of slow, cautious search, is of more value than any mass of general information accepted without asking the question "Are these things so?" The people of Berea attained the rank of nobility because they put even the apostle's teaching and preaching to the test of investigator's scalpel.

Think not that this spirit need be directed only towards that which has "grown gray with the years." There is just as much demand for this spirit with respect to the new. James Anthony Froude says, "Out of every hundred new ideas ninety-nine are generally nonsense. The odd one will be the egg which contains the whole future in it, but until the exceptional egg proves its vitality by breaking its shell, the wisest cannot forsee how it will develop." We should be very patient with many fool notions that are new for the sake of that one among the many that may repay us for all our pains. But there are those who will accept any view that is youthful and reject any idea because it is old. On the other hand men of the type of the man against whom Moore wrote would destroy the valuable with the worthless, using no selective process of testing what is true or what is not true. Age is the one criterion.

I question whether there is a class of men—with the possible exception of advertisers and politicians—who is tempted and falls as often as the minister does in the matter of pronouncing hasty judgments on various questions—scientific, political, economic, as well as religious and theological, his special field. Even in his special field he too often speaks before he has mused over the facts which he may have discovered.

Openness of Mind

2. What we have considered is fundamental in all education for it is fundamental in all of life. Closely related to this love of truth is openness of mind, the spirit of the learner or the disciple—spirit. Jesus sent his followers out to make "disciples of all nations." They were not sent to make teachers, or leaders, or even preachers. They were sent to make disciples. What other religious leader was ever as bold or as wise as he? Mohammed called for assent, unquestioning assent. Jesus expressed confidence in the teacher and in the learner. Without disciples there could be no success and without the teacher there could be no disciple. The Messianic movement would win or fail with the issues of so simple a relationship. Jesus' criticism of the Pharisees was their shut mind, their unwillingness to be disturbed, their sense of having attained, their stand-patism. They were learners no longer. No wonder that Jesus would have his followers different. No wonder that the follower of Jesus is not only a believer, important as that is, but more especially a learner—one whose belief broadens, deepens, with the years—belief that is like a living seed cast into the ground, not like beautiful, cold marble, or a rocky and inspiring, but lifeless Gibraltar.

This spirit of the learner, this openmindedness, is critical, cautious of what it accepts. It is linked with that love of truth and hatred of the superficial, the false. Professor Dewey in his last thought-awakening volume says, "Docility is looked upon not as ability to learn whatever the world has to teach, but as subjection to those instructions of others which reflect their current habits. To be truly docile is to be eager to learn all the lessons of active, inspiring, expanding experience." Learning, education, then, becomes mere imitation, the more exact the better, of others, of teachers, of prophets, and apostles. Their thoughts are put into concise forms called creeds and the learner is asked to accept and commit without presuming to ask any questions. He surrenders his individuality to what is given him to learn. This view of education we find among all ranks and in all walks of life. We find it in economics, in political science, in art, as well as in theology.

As the living flower at your feet requires the forces of the boundless universe to mould and shape it, so does the child require an infinite spiritual universe. As the flower needs the power of gravitation which grips all the system, the sunlight that travels ninety millions of miles to paint its petals, the mysterious and wonderful power of electricity, and the complicated water system of the planet to mould and shape it, so also the child needs God's infinite truth, his boundless love, his immeasurable power and his unspeakable grace to regenerate and mould him into Christ's image. Religious liberty requires that we let the child, as it grows up, learn the truth for itself, repent and believe for itself, obey Christ for itself, be baptized for itself, rejoice and struggle and grow for itself. To deny it these things is to rob it of its religious rights.

—E. Y. Mullins in World Alliance Address.

Conformity Stifles

Open-mindedness is towards the past as well as towards the future. It does not mean anarchy, bolshevism. It does not reject imitation and substitute invention for all of our life experiences and attitudes. Professor Witmer in a brilliant article in the July, 1922, number of the Scientific Monthly answering the question "What is Intelligence?" reminds us that "successful living is at least ninety-nine parts in a hundred conformity and constraint; only a very small fraction of 1 per cent of a man's life can, at the very best, display freedom of thought and action." Because that percentage is so small the reason is all the more urgent that it be allowed to function. Nature has set itself against imitation, conformity, as the sole guide. No seed can reproduce the parent absolutely. No child is exactly the copy of the parent. Variation has a recognized influence in all new life-forms. Copying is not permitted in nature. It is not possible. There is ever a new element that makes the organism different. Nature is open minded; it is expectant. It looks into tomorrow for some slight modification that was never before a fact. The mind, the spirit of man, educated according to the laws of education written in the book of nature insists on the open mind through which the new may enter and find friendly treatment. Let those who advocate the open mind, remember that conformity, imitation, express the major experiences of our lives. Let those who plead for conformity, imitation, remember that these cannot be made to express all of life. A small percentage, at least 1 per cent must be given to the new, to man's originality, to man's open mind that lets in the new. Discovery, creation, adventure, faith, must not be stifled by conformity. The Jesuit education calls for 100 per cent conformity, loyalty to what is given. There is no room for the open mind. Rational education leaves the "east window of divine surprise" open. Professor Tyler in his "Anthropology" referring to Egypt says, "The priests of Egypt, who once represented the most advanced knowledge of their time, came to fancy that mankind had no more to learn, and upheld their tradition against all newer wisdom, till the world passed them by and left them grovelling in superstition." They once had the open mind and then shut it and Egypt became a mummy.

3. We must note one more basic characteristic of the educated man. He has a sympathetic appreciation of all that is good, true, and beautiful irrespective of their origin or source. This world is more than an objective fact. This is a message brought to a world in the grip of logic and fact by Emerson especially in his "Nature." In fact it permeates all he wrote. He says, "Nature always wears the color of the spirit." "The charming landscape which I saw this morning, is indubitably made up of some twenty or thirty forms. Miller owns this field, Lock that, and Manning the woodland beyond. But none of them owns the landscape." "There is a property in the horizon which no man has but he whose eye can integrate all the parts, that is, the poet. This is the best part of these men's farms, yet to this their warranty-deeds give no title." He even says, "Most persons do not see the sun." It is the spirit of him who loves knowledge who loves the beautiful, who loves the good. It is the spirit of him who dares say, "We look not at the things which are seen, but at the things that are not seen." The educated man is somewhat of a poet, He senses the deeper values of life. He finds the soul of nature, of man. Turner, the great painter, showed a painting of his, a sunset, to a friend who remarked that he never had seen a sunset like that. The painter made answer by saying, "Don't you wish you could?" One morning I stood looking over the Grand Canyon. For a time I could not speak. After a while I said to an employe, "That is wonderful!" His reply was a tragedy, "Yes, it is a deep hole." He saw the Grand Canyon in terms of fact; others saw it in terms of appreciation. A college student may take all the courses of the college and even graduate with honors without having his soul trained to appreciate, to love knowledge, poetry, history, philosophy and science. When he leaves college he throws away his books and his educational means. His inner life has not been awakened; his soul has not felt the meaning of what he has studied. A recent writer on education speaking of education and appreciation, says, most truly, "Education releases us from the tyranny of the external world and enlarges our inner world of freedom." * * * "We should get education above all other getting in order that we may be born into our great modern world, move in its cosmic currents, sit in its grand amphitheater, and see and appreciate all that is going on and thus enter into our splendid birthright. Then, truth, goodness, beauty stir our deepest spirit and we become their missionaries, apostles, ready to offer our lives in their service. Appreciation, sympathy, is the soul of the true, of the good and of the beautiful. We are mastered by them, they enlist our lives as their prophets. They seize us and send us forth into the arenas of life where like gladiators we fight in their defense and enthronement in human character personal and social.

II.

We are now prepared to answer the question, what is the relation between education in this more general view and what we speak of as Christian education? Look back to the three characteristics which we have noticed; love of truth, openness of mind, and appreciation of what is good, true and beautiful making education something so large that the mind, the emotions, and the will are all involved in this process of the education of man. It seems that we have discovered that general education is not far from the kingdom of our Lord and his Christ. What does it lack?

In his famous epoch-making book, "Education of Man," Froebel wrote, "The spirit of God rests in nature, lives and reigns in nature, is expressed in nature, is communicated by nature, is developed and cultivated in nature."—p. 154. It is essentially the same idea or feeling the psalmist tried to express when he sang, "The heavens declare the glory of God and the firmament showeth his handiwork." This was the inspiration of Browning when he wrote,

"God is seen God
In the star, in the stone, in the flesh, in the soul and the clod" and
"If He thunder by law, the thunder is still his voice."

You are familiar with the experience, the regeneration if you please, of Horace Bushnell. He describes it in this one statement, "The change was into faith—a sense of the freeness of God and the ease of approach to him." He found that religion—vital religion—meant an expanding horizon for all life and that there was to him at last a living recognition of an "over-ruling control of his fortunes." His wife wrote of it, "The greatness of this change and its profound reality made him a new man, or rather the same man with a heavenly investiture." "The same man with a heavenly investiture"—that summarizes the experience. The thought also helps us to see the relation between general and Christian education. Christian education means not so much new facts, new material, rather is it the same facts, the same material "with a new investiture." Let me place side by side two statements relative to the same fact. Speaking of the divine control of the wind the psalmist speaks of God as the one "who hath gathered the wind in his fists." John Tyndall writes, "The Italian wind gliding over the crest of the Matterhorn is as firmly ruled as the earth in its orbital revolutions round the sun." The religious man affirms that God controls: the scientist looking at the same wind would affirm that the wind is absolutely in the power of forces that determine its velocity and direction.

"See Him Work!"

John Burroughs in closing an article in the Independent a few years ago speaking of such men as Sir Oliver Lodge, says, "Such minds * * * feel justified in thinking that something which we call 'the hands of Nature' play a part—some principle or force which the hands of men do not hold." At another time he speaks about the behaviour of living cells. He says that they act as if guided and directed by an outside power—a power not latent i

Faith in Our Fathers, Living Still!

THE spring which supplied the home of Roger Williams with water is still flowing. An elderly gentleman, visiting it recently, was greatly affected by the associations of the place, and expressed a desire to drink from the spring.

The attendant said: "The water is not now used. There is doubt of its purity. One takes a risk in drinking it."

But the faithful saint replied: "Water that was good enough for Roger Williams is good enough for me, and I'll drink it."

And he did.

—U. M. McGuire.

the cell itself. He asks what that power is. The Christian may speak of "the hands of nature"; he can also call those same hands the hands of God. Burroughs speaks of "the hands of Nature" while the psalmist speaks about the fingers of God making the heavens. Burroughs asks who or what orders the cells to act in a given way. The Christian sees God at work in and by means of those cells. A teacher of biology as he was showing his student, a friend of mine, by means of the microscope how cells divide, exclaimed, "See Him work!"

"Some call it evolution Others call it God."

The student of the history of mankind from the earliest times—when men had neither fire nor tools—tells us how man has passed through various stages from savagery and barbarism till he began to write and record his deeds, and thence till he stands the possessor of the civilization of the twentieth century. All of this can be done without affirming the reality of any divine presence or guidance in the long via dolorosa of the millenniums. A Christian studies the same facts, digs into the same caves, explores the same ancient cities. He affirms the truth of all the conclusions of his fellow-workers in the same field. But he does more; he affirms that God has been in the process working towards an end or at least towards something higher.

Religion Affirms

Religion affirms a person at work—in nature and in all the life of man. It is more than a point of view. It is a positive belief in the fact that there is a Being who neither slumbers nor sleeps, that is, he is incessantly busy night and day, year in and year out throughout the millenniums of human history and the countless millions of years since that beginning when he created the heavens and the earth. General education does not necessarily affirm such a person. In fact we should not ask any science to affirm what religion alone can postulate and declare. The astronomer may sweep the heavens with his telescope and find no God. His conclusion is right, with that telescope he cannot find a God for no God can be discovered in that way. A student for the ministry whom I knew a few years ago decided to study medicine. He dissected the human body and found no soul there and so lost all faith in the affirmations of religion. He knew not the difference between the field and methods or religion and the field and methods of science. Man can no more find God by means of a telescope than a man in a dissecting room can find the soul at the point of a scalpel or dissecting instruments. God is a spirit. He evades the telescope as absolutely as love evades the analysis of the psychologist. God cannot be discovered even at the end of a syllogism. The Christian affirms that the power that created and sustains the universe and guides the course of human history is like Jesus Christ.

General education and Christian education are joined together in reality and should not be divorced. The denominational or Christian college has a special mission in our American life especially in view of the separation of church and state making it a difficult task to teach religion in schools supported by general taxation. The Christian conscience can demand that schools supported by general taxation shall not countenance teaching that is anti-Christian. If there is no legal right to teach religion in the schools there is surely no right to teach anti-religion.

Christian people must be cautious and slow in drawing conclusions respecting the teachings, however. When earnest, good people attempt to make illegal the teaching of the doctrine of evolution, for instance, in public schools, grammar and college, they go beyond their rights or at least beyond the point of wisdom. Evolution joined with the great fact of God at work and in human nature helps the Christian to grasp more fully not the fact of God, but the method of God.

WHEN Pastor Tsoh, of the East China Mission, was holding a series of meetings in Huchow he was invited to speak to the students of a young ladies' school. During his address he told this story:

"Some years ago in the city of Soochow there was a woman who possessed a very fine pearl. One day she unknowingly dropped it on the floor. It was swept up and carried out with the dirt and dumped in a pile of trash outside the back door.

"A ragpicker came along, raked the pile over, gathered from it all the old pieces of cloth, and went his way. Then a paper-gatherer came along, collected all the scraps of paper that he could make use of, and departed.

"Finally the woman discovered her loss. Investigation seemed to point toward that pile of dirt. She very carefully searched the pile and recovered her lost pearl.

"Young ladies, what did you come to this school to get? If you are looking for rags you will get rags; if you are looking for scraps of paper you will get scraps of paper; but I beseech you that whatever else you get, you do not overlook the one pearl of great price that is to be found here."

The Christian needs the biologist and the biologist needs the Christian. When they work together a larger and fuller view of God, of man, of nature will be forthcoming. The ways of God will be better understood and God will come closer to man and the laws of nature will be seen as the laws of God, and a larger and fuller education of man in the school of God and of nature—the two not separated—will be the result. "The statelier Eden" will be achieved by men who do the will of God when they are obedient to the laws of nature and fulfill the laws of nature when they do the will of God. This man with the broader and deeper education may then say with Tennyson:

"I have clim'd to the snows of Age, and
I gaze at the field in the Past,
Where I sank with the body at times in the slough of a low desire,
But I hear no yelp of the beast, and the Man is quiet at last,
As he stands on the heights of his life with a glimpse of a height that is higher."

III

The connections with the twentieth century demand but little special attention. We have throughout been conscious of speaking to the day in which we live. A few observations will be all that is necessary therefore. Kipling writes of "The Man Who Was." We are thinking of the man who is—the man who is trying to serve his own day and generation. In the Old Testament we read of a small group of men who understood the times in which they were called to play a part. Education, general and Christian, is for the culture of the man as a man, for the developing of capacities that should come to the world's light. But it is more than that. It is to fit the man into his physical, social, and religious environment as an active participant.

The age in which we live is a new age, not only in terms of chronology, but in terms of life, of vision, of responsibility. The new age calls for a new mind, for new methods, for new machinery. We must lay upon education the task of supplying these for the age in which we live and work. We must sense the fire of the times. We must recognize that the old methods must be changed into new, and new machinery for harvesting the grain that is ripe for the harvest now. Christian education must lead—must give spirit, vision, dynamic adequate to the task of the reapers that their work may be a song and not a wail.

We shall attend to two dominant movements, the social and the international. When we think of the social emphasis of today we must take heed lest we forget that in all ages men have tried to solve the social problem. They wrestled with it in ancient Egypt; they sacrificed life and possession for its solution in ancient Rome. The early church and the church of the medieval times was not altogether other-worldly as some try to prove. It is a mischievous habit to darken a past age in order to compliment the age in which we live. The social spirit has never been absent from man and it has never fled altogether from the church. But we are justified in saying that never before has the church set itself to the task of saving all that concerns man as at the present. The emphasis is so strong now upon the social that we may forget that unless individual men be born into a new spirit they are not capable of appreciating the kingdom of God for which they pray and strive.

Task Is To Inspire

It takes a new type of men to lead and to follow in an age like this. Their education demands more attention to the various social institutions that function so largely today. The church has a special place today. Its task is not so much to control as to inspire, to furnish the moral and spiritual ideal and the making of the right sort of men who can put the social program across. The local church in order to do this is called upon to broaden its program of religious education so as to include a study and discussion of the great social problems of today.

The second element that is outstanding today is internationalism. The world view of religion and morals has come out of Nazareth and Olivet. Nationalism can flourish without Christ, but internationalism that grows out of an international friendly spirit is fed by Christ. In saying this I am not forgetting the many who before Christ had a glimpse of this larger friendship. Plato in his "Republic" said that in the ideal state "Greeks should deal with barbarians as Greeks now deal with one another." Contrast this with the sentiment found in the prologue of the Salic law, "Long live the Christ who loves the Franks." That is nationalism appropriating and monopolizing an international Christ. That is a part of the world of humanity playing world politics under cover of religion. Even big American newspapers print a slogan, "My country, right or wrong."

To overcome such selfish, narrow nationalism is a task that challenges the wisdom, devotion and determination of all men and women who are big enough to serve their fellows without being disloyal to their own people or to their own flag. The education that will be at least partially adequate will demand a revaluation of the contributions of all the nations and peoples to the sum total of human welfare. It means that here in America with the millions of foreigners we have a chance to show whether or no our democracy is of a class or of the Christ.

This education calls for more knowledge relative to the factors that produce peace or war. We cannot bring about the right relations by placards nor even by slogans. We need to pay more attention to the embodiment of the international mind in organization, in foreign policy. We may have a spirit, but the spirit must have a body through which it will speak and function.

Here I close. We began with the individual; we end with the world. We began with general education; we end with the Christian view of the world. The work is tremendous, but the spirit and power of Christ working in and through the church and other divine institutions is sufficient. God give us men who will learn in the school of life, inspired by the ever-present spirit of Christ, who gave himself for the individual and for the world.

Excavating the Home Town of Abraham

REPORTS of the discovery of the ruins of an ancient tower at Kish in Mesopotamia coupled with slightly earlier discoveries at "Ur of the Chaldees," home city of Abraham, bring into the daily papers mention of regions and facts long known through the Bible, says a bulletin from the Washington, D. C., headquarters of the National Geographic Society.

The pick and shovel already have carried secular history back to the period of the eleventh chapter of Genesis, have found evidence to reconstruct the daily life of the times of Abraham, and have revealed the essential differences of customs in the Tigris Euphrates delta from those of Tutankhamen's time along the Nile. The familiar story of the tower of Babel gives the clue to one such difference. In the Biblical narrative the children of Noah said to one another, "Let us build us a city, and a tower."

The temples of Egypt had a succession of chambers on the ground level; characteristic of a Babylonian temple were its chambers arranged vertically, each successive story being a little smaller than the one beneath. In modern parlance, Egyptians tended toward bungalow architecture; the Babylonians had the first skyscrapers. Babylonia of Abraham's time may be thought of as a land dotted with busy towns, each walled around with brick, and having a tower as pretentious as it could afford.

The writer of Genesis makes another significant statement when he records that those early Semetic peoples "had brick for stone, and slime they had for mortar." There being no stone in this region the use of brick was general; the absence of both stone and wood had a marked influence upon the dwellings. Roof-beams were scarce, hence the rooms were large and narrow, even in the palace of the city's priest-king, which usually adjoined the tower.

Politically, Babylon was not yet a nation. Ur, Umma and Lagash were city-states comparable in their pride and prowess to Florence, Venice, and Milan of medieval Europe. How they came to clash is easily understood by noting their plan. In the center were tower and palace, around these were dwellings, and this cluster of buildings was rimmed with cultivated land. Beyond this cultivated belt was the pasture land, netted with irrigation canals, always held in common. As the towns grew and more grazing land was needed trouble arose. "And there was strife between the herdmen of Abraham's cattle and the herdmen of Lot's cattle."

The contrast between this town life period of Babylonia and the empire of Egypt was as great as that between our own New England communities of the mid-eighteenth century and the regal splendor of France under Louis XIV. This "small town" period of Babylonia disappeared, however, with the conquests of Sargon, King of Akkad (not the Assyrian) who ruled nearly 2,500 years before Tutankhamen was interred.

Further explorations among the remains of the city of Abraham probably will be secondary to the greatest single find in this region—the code of Hammurabi. This scholarly king ruled in Babylon about 2,300 B. C., and the laws he codified are proof of a high civilization built up through many centuries before his time.

Occasional reports of a new find in Mesopotamia, the cradle land of our civilization, give an impression that modern knowledge of the Babylonians and Assyrians is sketchy. On the contrary, from thousands of clay tablets which have been recovered and read, the 2,000-year span from Sargon, down through Hammurabi and Tiglath-Pileser to Ashurbanipal, can be sketched more completely and accurately than the annals of many comparatively modern states.

The interest these records hold for modern man lies in the fact that, while many latter-day customs, ideals, and modes of thought date back to Jewish life of Old Testament times, these Jewish ideas were derived, in turn, from the far earlier Babylonian civilization. One of the surprises these clay documents afford are the striking likenesses of a civilization of 4,000 years ago to that of the twentieth century. One scholar avers that "a right-thinking citizen of a modern city would probably feel more at home in ancient Babylon than in medieval Europe" because "in Babylonia life in Abraham's time was practically as thoroughly organized and as carefully regulated as it is in our own."

Another astounding revelation of these writings, according to Albert T. Clay, is that Israel, instead of being one of the foremost nations of antiquity, was a small power, relatively inconspicuous. Moreover, instead of the Patriarch Abraham belonging to the beginning of time, humanly considered, it is now found that he occupies a middle chapter in the history of mankind.

"But above all else," this writer continues, "one of the greatest surprises is that the earliest peoples, instead of being barbarous and uncultured, were civilized and possessed a culture of a high order. In fact, the greatest creations of the Babylonians in literature and art belong to the third and fourth, and perhaps earlier, millenniums before Christ."

"Even the ills of present day civilization existed in Babylon. Raids on gay road-house parties were common. Wine selling was regulated and the enforcement was put squarely up to the vender. One section of the penal code provided 'If a wine merchant has allowed riotous characters to assemble in her house, and those riotous characters (she) has not seized and driven to the palace, that wine merchant shall be put to death.'"

A maid might sue for breach of promise, a landholder had to pay a heavier tax if he did not cultivate his allotment guardians were provided for estates of widows and orphans.

Formal contracts and deeds had to be attested by a notary, and in swearing the person taking the oath raised his right hand. An official copy of the transaction, on a clay tablet, with the notary's attestation was deposited in the temple, the court house of those days.

There was an excellent reason for paying one's rent promptly in Babylon, for creditors could seize one of the debtor's household for a hostage and hold him until a satisfactory settlement was made. Interest rates were rather discouraging also, "the usual rate" referred to on clay tablets being 20 per cent. Instead of a penalty of 10 per cent as provided in modern notes if legal steps must be taken to collect, Babylonian notes provided for the doubling of the debt.

Mounds and occasional masses of brick work laid bare by winter rains and ditches which hint at the canals of an elaborate irrigation system, are the only surface traces left in lower Mesopotamia today of this splendid civilization

The Yellow Daisies

I had believed love vast and tragic,
Surging music heard afar,
Something misty, mystic, glamorous
Dim and lofty as a star.

We have found out love together,
(All my empty dreaming done),
Sturdy as the yellow daisies
Growing in the sun!

—From "Sea Changes"
by Muna Lee.

On the Trail of the Baptists

By Helen B. Montgomery

WHEN we left Stockholm our Baptist enthusiasm was at a high pitch. We had seen Baptists out of every nation and tongue and tribe; we had joined with them in prayer and in song. (Who that heard it can ever forget the "Crown him, crown him, crown him Lord of all" as sung with one voice and one heart though in many languages?) and our determination was to seek out the meeting places of Baptists in every city that we visited.

We found ourselves in Berlin. We had glimpsed something of the splendor of the city when we turned our footsteps to find the First Baptist Church. Finally we found an unpretentious facade, discovered that the courteous gentleman before us was the pastor, but learned that the service had already been held earlier in the day.

"The young people are having a meeting, though. Won't you come in?" said the pastor.

The three of us, Doctor Beaven, Mr. Montgomery and I, followed him and several nice young chaps who suddenly seemed to materialize across an inner courtyard, and into a long rather low room in which were gathered about a hundred young men and women. They were sitting at long, narrow tables eating a simple evening meal of black bread and coffee. The pastor rather apologized for the small number, saying that it was summer; but I thought of many big American churches and wondered if they could show as many young people on a Sunday evening in August.

The three Americans were invited to the platform and then the president of the society, a fine looking young business man, introduced the foreigners and even spoke through an interpreter. It was a great meeting, not because of the speeches, but because of the singing, the spirit, the responsiveness of those young people as they faced the fact that the young people of the world must undertake its restoration.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL CHILDREN DRESSED FROM THE "SHIP OF FELLOWSHIP"

Our next contact with the Baptists was in Czecho-Slovakia, at Prague. We left Nuremburg one morning and arrived in Prague early in the evening after a never-to-be-forgotten journey through Bohemia. We had thought Germany beautiful and picturesque, but as the train rolled through Bohemia all our adjectives were worn threadbare. Stream and dense forests with upspringing young forests on every side; golden fields of grain alternating with green fields of beets and crimson fields of clover seemed like some rich, oriental carpet spread over hill and plain. They have no dividing fences, the fields are much smaller than ours, laid out in curving parallelograms, and the effect is picturesque in the extreme.

The day following our arrival was Sunday, and I found myself with a full program. It had been arranged that I should speak at an English service in the morning at St. Martins-in-the-Wall, at the First Baptist Church at three in the afternoon and at a mission at Pankrac, a section of Prague, in the evening.

The morning service was a union service maintained for English-speaking Protestants. It was held in the oldest church edifice in the city, built in the twelfth century, and since the war, turned over for Protestant worship by the government. It was in this church that the "cup" was first offered to the laity in the celebration of the Eucharist. The afternoon service in memory of President Harding was held in this same church. There was a large audience, among them twenty-four university men from the different colleges of America who, under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A., were making a pilgrimage of fraternity among the different universities of Europe.

In the afternoon I went to the First Baptist Church where both Mr. Montgomery and I spoke. On the street except for a tablet there is no indication that there is a church building. It was against the law, when the church was built, to have a Protestant place of worship openly. After going through a corridor, you come out into a garden and through to the church building, with a pleasant auditorium built at heroic sacrifice by a noble band of Christians.

Here we joined in the inspiring music to old Bohemian airs; united in prayer though we understood not a word of it, and both spoke briefly. When the people knew that we had had a little part in filling the ship with fellowship, their expressions of gratitude were touching. One old man pointed to the coat he wore and kissed my hand. Many old women kissed my hands, as they did my husband's, with tears.

The best of all, however, was in the evening, when Mr. Novotny, the brother of Mrs. Kolator and son of the apostle of the Baptists, took us with a party of friends, out to Pankrac, one of the poorest suburbs in Prague. Here his mother had visited among the poor and established a little mission and here the First Baptist Church now maintains a mission. The beating heart of the mission is in two believers, one a Mr. Novotny and the other Miss Mary Kadlecova, the church missionary.

A picture of Miss Kadlecova and her cooking class of girls, and of her Sunday-school class were given to me with the one showing the two little children dressed from the Ship of Fellowship, in an envelope marked, "From grateful children of Pankrac."

We found the people thronging into a little hall on the third floor of a tenement house. Several of the children, boys and girls, had donned the picturesque Bohemian costumes in honor of our coming. All, big and little, old and young, sang with such vigor and enthusiasm. They sang with a rythm and expression and modulations which I think you would fail to find in a similar crowd at home, drawn, as they were, from the very poorest classes. Both Mr. Montgomery and I spoke and Mr. Montgomery received an encore—that is, they begged for more. Two little girls came forward and gave us flowers; we wrote in innumerable autograph albums and escaped with eager embraces and hand kissings. We both said it was one of the best evenings of our life.

A COOKING CLASS IN ONE OF THE POOREST QUARTERS OF PRAGUE. THE TEACHER IS MISS MARY KADLECOVA. (MARKED BY THE X.) SHE IS THE BACKBONE OF THE MISSION.

The next day we went out to the Peabody-Montgomery children's home. The house in which we took dinner with Mr. and Mrs. Kolator formerly belonged to Doctor Novotny and was the scene of the birth of the first Baptist church in all Bohemia. We saw the place in the river where Mrs. Novotny was baptized and where later Doctor Novotny baptized the sixteen charter members of the church. We say also the communion cups and plate with which he administered the Lord's supper to the sixteen in the historic house. It seemed beautiful to think that the Kolators are living in this very house consecrated by the fact that here lived and worked the great man and his wife, who under God, laid the foundations of our Baptist work in Bohemia.

The American Amalgam

By Charles L. White

EVIDENCES that New York is a foreign city multiply on every hand. The sidewalks of Fifth Avenue below Twenty-third Street during the noon hour are crowded densely with more Jews than Jerusalem ever had at one time in one street.

All unconsciously a man passes in this great metropolis into Italy; a few minutes later he is in Germany; two avenues farther east he enters Hungary; he takes his luncheon in Russia, his dinner in Bulgaria; he has his shoes polished in Greece, spends the early hours of the evening in Spain, reaches Portugal at ten o'clock and has his midnight meal in Chinatown. He has inquired the way a hundred times of Irish policemen. Every fourth face he has met during the day bears the marks of the Hebrew race, and the next morning when he comes to his office in an electric car he observes that many among the twenty-three others who occupy it with him there is only one "American," and he is a negro.

He searches carefully at the newsstand among the foreign journals for a newspaper printed in English, and all day long he hears a babel of tongues. The newsboy cries "The Hebrew Journal" at the door of his office when he goes home at night, and the next afternoon this Jewish printer wishes him a "Merry Christmas!" He finds that the same printer has made a fortune in original designs in Easter cards.

Wherever he goes in the foreign quarters of the city he finds evidences of thrift. Although there is squalor there is very little destruction. Poverty may prevail in some parts, but it is well hidden. The children are dirty, but are warmly dressed. Many of the people live from hand to mouth, but most of them have something with which to buy their food. He concludes that the environment of these people is better than they had before, and that each one probably feels that he has come to live in a paradise where he has food, attention, opportunities for improvement, amusements, careful treatment when sick, good schools, and unrestricted opportunity to climb the ladder of fame and fortune. He observes that nearly all the children are in school and learning English.

And yet he sees many things that remind him of Europe. He notices the women and children looking into the ash barrels in the early morning, peering into the bags of refuse for paper, books, broken umbrellas and chipped crockery. In the barrel on his sidewalk at night he places old screens and cracked dishes, and awakes in the morning to find them gone. Wooden boxes, old staging, everything of the slightest value disappears while he sleeps. Women search for discarded fruit at the markets, and have in their aprons an assortment of scarcely germ proof vegetables and eatables. He finds these foreign women working in the office building, cleaning, scrubbing, and singing at their work. The heavy baskets and bundles of wood and paper on the heads of the men and women in the foreign quarter remind him again of what he has seen in French, German and Italian cities. He does not see the donkeys harnessed to the milk wagons, but he sees men taking the place of horses in little two wheel vans.

The architecture of Italy, Germany and Spain is not here now. Art, music and sculpture have not yet arrived among these foreigners, but who can tell what such Americans will do? When the mental and spiritual awakening of these people shall come may we not have artists, musicians, architects, sculptors and poets who will bring to America its golden age in literature, in science and in art? A century from now when the amalgamation has progressed to a suitable degree we may have a president with the blood of a dozen nationalities in his veins, but he is likely to be a good Presbyterian, or perhaps a better Baptist. He is the son of a Russian banker in New York City, and has already gained renown as a sculptor, artist, poet, astronomer, logician and musician, as Leonardo di Vinci did in Italy so long ago. His wife is the daughter of the Hungarian pastor of a great church in the South, who preaches in four languages if necessary, and who is proud of his German mother, Italian grandparents and Spanish forefathers. In that day the forces of Protestanism will have so completely coalesced that a solid front will be presented to the forces of Romanism. Doctor Clifford's prophecy will not then seem to strange as when a century before he said that in the United States God is slowly at work, making the ideal man.

A Few Feet of Film

By Frances L. Garside

A New York newspaper writer driving overland from New York to the Pacific coast was surprised at the number of young women he passed on the road, all with their faces turned west, and appalled when they told him their stories.

A few were hiking to the Pacific coast for their health's sake, with some definite objective: a visit to a relative, or to friends, or with sufficient means to see the West with a hotel background. These were in the minority; the great majority of these girls had barely funds to last the journey out and planned when they reached their destination to become stars in the movies. Of their ability they had no doubt; they did not question the prospect of securing work.

When the newspaper writer reached Hollywood, he heaved a sigh of relief when he saw a building bearing the words, "Studio Club" and swinging under them a blue triangle. "I am glad," he said, "the Young Women's Christian Association reached Hollywood first, for those girls will surely need all the Christian assistance and influence they can get when they arrive here penniless and find their hopes of employment shattered."

The secretaries in charge of the Studio Club have as thrilling experiences as though they, too, were before the camera. They never know when a day begins what story of distress, of misfit ambition, of hopes so exaggerated they cause many a smile, will be poured into their ears before the day ends.

The Studio Club is a harbor for girls who have employment before the camera, and a refuge for those who seek it, can't find it and are helped to get employment more suitable to their ability. Also when girls arrive penniless and without having notified their parents of their destination. A little sympathy, a warning and the girl is glad she is going back to home—and safety. It becomes a way-station home.

Here are a few feet of the film of the club director's day—not before the camera, but as she lived them:

Several of the girls joined the cast of the Demi-Virgin, struggled with rehearsals and buying clothes, one girl spending $75 for a wig. After playing two weeks the show closed and no wages were paid for the second week. Indignation, sympathy, resignation and humor were registered for an occasion like that.

Eight girls worked from 7 p. m. to 6 a. m. in a mob scene at Universal City in "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" on a set with 2,000 people. The secretary stayed with them till two in the morning, sharing their midnight lunch. Hearing experiences of the girls who were two weeks in the desert where Mr. DeMille directed 2,000 people and twice as many animals in the filming of scenes for "The Ten Commandments."

More thrills when hearing the applications of girls who want employment; one girl, formerly a dishwasher, crippled and unattractive, who wanted to be in the movies; another girl from Arkansas, another from Kansas, others from as far away as New York, seeking employment to tide them over till the day the appeal comes to them to become movie stars, and glad to take any work in the interim. Another thrill when a woman asked for help and protection, saying her husband who is in the picture at $350 a week was neglecting her and her two children to go with a young girl, and she thought when "Will Hayes was appointed that he was going to look after things like that and see that they did not happen."

All ages—young girls, mothers with pretty children and women so old they really should know better, drift to Hollywood to find the pot of gold at the foot of the rainbow. There are few locations where the need for a Y. W. C. A's. protective influence is greater.

Heroes of Golden Deeds

By Julia W. Wolfe

THE late Andrew Carnegie rendered no more signal service to the cause of peace when he provided for the erection of the splendid Temple of Peace at the Hague, as a fitting home for the International Tribunal, than when he provided, by his gift of $5,000,000 for pensions for heroes and heroines of peace. The great service of this munificent endowment was in the new emphasis which it placed. It said that from then on the men and women who have shown their courage and devotion in saving life were to be applauded and rewarded as truly as the men who have destroyed life. It passed no judgment upon the battlefields of history. The generous giver, when he made his original and prophetic gift, doubtless felt, like others of us, that the battlefield has been the theater of infinite faithfulness, self-sacrifice and service, of the highest heroism often as well as the deepest horror. But he clearly felt that the esteem and glorification of the soldier has been paid out of all proportion to the honor paid the heroes of other battle-fields, whose service done to no accompaniment of fife and drum or waving flags, often imposed greater risk, demanded a higher courage, and had a vastly nobler and more useful end. The soldier who risks his life to save the state, or at the state's command, is a proper pensioner. But he is no more truly a public servant, nor the exponent or agent of patriotism, than the statesman or the teacher; and the policeman, the engineer, the fireman, and the surfman, faithful and firm at their dangerous posts place us under equal obligation and deserve as well at our hands. Haltingly and at scattered points the community is beginning to recognize this fact. Until it recognizes it everywhere and in adequate measure, we are debtors to the general individual pioneers who emphasize at cost the needed lesson.

Laws and Songs

The old saying of Andrew Fletcher, that he cared not who made the laws of a people if he might make the songs, is famous. A people's statues—their choice, or the choice imposed upon them, of the men and women to be publicly honored—are as important and influential as their songs. Yet there is hardly any matter concerning which the world is so backward, where it has so seldom shown a high degree of enlightenment, where it is so often barbarous.

Just a comparison: In Boston is a fine statue of General Banks, also a great equestrian statue of General Hooker. These statues quite dwarf the modest statues of Daniel Webster and Horace Mann. Not but that we have great respect for the memory of General Banks and Hooker, but why not build great monuments to Emerson, Lowell, Whittier and Longfellow? There are, in that city, statues of General Glover and Colonel Cass, of whose services not one reader in a thousand could give the slightest account; but there is no memorial of John Adams or John Quincy Adams, the two great Massachusetts presidents of the United States.

The case in our national capital is yet worse. The streets and squares of Washington swarm with statues; but it is no exaggeration to say that three-quarters of them are of generals and admirals, and most of these men of whom even the high-school boys and girls of the city know but little. There is next to nothing among them to remind visitors that the nation of Washington and Jefferson and Franklin—whose judgment of war and of the proper prominence of the soldier in their new Republic is remembered by some of us—ever produced a poet or historian, a scholar or teacher, a painter or sculptor, a philosopher or philanthropist, a statesman or a man of science worthy of notice, or that up to date it really honors, enough to spend any money to show it, any vocation save the warrior's. It is the measure of our barbarism.

Yet what opportunities and beckonings our rich American history and our national capital offer for the sculptor and the man of wealth and the proud nation! We do not forget the noble Washington and Lincoln memorials, nor the fine monuments in Boston, New York and elsewhere. We are thinking of the things which are there and ought not to be, and of the things which ought to be there and are not.

Two memorial groups which we would like to see erected in Boston are the illustrious group of Boston men who in the years before 1775 did so much to shape the American mind for independence, and the equally memorable group who in the next century did so much to arouse the nation against slavery.

And the heroes of science—what a noble army! It would seem that every city in America would erect a monument to the memory of Dr. James Carroll, who gave his life that yellow fever might be wiped off this earth. At Johns Hopkins Hospital in Baltimore there is the only monument we know erected to his memory—a bronze tablet.

Going back in history we might mention many heroes and heroines of golden deeds—John Eliot, the apostle to the Indians, Mary Lyon who gave a college for girls, Peter Cooper, the generous giver, Dorothea Dix and Clara Barton, angels of mercy; General Armstrong of the Hampton Institute; Colonel Waring, the man who made New York clean, and hundreds of others in every city of our country.

Memorials to Mercy

We think that in the future the mercy and righteousness and wisdom of humble men will have far more memorials than in the past; that moral character and social service, rather than power and show, will be what men and states will elect to honor. This is what democracy commands and what democracy means.

In London there are some beautiful and eloquent public memorials of humbler heroes of peace, consummate illustrations of fortitude and self-sacrifice. They are memorials of a kind hardly ever seen before in human history; and they are a cheering earnest of the new emphasis which we shall see in ever greater fullness in the awards of honors, as the humane and discriminating spirit which begins to inform the world does its more perfect work.

If Christ came to Margate, on the Kent shore at the mouth of the Thames, he would find what we call a truly Christian monument. It is what they call at Margate the Surf Memorial. It is the bronze statue of a man belonging to the life-saving service, peering anxiously out from the shore, which he patrols, into the dark mists above the angry sea, in whose breakers his fellowmen are in danger. Half a dozen of the Kentish surfmen lost their lives to save

(Continued on page 1024)

The Nameless Saints

WHAT was his name? I do not know his name.
I only know he heard God's voice and came,
Brought all he had across the sea
To live and work for God and me;
Felled the ungracious oak;
Dragged from the soil
With horrid toil
The thrice-gnarled roots and stubborn rock;
With plenty piled the haggard mountain-side;
And at the end, without memorial, died.
No blaring trumpets sounded out his fame,
He lived,—he died,—I do not know his name.

No form of bronze and no memorial stones
Show me the place where lie his mouldering bones.
Only a cheerful city stands
Builded by his hardened hands.
Only ten thousand homes
Where every day
The cheerful play
Of love and hope and courage comes.
These are his monument, and these alone
There is no form of bronze and no memorial stone.

And I?
Is there some desert or some pathless sea
Where Thou, Good God of angels, wilt send me?
Some oak for me to rend; some sod,
Some rock for me to break;
Some handful of His corn to take
And scatter far afield,
Till it, in turn, shall yield
Its hundredfold
Of grains of gold
To feed the waiting children of my God?
Show me the desert, Father, or the sea.
Is it Thine enterprise?. Great God, send me.
And though this body lie where ocean rolls,
Count me among all Faithful Souls.

—Edward Everett Hale in "The World's Great Religious Poetry."

The Nurture Process in Missionary Education of Children

By Flora James Collyer

AUTHORITIES are calling attention to the strength of native Christian leadership in foreign lands. It is believed, however, that native Christians in foreign lands will desire for many years the cooperation of missionaries in the work of evangelization. It is also believed that financial aid in this work will be necessary for many years on the part of Christians in our own land.

Not only are there non-Christians in foreign lands, there are non-Christians of every race in our own land. As the need of missionary effort and financial support decreases in foreign lands, missionary zeal may spend itself in increased measure at home. Thus there will be continuous need of missionary education—education that fosters the desire to relieve suffering, to uplift, to Christianize, wherever there is need. Since the children of today will be the missionary forces of tomorrow, it is important that careful thought be given to the missionary education of the child.

Too often education is confounded with instruction. During the last fifty years radical changes have taken place in educational methods. Educators have been harking back to the methods of Jesus. The etymology of the word education ever reminds us that education is a leading out—a developing process. It cannot be imparted. It must be gained. It is a function of teachers and parents to guide in the acquisition of education. The active principle in true education is self-expression.

Normal growth, whether mental, physical, or spiritual, is from within outward. It is the result of assimilation, not of accretion. If we supply necessary conditions, normal growth will ensue. Such growth is the result of nurture. Jesus used the nurture method in his teaching. Paul recognized the validity of the nurture method when he urged parents to nurture their children in the "chastening and admonition of the Lord."

Stunted Growth

In the physical world, food, light, atmosphere, and exercise are essential to nurture. Patterson Du Bois in his treatise of the nurture method of education translates food as such formal instruction as the child can assimilate; light as pictorial illustration and imagery; atmosphere as environment; exercise as the pupil's self-activity in effort to apply the truth. If we violate nature's method, we have stunted growth and abnormalities.

The Baptist denomination has published a plan for graded missionary education. It includes stories for children and excellent pictorial illustrations. Thus it provides the first two essentials of nuture. Atmosphere, radiating from environment, is the result of all the subtle influences of home and church.

Missionary education is a phase of religious education. Religious education has to do chiefly with soul-life. Broadly speaking it is concerned in fostering faith, hope, and love. It is easy to teach catechisms. But in teaching catechisms there is no self-expression, no soul-activity, no nurture, no true religious education. Similarly there is no missionary education in abstract memorization of missionary texts. Preceding memorization, a text should be clothed with meaning by some illustrative picture or story, or by participation on the part of the child in some suitable missionary activity. Only thus will there be any quickening of soul-life through memory work.

The best approach to the child's soul-life is through the avenue of feelings. Doctor Montessori says: "The child cannot know God. He can only feel after him." True it is that long before the child has learned to think, reason, or judge, he has learned to fear, hate, love and sympathize.

It is a common mistake for a teacher of children to overestimate the effect of a missionary story. Not infrequently the reaction of her effort upon herself is substituted for the supposed reaction upon the child. Again children are often subjected to a program heavy to the point of weariness, and outside their realm of appreciation. Regardless of the fact that their geography in day-school has to do only with their own state and country and a few generalities about the world as a whole, we talk glibly to them about India, China and Japan. In response to the question, "How many are sorry for the children in China?" there may be a sea of hands. Knowing that their teacher expects them to be sorry, it is easy for them to imagine that they are sorry. There is danger of such expressions breeding artificiality and hypocrisy.

Sympathy means literally a suffering with another. The so-called sympathy that ends in passivity is not sympathy. True sympathy will express itself in action. Sympathy presupposes interest. The young child's interest centers in the immediate and tangible. The child must actually see suffering and hear the cry of distress before he can feel sympathy. Perhaps nowhere are inconsistencies more often in evidence, and psychological laws more often violated, than in this connection. We show the child the curious shoes worn by children in foreign lands without first having shown him the curious ragged shoes worn by children in his own town. We try to instill into him an interest in the little dark-skinned children of Africa, while our influence is such as to cause him to shun the dark-skinned children of his own neighborhood.

There are embryonic impulses of sympathy in the youngest child that await development. Hence, the culture of sympathy best begins at home. Every awakened impulse of sympathy should spend itself in self-expressional activity.

Sympathy begets sympathy. The tenderness of the mother in caring for the babe nestling in her arms is reciprocated by the little one, and the culture of sympathy has begun. Under guidance of parents this culture should continue in many commonplace ways through the earlier years. While still very young the child can help care for a baby brother or sister. He can place water for thirsty birds, and assist in binding up the kitten's injured foot. With his own money he can buy a toy, and from his own flower-bed pluck flowers for a sick play-mate. He can carry a glass of water to father or mother when they are ill, or a bowl of soup to a sick neighbor. If he has made a purchase for the missionary box, he should have the joy of placing the article in the box himself.

Practical Teaching

If children have had a part in purchasing material out of which clothing is to be made for other children, the material should be shown to them. They will take special interest in saying a word about trimmings and buttons. By all means the opportunity should be given them to thrust their hands into the warm woolly mittens that are to keep other children's hands warm. If it is argued that attention to such seemingly trivial matters is a hindrance to adults, who are chiefly responsible for the care of the sick, the making of clothing, and the packing of missionary boxes, the reply is that it is fundamental to a full and rounded development of the germ of sympathy dormant in every human breast. To fail here is to repeat the error too often made by teachers and parents in our own childhood days. If we would have greater missionary zeal in the future, whether it spends itself abroad, or at home, our children must be better and differently trained than were we. Greater thought must be given to the culture of sympathy.

A Definition of America

IN the heat and the strife of the war I was asked once to give my definition of America, and I said to the men: "To me America is infinitely more than an aggregate of 110,000,000 men; to me America is all that the submerged races of the world wish to be and cannot; to me America is the concrete realization of what the ages have hoped for and labored for." That was my definition I gave to them.

It is a definition. It is a creed. It is a challenge. God built a continent of glory and filled it with treasures untold. He carpeted it with soft rolling prairies and pillared it with thundering mountains. He studded it with soft flowing fountains and traced it with long winding streams. He graced it with deep shadowed forests and filled them with song.

Then he called unto a thousand peoples and summoned the bravest among them. They came from the ends of the earth, each bearing a gift and a hope. The glow of adventure was in their eyes and the glory of hope within their souls. And out of the labor of men and the bounty of earth, out of the prayers of men and the hopes of the world, God fashioned a nation in love, blessed it with a purpose sublime and called it "America!"

—Rabbi Abba Silver.

Sympathy cultured in relation to the immediate, easily transfers itself to the remote. Passing from the immediate to the remote should be natural, not forced. The child himself will open the door to the greater outside world. Then, and not until then, is the time to enter. Not with too much eagerness, but with careful discrimination, teachers and parents should proceed with the child into his new and larger world of interests. The time will come when missionary bedtime stories may be told with good effect about children in other lands, and beautiful songs sung about the world-children.

If the nurture process in missionary education is rightly pursued, response will be the natural result. There are two types of response—personal service on missionary fields and response in the giving of money. Personal service must be backed by financial support. Hence, there is ever a compelling need of money. The effort on the part of adults to obtain as large amounts of money as possible often results in injustice to the child through violation of the laws which govern a proper culture of the giving spirit.

Money dropped into the missionary box on Sunday is usually taken as an expression of the child's interest. This may be far from the fact. The child may contribute liberally because he wishes to please his teacher. He may take delight in seeing the box running over full merely because it makes his class the "banner class." He may contribute generously because he wishes credit for having made the largest contribution. Again he may drop a large number of pennies into the box merely because he likes to hear the jingle of money. The pleasurable sensation which he evinces from any of these operations is often mistaken for missionary interest.

That the child, whatever the motive, who regularly drops his money into the missionary box Sunday is forming the "giving habit" is a commonly accepted belief. Can one form the "giving habit" when he gives nothing? In the majority of cases the money which the child contributes Sunday is not his own money. It was given to him by his parents just before he started for the church. Dropping it into the box is a purely mechanical act. True giving implies ownership, sacrifice, and sometimes struggle. In giving another's money there can be no sacrifice, no self-expression, no soul-culture.

To nurture the giving spirit, and to form the giving habit, children should drop into the contribution box, with knowledge as to how it is to be used, not another's money, but money taken from their own allowance, their own savings, or their own earnings. To contribute cheerfully of one's own is the final and natural expression of a soul educated along missionary lines by the nurture process. It is the climax of a true missionary education.

The Ol' Clo' Man

Emptying the clothes closets of America to clothe naked Russia

BY S. H. KIRKBRIDE

A familiar figure on the streets of London and the great cities of the continent of Europe, and in the pages of literature in a bygone day, was the "old clothes man." With the raucous voice of hucksters and peddlers, arose their cry, "Ol' clo'! ol' clo' to sell!"

These men made a precarious living, going from door to door, begging and buying worn and cast-off garments which they cleaned and mended and sold at small profit to the dwellers in the slums. Today our cast-off clothing is sold by Ladies' Aids at "rummage sales," gathered up by vans of good-will industries, or taken by second-hand dealers who make their business known through newspaper advertisements.

But I have found a new type of "old clothes man." A few weeks ago, we received a letter from Charles Hanson of Minneapolis, who told us that he was going from house to house in Minneapolis to beg worn and cast-off clothing. Because so many Russians were freezing to death, there came to Mr. Hanson—to use his own words—"a vision to empty the unnecessary clothes out of every closet in the United States, to clothe naked Russia." These garments he is renovating and getting ready to send to starved and naked people in Russia.

His object in writing us was to know if the American Bible Society would not make grants of the Holy Scriptures in the Russian language, so that he might put a Bible or Testament, or a Gospel, in a pocket of every single garment sent to Russia, so that not only the bodies of these unfortunate and suffering people be warmed by the clothes given, but that their souls might also be warmed and comforted, and these come to "know the great happiness that only Jesus can give." "Often the missionaries do not have time to talk to every one of the needy about Jesus, then these Bibles and Testaments will do the work instead."

Of course we could not resist such an appeal as that. So we set aside $500 for this purpose and immediately sent him an initial grant of 800 pieces of Russian scriptures. By this most humane and Christian cooperation we shall get the Word of God into thousands of Russian homes.

It is very probable that many persons who get their impressions of Russian conditions through the daily press judge all the Russian people by the Soviet government. This would be a great mistake. The present government may burn Jesus Christ in effigy, put to death many religious leaders, show their contempt for religion and by every means in their power seek to make Russia an atheistic and religionless country; yet this class, so far as numbers are concerned, is a minority, while the great mass of the Russian people is ineradicably religious and docile, and a deeply pious people.

An Apportioned Gospel

Several facts have come to my attention which show the deep regard the Russians have for the Holy Scriptures. One religious worker states so scarce are Bibles in that distressed and famine-stricken land that in spite of their poverty and lack of even the bare necessities of life, as high as $100 has been paid for a single Bible. But more astonishing than this is the story, learned from another source, of the means adopted to put the book to the utmost possible use. I have been told that when a Bible is secured in a region that is destitute of the scriptures, the book is taken to pieces and a Gospel or a small portion is given to one congregation, another Gospel or part is sent to another body of believers, and thus the book is broken into fragments that as many hungry souls as possible may get at least a crumb of this "living bread." One instinctively thinks of Christ's taking the loaves of the lad and breaking them and with them feeding a multitude.

I was in a general conference on Russia some time ago, and a part of each day was given over to testimonies by Russian Christians. Without a single exception in the many experiences I heard, every man attributed his conversion to a Bible or Testament that had been put into his hands by a Bible colporteur.

Russia truly has many needs today. Christian nations may fill many of them. Surely not one of the least of the needs of her people is the Word of God in the mother tongue. Christian people have the means, the Bible societies have the printed Word and the soul of suffering Russia may be strengthened and saved by the cooperation of these two forces.

These supplies are made ready and sent to Russia in charge of missionaries who personally give them away or supervise their distribution. Mr. Hanson and his co-laborers have already sent many bales of clothing, each garment containing a piece of the scriptures.

We wish that we might find many earnest Christians who would like to share the task and the joy of this modern "old clothes man."

Religious Education

A Brief Course in Pedagogy

I ought to say at the outset that what I say is not plagiarized, and is not original. I once had a relative who was state secretary for the Sunday-school association of a western state, and my guess is that I got it from her. In any case, here it is among my Sunday-school notes. It is too good to be neglected and forgotten, and I am handing it on to you.

If your teaching has fallen into a slump try these "Seven Laws of Teaching." If they are in a book of pedagogy somewhere, the chances are that none but the experts know it. And I am putting them all here in the space of one short magazine article.

The first rule of teaching is to adapt your message to the class you are teaching. Teach babies as babies. That is the law of the kindergarten. Give them handwork. Keep them busy. Speak to them of the sweet, beautiful facts of outdoor life, of God and his love, and of behaviour.

Boys of scouting age delight in adventure, in sport, in being put upon their honor, in the heroic. The age of high school and university demands a consideration of the relation of Christianity to philosophy and science. Adults will be more concerned in the practical application of truth to life. The teacher who cannot adapt his message will fail.

The second rule of pedagogy is the rule of illustration. The wave of attention in the best minds is not over three minutes, so psychologists now discover. How to lengthen the power of attention and to increase it is the problem of the teacher. The vaudeville promotor does it by a continually varied bill, no number of which exceeds twenty minutes, and every number of which is replete with change.

Jesus adopted the principle of the parable in his teaching, not always to obscure his message as some interpreters think, but on occasions to make plain his message. He would challenge attention and arouse the will. He did this by stories. The mind that would not listen to reason, nor understand the subtleties of philosophy, would thus be aroused, stimulated, impressed, and invigorated into moral activity. It is undeniable that we remember stories longer than we remember sermons. Therefore use illustrations, taking precaution to see that they are fresh and that they illustrate the point you wish to drive home.

The third principle to bear in mind in teaching is variety. The English have a saying that a man would gag if served quail thirty days running. I am not sure, it may be ten days. A housewife diligently thinks to serve tempting, new, fresh, dainty, appetizing dishes. Yet it is not unknown that we who serve the bread of God serve prayers worn threadbare, less ornate than those in an Episcopalian prayer-book and just as repetitious; that we use no originality in the making of our programs, and repeat like a parrot or a victrola teachings in regard to lessons that were old to our grandfathers. Jesus is the same yesterday, today, and forever. Yet he has in him such inexhaustible depths for discovery that to eternity he will be our Revealer of God. "This is life eternal, that they might know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent."

Therefore to be repetitious or tiresome in the presence of such dazzling and rich abundance is to be guilty of the sin of ignorance when one follows a Christ of truth. Jesus himself, as if to illustrate this law, was once asked about the kingdom. "The kingdom," said he, "is like a seed." "The kingdom is like leaven." "The kingdom is like a pearl." And so he goes on giving seven comparisons of the kingdom, and one feels that he does not stop then because the comparisons have run out. The kingdom to him was the biggest fact of life, and he says so in effect by the richness it produces when his imagination begins to play upon it.

Again, the rule of teaching demands cooperation between teacher and pupil. The lecture method may lend itself to certain temperaments and conditions, but it is not the ideal method of teaching for a class of vigorous minds. Minds follow addresses, Holmes suggests, as smaller birds follow crows—now behind, now ahead, now making a savage dart to take a peck of exception at the speaker. Questions and answers are inevitable, and are the only fair method and the only method sure of securing placement in the minds of the major idea one has for inspection and acceptance. Only birds with white livers admit of the forced method of feeding. Of course this means that the teacher will be possessed of logic and tenacity which does not permit the class to run away with the discussion.

Still another law is that of system. In the tender story of the travelers to Emmaus we are told that our Lord opened the scriptures to them and showed them how on every page of scripture were his own bloody footprints. Thus to those early followers the post-resurrection appearance and teaching of Jesus made the Old Testament a cohesive unity. Such the Bible must be. The teacher who does not find in it a simple unity of one God, one Saviour, one redemption, one struggle against sin, one power in prayer, one fellowship in the Spirit, one purpose of life here, and one sublime assurance of life beyond death, is to be pitied as one lost in mists and bewilderment. Try therefore to tie your lessons together around the one common center of the gospel and one blessed Person—our Lord Jesus Christ.

Less time is required to mention the law of review. We remember by listen-

(Continued on page 1024)

International Sunday School Lesson for September 23

TIMOTHY, A GOOD MINISTER OF JESUS CHRIST

Lesson: Acts 16:1-3; Phil. 2:19-22; 2 Tim. 1:1-6, 3:14-15

Golden Text: 1 Tim. 4:12

Introductory

Paul's second letter to Timothy was written in prison at Rome, where Paul was expecting execution at any moment. It is the last letter written by the apostle. It was on Paul's second missionary journey that he chose Timothy as his companion, but it is probable that Timothy's conversion dated from the previous journey.

The Lesson

Timothy was the son of Eunice, a converted Jewess, and the grandson of Lois. From early childhood he was taught from the Old Testament. His father was a Greek. Timothy had a good reputation in his home town and Paul decided to take him as a helper. Therefore he circumcized him "because of the Jews that were in those parts; for they all knew that his father was a Greek." That Paul never regretted his decision to make Timothy his companion is amply testified by his epistles. To the Philippians he writes, "I hope to send Timothy shortly unto you, that I may also be of good comfort when I know your state. For I have no man likeminded who will care truly for your state. For they all seek their own, not the things of Christ. But.....as a child serveth his father, so he served with me in furtherance of the gospel." In his last letter to Timothy he salutes him, "My beloved child"—this from a man not demonstrative. That letter must have been treasured by the young disciple. It breathes joy in the young man and gratitude for all he has been to Paul and to the cause. It reminds him of his godly mother and grandmother and then comes the word, "But abide thou in the things which thou hast learned....."

Leading Thoughts

1. Abiding in the things we have learned is sometimes the most trying test set us. 2. "He is well reported of by the brethren"—he was ever Timothy the dependable. 3. Are the Pauls of today watching their congregations with a view to possible Timothys?

Young People's Work

Topic for September 23

By C. T. Holman

GEMS FROM BOOKS WE HAVE READ
Proverbs 25:11; I Timothy 4:13.

"A word fitly spoken is like apples of gold in network of silver."
"Give heed to reading."

"Read not to contradict and confute, nor to believe and take for granted, nor to find talk and discourse, but to weigh and consider. Some books are to be tasted, others to be swallowed, and some few to be chewed and digested; that is, some books are to be read only in parts; others to be read, but not curiously; and some few to be read wholly, and with diligence and attention."—Bacon, "Essays."

"In science read by preference the newest works; in literature the oldest. The classic literature is always modern."
—Bulwer-Lytton, "Caxtonia."

——"Studious let me sit,
And hold high converse with the mighty dead."—Thompson, "Seasons."

"Widely and indiscriminately as Johnson read—ranging, as he did, over all the fields of literature—he did not commend his example to others. 'Beware,' he said, 'of the man of one book. Beware of the man who knows anything well. He is a dangerous antagonist.' What was it but his profounder knowledge of history, of American politics, than any other man had, that made Horace Greeley so formidable an opponent? That profound thinker, Hobbes of Malmsbury, used to say, that if he had read as many books as other men, he should have known as little. It may be doubted whether the facilities for obtaining books in these days are not a curse to many persons rather than a blessing. Certain it is that the literary giants of old were very differently situated in this respect, and that this was, in no small degree, the secret of their greatness. The very scantiness of their library, by compelling them to think for themselves, was an advantage—just as, by the law of compensation, financial poverty is often a blessing in disguise."—William Mathews, Essay, "One Book."

"No self-denial in a self-centered life? A self-centered man surrenders the spiritual insight which can perceive life's worth and beauty, and the spirit of friendliness which alone can make friendship possible; he loses the thrill of saving men, the joys of cooperative fellowship, the ennobling influence of a conscious share in the coming kingdom of righteousness upon the earth; he surrenders the possibility of fellowship with God. In a word, he denies himself everything that makes life significant."—Harry Emerson Fosdick, "The Meaning of Service."

"In general, I have no patience with people who talk about 'the thoughtlessness of youth' indulgently; I had infinitely rather hear of the thoughtless old age, and the indulgence due to that. When man has done his work, and nothing can anyway be materially altered in his fate, let him forget his toil, and jest with his fate, if he will; but what excuse can you find for wilfulness of thought at the very time when every crisis of fortune hangs on your decisions? A youth thoughtless, when all the happiness of his home forever depends on the chances or the passions of an hour! A youth thoughtless, when the career of all his days depends on the opportunity of a moment! A youth thoughtless, when his every action is a foundation stone of future conduct, and every imagination a fountain of life or death! Be thoughtless in any after years, rather than now—though, indeed, there is only one place where a man may be nobly thoughtless, his death-bed. Nothing should ever be left to be done there."—Ruskin.

"Christ claims our love in many a strange disguise;
Now fever-stricken on a bed he lies,
Friendless he wanders now beneath the stars,
Now tells the number of his prison bars,
Now bends beside us crowned with hoary hairs.
No need have we to climb the angel stairs,
And press our kisses on his feet and hands—
In every man who suffers he the Man of Sorrows stands." —Anonymous.

"For hence—a paradox
Which comforts while it mocks—
Shall life succeed in that it seems to fail:
What I aspired to be,
And was not comforts me:
A brute I might have been, but would not sink i' the scale."
—Browning, "Rabbi Ben Ezra."

"Sweet are the uses of adversity,
Which like the toad, ugly and venemous,
Wears yet a precious jewel in his head;
And this our life, exempt from public haunt,
Finds tongues in trees, books in the running brooks,
Sermons in stones, and good in everything."
—Shakespeare, "As You Like It."

"The experience of Christians through the centuries, and even of many outside of the church, testifies to the essential truth of the claims which Jesus himself put forth. In his life and teachings men have found not simply their best comprehension of the Divine, and of personal redemption from low and mean social tendencies, but an unfailing source of aspiration and enthusiasm for a better social order. 'Each new crusade in the long strife for human betterment,' Professor Fitch truly says, 'looks in sublime confidence to him as its forerunner and defence.' None can deny accordingly that Jesus as an ideal figure has, as a matter of fact, established his leadership of all who look for a human society based upon love. There is no hope of the realization of a social life dominated by love without Jesus, for there is no one to whom the world would turn for such a vision if his leadership were denied. And in making himself the moral and social leader of mankind he has surely become the Redeemer and Saviour of his fellow-men. These facts must be acknowledged by all who would pass judgment upon the claims of Jesus; and they are the chief scientific ground for recognizing the validity of his claim to be in a spiritual sense the Saviour of mankind."—C. A. Ellwood, "The Reconstruction of Religion."

These pages are for all Baptist young people's organizations. Send news items on activities, organizations, plans and methods of work for publication in The Baptist to James Asa White, General Secretary 143 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago.

Convention Impressions

This is my first B. Y. P. U. convention. It has been a great inspiration to meet with consecrated young people and I am determined to serve Jesus better in the future at home.

At the Boston convention I received a greater spiritual feeling than ever before in my life, the realization of my duty to God, and the privilege or doing all I can in my own church and young people's union.—Wm. J. Lusk.

This great convention has given me the determination to go back to my local society and give my very best to the work of the B. Y. P. U. and Jesus Christ our Saviour.—Florence Whealan.

This great convention has made me see what a great place I hold in this world; that unless I do the work God has put in the world to do, his plan will be incomplete.—Ellen Anderson.

I was just lately led to Christ and this convention meant more to me than words can express.

The convention has meant more than words can express, and it is my prayer and pledge to make "the attractive Christ" my study and work, and thank God that I am living in this age.—J. F. Harris.

This is my first convention and I thank God for all inspiration. My Lord and Master has meant more to me in the past year than heretofore and this convention is the climax.—Marjorie Crawford.

This convention has brought to me a newer and greater vision of "the attractive Christ."—Clarence Tetreault.

The Chimney Corner

The Home of the Brave

I. The Summons

PAULETTE placed the two newspapers on the breakfast table with her usual deliberation: Le Matin to the left of the plate, the Paris edition of the New York Herald to the right, and on the plate itself she laid the most perfect rosebud to be found in the garden. Then, as the punctual footfall of Monsieur was heard on the old stone steps on the stroke of nine o'clock, she pattered to the old brick kitchen and received from the hands of Pierre the shining silver breakfast tray. She reached the breakfast room again just as Monsieur was about to seat himself.

"Bon jour, Monsieur!" she bobbed, setting the slender old coffee-pot on the table beside him.

"Bon jour, Paulette!" he answered, smelling the rose absent-mindedly and threading it in his buttonhole. "You spoil me! How am I to exist when I no longer have roses as a first course?"

"Monsieur shall have his rose as long as Paulette Dubois lives," the little old woman beamed. It was, curiously enough, a set remark between the two of them—a daily habit.

"The post . . .," he suggested presently, with that semi-expectant air of the sojourner in a strange land.

Paulette pattered back with letters. "Oh, but uninteresting!" she chuckled "As Monsieur has repeatedly said, letters with a business address in the corner are of a great dullness. And see, a printed address! "Voila!"

"Exactly!" he laughed, taking the letter, "especially from one's lawyer, Paulette. How dull for me if I find, for instance, that I am disinherited, or that my money has been squandered by my devoted offspring, or that my wife wishes a divorce, or——"

"Ciel!" gasped Paulette, her hands upraised. "To hear Monsieur talk! Disinherited—with parents dead these fifteen years. And as for offspring, it pleases you to be droll this morning, with never a wife nor a child to your name."

Monsieur smiled at her over the tops of his reading-glasses: "Run along, Paulette," he said kindly, "I have no doubt it's nothing but a publisher suing me for plagiarism."

Paulette poised on one broad straw sandal: "A disease, perhaps?"

"Deadly!" he replied, tearing open the envelope.

Paulette chuckled. She knew the wrinkles around his eyes—this was another of those delightful oddities. She must tell Pierre. They stood on the black and white tiled floor with shining crosses as their background, as they talked him over, this amazing Monsieur who had rented the little villa for a month and had stayed on and on—five years.

This department is conducted by Miss Margaret T. Applegarth. Communications to her may be addressed in care of THE BAPTIST.

Meanwhile Monsieur was equally diverted by his note:

Dear old fellow,

This is to acquaint you with the latest. Veronica is having a grand tea-fight and coming-out party at this very moment. She is surrounded by acres of floral donations, and looks about forty years old as far as poise goes. Her parties have filed a whole colyum lately. I wish I had an ugly duckling content to be a pal forever, without all this going on. But she's still a very nice little Very, and would send you some affectionate regards if she were not in the thick of the madding crowd at present.

To get down to brass tacks, Ricky, I am really writing about your sister. What in the name of sense shall I do with the woman? She has descended upon this town unexpectedly and is absolutely determined to live in the old homestead on Mansion Avenue. I've been telling her for the last week, day in and day out, that Mansion Avenue is entirely given over to foreigners now, and that except for number 281 the neighborhood is nothing but a howling slum. As far as I can see she shouldn't live there since she's sure to be robbed some fine evening, or catch a germ, and in any case she still has two good eyes to see the sights around her, and those sights are sights, I tell you. But you know Patricia. Unbudgeable, she sat in my office yesterday afternoon and regaled me with the history of the Braves—hadn't old Nathaniel Brave lived at 281 Mansion Avenue? Hadn't Ephriam Brave lived there before him? Well, if it was good enough for them, it was all right for her. One didn't have to associate with neighbors, if undesirable.

"They are!" I vowed.

She assumed her most ancestors-in-the-Mayflower expression, and said she had fully made up her mind. So then I packed her into my Caddy (Cadillac, in case you report me to the S. P. P. C.!) and whirled her down there to see with her own eyes and smell with her own nose. But she had such an incurable attack of homesickness that she saw the whole thing through rose-colored glasses. "When Ricky and I were little we used to do thus and so here," she would recall; something to remember about every doorstep and cellar door. Of course if she were humanitarian or octogenarian or any other pleasant "arian" it would be all right, but she's the same old queen of a grand dame, and she can't be fitted into the picture puzzle of Mansion Avenue.

She thinks, God bless her, that if she once gets settled there you may at last be inveigled to come over here, Ricky. Like a dunce I said sarcastically that if anything could bring you, her persuasiveness would. Consequently she's determined to try it out; and I honestly believe, old man, that she's doing it as much as a lure to fetch you as a fulfillment of any desire on her own part to relive the scenes of her childhood. Ricky, it's your turn now! Think of Patricia Brave in with several dozen Uncle Abies selling off second-hand clothes, and all the Jacobs and Moseses and Aarons.

While we clean the place out she's gone to Canada for the month of August with the Van Ostersees. But September will see her installed, writing letters from the paternal roof-tree to wheedle you back to your "home, sweet home."

"The pen is mightier than the sword?" I shan't believe it until I see you, in flesh and blood, on this side of the Atlantic brothering this lonely spinster-lady. It's a bit forlorn, Ricky, to have pursued the social bee for all these years and then find that the honeycomb is—empty husks.

Very's orchestra is jazzing a welcome for you at this very moment. My dear boy, come home!

Your devoted Rupert E. Antisdale.

Richard Brave laid down the letter with a sigh. He looked out through the long French window into his delectable garden drenched in sunshine and roses. Paulette was picking lettuce for the inevitable noon salade. This little corner of France—how very dear it had become! But a small breeze playfully rustled the sheets of his letter, reminding him of a motive.

"Yes, at last, a motive!" he sighed, and folded the sheets carefully. "I shall have to go over and rescue Patricia from that unspeakable slum. I'll hold this place, of course, and keep on Paulette and Pierre. I can do my best work here, of course——" His eyes wandered around the quaint interior, so very dear to his heart. A hasty vision of the marble mantelpieces of Mansion Avenue made him shudder.

"But my poor Patricia," he smiled. "She knew I'd be drawn to the old place, if once she moved in. I'll try to book a sailing before the usual August tourists go junketing home again. Home! Well!"

(To be continued next week.)

The Young Reserves

Sick-a-Bed Sister Swallows a Pill

By Margaret T. Applegarth

ONE hot sunny morning Broom-Sticks started to sweep the floor just as usual when suddenly she was really . . . too . . . tired . . . out . . . to sweep . . . another . . . stroke. She was aching! She was quaking! She was shaking! One minute she felt burning hot and the next minute shivering cold, so she quaked and ached; and the only thing to do was to curl up in a dark corner of the House Where the Brownies Lived, and cry. You would have cried, too. For it was really a terrible ache.

By and by along came granny: "Get up, you lazy good-for-nothing girl," she called, astonished to see the busy Broom-Sticks lying down, in the middle of the morning. But Broom-Sticks simply could not get up; granny leaned over and found that she was really sick. Now I dare say that you have been sick yourself, haven't you? So you will be interested to know that it is quite different to be sick in India—oh, quite different! Maybe you think it is a very unpleasant pastime in American, but oh! it is far, far more unpleasant in India. For there lay poor Broom-Sticks having chills and fever, as even you have surely guessed. But granny did not call it chills and fever. No, indeed!

"There is an evil spirit in this foolish Broom-Sticks," she sighed. "We must frighten him away." So in just a few minutes there were granny and mother and the aunts and the cousins and the older sisters banging brass kettles and clattering clay pots and clapping their hands, howling in a perfectly frightful uproar—trying their best to frighten away the evil spirit in Broom-Sticks. But he would not be frightened! No, he did not seem to mind the terrible racket at all, for the poor little patient grew hotter and hotter instead of better and better.

"I guess we shall have to shake him out," sighed the wisest aunt.

"Yes, shake him out!" repeated that room full of grown people, who really ought to have known better. But they shook poor Broom-Sticks,—they shook her and shook her and shook her until she saw stars, and the floor seemed to fly up to the ceiling! It is really very wrong to be shaken so roughly when you are burning hot all over, but that was the best they knew how to do; and just as they all sat back to catch their breath somebody noticed that Broom-Sticks was going to sleep.

"She must not go to sleep!" they cried in a horrified chorus, so granny said that there was only one thing left to do, and I think your eyes would have grown as big as saucers if you had seen her poke an iron into the fire. Hotter and hotter and hotter it grew, until it was sizzling red; and then, can you believe it? They held that iron against the dear little arm of poor Broom-Sticks. I simply can not begin to tell you how it hurt! Shan't we skip over this sad part of the story, for it seems really wicked to make Broom-Sticks suffer any more, but they were all doing the very best that they knew; yet the House Where the Brownies Lived was full of sighs and cries, full of sobs and wails . . . wouldn't you just love to be able to tell them that such shakings and burnings are utterly useless? Yes? Well you did tell them! For surely you haven't forgotten our own Dr. Fidgety-Finger-Man, the one who wrote us a letter last Sunday, you know.

I think the Saviour must have led him past the door of the House Where the Brownies Lived. "Dear me!" said our doctor, "I hear a very sick child crying." For of course any doctor knows a sick cry from a well cry; so into the hut that was full of wails he marched, and when he saw the dirty floor and sick little, burned little girl on that floor he sighed twenty fierce sighs all at once: "Stop this! Stop this!" he called, in his most mind-me-at-once voice.

So granny stopped. Mother stopped. The aunts stopped. The cousins stopped. You could have heard a pin drop in that little hut just then, every one was so completely astonished. Our doctor saw at a glance that these relatives had made the poor brownie sicker than any brownie he had ever seen before: "She must come to my hospital," he ordered, and although nobody knew what a hospital was they decided it would be a good place to get rid of their little sick nuisance. So Broom-Sticks was carried there in a basket!

I do hope you are not supposing that it was some grand big place like our hospitals in America. For the truth of the matter is that we Baptists did not send enough money to India to build a really nice hospital. We sent just enough money to build a funny little mud hut hospital, just one big room, divided in half by screens, with rows of cots along each wall. Indeed, you might think from the hospital we built that we didn't expect anybody to get very sick in India, ever! But that was very foolish of us, for people get exceedingly sick in India—sick like Broom-Sticks—and nobody ever knows what to do for them. They try shaking them and burning them, they try noisy noises, they try blowing red pepper up their noses to make them sneeze, they try keeping them awake when they long to sleep—indeed, they seem to try every wrong thing hoping that it will be the right thing, of course.

So if ever we needed to build a big hospital, a nice hospital, a proper hospital, it was in India. But we sent so little money that it was into our tiny mud hut hospital that Broom-Sticks was carried and put to bed.

She spent about a week just sleeping and sleeping and sleeping. Nobody was especially surprised, for there were the burns to be healed and the shakings to be forgotten and the fever to be cured. So our little sick-a-bed sister groaned and moaned in her sleep to her heart's content until one morning when she opened an eye and wondered where in the world she was! Perched up in the air this way, with the floor way down below her! And on this queer white softness! Oh, it was enough to frighten a brownie blue; so she cried. And it was a well cry, not a sick cry; so loud and lusty that a lovely brown nurse came bouncing down the rows of cots as quickly as possible.

"'Sh! 'Sh! she smiled, "there's nothing to frighten you dear child. You are perfectly safe; you are getting well."

"This is not a safe place," wailed Broom-Sticks. "How can it be safe when I'm perched up on this dreadful soft white thing half-way between the roof and the earth? Why, I may roll off any moment! I want to lie on the floor, I want to get right down off this awful softness."

The little brown nurse gave a soft giggle: "Nonsense! You must stay there until the doctor Sahib tells you you may leave."

So Broom-Sticks lay still as a mouse. She felt as you would feel if someone laid you up on the roof! It was a very risky feeling, but she tried to act like a heroine, and before very long she forgot all about herself because of the stories she heard from the doctor's wife. Such astonishing lovely stories about Some one called Jesus. She had never dreamed that there could be a God like the Saviour, and like all the other sick patients she listened and listened and listened. There were stories about shepherds, stories about angels, stories about a Baby born on Christmas Day, stories about five loaves and two fishes, stories about lame people and blind people and lepers. There seemed to be stories to fit everybody, so one day Broom-Sticks had the courage to pipe up hopefully: "Oh please, Mem Sahib, is there a Broom-Stick person in your Bible?"

Our missionary was dreadfully afraid that she would have to disappoint the dear brownie until suddenly she remembered the story of the Woman Who Lost a Piece of Money. Perhaps you remember it, yourself: how this poor woman had ten pieces of silver, but one day when when she counted them over she found that there were only nine left. "One is lost!" she cried, so she took her broom and swept every nook and cranny of her house—swept and swept and swept, until at last she found that one little piece of silver.

"Oh! Oh! Oh!" cried Broom-Sticks, clapping her hands, "that sounds exactly like me! Indeed it does! For often and often I sweep and sweep and sweep, looking for something that is lost. And I don't give up until I find it, either. Isn't it perfectly lovely that there's someone just like me in your Bible?"

"Not a bit surprising, though," said the White-all-Over Lady softly, "for there's a story to fit everybody in God's Bible. And I hope that you will never forget that the Saviour does just what

(Continued on page 1021)

Our Own Folks

Boston Baptist Social Union and the Ruggles Street Church, Boston, Mass.

By J. J. Ross

So many inquiries have come to me from within and without our convention area that I find it necessary to make the following brief statement. When I accepted the call to the Ruggles Street Church, I was under a wrong impression about a good many things which were taken for granted. The fault was entirely my own, for the reason that I did not make a personal thorough survey of the whole situation before considering and accepting the call. I thought of the church only in its past history and great work of former years. However, let me say that within the last three months thorough investigations have been made and a good many facts have been brought to light that were not clear previously. After several conferences between representatives of the church and the Boston Baptist Social Union—conferences in which an excellent Christian spirit was manifested throughout—I personally, without the advice of the church, or the Social Union, and without the knowledge of either institution, sought expert legal advice upon the subject of the will of Mr. Ford, especially on the points of the will that relate to the Ruggles Street Baptist Church. I requested the law firm to make a careful unprejudiced investigation into the whole subject of the will, and to render me a written, unprejudiced judgment upon the whole matter, which they did. I submitted the judgment of the law firm to the Boston Baptist Social Union leaders, and they have approved of it as correct in practically every particular. I read the same to our committees and church, and thereby they have been made to see things which make them aware of their true situation as a church, and also places the Boston Baptist Social Union in a much better and more favorable light as administrator of the Ford Trust. As a result of the investigations certain things were made manifest.

We found in the first place that there are certain things that the Boston Baptist Social Union cannot do, they being bound by the will and the law of the state. They cannot surrender the control of the work for the reason that the will puts into their hands and under their authority not only the control of the trust, but the unlimited control of the work as well. Years ago, on the expressed request of Mr. Ford, the church, by vote, conveyed its property to the Social Union, thus making its property a part of the trust. By thus conveying its property the church voted away its rights, freedom and independence as a New Testament organization. The Social Union cannot, even if they wish to do so, reconvey the property to the people, for since it became a part of the trust by law it cannot be separated from it. Furthermore, the Social Union cannot change the relations that exist between them as a legal cooperation, and trustees of the Ford Foundation, and the church as beneficiaries. The relations that exist between the union and the church were created when the union, as an incorporated body, by vote, accepted the trust. The Boston Baptist Social Union therefore, is not responsible directly for the "relations" that exist. Again, the Social Union cannot discontinue the work, but must carry it on either at Ruggles Street or some other locality within the city of Boston, where the homes of working men and their families are found. And, neither can they change the general character of the work which must always be religious, educational and benevolent. We found also that the union cannot hand over to the treasurer of the church the money for the church to be administered by him and our executive committee. The union must pay the workers and all other agreed bills of the church directly, and that without giving the church a report of the same.

These are some of the things that the Social Union cannot do. But there are certain things that the union must do in order to carry out both the spirit and letter of the expressed wishes of Mr. Ford. They must control the work as well as administer the trust. Not to do either would be a neglect of specified duty. Referring to the work carried on when Mr. Ford died the will says most emphatically, "I leave to the said Boston Baptist Social Union its full control." In the direct control of the work the pastor, deacons and church, as a whole, have absolutely no legal voice. The Social Union must also spend the net income from the Ford Foundation on the work at Ruggles Street Church until they "deem it practicable to change the location." Any other use of this income would be a violation of Mr. Ford's last will and testament.

If there are certain things that the Social Union cannot do and certain things that they must do, so the investigation makes clear that there are certain things that the Social Union may do. In these things the Social Union is given its freedom, either to do or not to do according to its own best interest and judgment. In this exercise of freedom, according to my judgment is the only hope of the church and work in this or in some other locality. They may renovate the buildings which are now in a most delapidated condition. In comparison with the elaborate buildings erected in recent years for institutional work the equipment of Ruggles Street is not only poor in the extreme but utterly insufficient for the tasks that could be performed. It is a great pity that Ruggles Street Church cannot have a great modern, perfectly adapted building for its manifold activities. They should have this building, and it ought to be known as the "Ford Memorial Church." There are signs now that all of the buildings will be put in as good a condition as possible. But this will not give new buildings, will not change the location—which is in the African belt, and the poorest section of the city—and neither will it modify the relations that exist between the church and the Social Union. The Social Union hopes to have these improvements all completed by the end of September when steps will be taken to secure another minister. As I said the Social Union may change the location from Ruggles Street to some other place within the city of Boston. The "practicability" of this change is entirely in the hands of the Social Union. Such a change is most desirable and will be inevitable in the very near future. But there are no signs or promises that it will be undertaken soon. Further, the Social Union may expand or contract the work carried on, the extent of the work being determined always by the limit of the net income from the Ford Foundation. Moreover, as trustees of the property they have the right by law to close the doors of all the buildings at any time; this, of course, they would not do unless it were absolutely necessary.

We found also that the Social Union, in conjunction with the church, may devise a plan of work whereby the church, in consideration of the financial support it gives, shall exercise and enjoy certain very definite privileges. In this connection several more members of the union should be active members of the Ruggles Street Church. As it is at the present, the Ruggles Street committee of the union, is a body of Christian men, Baptists, members of other Baptist churches, having no vital connection with the Ruggles Street Church. If more members of the Ruggles Street Church were on the Ruggles Street committee of the union there would be a better feeling and it would provide for a better understanding between the two cooperations. It would go a long distance in allaying suspicion, clearing the atmosphere, and removing much of the resentment. As it now exists the church is a mission of the Social Union, with control practically and almost entirely outside.

The Ruggles Street Church has had a wonderful history, and literally thousands of people have been converted to Christ through its ministry. It would seem that ever since the death of Mr. Ford, about twenty-three years ago, the work carried on by the church has been on the decline. This is due largely to a change of constituency, that part of the Roxbury district becoming the colored belt of the city. When Mr. Ford died there were twenty full-time workers on the staff: seven years ago there were fourteen full-time workers on the staff. At the present time, in addition to the pastor, there are four. In winter time there are five or six additional part-time student workers, which merely give the appearance, to a degree, of the old time work being done. In 1916 the attendance of the Sunday school ranged between 1,300 and 1,600, the school having an enrolment in that year, in all departments, of 2,200. At the present time the enrolment of the school in all departments is about 600. Seven years ago there was a class of women 400 in number and a class of men 400 in number. Both classes now, taken together, would not exceed 150 of an enrolment. Also, seven years ago, there was a Young Women's Association with two full-time paid secretaries, with a membership of 308. In that year the officers of that association made 1,587 calls and held over 3,000 consultations. It gave relief to 598 families, aided 1,114 in sickness and brought 165 into church membership as well as secured 194 new scholars for the Sunday school. It also placed 144 young women in positions. There is absolutely nothing now of this Young Women's Association in connection with the church. Thus it can be seen that the work at Ruggles Street has been gradually and rapidly on the decline. It is hoped by many that the time has come when the work will start on the upgrade.

In conclusion let it be carefully noted that the Boston Baptist Social Union is bound absolutely by the express terms of Mr. Ford's will. Possibly many members of the Social Union, and certainly many members of the Ruggles Street Church, would prefer to have the "relations" different, but they are powerless to change them. The work to be carried on, according to the will, is not a work to be done by the church, nor so much, through the church, or in cooperation with the church, but rather a work done expressly for the church, and for the working men and their families in the community. All the responsibility of the work, according to the will, is entirely upon the Boston Baptist Social Union and the Ford Foundation as held in trust by them. The will requested the Ruggles Street Church to do only one thing, and that was to convey their property to the union, which it did. The church cannot assume the control of the work, demand legally the return of the property, change the location nor be responsible for the upkeep of the buildings. Neither can the church in full independence engage any of its workers. The church can make known to the Social Union its satisfaction or dissatisfaction. The church also has the legal right to request of the union an accounting of the trust should they fail voluntarily to present the same.

I make no criticisms of the Social Union. Much could be said, both pro and con, concerning their administration of the trust and their control of the work, but this would be to no benefit. Personally the Social Union treated me with kindness, respect and Christian courtesy. I have profound admiration for Mr. J. F. Rood, the president of the Social Union. I affirm my respectful love for and confidence in the people of the Ruggles Street Church. There are truly some great souls in that assembly of God's people. I never saw people more solicitious of one another and more gracious toward the Lord's work in particular. They love the truth of God and they love the work of God, and woe unto that man who takes up ministry among them, if he do not give them the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. I wish for the Ruggles Street Church and the Boston Baptist Social Union, with their great privileges and under their great obligations much blessing and success from the Lord. We take leave of the church with real and profound regrets, and pray that He who holdeth the seven stars in His right hand and walketh in the midst of the seven golden lamp-stands may send them a pastor better fitted than I am to work under such relations.

Boston Letter

By Charles H. Watson

New England Evangelistic Conference

It was a happy thought to begin what has come to be the church year with such a conference as the program promises us in Tremont Temple, Sept. 9-12. One advantage of such a conference is that it will shorten the interval between the let-down of the vacation and the real grip upon the year's work. Every working pastor knows something of the too long effort to regather the church forces after the slackening vacation. True, there are some welcome helps while the summer period is on, like the well-conducted camps, hikes, vacation schools, "ocean parks," but the size of the summer congregation in the average church shows us how completely we are in the arms of a lassitude from which we cannot be expected suddenly to awaken. So, welcome such an awakener as the evangelistic conference!

An Unusual Program

The department of evangelism in our Home Mission Society is responsible for the unusual program. Doctors H. F. Stilwell and York A. King make a sharp pair of shears when one wants a scheme for successful evangelistic arousement cut out.

The general daily topics are: Monday, "A Look upon the Fields"; Tuesday, "Concerted Action"; Wednesday, "Preparation and Conservation." Each day the quiet hour and devotional exposition will be conducted by Dr. J. J. Ross and B. T. Livingstone. Each of the New England secretaries, with Drs. C. L. White, and H. F. Stilwell, is to preside at the different sessions.

At the forefront on Monday morning will come Dr. J. C. Massee on "How I Keep my Net Full of Fish." As an initial note in such a conference, what could be better? Then in the survey of the fields will come representative speeches from each of the six New England states, and from the great city, the session closing with York A. King on "Cooperation in Evangelism."

At the evening session, Dr. J. B. Ranger speaks on "Personal Preparation for a Revival," and Dr. H. F. Stilwell on "The New Call to Evangelism." This will be followed by a conference of all the evangelists and state workers.

Concerted Action

On the morning of Tuesday, we have Doctor Lackey of Hartford on "The Challenge of Evangelism," Doctor McDowell of Melrose on "Evangelism in the Bible School," and Doctor Brooks of Dudley Street on "Evangelism in the Local Church." In the afternoon we have Rev. W. L. Pratt of Boston on "Evangelism in the Association," Dr. J. H. McGee on "Evangelism as a Statewide Movement," and Hon. Henry Bond on "The Laymen in Evangelism." Then follows discussion by speakers representing the state groups.

On the evening of Tuesday, Dr. Edward Holyoke speaks on "Evangelism the Supreme Task," and Dr. Charles L. White on "Promoting the Evangelistic Spirit."

Preparation and Conservation

Wednesday, the closing day, seems cumulative. Preparation of the community, of the church, and of the pastor, Rev. G. W. Peck, Jr., Rev. Isaac Higginbotham, and Dr. John M. English taking the three parts in their order. This will be followed by a discussion on "Conserving Results" led by Rev. R. A. Sherwood and Dr. D. A. Pitt.

In the afternoon, Dr. D. H. Clare of North Adams speaks on "Evangelism Fundamental in the Life of the Church." Then follows a devotional period of two hours in the "Secret Place" for prayer and self-searching.

At the closing session Doctor Stilwell speaks again on "The Reinterpretation of Evangelism," also Doctor Massee again on "The Evangelistic Message, the Gospel Dynamic." The conference is at Tremont Temple where it ought to be, and the reader can easily understand upon reading over such a comprehensively admirable program why we are eagerly anticipating the conference, and why we consider it an awakening opening the church year. In a subsequent letter we shall try to visualize this timely and noteworthy gathering that so completely assembles and inspiringly utilizes our Baptist leadership in New England.

Ocean Park

Up to nearly the 1,000 mark was the great conference of Baptist workers at Ocean Park, combined with the Newton summer school. It is proceeding now as I write, and there is inspiration in thinking of the combined summer attraction that is so fetching to church workers, teachers, and ministers. One thing, during this curious season that August has supplied, they have not suffered from "the heat thereof," nor from any terrors aside from autos. Here in the suburbs we have had mountain air and ocean breezes in daily and brilliant succession, and under several nightly blankets; and we have not envied the saints who have spent their substance in riotous travel only to achieve the mountain frost and the seaside shiver. But, wherever we are, the "autos" are always with us.

Andover

Andover has always been a name to conjure with. Not particularly to Baptists, however. Yet some of our most gifted leaders, in the earlier period before our own great schools had developed, went thither to quaff deep draughts from the great springs of Biblical learning that were centered there, and who became so well equipped to lead us in the founding of our own schools. But in a sense we have increased, while Andover has decreased. The old buildings are there, truly. And the academy is there with its swarm of active and promising boys. But, after all, where is the old Andover? Is it only a tradition? Are you haunted with the thought of halls deserted, and only the memories of old masters fallen asleep? As you walk about the old shrines and "tell the towers thereof," only the spirits of Moses Stuart, Austin Phelps, Edwards Parke, William J. Tucker, and the other worthies, hover about you. But there is something gratefully prophetic in looking at the old home of Harriet Beecher Stowe, where, as a professor's wife, once in the early morning, she sang "Still, still with thee, when purple morning breaketh!"

The Baptist Church

Though in the nature of things, the old church has been over-shadowed, it has not failed to bear its witness through the years. Curiously enough, it is placed all away from the scholarly shades, down among the modern democracy, just where a Baptist church ought to be. It is right among the stores, and in the heart of the through traffic where you can't escape it—a decent brick meeting house looking as if there were some who loved it. Rev. C. Norman Bartlett, a graduate of Colgate and Gordon, is just gripping the task of leadership, and they speak of him with discriminating appreciation. He is a thoughtful and gifted young minister, with manifest spiritual interests, knowing when a point is made, and accustomed to study.

The Tragedies of the Summer

Every summer we have come to look for the unexpected. Along with relaxation, and the joy of the glorious out-of-doors that vacation brings, comes the sudden shock of sorrow. Tragedies amid the wonders of Alpine Switzerland have thrown gloom over wide circles in Boston and suburbs; and sudden death coming to the homes and hearts of some of our ministers during the rest period of summer, has filled us with sympathy.

The death of Mrs. B. T. Livingstone, the wife of our former state secretary in Rhode Island, and present head of our evangelistic association, comes with painful surprise to our Baptist family in New England, where for her character, consecration, and unusual gifts, she was so greatefully cherished.

Rev. Manford W. Schuh, of the Memorial Church, Hartford, and formerly long-time pastor at Westboro, Mass., is under a crushing affliction in the sudden death of Mrs. Schuh. She was a devoted church girl at Westboro, and married her young pastor there. During his long service she held the confidence and affection of all of her familiars in that parish. That fact is sufficient tribute to the rare Christian elements that were blended in her beautiful character. Mrs. Livingstone and Mrs. Schuh were of a truth "elect ladies."

Nebraska Letter

By R. R. Coon

Pastoral Mention

Rev. F. C. Barrett passed away at the Wheatland Hospital, Wheatland, Wyo., June 18. Since 1904 he has held several pastorates in Nebraska, leaving Oxford last April in the hope of improving his health. He was truly a faithful minister. He leaves a wife and eight children who have the Christian sympathy of many friends. Rev. J. A. Sandefur has accepted a call to the church at Superior. Rev. H. B. Ward, who resigned to become state evangelist, has moved to Grand Island. The church at Norfolk, had a good year, with all lines of work prosperous. Pastor H. T. Gilbert supplied the First Church, Lincoln, July 22-Aug. 19. Rev. F. W. Benjamin is supplying the church at Arnold.

Grand Island Association

The forty-ninth anniversary of this body was held in Kearney, July 31-Aug. 2. This association has twenty-one churches, the largest in point of churches, the fourth in the number of members, and the fifth in contributions, local and missionary. Rev. J. C. Bukoutz was the song leader. The total attendance was more than 100 though somewhat lessened by the B. Y. P. U. Assembly meetings which began that week. More than half of the churches are pastorless, which fact called for the following strong appeal to the convention: "As an association we ask the state board to appoint a district missionary whose district shall include this association; whose duties among others shall be to supply regular preaching and as far as possible pastoral service to all pastorless churches in his district, under the direction of the state secretary." Some extraordinary efforts were deemed necessary to sustain the feeble churches.

There were speeches aplenty. Rev. J. L. Barton, pastor of Immanuel Church, Omaha, gave several addresses and a drama sermon. The speech of Dr. George Sutherland was a strong plea for the weaker churches and a call for help in their behalf. The woman's meeting was well attended. Mrs. Jeff Yelton, of Lincoln by her charts and a well-prepared program, conducted an interesting meeting. At the same time a separate men's meeting was held.

The church school, the young people and Christian education, the rural church, men's meeting, each had a session for addresses and discussion. At the opening service Rev. J. L. Dunn preached the annual sermon. The closing session was "An Evening of Dramatics;" a play, a pageant and a drama sermon by Rev. J. L. Barton, "Under Southern Skies."

An association of twenty-one churches and having only six settled pastors ought to present "an open door" to some young ministers who will enter it with the missionary spirit. Some of these fields have no regular Protestant service.

Kearney is now one of the most important fields in the state, and seems ready for a long and successful pastorate by Rev. D. I. Coon. The State Teachers' College located there enrolled over 2,000 pupils during the past year. Its president, Doctor Martin, gave a short address of friendly greeting.

The next anniversary of the association will be the fiftieth. By vote, preference was given to hold that meeting in Grand Island. the place of organization, Sept. 11, 1874.

Young People's Assembly

This met in Grand Island, August 4-12, and was interesting and informing to children, young people, teachers, ministers, all of the 200 delegates who attended and many more from the home town. City rides, hikes, banquets, pageants, plays, stunts and campus games were but "toothsome side-dishes" to the studies, discussions and addresses that formed the solid but attractive features of the assembly. The program illustrated the consummate skill and planning of the director, Rev. J. D. Collins. For once thirteen seemed to prove a fortunate number. Of these three instructors were from the home town, six from outside but in the state, three from other states and one from a foreign land. Subjects, live and practical, were opened and discussed by teachers made competent by training and practice. One was able to attend ten exercises a day—and many did—concert, study, lecture, sermon; but so varied that attention was paid to all. The music was unusually good. The college buildings, freely offered, gave abundant accommodations for the many classes and exercise. The Publication Society had on display a large and attractive collection of literature. The women's and young people's tables presented a rich assortment of publications illustrating lines of Christian work.

This assembly, meeting annually, on the college grounds, should be a means of leading many a young man and young woman to that institution.

Burma

By J. Herbert Cope

Letters are full of vacation experiences. Most of the missionaries seek the hills during the hot season while others prefer to remain at home. All write of happy times. They do not loaf; the younger and sometimes the older as well put in solid hours of language work while all indulge in study of some kind interspersed with recreation. The opportunity of getting away in this manner is appreciated. What the early missionaries did who had to remain in their hot stations all year round, one can scarcely imagine in these days of railways, ice, electric fans, etc. All are back at work and the school work is well on for the year.

And speaking of schools, the new agricultural school at Pyinmana opened a month ago. Twice as many applied as could be accommodated. Some had to be rejected. Mr. Case says he had an old Karen Christian tell him they have wanted for many years an agricultural missionary. And Burma needs something of that nature if the reports that California rice is beginning to win the Chinese and Japanese markets is true. The time has come when the Burman must prepare to fight competition.

There is continual emphasis in mission work on specialization. We have our evangelist and now comes the special work at the agricultural school. This month the Sunday-school missionary is announcing the first quarterlies in the various languages for the three departments although the adult quarterlies are suffering from the lack of ones to prepare them. Thus Sunday-school work will be developed along the lines of that at home. There will always be the need for the station missionary but the need for men in special work will increase.

Reports continue of the effects of the debt at home. The missionaries have had to throw the burden on their people and they have responded. It was debts at home which started the Bassein Christians years ago on their wonderful movement of self-support which gains impetus with the years. And now another Karen mission, that at Moulmein where this year they became self-supporting, ended the year with a good sized balance in the treasury.

Mrs. Gibbens has been ordered home for an operation, so Mongnai is without a worker for the time being. Miss Has well, one of the pioneer missionaries one might say, of Burma, passed away in the past month. She has not been actively connected with the mission for some years so turned to the orphans of Burma and founded the asylum which has later been taken over by the convention. She was a tireless worker and many will miss her.

A Tribute

By James Fisher

The following tribute to the Rev. W. Hughes and Doctor Clifford by the British secular press, is worthy of perusal by American readers. Under date of June 29, 1923, the Northampton Mercury, the county weekly paper says:

"Twenty-five years ago Rev. S. W. Hughes commenced his ministry at the Baptist Chapel, Walgrave, and the occasion was celebrated at Walgrave on Thursday, when Doctor Clifford, the grand old man of the Baptist denomination, was the distinguished visitor and speaker.

"The anniversary services opened in the afternoon, when Rev. S. W. Hughes preached to a large congregation on the theme, 'The Wonders of Christ.' Several pastors were present and took part in the service. According to English custom a tea followed the service, at which over 300 visitors were served in the Episcopal church schoolroom, which was granted for the purpose by the vicar, Rev. Wathen Wigg.

"The great event of the day was the evening meeting presided over by Rev. Evan Williams, pastor of the Fuller Church, Kettering. Greetings were extended by officers of the Walgrave, Market, Harborough and Christ Church, Sixways, Birmingham, where Mr. Hughes had held previous pastorates. Then came Doctor Clifford. He said it was a great pleasure for him to be present at that anniversary and to listen to the statements of his friend and pastor. 'For eight years it had been his joy to recognize Mr. Hughes as his own pastor.

"'I am only a young man' said the doctor, midst laughter. 'Only 87. Why should I not anticipate living another 5 years? My grandmother lived until she was ninety-nine and one-half, and voted for such longevity I certainly ought to do better than she did. What is the good of coming after your grandmother if you can't do better than she did?'

"The unfortunate phase of getting old he said was that his machine was his master, but still he was getting old happily, joyously, and optimistically; getting old with the full assurance that the world was going on from good to better, from better to best, and the best was yet to come.

"'We must never be content with yesterday. The semi-jubilee is preparation for the work to be done in the next twenty-five years, years of great importance; tremendous problems to be solved nationally and internationally, and with greater difficulties to be mastered. There must be personal evangelism, personal effort to save others, and the building up of Christian communities, linked together to carry the gospel to Europe and to the ends of the earth.'"

"Following the presentation of a silver tea service to Mr. Hughes, subscribed for by friends from the different pastorates, Mr. Hughes thanked all those who had so thoughtfully expressed their regard for him and Mrs. Hughes, and said it would confirm in them the trust that they had always reposed in those friends, whom he regarded as God's great gift to him.

"He then fell into a reminiscent frame of mind recalling a number of unusual experiences through which he had passed in the different pastorates, and especially at Walgrave as that was his first pastorate. He then went on to show the tremendous progress which had taken place during the twenty-five years. He described his open-air meetings on the Northampton market-square, when Blatchford troubled him terribly, and his hecklers quoted the Clarion and bowled him out many times. But he had lived to see Blatchford write 'The Confessions of a Changed Man,' in which he said: 'I have to confess that my materialistic philosophy has broken down.' Mr. Hughes cited many other cases and examples of interest, and closed by saying that they must now proclaim afresh and anew the whole gospel of Jesus of Nazareth."

Church News by States

Atlantic Coast

MASSACHUSETTS

Rev. J. J. Ross, of Boston has accepted the call of the First Church of Vancouver, B. C., and will begin his work in that city and province of the Dominion, the first Sunday in October. The Canadian Baptist, the Globe of Toronto, and the Daily Province of Vancouver all assure Doctor Ross of a hearty welcome back to Canada, the land of his birth.

EASTERN PENNSYLVANIA

Rev. Frank B. Ward of the economics department of the University of Pennsylvania, filled the pulpit of the First Church, Ridley Park, Sept. 2. Rev. Wayland Zwayer is pastor.

NEW YORK

Dr. Henry W. Tiffany is resting at his home at Harper's Ferry, W. Va., before taking up the pastorate of the Church of the Redeemer, Brooklyn. Doctor Tiffany was formerly pastor of the church at Lexington, Va.

WEST VIRGINIA

Rev. Joe W. English has resigned as pastor of the First Church,, Elkins, in order to re-enter the evangelistic field.

Mississippi Valley

OHIO

Rev. O. E. Miller, formerly of DeGraff, recently accepted a call to St. Paris.

The Summer Assembly

More than nine hundred persons attended one or more sessions of the assembly which was held on Denison University campus, Granville, Aug. 3-12. There were 448 registered in the training school.

A successful annual convention of the state B. Y. P. U. was held during the first three days, when there were addresses and conferences on subjects relating to the young people. The more prominent parts were taken by Revs. Earl E. Harper, Auburndale, Mass., A. M. McDonald of Cleveland, J. H. Oxreider of the Bengal-Orissa Mission, C. M. Eddy of Denison University, Miss Nellie Dunham and brethren Bates, Bowen, Bond, Webb, Exman, Holmes, and Chambers. Miss Edith L. Place, the state president, was in charge. Hereafter, the B. Y. P. U. will hold its annual meeting at another time and place, thus giving the privilege of entertaining the convention to different groups of young people. This change was made only after conference with the assembly leaders. The change will also give more time for assembly training school work. The new officers of the Ohio Union are: Pres., Marion Wright, Hamilton; vice-pres., Carl Landane, Cleveland; secy. Miss Joy Bethel, Rio Grande; treas., Mrs. Clara W. Lloyd, Granville; transportation manager, Rev. C. J. Bowen, Granville; state booster, Rev. Geo. W. Bates, Toledo.

The Ohio life service league held its meeting on Sunday afternoon, Aug. 5. President Kenneth Masteller and the secretary, Miss Helen Wickes, were in charge. Rev. Isaac Higginbotham of Portsmouth, N. H., gave the address. The new officers of the league are: Pres., Miss Maxine Gordon, Toledo; vice-pres., R. L. Dalbert, Cincinnati; secy.-treas., Miss Leola Black, Zanesville.

The training school occupied the week beginning Monday, Aug. 6. There were twenty-six instructors and conference leaders in charge of forty-one class periods each day. The Bible, missions, stewardship, Sunday-school work, B. Y. P. U. work, church history, church music, evangelism, psychology, pedagogy, story telling, pageantry, rural church work, week-day religious education, church vacation school, Christian Americanization, new American leadership, social service, W. W. G. work, women's missionary work, recreational activities, young women's life problems, young men's life problems, normal missions course and a series of methods courses for children's division workers, were the subjects and work presented in lectures and conferences from day to day.

The morning prayer meetings in the halls, dormitories and cottages under the general direction of Rev. C. M. Bond and his helpers were sources of spiritual helpfulness. The vesper services were also high points in the program. Dr. F. G. Cressey, the W. W. G., the life service league and others were leaders.

Pres. R. O. Carver and his helpers in the administration office, together with College Treasurer E. E. Hopkins and Dean W. A. Holmes, Registrar R. W. Edmondson and assistants, Mr. Dorman Richardson, Miss Joy Bethel and Mrs. Clara Lloyd, comprised a busy force during the ten days.

On the closing Sunday morning, recognition services were held in the Baptist church, when the graduating class of 251 persons, listened to a sermon by Pres. H. T. Houf of Rio Grande College. Twenty-two diplomas were granted for the completion of three years' work. Two persons completed the post-graduate work, and seven others were registered for post-graduate work. Carefully kept records from day to day showed that there were 10,414 lectures attended.

It was the general opinion that this was the best assembly session ever held by Ohio Baptists. The lecturers and conference leaders to whom credit is due for their good work are as follows: Prof. H. H. Severn, Prof. Geo. Platt Knox, Rev. Isaac Higginbotham, Miss Helen E. Hobart, Miss Lyde Jenkins, Mrs. Dorman Richardson, Rev. Miles W. Smith, Mrs. Vernon S. Phillips, Miss Nellie M. Dunham, Miss Mabel Shepard, Miss Agnes Shepard, Rev. Geo. H. Young, Mr. Walter B. Brent, Rev. C. H. Stull, Dr. U. M. McGuire, Rev. W. H. Thompson, Rev. Earl E. Harper, Mrs.

R. A. Horn, Miss Edith L. Place, Mrs. R. B. Smith, Mrs. D. A. Terradell, Mrs. F A. Lippert, Rev. Robert J. White, Rev. A. M. McDonald, Miss Meta A. Stevens, Rev. J. H. Morton. Many others were called on to assist in the work.

A successful boys' camp was in charge of Rev. Clive McGuire of St. Paris, and Rev. W. E. Bridge of Canton. There were forty boys from different parts of the state. Their tents made quite a little summer town in a grassy plot in the edge of the woods on the back of the campus. It is the purpose to build up this work for the training of the boys of the churches. The camp is supported by the assembly.

MICHIGAN

Rev. Harold J. Hamilton, formerly pastor of the First Church, Rochester, has accepted a call to the pastorate of the First Church, Charlotte. Rev. N. D. Potter of Lansing, formerly pastor at Kingsley, will succeed Mr. Hamilton.

The church at Lawton has secured Rev. A. F. Malmborg of Ceresco as pastor. The church was left pastorless recently because of the resignation of Rev. C. W. Biastock.

Want Ads

Wanted: Teachers for Bishop College, Marshall, Texas, an American Baptist Home Mission school for negroes. Piano, $900; high-school chemistry, physics, science, $1,035; librarian, $900; hall matron and campus chaperon with some teaching, $900; college physics and mathematics, $1,125; for coaching athletics, $125 additional. Furnished room, board, laundry for $3.50 per week. Address C. H. Maxson, Marshall, Texas.

Wanted—Teachers for colleges and universities. American College Bureau, Chicago Temple, Chicago; 1254 Amsterdam Ave., New York.

For sale—100 acre farm, 12 acres in fruit, all good land and well watered. Natural gas. One-half mile from Denison College. J. A. Riedle, Granville, Ohio.

WE TYPEWRITE Sermons, lectures, stories manuscripts, letters, books, etc. Price 1 cent per line. Minimum charge $1. PRINT 500 Bond Letterheads 8½x11 and 500 envelopes $5. FORM LETTERS that look like typewritten, 30 lines, $4.50 per 1,000. Special prices on larger orders. Neat, accurate work. Prompt service. Satisfaction assured. Be sure to write in plain letters. Proceeds go to Christian work. Postage extra.
AMERICAN ADDRESSING CO.
Golden Rule Service
3147 S. Millard Avenue Chicago, Ill.

When Making Wills and Legacies Remember
Our Corporate Name Is:
"WOMAN'S AMERICAN BAPTIST HOME MISSION SOCIETY"
Mrs. Mary E. Bloomer
Treasurer
276 Fifth Avenue, New York City

Season 1923-24 Thirteenth Year
T. M. HOFMEISTER, D.D., LL.D.
Evangelist
South Solon (Madison County) Ohio

The First Church, Lansing, has taken on new life since the coming of Pastor Ralph W. Hobbs. The church has a splendid opportunity for service. Mr. H. B. Pilcher is the new director of religious education.

KANSAS

The Kansas City Theological Seminary begins its twenty-second year Oct. 2. The women's training school will begin its eleventh year.

MINNESOTA

Rev. J. E. Naylor has accepted the position of state evangelist under the Home Mission Society and the state convention. He will conduct evangelistic meetings Sept. 1-May 1.

IOWA

The Danish Church of Cedar Falls was recently organized into the Calvary Church. It will entertain the Danish conference this fall. Rev. J. D. Vinding is pastor.

The First Church, Waterloo, is the recipient of a gift of $10,000 from Mrs. Childs for a new pipe organ.

INDIANA

The annual meeting of the state association of negro Baptists was held with the Trinity Church, Jeffersonville, Aug. 7-10.

Summer Assembly

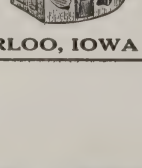
The Indiana Baptist Assembly recently closed its eleventh annual session. It has come to be an efficient and permanent factor in the educational work of the state convention, and is held at Franklin College. Each year the assembly spirit grows; each year the young people grow nearer together in denominational fellowship; each year their vision of kingdom work enlarges.

This year some new plans were tried which proved successful and will be repeated. The daily grading of note books proved a laborious task but was abundantly worth while. The pupils developed unusual interest and skill in taking notes, and teachers were heartened to see that they had succeeded in putting their messages across in an understandable way. Teacher training work was done for credit the first time this year. One course in the teaching values of the Old Testament and one in Sunday-school pedagogy were followed by an examination. Twenty-eight passed the examination and received the customary credit card for their work. This will count on their standing as candidates for a teacher training diploma. One hundred and seventy-one received certificates as the result of taking approved notes on the lectures. Fourteen received diplomas for three years' work. Approximately one-third of those in attendance were visitors and did not submit notes for grading. Yet they received the messages of the teachers and were benefitted by them.



The spiritual value of the work appeared in services of prayer held by the life service league before the vesper service which was conducted by Rev. F. A. Hayward. For a large number, it was the occasion of a rededication of themselves to the Master and his work.

The occasion closed with the annual state convention of the B. Y. P. U. of which Rev. Ford Porter is president. It was a meeting of power in which Rev. F. K. Singhiser of New York was the outstanding speaker. Assembly and convention combined to make a helpful time for the young people of the Hoosier state.

BOVEE'S COAL AND WOOD FURNACES
AT MANUFACTURER'S PRICES

Central Heating, Regular Pipeless, or with piping to each room, as desired. The Bovee requires thirty per cent less coal than the average furnace used. The Bovee Horizontal Wood and Coal Furnace has large 26 inch combustion chamber, burns 4 foot wood, with double doors 16x16 inches. Average wood requires little cutting and no splitting and saves 75 per cent of cost of coal for fuel. Write for descriptive catalog and manufacturer's prices.
We make Church Furnaces in single or multiple units with gravity circulation of cold and warm air, also with forced fan circulation for both winter and summer use.

BOVEE FURNACE WORKS, 85 W. 8th ST., WATERLOO, IOWA

Pacific Coast

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

Great prominence was given in the secular press to the funeral service of President Harding conducted by Rev. James S. West of the First Church, San Francisco. The prayer he offered was widely copied.

A farewell reception for six outgoing missionaries who sailed from San Francisco on the "President Wilson," Aug. 23, was held at the Hamilton Square Church, Rev. Louis J. Sawyer, pastor, on Wednesday evening, Aug. 22. The missionary party consisted of Miss Marian Reifsneider, Mr. and Mrs. P. Ray Gleason, Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Whitaker, Jr., who go to Burma, and Miss Lea Blanche Edgar, who is assigned to Kinwa, China.

Rev. Omar H. Goslin of New Jersey has taken up his duties at the University of California. There is the largest enrolment of Baptist students that there has ever been.

During the three months' absence of Dr. C. W. Brinstad in Europe, Rev. Clark H. Bancroft of the department of town and country work acted as executive secretary of the Northern California Convention.

Berkeley Divinity School

The opening exercises of the nineteenth year of Berkeley Divinity School were held in the chapel of the school on Monday evening, Aug. 20. Prof. John W. Bailey, formerly president of Colorado Woman's College, Denver, Colo., professor of New Testament interpretation, gave the opening address on the theme "The Scientific Spirit and the New Testament Message." The scripture lesson was read by Rev. Omar H. Goslin, student pastor for Baptist students at the University of California. Addresses of welcome were extended to the incoming students by Rev. James S. West, pastor First Church, San Francisco, on behalf of the churches of the San Francisco and the East Bay region, and by Chaplain W. Raymond Hall on behalf of the student body.

There will be, during the present semester, evening sessions for those desiring training for Christian service who cannot attend day classes. Another important feature will be a series of fortnightly lectures open to the public, on the general theme "The Church and The Pulpit." Dr. John Snape gave the first lecture of the series on Thursday Aug. 30 on "The World's Baptist Alliance."

President Hill is at present in England. From the English Lake Distric

he writes: "Please tell our friends that we are having a very wonderful time."

There are eighteen students in the entering class this year, the largest in the history of the seminary.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Rev. John Marvin Dean of the First Church, Pasadena, conducted the city's memorial service for President Harding. Mr. Dean is president of the Protestant Pastors' Union.

Obituary

REV. WILLIAM HENRY WILSON

Rev. William Henry Wilson died suddenly at his home in Youngstown, Ohio, July 1. Mr. Wilson was born in London, Ontario, Aug. 1, 1847.

He held pastorates in Nebraska, Kansas, Oklahoma, Pennsylvania, and Ohio. The last one was at Garrettsville, Ohio. He retired from active service in 1916.

CYRUS CLARK BOYNTON

C. C. Boynton was born in Vermont Aug. 16, 1843, and died at his home, 836 So. Bonnie Brae St., Los Angeles, Cal., Aug. 19, 1923. Baptists of Vermont knew him as prinsipal of Leland and Gray Seminary, Townshend, from 1876-1883. From 1883-1887 he was superintendent of schools in Lebanon, N. H. In 1887 he moved to Pasedena, and two years later to Los Angeles, where he served the First Church as deacon and in 1898 as chairman of building committee. Later, he was one of the founders of Temple Church, and during its twenty years of life, has given his time, energy and thought unsparingly to its upbuilding, serving as trustee, deacon, chairman of music committee, chairman of pulpit committee, and as director of the Auditorium Company, which owns the building occupied by Temple Church.

He passed away quietly on Sunday evening after a brief illness. He leaves a widow and five children, all active Baptists.

MRS. EMMA O. WILKINSON
An Appreciatoin

When, in the morning of June 26, Mrs. Emma Otis Wilkinson, the beloved wife of Rev. Arthur L. Wilkinson, stepped out of the land of heartache into the land of unalloyed bliss, there passed one of earth's choice spirits.

It has been my great privilege to know Mrs. Wilkinson intimately, practically all my life, as teacher, pastor's wife, hostess and as guest in our home, a loyal, helpful friend at all times, to whom, to-day, I bear loving tribute. I was always impressed, as were all who know her, with the unostentatious integrity and genuineness of her Christian character. She was endowed with remarkable beauty of person and grace of carriage, as well as with distinguished intellectual and social gifts, and a most winsome personality, a combination that constituted her a representative of the highest type of Christian culture.

In every pastorate held by her husband, by reason of her unusual natural gifts and deep consecration, she was a great help and inspiration to all, and was always greatly loved and honored. No one ever came to her for counsel who was not the better and stronger for the interview with her. Few persons could so tactfully effect reconciliations and renew broken ties of friendship as could Mrs. Wilkinson. Another outstanding quality was her skill in avoiding the betrayal of dangerous confidences, sometimes injudiciously or even unwittingly reposed in her, without any sacrifice of truth.

Through a long period of invalidism, following years of devotion to her aged mother, she was ever patient, though sometimes enduring excruciating pain, and seconded, to the best of her ability, the efforts of skilled physicians to restore her health, although herself confident that it could not be done. Her devotion to her family and delight in her grandchildren and great grandchildren were deep and strong. But, when summoned from above, she quietly left the family circle and entered into the rest prepared for those who love the Lord.

Earth is richer because Emma Otis Wilkinson lived here; Heaven is dearer because she has entered there.

Troy, Ohio. Florence Emma Martin.

Sick-a-Bed Sister

(Continued from page 1015)

the woman did who looked and looked for her lost piece of silver: the Saviour has been looking and looking for you, dear! He has missed you!"

"Oh really? Really?" asked Broom-Sticks in an awed sort of way. "I shouldn't think he would care much about me when he has so many fine people like you."

The white lady laughed: "Ah, but remember the Broom-Stick woman—didn't she have nine fine pieces of silver all safe and sound? Yes, but she simply had to sweep until she found the lost piece, too. And you, Broom-Sticks, are the Saviour's little lost piece."

Broom-Sticks beamed all over her pretty brown face: "Well, I'm all found! And I guess nothing will ever be quite the same again."

And nothing ever was. So aren't you glad that we gave our New World Movement offerings to build even such a small little hospital over in India? I am!

If Some One Should Ask You About a Will

And when you make your own
Our Corporate Name is:

The American Baptist Home Mission Society

CHARLES L. WHITE, Executive Secretary
SAMUEL BRYANT, Treasurer
23 East Twenty-Sixth Street
New York, N. Y.

From Maine to California

State Conventions cultivate earnestly all benevolences. They have become our single collecting agencies. They receive from the churches their missionary, philanthropic and in large measure educational offerings, and forward the same. These added duties are discharged with fine fidelity to every interest.

A Mighty Missionary Force

From Maine to California the field workers, evangelists, associational missionaries, missionary pastors and other helpers of over thirty-six State Conventions preach the gospel in frontier places, organize new churches, revive the discouraged, strengthen the weak and build up the home bases for world conquest. The State Mission Enterprise is a great factor in our denominational advance.

Facing Financial Straits

Our State Conventions share with others the financial strain. They accepted their 25% reduction in budgets and now receive only their pro-rata share of collections. Like all other missionary interests their needs are increased. They ought to enlarge, but instead some are threatened with retrenchment. Shall we hold them long in suspense? Or, will the offerings of our churches quickly lift their great tasks?

"Make America Christian"

Financial needs to April 30, 1924, $12,161,521.67

THE GENERAL BOARD OF PROMOTION OF THE NORTHERN BAPTIST CONVENTION

Our Book Shelf

Prayers of John Wanamaker, with an introduction by A. G. MacLennan, New York: Revell. $1.25.

John Wanamaker was active superintendent of the Sunday school of the Bethany Presbyterian Church, Philadelphia, of which he was the founder, for more than sixty years. The 150 prayers published in this book are the prayers which he uttered in connection with this work. They are the thoughts of a child in close touch with the Father.

The Beloved Disciple, by Alfred E. Garvie, principal of Hackney and New Colleges, London. New York: Doran. $2.

A scholarly study and exposition of the Fourth Gospel. It is not our province to discredit or endorse its presentations and interpretations. It is an erudite discussion of the Johannine Gospel adapted to the classroom more than to the average Bible reader. We confess to a surprise that we should have pretended to understand, enjoy and spiritually feed on this great book when there are so many alleged misconceptions, difficulties and misinterpretations obsessing its pages which should have made us more discriminating! But then—.

Caste and Outcast, by Dhan Gopal Mukerji. New York: E. P. Dutton.

It is looking into the heart of India to read this book; for out of the heart of a pure Hindoo the book was born. From a consecrated Brahmin of Calcutta to a "red" soap-boxer in San Francisco, and from a petted baby in a Hindoo home to a graduate in rationalism at an American university, and all the way between those extremes runs the gamut of Mr. Mukerji's remarkable experience. He tells his own story with the naivete of an oriental discovering America, and with flashes of insight that reveal an alert and philosophical observer of the ways of the world. Withal, the story is so gossipy, so discerning, so sympathetic and so finely told as to constitute a revelation of the soul of India to American readers in beautiful English language.

The Burden of Unemployment, by Philip Klein. New York: Russell Sage Foundation.

It is called "A Study of Unemployment Relief Measures in Fifteen American Cities." It is all of that and more. Causes, cases, diagrams, methods of study and relief, agencies cooperating on this work, and a multitude of other things that go to make up a real compendium of instruction and reference, are here placed in convenient form in the reader's hands. Naturally such a work ought to conclude with "Conclusions"; and here the discussion is most interesting and fruitful for the general reader who does not care for the technical aspects of the subject. And of twenty-two formal results of the study, the two underscored by the author as most vital are proposals for "some form of committee for the continuous survey of local economic conditions," and "long-range planning of public works by each community to stabilize employment." "Russell Sage Foundation" is sufficient guaranty of the high quality of the work as a whole.

Christian Ways of Salvation, by George W. Richards, professor of church history in the Theological Seminary of the Reformed Church in the United States. New York: Macmillan. $2.50.

The "ways" discussed are: The way of Jesus, of the apostles, of the ancient Catholic, the orthodox Catholic, Roman Catholic, evangelical ways (Luther, Zwingli, reformed) and of the humanists. A comprehensive index follows.

The discussion is not a mere cursory history of the views of those bodies but an expert critical survey of their doctrines and principles, wherein they failed and erred. He submits as a "credible creed," a confession of faith submitted to the United Free Church of Scotland in 1921—not as yet adopted, but is being considered. We mark this "confession" omits the Westminster sections on the virgin birth, election, the inerrency of the scriptures, and the doom of the ungodly; otherwise it is conservative and evangelical. The volume congests into a scholarly digest the "history of Christian doctrine" as presented by great religious bodies through the centuries and is a most convenient and readable handbook on the subject.

The Moral Life of the Hebrews, by J. M. Powis Smith. University of Chicago Press. $2.25.

A most interesting book on a much mooted subject. It discusses the morals the Hebrew race in preprophetic times, in the prophetic period and in the age of Judaism in the post-exilian ages. It marks the evolution of the ethical standards of the race from the Yahvistic times until the advent of the Messianic age. Of course its data is the Old Testament history and literature on which it throws a flood of light. On the subject matter duscussed, it is a valuable commentary.

Education and Training for Social Work, by James H. Tufts, professor of philosophy in the University of Chicago. New York: Russell Sage Foundation.

"A whole group of Indians might starve; a single Indian never." This quotation from Doctor Eastman throws into light the motif of the book. The investigation is built for the purpose of answering the question, "What education and training are needed for social engineers" including, of course all kinds of work directed to making modern civilization of the single life as the Indians were, and proportionately effective. Written by a college man for college men and women, it is chiefly interesting as a study in educational method; but it will also help to answer a question asked of this reviewer with increasing frequency by young men and women: "What is the outlook in social work as a calling, and what preparation ought one to secure?" An interesting comparison is presented of social work with teaching and the ministry as callings, somewhat creditable to all of them alike. Prime recommendations are, "improving the staffs and equipment" of existing schools for such education, and "offering fellowships and scholarships under rigorous standards."

Alaska Our Northern Wonderland, by Frank G. Carpenter. Garden City, N. Y. Doubleday, Page & Co. $3.

If you haven't been to Alaska, you'll feel as though you had been there when you have read this book. If you have been there. it will be like a revisit to this northern wonderland—a land of surprises—continually the unusual is met. Flowers and fruits and glaciers seem to hobnob with each other. A few random quotations: "Many of the icebergs are the size of a New York office building. Baby icebergs (such as those pictured) are lassoed by steamers for their ice-chests. "Pitching hay on the interior farms of Alaska is just as hot work as in the fields of Virginia." "The Alaska-Yukon boundary is the longest straight international border line ever surveyed." "The streets of Juneau, the capital, consist of more than ten miles of planked roadways laid up hill and down. It is planned to replace them with macadam made from the tailings of the gold mines of Douglas and Treadwell." "On the way to Mendenhall Glacier cows pasture on rich grass in the shadow of snow-capped mountains." "Small fruits and vegetables in southeastern Alaska grow to twice the size usual in the states." "The Eskimo children are never punished because these people believe that the soul of some ancestor, dwelling in every child, will haunt the harsh parent." Mr. Carpenter has the gift of seeing things and of making his readers see them. They travel with him. When he describes Alaska, he takes no single phase of the country; he treats it in detail which details combine to present the country as a whole—commercially, geographically scenically. He reveals the people by showing individual types; he tells of the Indians and their customs; he guides the reader through the salmon industries; the fur business; the gold mines The book is handsomely bound and is beautifully illustrated from 123 orginal photographs. It also has two maps in color.

HOME STUDY Become More Efficient through courses in Mathematics, History, English, Chemistry, Psychology, Education, Business and 35 other subjects which the University gives by mail. They command credit toward a Bachelor degree and may be begun at any time.
The University of Chicago
43 Ellis Hall Chicago, Ill.

THE BAPTIST INSTITUTE FOR CHRISTIAN WORKERS
Exceptional opportunity in Bible study, Religious Education and in Practical Methods. For catalogue write
J. MILNOR WILBUR, D.D.
1425 Snyder Ave. Philadelphia, Pa.

TRALLE
Service in Religious Education, Sermons, Lectures, Addresses, Conferences. Churches saved from costly mistakes in building. Some open fall and winter dates.
HENRY EDWARD TRALLE
150 Claremont Ave., New York City Tel. Morningside 3930

Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society
(CORPORATE NAME)
ALICE M. HUDSON, Treasurer
276 Fifth Avenue New York City

TEXAS OFFERS: We need some Christian men with money to help in development of eastern Texas. Mercantile and factory business each offer good opportunities. One or two abandoned log roads to which electricity may be applied. Used interurban can be bought cheap. Some fine land for colonization cheap. Address E. S. Jameson, Tatum, Tex.

PICTURE SERMONS DRAW CROWDS
We have over 250 religious lectures, travelogues, illustrated Hymns, etc., for sale or rent. Special lectures on the life of Christ—1922 Passion Play—
Special Easter Services—Just Out
Five lectures by Marion Lawrence on Japan, the beautiful. Write for slide bulletins. Complete line of stereopticon and projection machines.
GEO. W. BOND SLIDE COMPANY,
27 Years Supplying Churches
Room B, 6 E. Lake St., Chicago, Ill.

OUR MUSIC CORNER

CONDUCTED BY WILLIAM LESTER

ORGAN OR PIANO?

The question of church facilities is always a serious one, especially as touching the music, dealing, as we must, with two strongly opposing factors, the radicals, who are ever eager to adopt every new idea or tool, and the conservatives, who oppose in principle anything not known in "their day." It is to the level-headed, loyal-hearted "moderates" that the pastor turns in his extremity. These counsel thoughtful, unselfish deliberation.

As to mechanics, there would be no question could every church install that king of instruments, a pipe organ. Its influence on the emotions is marvelous. Well do I remember my first experience with one. Let me preface the incident by stating that, soon after my marriage and departure from the old home, the "little white church" in which I had been baptized, enrolled as a member, received my first communion, played for Sabbath school almost ever since I could reach the pedals and counted it a dire calamity if I had to miss choir practice, this place of such sacred memories, burned to the ground from an over-heated furnace imperfectly installed.

The news reached me during my first attack of homesickness because of the thousands of miles between me and my dear ones. It was the straw that broke the camel's back. "By Babel's streams I sat and wept," even though a bride, who had accompanied her minister-to-be husband on his second theological seminary term in Pittsburgh, Pa.

I had been so eager to hear the wonderful organs my husband had told me about, but, just then, the squeak of the perennially loose pedal on the little old chapel organ back home was the only music I cared to hear. My husband urged me to go next morning to hear a favorite professor who was to preach in what I understood was a strong anti-instrumental church. It had been, until very recently, but he purposely permitted me to remain ignorant of the change so that I would have a pleasant surprise.

Well, I was surprised all right and so was he, to an amazing degree. My midwest rusticity was so overwhelmed by all the silk-lined, gold-plated, stained-glass magnificence about me that I was stunned into mute adoration. Deep in my heart was an under-current of grief because of that untrustworthy furnace back home.

Gradually I became aware of a peculiar throbbing under my feet. Was there a furnace down there? The throbbing increased and a weird, far-away whistling and jingling was heard. Someone must have become aware of the situation and had gotten busy down there; but what silvery tools they used! Never had I heard such musical chains and pipes about a furnace. I was secretly greatly alarmed, but no one else seemed at all disturbed so I gripped my Psalter and sat still. I remembered city people were very indifferent to fires, trusting to their excellent fire-fighting facilities.

But listen! Human voices crying—calling! The very floor was rumbling and heaving and I distinctly smelled smoke! (So much for the imagination.) Why didn't somebody do something? Were they all asleep or was I going crazy? My husband sat as impassive as the rest, but my very flesh was quivering and tingling while something within me seemed determined to soar up and away and drag my shaking body with it.

A sudden burst of splendid harmony brought me to my feet, ashen-faced, wild-eyed,—to be promptly pulled down by my embarrassed husband who whispered, "It's the organ." Only my red-headed temper kept me from fainting and only the sacred surroundings saved somebody swift punishment; but I soon forgot and forgave everything on the earth, earthy. In fact, I wasn't there! My soul and I were up buzzing around the ceiling, hobnobbing with the little mural angels until the last note quivered into silence, when I felt myself slowly sink back into my pew.

There's no music like it on earth and if there's something more wonderful in heaven, that's my destination. What a pity that small town and rural churches must, perforce, forego the inspiration of such a miracle worker. Right here I find argument for the one strong community church, making possible better and more attractive means for worship.

It is a far cry from such a masterpiece to the ordinary chapel organ, yet there are many really excellent little instruments, sweet-toned and helpful, if properly played, but even the finest instruments demand that. The deep, sustained tones of an organ are best for congregational singing. Also, the organ, even a small chapel one, is more churchly, more dignified.

But there is a feature of the praise service other than congregational singing, and one which adds so much of beauty and interest—solos. Most of these are written with piano accompaniment utterly impossible of organ execution, because of the latter's limited octaves and different touch. Also, the piano, being stringed, is best with the small volunteer orchestras which are such an attraction to young people and a valuable aid in holding their interest in church work. Again, organs are more difficult to play and few master them because pianos are more generally found in homes.

So I should say, both if possible. If that is out of the question and there is a difference of opinion as to the choice of instruments, let me beg of you make haste slowly. Take into frank consideration the ability of your singers and accompanists, the character of your "specials" and the attitude of the congregation. It never pays to ride, roughshod over any one's scruples. In church affairs majority rule is not always safe or Christian. The minority should be granted kindly consideration, for it is life principles with which we are dealing, and consciences should not be lightly regarded.

Keep in mind the big purpose of your music, of the service, of the church itself—to win souls for Christ. Observe the spirit, subserve the tool. Better no instrument at all than disrupting dissension.

Have I answered my question? No. It is unanswerable—for an outsider. Only those immediately concerned can do this. Others can only make helpful suggestions, which is the why of this article.

But sing, anyway, accompanied or not. Some of the finest music I ever heard was in an anti-instrumental church. A fine choir of forty led, really led the big congregation, and how they all sang! Why, the very walls throbbed and thrilled with that noble volume of song. Those singers were self-sufficient because of long training; but most congregations need all the mechanical assistance they can get, and the best, and they should have it.—Paula Revere in the Choir Leader.

---

Dr. Sidney L. Gulick, secretary of the American Federal Council of Churches' Commission on International Justice and Goodwill, who has spent the last year in China, Korea and Japan in developing more effective contacts between the Christian forces of East and West, has returned to the United States. Dr. Gulick's last weeks in the Far East were spent in China, where he met Christian leaders in the more important cities and attended the meeting in Shanghai of the National Christian Council of China formed last year.

A Permanent Income

Life Annuities on One or Two Lives

On one life the rate of income varies from four to nine per cent a year, payable semi-annually.

On one or two lives the rate varies from four to eight and three-fourths per cent a year, payable semi-annually.

A survivorship agreement provides a permanent income for two lives.

For annuity booklet and samples of single and survivorship agreements, please address

CHARLES L. WHITE
23 East Twenty-Sixth Street
New York City
The American Baptist Home Mission Society

CHURCH FURNITURE
PEWS · PULPITS
CHANCEL FURNITURE
SUNDAY SCHOOL SEATING
American Seating Company
1069 Lytton Bldg.
CHICAGO
Branches in Principal Cities

CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL
Ask for Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 19
ESTABLISHED 1858
THE C. S. BELL CO. HILLSBORO, OHIO

McSHANE BELL FOUNDRY CO
Baltimore, Md.
CHURCH, CHIME AND PEAL
BELLS Memorials a Specialty

PIPE ORGANS
of any size or construction. Estimates cheerfully submitted. Also Reed Organs for Church or Home.
Electric Organ blowing outfits for organs of any make.
Write, stating which catalog is desired.
Hinners Organ Co., Pekin, Ill.

A Fraternal Visitor from England

By H. Jeffs

MANY American congregations and audiences will have the opportunity during the fall of sampling the spiritual and intellectual quality of Rev. Thomas Nightingale, secretary of the National Council of the Evangelical Free Churches of England and Wales. The council was created thirty years ago to bring into fellowship churches that were essentially one in their standards of the faith, in spite of "diversities of operation" in their ecclesiastical methods. Before the council they were as isolated "ships that pass in the night;" since they have been a fleet. That Baptist prince of preachers, Doctor Alexander Maclaren, said at a meeting in connection with the council's annual convention, "The Free Church Council may not have razed the denominational walls that shut us away from each other, but it has removed the broken bottles from the tops, and has so lowered the walls that we can shake hands and talk to each other over them."

Mr. Nightingale is not himself a Baptist, but he is the close friend and loyal colleague of great Baptists. It was to and through the National Council that Dr. John Clifford made his appeal for a campaign of "personal evangelism"—an appeal that was warmly responded to, and has resulted in a distinct rise in the spiritual temperature of the churches, and a definite deepening of their spiritual life. The president of the National Council in the current year is that world-traveled Baptist, Rev. F. C. Spurr, who fulfilled great ministries at Collins-street Church, Melbourne, Australia, Regent's Park Church, London, and is now cutting out a place for himself at Birmingham. With Mr. Spurr, Mr. Nightingale in the early summer stirred up Devon and Cornwall with their rousing preaching and speaking.

The church of Mr. Nightingale's allegiance is the United Methodist, smallest of the three Methodist bodies in Great Britain, but distinguished for its success in raising scholarly, evangelical and energetic pastors. Mr. Nightingale himself was in the front rank of the younger middle-aged men, after having ministered to a thriving institutional church at Walthamstow, in north-east London, and a church at Southport, on the Lancashire coast, exacting in its requirements with its record of great preachers, when he was persuaded three years ago to undertake the secretaryship of the National Council. The glow of its early ideals had faded out of the council's sky, grey hairs were showing prematurely on its head, and its knees were becoming feeble, as the consequence of certain political divisions before the war, and of the disintegrating effects of the war itself. Mr. Nightingale by his own faith, audacity and constructive policy, has restored the council's faith in itself, and made it a force to be reckoned with not only for united evangelism, but for making the united impact of the churches felt on such questions as the liquor traffic, the gambling evil, social purity and war. Through platform and pulpit deliverances, and the broadcasting of leaflets by the million, the council is encouraging and assisting the churches to make their voices heard and heeded by politicians.

As preacher and speaker Mr. Nightingale is radioactive. There is no danger to heavy-eyed Eutychuses under his ministry. He gives out himself without stint—a self in which humor, and the gift of flashing epigram, are component elements. He is a young people's man. He has just completed his year as president of the National Council of Christian Endeavor, and it was a year of exhiliration to himself and to the young people.

"But is he sound in the faith?" some fearful saints, trembling for the ark, may ask. Well, Mr. Nightingale preaches with his whole heart the gospel that is "the power of God unto salvation of all them that believe," the gospel of him who is "pure unbounded love," but who is all purity and all justice, the gospel of the Christ of Nazareth, of the Mount, of Gethsemane, of Calvary, of Olivet, the crucified but risen and reigning Christ at the right hand of the Father Eternal, but at the side of every man and woman who craves for love that is more than human and for power that can make them "more than conquerors." Such soundness should be good enough for American Baptists.

Heroes of Golden Deeds

(Continued from page 1009)

other lives, in such a terrible ordeal a few years ago; and their names are inscribed upon the pedestal of this statue, which is their memorial. Their names do not matter, but their memory is kept green. All along the New England shore and the New Jersey shore, their brothers are pacing up and down every night of the year, under other names, keeping faithful watch through the darkness and the storm for the safety of your brother and mine. How often do we think of them in our quiet beds? One cry upon the midnight air, one rocket shooting yonder to the sky, and, in spite of every pulling thought of the woman or the children in the little home, the boat is launched against a fiercer foe than that which the "six hundred" faced at Balaklava, too often with a proportion of fatality as great. Too often, also their names then remain written in sand or water. It would be well for us, if along with the names of infantrymen and cavalrymen and artillerymen, we could write them oftener in bronze and granite.

"It Is to Laugh"

"We want your eggs and want them bad. Porter & Young," says a display advertisement in the Le Roy (Minn.) Independent.

---

The Boy Grew Older.—"And has he learned to talk yet?"

"My, yes! We are teaching him to keep quiet now."—Life.

---

"Oh, no!" solioloquized Johnny bitterly, "there ain't no favorites in this family. Oh, no! If I bite my fingernails I get a rap over the knuckles, but if the baby eats his whole foot they think it's cute."—Ladies Home Journal.

Stranger to industrious boy: "Is your mother at home?"

Boy: "Say! Do you suppose I'm mowing this yard because the grass is long?"

---

A prospective customer wrote to a firm whose advertisement never seemed to change:

"Have noted your picture of that pair corduroy pants in Home Magazine for past four months. More I see of them better I like them. If not sold as yet, please enter my order for same."

---

Helen was attending her first party. When refreshments were served she refused a second helping to ice cream with a polite "No, thank you," although her look was wistful.

"Oh do have some more ice cream, dear," her hostess urged.

"Mother told me I must say, 'No, thank you,'" explained the little girl, "but I don't believe she knew the dishes were going to be so small."—New York Evening Post.

---

One day, hearing an assistant say to a customer: "No, we have not had any for a long time," the proprietor, unable to countenance such an admission, began to work himself up into his usual rage.

Fixing a glassy eye on his assistant, he said to the customer: "We have plenty in reserve, ma'am—plenty downstairs!"

Whereupon the customer looked dazed: then, burst into hysterical laughter and left the shop.

"What did she say to you?" demanded the proprietor of the assistant.

"We haven't had any rain lately."

---

A Brief Course in Pedagogy

(Continued from page 1012)

ing once and then recollecting. Protestants run the danger of losing much that is valuable in the mental life because they idly suppose no effort is required to remember these deepest things of the spirit. If we taught the multiplication table or any other part of our day-school work in the same way that we teach our Bible, the day schools would be in the condition of some of our churches.

The last law of teaching is definiteness. Be definite. Have one central fact you see yourself. See it. Drive it home. Get your man. Observe the rhetorical laws of brevity, simplicity, and clarity to do this. But get him. The lawyer said, "What must I do?" Jesus said "But if thou wouldst be perfect." Another lawyer another day, "But who is my neighbor?" and there followed the story of the Good Samaritan. Another day it was the Samaritan woman. Said Nathan to David, "Thou art the man."

Don't be a blunderbuss, scattering your shot, aiming at everything, hitting nothing. Remember the one aim of all teaching is to secure personal acceptance of Jesus Christ. If you get your class to do that you are a successful teacher —Ambrose M. Bailey in the Sunday School Worker.

Volume IV September 15, 1923 No. 33

The Baptist

Published Every Week by the Nor[illegible]st Convention

Univ. of Ill. Library
Urbana
Ill.

Jehovah's Immutable Throne

THE Lord reigneth; he is apparelled with majesty;
The Lord is apparelled, he hath girded himself with strength.
The world also is established, that it cannot be moved:
Thy throne is established of old: thou art from everlasting.

The floods have lifted up, O Lord,
The floods have lifted up their voice;
The floods lift up their waves.

Above the voices of many waters,
The mighty breakers of the sea,
The Lord on high is mighty.

Thy testimonies are very sure;
Holiness becometh thine house, O Lord, forevermore.

—The Ninety-Third Psalm

Fresh from the Field

The First Church, West Sutton, Mass., is remembered in the will of Daniel Hutchinson of Phoenix, Ariz., a former resident of that city. The amount named is $5,000.

Final statistics in the work of the Foreign Mission Society for the last year have been completed. These show a total number of 18,415 converts baptized on confession of faith in Jesus Christ. This is the largest number ever reported in a single year in the history of the society.

The First Church, Cleveland, Ohio, had as its summer supplies Rev. R. M. Traver, East Orange, N. J.; Rev. C. J. Oxley, Utica, N. Y.; Rev. A. M. McDonald and Rev. H. S. Foster, the assistant pastor. The pastor, Rev. David Bovington, returned to his pulpit Sept. 2.

Every available seat was filled and many stood at the doors during the first service after the return of Rev. J. C. Carlile at Folkestone, England. Doctor Carlile had been away from his pulpit for several months due to illness but his loyal people had "carried on" during his absence. They did everything within their power to let him know how glad they were to welcome him home.

In Iowa we note that Rev. J. H. Perry has accepted the call of the church at What Cheer. He was formerly an Iowa pastor but has been serving the church at Greenville, Mich. Rev. F. W. Madson has accepted a call to the church at Spencer.

Rev. E. R. Curry reports that the church at Bozeman, Mont., has had a good summer. Nine new members were received during August, six by baptism. The church regrets the loss of Rev. C. B. Stephens, who has removed to Bloomington, Ind.

A special meeting of the board of managers of the Colorado Convention and pastors of the state will be held at the First Church, Denver, at an early date. It is expected that Dr. John Y. Aitchison will be present. Rev. W. F. Ripley, who has been keeping his hand on promotional matters during the absence of Secretary Palmer, reports that the receipts from Colorado churches show an increase of 25 per cent over those of the same period a year ago. There is a fine spirit of cooperation and the year promises to be the best of the New World Movement period.

A number of our exchanges seem to be greatly exercised over certain "changes" from the original draft of the Baptist message to the world as printed in this country and that finally adopted at Stockholm. The Illinois Baptist says: "Yes; but the original draft of the message as it was published in the Baptist Standard was so modified, that Dr. J. H. Shakespeare could accept it and vote for it and still hold his notions of church unity, etc. . . . It took hard work in the committee to fix the message so that he could submit to it." It seems to us that if any mistake was made it was made by the journals of this country printing the message before it had been acted upon by the Alliance. A Baptist body frequently objects to ready-made measures.

The Judson Church, Oak Park, Ill., is making splendid progress under the leadership of Rev. J. C. Dent. The church is only two years old and was organized with a small number of constituent members but the membership is now 130.

Rev. Russell H. Bready, pastor of the Central Methodist Church of Pontiac, Mich., is one of the city commissioners. He has been very active in a campaign for law and order and petitions have been filed seeking his recall. The church folks are standing back of him and have secured a large petition asking conference to return him to Central Church that he may continue the fight.

After having served in the active ministry for fifty years, Rev. A. S. Pettie has resigned as pastor of the First Church, Hickman, Ky. The church has by unanimous action asked him to reconsider his request. Does not look as if he would ever reach the "deadline."

With Nature

THE woods are full of voices everywhere;
An hundred chipmunks' sharp, quick tones are there;
The cricket's chirp, the partridge's drum
The harsh-voiced crows which go and come,
In nature's song agree.
The breeze that wanders through the firs,
The rustle of each leaf that stirs,
Are whispering to me.
So, when swift impulse leads in ways unknown,
I follow on without a thought of fear;
God reigns, and I can never be alone,
With nature near.
—Thomas Coleridge.

Rev. C. S. Knight, pastor of the First Church, Pontiac, Mich., spent his summer in California. The young people of the church have taken a keen interest in the work during the summer. Ten delegates were at the Boston convention, three took the work at the summer assembly at Kalamazoo, two attended the Rhodeheaver school of music at Orion. The church will have twenty of its young people in university and college this year. Five of the number are preparing for the ministry. Miss Ernestine Fisher has just left for India where she will do educational work. All in all this record seems to indicate a live church.

Some months ago we published an article from the pen of Rev. V. W. Dyer, pastor of Immanuel Church, Rangoon, Burma. To this article there were some strenuous objections upon the part of certain individuals. Upon our return from Stockholm we found a number of letters bearing upon the discussion growing out of the article. Rev. W. H. Duff, secretary of the Burman mission, sent us a signed statement bearing the names of twenty-six missionaries of the American Baptist Burman Mission, which indicated that from the point of view of those on the field, Mr. Dyer did not go too far in his contention concerning conditions there. We also received a number of communications commending THE BAPTIST for the independent stand taken in the whole matter.

The pulpit of the City Park Church, Denver, Colo., was supplied Sunday Aug. 26, by Rev. Charles A. Carman, of Grinnell, Ia. For ten years this was the church home of his uncle, Rev. John C. Carman.

Rev. A. E. Scoville recently resigned as professor of theology at Virginia Union Seminary, Richmond, to become pastor of the First Church, Peabody, Mass. For fourteen years he was pastor of the First Church, Melrose.

Under the will of Jennie E. Streeter, the First Church, Winchendon, Mass., will receive $1,000 to provide a permanent fund in memory of herself and husband. If the church should cease to exist, the money will go to the Home Mission Society.

Rev. Robert H. Sherman, pastor for many years of the church at Clinton, Conn., recently died at the home of his son in Glastonbury, Conn.

The old brownstone church of the South Baptist Society, Hartford, Conn., is being demolished to make way for the building to be erected by the Central Baptist Church, a consolidation of the South and First churches. The new structure will cost $475,000 without the equipment. The main auditorium will seat 1,600 persons.

A huge granite monument marking the site of the first normal school in America, has been erected by the people of Concord Corner, Vt. The inscription on the monument is as follows: "The State of Vermont erects this tablet August 15, 1923, on the site of the First Normal School in America, opened March 11, 1823, by its Founder, Reverend Samuel Read Hall, LL.D., Originator of America's System of Teacher Training, Author of the First Text Book on Teaching in America, Pioneer of the Use of the Blackboard as a School Room Appliance." A six-day centennial celebration was held Aug. 11-16. One of the chief features of the exercises was a Sunday-school convention of seven public sessions. Thus tribute was paid to the church in establishing educational institutions in America.

Only 24 per cent of Chicagoans are white Americans of American parentage. Three-fourths of us are immigrants. All of us are children of foreigners some generations removed. The Chicago Association of Commerce has analyzed our city's melting pot in the following manner, as published in the Chicago Daily News: The racial division of the city's population is as follows: American, 642,871, 23.80; Polish, 319,644, 11.81; German, 285,216, 10.55; Russian, 230,668, 8.55; Swedish, 154,051, 5.72; Irish, 154,919, 5.40; Italian, 129,815, 4.80; Czechoslovakian, 116,115, 4.30; Negro, 109,458, 4.05; Austrian, 72,531, 2.69; English, 67,907, 2.51; Canadian, 62,006, 2.30; Hungarian, 61,847, 2.29; Norwegian, 53,891, 2.00; Lithuanian, 43,274, 1.60; Danish, 29,450, 1.09; Greek, 27,017, 1.00; Scotch, 26,094, .96; Jugo-Slavian, 22,211, .82; Dutch, 22,165, .82; Roumanian, 11,644, .43; French, 11,379, .42; Swiss, 8,662, .32; Belgian, 7,900; .29; Canadian French, 6,039, .23; Indians, Chinese, 3,078, .11; all others 30,855, 1.14; total 2,701,705, 100. The Jews, though a distinct racial stock are not mentioned in this list, but are included chiefly in the Polish, German and Russian figures. They outnumber the Italians or Irish or Swedes —being estimated at 285,000.

(Continued on page 1028)

The Baptist

Vol. IV Chicago, Ill., Sept. 15, 1923 No. 33

THE BAPTIST, founded in 1919, is published every Saturday by the Northern Baptist Convention at 417 South Dearborn Street, Chicago, Illinois. Entered as second-class matter, February 4, 1920, at the post office at Chicago, Illinois, under the Act of March 3, 1879. Acceptance for mailing at special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized February 4, 1920.

Managing Editor: Edgar L. Killam

Committee on THE BAPTIST
EMORY W. HUNT, Chairman
CLARENCE A. BARBOUR HUGH A. HEATH

RATES: Single subscriptions, $2.50 a year; church clubs equal to 10 per cent of church membership, $2.00; single copies, 10 cents. In foreign countries the postage is $1.04 extra; in Canada, 52 cents extra. CHANGE OF ADDRESS: Both old and new addresses should be in our hands at least two weeks before the change is to go into effect. Always give key number as it appears on your label.

REMITTANCES: Should be made payable to THE BAPTIST. Acknowledgment made through change of label date. If check on local bank is sent, please add exchange.

SPECIAL: Renewal notice will be sent each subscriber previous to the date to which subscription is paid. Subscriber should give attention to notice by sending in renewal promptly, or, if paper is not desired for the coming year, should send in a discontinuance order.

ADVERTISING: Display: Rate per agate line, 30 cents; full page (420 agate lines), $125. No time or space discounts. Classified: 6 cents per word. Obituary notices: One hundred words free; 4 cents per word for additional. Cash to accompany order.

CORRESPONDENCE relating to subscriptions should be addressed to THE BAPTIST, Subscription Department, 417 South Dearborn Street, Chicago, Ill.

BRANCH OFFICES: The office of the state director of promotion in each state is an office of THE BAPTIST.

Table of Contents

Page

FRESH FROM THE FIELD....1026
EDITORIAL....1029
LOVE DISCERNING, BY HARVEY REEVES CALKINS....1032
REALIZING THE PROGRAM OF JESUS, BY W. F. BOSTICK..1036
PRESENT-DAY EQUIPMENT, BY JOHN G. BRIGGS....1037
AN INTERVIEW WITH THE SOUTHERN BAPTIST COMMISSIONER OF EUROPE, BY LEE LEWIS....1038
STRIPPED FOR ACTION, BY EDWIN M. POTEAT....1039
THE TWO MERCHANTS, BY MORGAN L. WILLIAMS....1040
THE NEW WORLD MOVEMENT....1041
AN INTERVIEW WITH GYPSY SMITH, BY GEORGE E. BURLINGAME....1042
PREACHING TODAY IN AMERICA....1043
THE PRACTICALNESS OF JESUS, BY O. P. EACHES....1044
YOUNG PEOPLE'S WORK....1045
THE CHIMNEY CORNER....1046
RELIGIOUS EDUCATION....1048
OUR OWN FOLKS....1049
OUR BOOK SHELF....1052
OUR MUSIC CORNER....1055
CHURCH ATMOSPHERE, BY W. L. MUSICK....1056

Who's Who in This Issue

W. F. Bostick is pastor of the First Church, La Porte, Ind.

Morgan L. Williams is director of religious education in the state of Michigan.

John G. Briggs is president of Pillsbury Academy, Owatonna, Minn.

Edwin M. Poteat occupies the chair of philosophy and ethics in Shanghai College, China.

Dr. George E. Burlingame, well known as a Baptist pastor, is now one of the secretaries of the American Bond.

Killam's Kollum

"When I Was Abroad"

"When I was in Europe" this summer THE BAPTIST came from the press just as it had done week after week from the beginning of its life. "Who is running THE BAPTIST while you are away?" was asked again and again. There was only one answer. A faithful office force carried out the plans laid before we sailed and where these plans miscarried made others which proved better than the original designs. In the newspaper and on the letter heads we publish the names of the editors, but the success of their efforts depends in no small measure on the folks whose names appear only in the list of the "office force." In the church work a vacation time shows just as clearly that although the bulletin board carries the name of Rev. I. Am It, the influence of the church is measured largely by the quality of the work done by those whose names appear only on the clerk's records. Many men who have gained a reputation as great business men would be helpless without their associates in inconspicuous positions. Well, at least give us who are so largely figureheads the credit for a measure of good sense in choosing and training our fellow-workers.

Reverse the Order

We remember hearing a certain agnostic tell several hundred persons how he would improve the world if he were the Lord. He would make health contagious, just as if it were not. He would do a great many things. We have felt that almost any of us could add something to his list. For one thing, we have always felt that the competitive tests were on a wrong basis. It has seemed to us that we ought to be rated by what we do not know rather than by what we do. It is discouraging to take account of our stock of knowledge and see the residuum over against the universe of which we have but the faintest conceptions. Let complete ignorance equal 100 per cent. Most of us could then be rated as 99 plus or something like that. In the matter of a small segment of knowledge like that of the history of our own Baptist denomination it would be a relatively easy thing for most of our people to stand high. We are not authorized, however, any more than was the agnostic to remake the world. It will still remain true, notwithstanding our vain wishes, that in a democratic body like that of the Baptist denomination, success will be possible to the extent that we have the intelligent and prayerful cooperation of the rank and file of our membership. If we are to have intelligent cooperation THE BAPTIST and Missions are indispensable.

The Japanese Disaster and Baptist Missions

A Statement by the two Foreign Mission Societies.

SINCE the announcement of the terrible disaster in Japan telegrams and letters have been pouring into the office of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society requesting information regarding the safety of the missionaries. Fortunately Dr. Charles B. Tenny, secretary of our Japan mission, was able to get a cablegram through to the Foreign Mission Society by the morning of Sept. 4, announcing that so far as was known our missionaries were all safe. This message was telegraphed immediately to the families of all the missionaries usually stationed in Tokyo and Yokohama and it was given as well to the denominational journals and to the daily papers. We are grateful that whatever may have been our property loss, the information received thus far indicates that the missionaries are safe. As rapidly as more detailed information is received it will be given to the families of the missionaries and to the public press.

In view of the interruption of some of the cable lines and the congestion of business over the lines which are still in operation, it may be several days before we receive more detailed information. From the press reports, however, as well as from Doctor Tenny's cablegram, we are hopeful that none of the missionaries suffered personal injury. Probably many of them were in the hills for their vacations and were just on the point of returning to the cities when the colossal disaster occurred.

It appears that our own society was the first to receive a message from its missionaries in Japan. Indeed, Doctor Tenny, by forwarding his message through Sendai, seems to have reached us even before the diplomatic representatives in Japan were able to communicate with their governments. Doctor Tenny's cablegram was as follows:

"Have no reliable information concerning Tokyo, Yokohama. As far as we know our own missionaries all are safe. Property damage not yet ascertained. Tenny."

It is utterly impossible for us at present to make any statement regarding the losses sustained by the two Foreign Mission societies. Having reason to hope that all the missionaries are safe, our chief anxiety is relieved, but we have reason to fear that the property loss will prove severe. The daily papers report that the destruction is complete in certain wards of the city of Tokyo. In such wards were the famous Tabernacle, where the work has been led by Dr. William Axling; the kindergarten conducted by Miss Minnie M. Carpenter and the residences of Rev. and Mrs. William Wynd and Dr. and Mrs. D. C. Holtom.

In wards where the destruction was reported as severe, but not complete, were the new church building Yotsuya, a part of Mr. Wynd's field, the Young Women's Dormitory under the direction of Miss Gertrude E. Ryder and Miss Amy R. Crosby, and the residence of Dr. and Mrs. William Axling. In one of the wards where the losses were less severe is located the Kindergarten Training School under the leadership of Miss Ishihara. In Ushigome ward, which is not mentioned in the press reports as suffering great loss, are the following buildings: The Japan Baptist Theological Seminary, Scott Hall, Alvah Hovey Dormitory, a second dormitory and the residences of Dr. Charles B. Tenny and Dr. H. B. Benninghoff.

If the press reports are true the mission residences on the Bluff in Yokohama, two occupied by the families of Messrs. Henry Topping, Royal H. Fisher and J. F. Gressitt, have been completely destroyed, and the Memorial Church building which was in process of erection in the heart of the city. The concrete buildings of the Mabie Memorial School were so far removed from other structures that unless they were injured severely by the earthquake itself they probably escaped damage from the fires which appear to be chiefly responsible for the destruction. The same would be true of the Mary Colby School at Kanagawa just outside the city of Yokohama. Miss Clara Converse was for many years the principal of this school which recently has been under the direction of Miss Minnie V. Sandberg, Miss Agnes S. Moline, Miss Evelyn B. Bickel, Miss F. Marguerite Haven and Yamada San.

It may be several weeks before we shall have detailed information regarding the loss sustained by our misson and the churches. Meanwhile, it is urged that our people do everything in their power to relieve the general suffering in Japan regardless of the interests of our own particular work. It seems certain that hundreds of thousands of the Japanese people, and probably a good many of the missionaries and other resident foreigners, have suffered the loss of all their possessions, even if they themselves escaped injury.

It will be understood that the above paragraphs represent merely our best conjectures in the light of press reports as to the possible effect of the disaster on our own work in Japan. Doubtless mission boards in general and Japanese Christian churches have suffered severely, but perhaps in the providence of God the catastrophe presents an opportunity for a fresh demonstration of the spirit of Christ on the part of individuals, nations and denominations.

The American Baptist Foreign Mission Society are being represented in the interdenominational conferences in which steps are being taken to enable the churches of America to serve most usefully at this hour to meet the needs of the Japanese people as a whole. Our denomination will be kept advised, not only of the latest news from Japan, but of all practicable relief measures.

Meanwhile it is hoped that our people will respond generously to President Coolidge's appeal for immediate relief, and be prepared later to give liberally for the reconstruction and restoration of our own work.

James H. Franklin,
Foreign Secretary.
Mrs. F. G. Long,
Acting Foreign Secretary Woman's Board.

The following telegram was received two days after the foregoing was written:

Following cablegram from Japan arrived today: All our missionaries are safe. Sarah Curtis Home School also. Tokyo tabernacle totally destroyed by fire. No further details available. Signed F. M. Derwacter. Cabled from Kobe. This is only partial report of our losses. Deeply grateful that all missionaries safe.

American Baptist Foreign Mission Society, William B. Lipphard.

Fresh from the Field

(Continued from page 1026)

Rev. W. Marshall Craig, pastor of the First Church, Petersburg, Va., has received a call from the First Church, Gaffney, S. C.

The late President Harding's name is among those of four proposed recipients of the 1923 Nobel peace prize. The statutes permit post-mortem awards. Others proposed are Jane Addams, former Premier Nitti of Italy, and Elsa Brandstrom, Swedish Red Cross delegate.

Rev. Charles A. Carman, pastor of the First Church, Grinnell, Ia., has been notified of his election to the office of state chaplain of the American Legion, department of Iowa, by the convention in Mason City. He has been chaplain of the post at Shenandoah and for two years of the post at Grinnell.

In addition to being in his office every day during the summer, Dr. William H. Main of the Publication Society preached every Sunday from June until September with a single exception. He is devoting much of his time to the program for the one hundredth anniversary of the society, which occurs next year.

There are a large number of pastoral changes this fall. In Michigan Rev. Albert E. Cook accepts the call of the church at Rockford; Rev. A. F. Malmborg accepts at Lawton; Rev. L. A. Meade of Grand Ledge resigns to enter evangelistic work; Rev. A. Longfield resigns at Hickory Ridge and accepts at Nashville.

The Norwegian Lutherans of America, numbering about 400,000 propose a memorial in Washington to be dedicated in 1925, the centennial of the beginning of Norwegian immigration to America. It is to be built by contributions from all parts of the country. It is reported that the project has the enthusiastic support of the church leaders.

Rev. Stewart G. Cole has resigned as pastor of the church at Vermillion, S. D., to become professor of religious education and chaplain for Baptist students at Carleton College, Northfield, Minn. He will also superintend a community school of religious education for the children of the city. Mr. Cole attended both McMasters University, Toronto, and the University of Chicago.

An experiment is being tried out at the First Church, Upland, Pa., of which Rev. A. E. Look is pastor. Upland is a mill town. There are many in the community who do not attend church services. With the assistance of a student from Crozer Seminary, the church has inaugurated a service for young people under fourteen years of age. The response has been thus far very satisfactory. We ask Pastor Look to tell the readers of THE BAPTIST the story of this effort.

The Baptist

The Baptist Program

THE Baptist program is always an attempt to find an equilibrium between the principle of individualism and that of cooperation. We dare not abandon that right of private judgment and individual initiative which has been the concomitant and largely the cause of our growth, together with the still more fundamental principle of the supreme authority of Christ and scripture. Yet there has been from the very beginning of apostolic history a tendency on the part of some persons to disregard the duty of cooperation with others and to make a man a law unto himself, that is, to make him lawless. Sometimes it has masked itself under the euphemism of being guided directly by the Holy Spirit; at other times it has frankly declared that all law was abolished and that the usual moral distinctions were done away with. More frequently still it has frustrated all plans for enlargement and wider usefulness until those who thus overemphasized individualism dwindled into insignificance.

Baptists should have a program. The individual Christian should have a program for his own religious life and activity. It should not be a rigid planning of every detail like those enforced by monastic orders and by the Jesuits; but it should be a definite assignment of religion to its proper importance in the individual life and such planning as shall assure this. The private devotional life, religious reading, public worship, the giving of a proper proportion of one's means to religious purposes, clear and constant testimony to one's faith in devotional meetings and in all the relationships of life, though often by what one does and is rather than by words—these should be provided for in the individual Christian's program for himself. It will strongly affect others for good, but its chief reason for being is in the fact that it is the personal expression of the individual's own religious life and of his relation to his Lord.

Then there is the duty of each local church to have a program. Until recently most Baptist churches have pursued a policy of opportunism, with no fixed program and no definite objective. Each pastor, especially after the interregnum which usually occurs between pastorates, has been expected to formulate his own plans and to carry out his work in his own way. Often it has been difficult to find out just what the previous plans of the church had been. The members would answer vaguely, "Oh, he used to do so and so, or was it so and so?" There was in so few churches an established church program which did not depend upon the whim of successive pastors. There have always been notable exceptions to this condition, yet they have been comparatively rare. The pastors themselves have often had no definite program. They have repeated the sermons which had seemed most effective elsewhere; they have had an occasional revival meeting; they have utilized any striking occurrence for a sermon; they have perhaps had a course of popular Sunday evening sermons, including a series on love, courtship and marriage; and then there have been enough of appeals from popular causes and for special days to occupy all of the Sunday services for the year, if all were admitted. You intelligent readers of THE BAPTIST may never have belonged to such a church, but those who have wide acquaintance with the churches at large will recognize the sad accuracy of the description in thousands of cases. Rather recently it has come to be the rule that our churches have each a program and often the same program of action, for mission study, for religious education, for community work, for current expense and beneficence; and deacons, trustees and other representative committees are organized and have regular meetings. Perhaps the pulpit work of the average pastor has a less definite program now than has the average church.

AND our denomination should have a program unified, definite, cooperant. The most of us remember when the work of the denomination was in the hands of separate societies, generally with sympathetic feeling for each other and often composed of much the same constituency, but with different officers and managing boards, usually with separate headquarters. One would do business from Boston, another from New York, another from Philadelphia, another from Chicago. Each state convention was wholly independent of the general missionary societies and of all of the other state conventions. There was no method of expressing the aim of the denomination as a whole, and each society was organized to care for its own special object alone. We have spent some time during this summer in reviewing the records of the denomination a generation ago and for the last decade of the nineteenth century. What a sensation it would have produced among us then if we could have foreseen that the uncorrelated, disjunct operations of our denominational societies would in two or three decades have merged into a great movement where the total beneficence of the denomination was regarded as a single task, the amount being raised as a single fund, yet without destroying the integrity and objective of any of the cooperating societies? And what would they have said, in the presence of their almost constant running into debt, with budgets amounting only to a few hundreds of thousands of dollars, to know that the denomination would by this time have subscribed fifty millions for its unified beneficence for four years?

For this year we are finishing up that task, carried on amidst momentous happenings, world disturbances, financial slumps in our own nation, and carried along a path previously untrod by ourselves or any others. Let us attack it confidently, finish it up worthily, and plan for shining years ahead.

Our Immediate Task

EVERY local church has at least four types of people among its membership. There are the lost members. No one knows where they are or anything about them. They may be dead physically as well as spiritually. This group of members is a sad commentary upon the careless habits of lay and pastoral officers as well as a serious drawback to the growth of a local church which reports a certain number of members but must deduct this list of people from all their calculations for worship, attendance, service in the community and for the production of money. Fifteen per cent of the average membership, we are told, must be included in this lost list.

The next group is made up of the non-resident members. The church officers know where some of them live and a feeble effort is occasionally made to reach these. Largely, however, the attitude of the local church is "let them alone." Quite often the element of fear and cowardice rules the actions of church officers when fronting the problem of the non-resident members. These people are not only a serious drawback to any forward movement in the church where they hold membership, but by their un-Christian, non-church habits, they seriously menace the progress of the local church where they now reside. More than 20 per cent of our enrolment can be placed in the non-resident class.

The third group of people we need to consider is made up of those in the membership of a local church who could attend with regularity but do not. They could give time and energy to helping in the serving life of the church, but they decline to do so on various pretexts. They are able to bear their share of the monetary needs of the church and its missionary impacts, but if they give at all it is in a very small and uncertain manner. This group is made up in an average church of about 25 per cent of the membership of the normal local body.

We suppose by this time that the reader is counting up the percentage of the membership that is left to form the fourth group. Forty per cent remains to make up that group of people who in a large measure try to fulfill the purposes of a real Christian life and of church membership. They attend more or less regularly the services of worship, they serve in the life of the church by teaching, visiting and office bearing. They give about 85 per cent of all the monies paid into the church treasuries for the various purposes of the organization. We think of this group with kindling love. They are the strength of today and the hope of tomorrow for the cause of Christ.

Perhaps you are now asking why we have presented here this study of facts. Because in this number of THE BAPTIST we are making a special presentation of the task that confronts our local churches this fall and winter. We need twelve millions of dollars to do the work of the year in addition to the monies for current expenses, but that is not our real task. Our real task is to project the officers of the local church with the work of leading the 40 per cent of live members in a spiritual approach to secure the recovery or elimination of the lost members, the realigning of the non-resident members so that their growth in grace can be safeguarded by fellowship and teaching and finally the revitalizing of that third group of irregular members. That is the real task that confronts us and when we have done it the income will be more than adequate to meet all the needs, local and abroad.

The task will not be done or even attempted unless the pastor leads in it all and keeps in the closest possible touch with God. We are convinced that the 40 per cent of members will follow the lead of their pastor, because they are really seeking the way of their Lord and Saviour. We know, yes, we repeat, we know, that with the pastor and the 40 per cent of members united under the leadership of the Holy Spirit a very large part of the other three groups can be brought back to real service for Christ and his church.

A Welcome Word from Japan

EARTHQUAKES, floods and fire have laid waste a great area in Japan. Now famine and plague are doing their worst. More than 7,000,000 persons lived in the devastated area—the most populous portion of Japan. In the face of conflicting reports we are forced to believe that the loss of life is enormous. The property loss is beyond computation. Japan staggers under its stunning blow.

Since the first word concerning the terrible catastrophe, we have been anxious concerning friends and missionaries in the stricken area. Up to date two brief cablegrams have come to hand. One we printed last week. That message is supplemented by another from Kobe signed by F. M. Derwacter. "All of our missionaries are safe. The Sarah Curtis Home School and the Tokyo Tabernacle are totally destroyed by fire. No further details are now available." Our property loss is heavy, doubtless much heavier than we imagine. We have no word as to the fate of our native constituency. We are deeply grateful that the lives of our faithful missionaries have been spared.

America has set herself to the task of meeting speedily the pressing needs for food supplies and money. It is enheartening to see something akin to the enthusiasm of the great relief measures so familiar during the period of the war. America will send and spend millions for the relief of our stricken neighbor. Christian America will not forget that Japan will still need the Bread of Life when this crisis is past. The schools, hospitals and churches must be rebuilt, and that right soon.

A Page of Opinion

Editorial Responsibility

THE editor of the Churchman, one of the highest-minded and ablest-edited papers that comes to our table, finds it necessary in a recent number to disavow responsibility for statements made in reprinted or contributed articles that do not necessarily express the editorial viewpoint. "In every issue of the Churchman," says our contemporary, "there appear in our news columns and special articles statements with which the Churchman is in complete editorial disagreement." This is something that the average editor would like to iterate and reiterate.

It would be preposterous if an editor, especially of a great denominational newspaper, should seek to admit to his columns nothing except that with which he personally agreed. He is bound to exercise a certain discretion and limitation in considering what he deems the interest of his readers and the practical importance and value of anything submitted. If he is fair-minded, however, he will be under obligation often to print statements of opinion diametrically opposed to his own.

Yet how difficult it seems for readers to grasp the reasonableness and necessity of this. We have been told that a Congregational deacon recently discontinued his subscription to the Congregationalist because the editor reported an interesting and important address by Senator Borah. As a matter of fact the Congregationalist was not presuming either to endorse or to question Mr. Borah's statements, which were recorded as matters of public interest and importance.—The Congregationalist.

The Cost of Chaos

WITHIN an hour, in a few square miles between the sea and the hills behind Tokyo and Yokohama, the earth is rent asunder by what the law knows piously as an act of God. Lives reckoned in hundreds of thousands are extinguished in a breath. Two great cities of the East, the capital of a world power and a magnificent seaport, are wiped completely from existence. "Japan," says its foremost newspaper, "has been put back a generation in one afternoon."

The superstitious will discern here the working of inscrutable destiny, the wrath of some invisible Providence. It is reported from Tokyo that thousands of natives, driven insane by what appears to be the pursuit of inexorable fate, anticipate the horrors of starvation and disease by hurling themselves into rivers and the sea.

Yet the single great lesson to be derived from this unprecedented visitation is that nature at its worst has proved itself less an enemy to man than man himself.

Japan assumes the tragic task of counting its almost incalculable dead. Still when the toll is complete probably it will be found the dead number fewer than one-fortieth of those whose lives were sacrificed in the hideous folly of the World War. The debt which suddenly burdens Japan is almost nothing beside the appalling war liabilities which will oppress the world long after this generation is gone. The property loss entailed is the merest drop in the bucket beside the cost of chaos created by man at war in the last decade.

If man were able to stem earthquakes and tides, as he dams rivers to protect his life and goods, no expense or labor would be too much to insure this security. Yet he has proved himself incapable of harnessing forces of his own making, the cost of which in lives and property and retarded progress immeasurably transcends that of the deadliest caprice of nature.

If wars, instead of lasting years until mankind has come to accept them as an incident of existence, were held in one afternoon; if nations herded men and property together for generations with the expectation that one day the whole would be wiped from the face of the earth by war, every capacity of man would be employed forthwith to obviate such senseless slaughter. Yet that in the end is what war amounts to.

The whole wide world, stunned by the enormity of the catastrophe in Japan, recovers momentarily to organize relief for the salvage of lives of innumerable thousands exposed at once to the horrors of pestilence and famine.

Is there any reason why this same great organized impulse may not be perpetuated and employed until the infinitely greater horror of man-made war is banished from the earth?—Detroit News.

The Importance of Right Living

THE power of character arises from its truthfulness. Circumstances form the character but, like petrifying matters, they harden while they form. Since character is higher than intellect, a great soul will be strong to live, as well as to think. It takes a great deal more grace to serve God in the place where we have to live than it does to shout with the crowd when enthusiasm is at its height. Every Christian is producing two sets of influence. Two currents of power issue from him which set in motion the wheels of life about him. One is the unconscious, involuntary influence of his real character; the other is the voluntary influence of what he consciously says and does for a special purpose. Now these two currents that flow from him may be opposed to one another and then the influence of his character will contradict the influence of his words. But when the language of his nature is in harmony with the language of his lips, when character and conduct cooperate to express life we learn to appreciate by observation and reflection the importance of right living.—The American Friend.

Love Discerning

A sermon preached at Union Church, Chefoo, China

By Harvey Reeves Calkins

TRUTH is never exclusive but always inclusive. Yet we insist upon our petty weights and measures, like fishmongers at the market haggling over halibut and cod. "Either I am right or you are right," we say, fuming, "and if I am right then you are wrong!" But we err grievously. Good men who study the word of God and thoughtfully discern the movement of human history, yet find different answers to the same questions, have no right to use the fishmonger's petty logic of "Either, or"; rather shall we learn God's larger judgment, which ever standeth thus: "Both, and."

What a Man Believes

Bernard Shaw might not care to be quoted in the Chefoo Union Church, yet this word of his goes into the deep things of life: "What a man believes is not to be ascertained from his creed; it is to be ascertained from the assumptions on which he habitually acts." It is not an English preposition that divides Christians into that bizarre classification of "pre" and "post"-millennial; nor are they separated by the shadowy vastness of the prophetic scriptures. It is this: A divergent philosophy of life and action which predetermines their attitude toward every social problem and toward every world movement. The kingdom of God upon the earth—is it a slow development at the hands of Christian men or is it a swift creation at the word of the returning Christ? In futile debate it is insisted that here are two interpretations mutually exclusive and that a deep, dark cleft divides them; it is not discerned that "the rock strata miles deep unite again," and these two truths are one. And because of this the unity of the kingdom eludes our vision. We leave the central lode that dips deep into the hills and follow deceptive veins that lead us into blind endings. And these seem to branch out indiscriminately upon the right hand and upon the left.

I.

Here are two ideas which constantly allure those among us who maintain with stout insistence that the kingdom is a gradual development upon the earth, already in process, and some day to be consummated through a victorious and united church.

1. To many of us history seems to be an evolution in human society and hence an unseen movement of hidden forces. For instance, it is easy to observe that the Gaul whom Caesar conquered was a loose aggregation of contending tribes, while the France of Charlemagne was the beginning of a nation. We therefore are disposed to argue that this change has resulted from the silent penetration of Roman law among petty feudatory states. In truth it was the penetrating instrument of Roman law that recreated not only Gaul but all of Central Europe, but a penetrating instrument lies inert and rusting upon the earth until it is lifted and projected by a powerful hand and masterful mind. It was Charlemagne himself who wrought out roughly the foundations of a state. The literary Renaissance did not come from the twittering of birds; men thought, then wrote. The Reformation of Germany was the flaming torch that Luther caught from Savonarola as he in turn had lifted it from the falling hands of Huss. Methodism was not the fine flower of English nonconformity, it was a new hammer of the Lord. The American Republic did not wash up from the Atlantic Ocean. The China Inland Mission did not emerge unseen from Mr. Ruffles' boarding house near Soho Square. Men hoped, men wrought; so was a new nation born and an apostolic faith reborn. The movement of history is a martial movement.

The obsession of historic evolution leaves us as soon as fact and reason are marshalled against it; nevertheless it flows back like an atmosphere, and dulls to laziness if not to sleep our sense of immediacy. In particular the peril of it is in our schools and colleges; young people come under Christian influence yet fail to find the magnetic Christ. That we are indifferent is unthinkable, we simply are not keen. We judge that Christ will win in the long run, yet it is in the short run of actual school days that stalemate is established and atrophy begins. Clear-seeing psychology no less than Christian loyalty demands of us an insistent now.

2. And this brings me at once to the second word which I would speak. As we dwell fondly upon some final and sure triumph of Christianity, the ineffable Christ fades from mind and heart; the awareness of himself grows dim and distant and all but disappears. And this peril does not grow less even though we are devoted to his kingdom.

Mysticism Is Pagan

Right here I would protest against a slipshod undiscernment which makes awareness of the present Christ identical with mysticism—that tenuous and occult thing which dreams and drifts in the shadowy unseen. Mysticism is pagan, always. It speaks of the over-soul. It dreams of the divine essence which permeates the worlds. It seeks by abstraction and meditation to throw itself en rapport with mystic mind. The philosophy of it is pantheism and the practice of it means the obscuring of personality. To one who has felt it and fought it in the Gangetic plain it seems an atrocious thing that mysticism should have been baptized with a Christian name and introduced into Christian teaching, and that, in Christian experience, it should have been confused with personal fellowship with Christ.

Without controversy the secret of personality eludes us. Whether we speak of ourself or our friend, or the majestic Christ, the meaning of personality is shrouded—shall we not say is glowing—with luminous mystery. Yet we know that we are, that our friend is, and that our fellowship is of the spirit and not the body. I do not hesitate to say, though the science of the human spirit awaits a suitable textbook, that we would do well to dismiss our classes in arithmetic at least once every week and take up the more practical subject of I myself. It would help us, as well as our children, to avoid crass stupidity when we read the thrilling words of our Lord, "Lo, I am with you." A spirit is a person, Christ's spiritual presence means his personal presence, the presence of him himself.

II.

It is a unique comment on our constant ability to miss the middle way, that, while some of us thus leave the central lode, allured by blind endings on the right, others among us appear not to have learned wisdom, but wander into the same unprofitable drifts as they stretch out upon the left. Please note them once again.

1. If historic evolution is a fancy of the mind, surely historic devolution, or world decay, is a morbid imagination. One hesitates to name even the most patent example of world betterment lest some fluttering rag shall banish the beggar once again to his primeval slum—or, like the factory girl who dons her finery but forgets her nails, lest we shall have to blush for the barbarism that continues to shame our civilization. . . .The fact is we are better than our philosophy: we really have no desire to live again in our ancestral caves. Modern Englishmen are better men than were the ancient Britons, and that is the whole of it. If building up strong manhood which yet can be pitiful and gentle is not the building of the "kingdom," then all one can say is that this is what the kingdom is intended to produce whensoever it shall be builded. "The flock of my pasture are men," saith the Lord God.

Not Christ's Program

The point of what I am saying is this—to live in the midst of this thrilling generation, yet to withhold sympathetic and cooperative world service, on the ground that "world betterment is not Christ's program for this dispensation," is to inherit bread from our fathers and bequeath to our children a stone. Even to doubt the fact of world betterment is to throw the force of one's personality against it. Let me tell you a story.

The Rock Island Railway is afflicted with a long and steep grade as the lines approach the state boundary from Kansas into Colorado. At the top of the grade stands a watering tank for replenishing the boilers. It is a mark of high efficiency if an engine driver can lift his load of transcontinental freight to the top of the grade without dividing his train in two sections. One day a gale was blowing from the northwest; it caught the train aslant and staggered it. The engine groaned under the terrific strain. The fireman crowded the furnace and flung wide every draft. Inch by inch the shrieking wheels crawled up the rails until at last the undivided train reached the top of the grade and the engine stood beside the watering tank. The engine driver stepped down from his cab and greeted the head brakeman, who was coming up from the rear.

The Greatest Lesson

LORD,
Teach us to love,
Teach us to love in perfection
Obeying thy great command
That we love even as Christ loved us:

Lord,
Teach us an utterly selfless love,
A love that is empty of restless and grasping desire,
A love that is full of service, humbly and faithfully done,
For those whom we love:

Lord,
Teach us patience in love,
Endurance, q u i e t n e s s, strength:

Lord,
Teach us to love as thou, the eternal Lover,
Lovest us, lovest thy world,
With a wide, all-giving, generous passion:

Lord,
Teach us thine own eternal love.
—Kashmir, "The Guardian."

"Well, Charley, that was one close call! It looked as though I never could lift her to the top; but Bill crowded in the coal and I crowded on the steam, and here we are! Did you think we were going to make it?"

"No, I didn't, Steve, and that's a fact! I was dead sure we were coming to a stop most any minute, so I had every brake set tight to hold her!"

2. Then regarding the present Christ of experience, I would add one single word: The very friends of Jesus are peculiarly liable to mimify his present power. Professor Cairns, in "The Army and Religion," makes this ominous statement—"It is not part of the genius of modern Christianity, as a whole, confidently to expect great spiritual victories. We thing evil stronger and God weaker than did our Lord and his disciples. This is the first difference of conviction between us and him. Both of us can not be right. To return to Jesus Christ here means revolution." If Christ's victorious life for the world must be postponed to another dispensation, then the logic of it is inexorable: we shall have neither faith nor disposition to press world redemption in this. We may indeed preach the gospel, but our witness will lack creative faith; we shall not know the passion of the love of Christ which hopes and works and dies, still hoping. We shall not expect, and therefore shall not attempt, to reshape a nation's thinking.

III.

But let us turn from these disappointing veins and drifts and follow the central lode of Christ's good news. How it dips into the mountain with its weight of golden promise! How it flowers upon the surface of the hills! My purpose is not to measure it (if that were possible!), nor even to assay it, but to indicate the direction of it as it concerns the philosophy of life and history of which we have been speaking.

1. First, and eternally, the cross of Christ is the apex of human history. It is not a divine expedient, not an exhibition, not an episode; it is Incarnate God taking upon himself "the iniquity of us all." The theme is too awful for a Sunday peroration. We constantly make the cross a doctrine in theology, whereas it is a culmination in life. How glibly we can give a Bible reading on the death of Christ—without a heartbreak. We have symbolized the cross, and apostrophized it, but how often we have failed to find it. Christ was not taking the penalty of man's sin, the very suggestion of vicarious penalty means the degradation of righteousness. Let us keep to the scriptures: "Who his own self bare our sins," is the teaching. Christ was not bearing the penalty of the thing; he was bearing the horror of the thing itself—as love must always bear the shame, the deep darkness, of what it loves. And that is why the cross means life, eternal life. For Christ not only bore our sin, he bore it away. That is the salvation we have received and that is the good news we are sent forth to preach.

2. And what is preaching? Is it proclaiming? Sometimes. The mere announcement of the good news to waiting and prepared hearts means the acceptance of it. But this is not often so. "Disciple all nations," commanded our Lord; "teach them," he said. Did you ever teach? Then you know that teaching is not giving out lessons; it is leading out minds and spirits. Delivering Christ's message is not like delivering potatoes in a bag. The message is not "delivered" until it is received. "But men will not yield to gospel truth." Men will yield, late if not soon, in this generation or the next, if not the father then the son; prayer and patience and love that suffereth long and is kind will exorcize any devil, or any legion of them; for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it.

What Preaching Is

3. What is preaching? It is delivering Christ's message. Therefore it is assembling an audience—for what preacher can preach without an audience to hear? Delivering Christ's message means removing barriers to the acceptance of it, ignorance that brutalizes and poverty that degrades. It means reshaping slanted foreheads and lifting up bended backs. Oh, it is weary work assembling a congregation, a generation of men who will listen intelligently to Christ! When we compare one day with another, or this year with last, it might seem that we are not succeeding at all; that we are losing rather than making progress. Try the centuries. War still shakes the earth, but war is now a nation's shame and not its glory. Lust remains, but men dread to have it known. We have lost the solemn Sabbath of the Puritans, but we do not disfigure Melrose Abbey now, nor burn witches. Ministers of the church can no longer preach on Sunday and lie drunk on Monday and get away with it. The rape of the Sabines was the theme for poets' songs, but the rape of the Belgians was the call to liberation. The Bible continues to be attacked, as it always has been, but it is no longer chained. The world's workingmen are frothing with bolshevism but the peons of other centuries knew not they had a soul to froth! New thought troubles us in China, and in India, but thank God that mental inertia at last is broken and men are thinking—for that is all God asks, that men shall think, even though that thinking shall at first be nine-tenths folly. "Come now, and let us reason together, saith the Lord." What a day for preachers who know the mind of Christ and can tell it!

By little and by little "the thoughts of men are widened." By little and by little Christ is getting an audience in the world, the largest and most sympathetic audience he has ever had. By little and by little the City of God is rising above the ruins of past centuries. The progress is so slow and so uncertain that only the patience of God would seek to measure it. And yet the angle of increase is established and can be discerned. We ourselves can roughly compute it—from Herod to Hildebrand and from Hildebrand to Cromwell and from Cromwell to Roosevelt. If we could know the human differential we might even foretell the century of human deliverance—

> "And one far off divine event > Toward which the whole creation moves."

4. What then? Have we said it all? Are we to work and wait and watch through weary centuries until "the earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the glory of the Lord?"

It is here that some among us (many of us, I fear) err grievously, not knowing the scriptures and not discerning the exultancy of Christian philosophy. And it is here the church pays a grievous penalty for the fading of the peerless Christ from personal experience. We discern the meaning of the kingdom in human society, and we are, I trust, devoted to establishing and extending that kingdom upon the earth; but the kingship of Christ himself loses its thrill of personality. We even look foolishly annoyed when one among us talks of "bringing back the King." O friends, shall we not discern? Shall we not have done with our fishmonger debate of "pre" and "post" and discern the heart of the so-called second coming?

The philosophic center of Christianity is personalism, and personalism demands the manifestation of God in history. Thoughtful Christianity is prepared, philosophically, for any "coming" whatsoever, demanding only this—that the "coming" fulfill all righteousness. To look for our Lord's return in supreme personal forthshining is not only philosophically sound, but it is what one would expect the divine Christ to do.

And here, perhaps, some among you will cease sympathetically to listen. But I plead your patience during these closing moments. I plead that you will not consider it unreasonable that the personal Christ shall personally manifest himself. I know what you would say—that the Christ of history and of faith is not concerned primarily with miracles, and with dramatic spectacles not at all—that he is the Christ of justice, of mercy and of service. And with this interpretation of Christ and of Christianity—the "modern" interpretation, if you please—I agree perfectly. But hold to the divine personality; do not, I beg of you, make the living God a sublimate of ethics and philosophy. And do not destroy the authority of the Christian scriptures, for the hope of Christ's appearing thrills in all the New Testament teaching. That "blessed hope" was a joy to the Apostle Paul during days of bitter trial. So it has been during all the centuries. So it is today.

As to the personal appearing of our Lord, it need not surprise us that the words of the angelic messengers concerning the coming again of "this Jesus" should be taken to mean his actual physical return. We still are far away from the mystery and glory of personality. Lovers and believers of God's Word need not stagger here.

LORD, keep us steadfast in thy word,
Curb those who fain by craft or sword
Would wrest the kingdom from thy Son,
And set at naught all he hath done.

Lord Jesus Christ, thy power make known,
For thou art Lord of lords alone;
Defend thy Christendom, that we
May evermore sing praise to thee.

O Comforter, of priceless worth,
Send peace and unity on earth;
Support us in our final strife,
And lead us out of death to life.

—MARTIN LUTHER.

The inspired scriptures come to us from God himself. They speak that which is true. But these scriptures were not written for angels, they were written for men. Therefore they use the language of men. They speak of things that it hath not entered the heart of man to conceive, therefore they use the perfect language of picture and illustration—a language that can be neither parsed nor analyzed but that conveys the perfect truth. They unfold the mystery of primeval sin, and call it the eating of forbidden fruit. Could any high argument explain what one vivid picture makes so clear? They speak of God sitting upon the circle of the earth; they tell of clouds and darkness round about him; they even say that Moses was permitted to look upon his back! Yet do such words mystify us? Are they not, rather, luminous with the light of God himself, enabling us to realize his personality, his majesty, his nearness? Though they are weak human words yet they visualize the invisible. And shall we with spiritual vulgarity seek to peep behind the canvas? Shall we scrape the colors from the picture and seek to analyze them?

He Shall Shine Forth

On the other hand, I need not remind you that the manifesting of "this Jesus" of which we now are speaking is not the manifesting of himself within the believer. Nevertheless, it is the "same Jesus," who now manifests himself. He shall shine forth—"as the lightning cometh out in the east, and shineth even unto the west."

I shall not speak of times and of seasons. It is the church, his bride, that shall call Christ in glorious forthshining, and to the bride has it ever been given to "name the day." She might have named it any day in all these centuries. There is no ethical quality in duration. God is not glorified nor is man ennobled by merely waiting for that which shall surely come to pass. It is uncertainty that makes time tremulous; it is contest that makes the hours so big!

When unto the principalities and powers has been made known "by the church" (Ephesians 3:10) the manifold wisdom of God—that is, when in the wisdom of God it has been fairly proved and fully demonstrated that the blood of Jesus Christ his son actually cleanseth men from all sin, that righteousness actually exalteth a nation, that his church actually can be presented to himself a glorious church not having spot nor wrinkle, then will the conflict in "the heavenlies" be accomplished; he himself will "cut short the work in righteousness." Swiftly then shall the City of God be builded in human society. It will not be a strange, unheard of city. It will be that just and merciful social order which Christ taught upon the earth, which, with such slow and halting faith, we have sought to realize: his kingdom. So quickly will it arise among men it can only be described as "descending out of heaven from God." Happy the man, the worker-together-with-Christ, whose work will bear the scrutiny of the Master Builder; who has not mingled building-stone with wood and hay and stubble. O the joy of laying down the lines on which our Lord shall build!

"Our Refuge and Our Strength"

Psalm 46

THOU art our "refuge," O our God!
When tempests wild surge 'round the soul;
We bide us 'neath thy shelt'ring rod,
While raging seas around us roll.

Thou art our "strength," when weakness holds
Our trembling frame in fetters strong;
A "present help," thine arm enfolds
With tender succor, all day long.

When fear surrounds, as doth a foe,
And earth seems sinking 'neath our feet,
"God is our refuge" quells our woe,
And calms us with assurance sweet.

"Be still, and know that I am God!"—
"The Lord of Hosts is with us still!"—
Yea, though we feel his chast'ning rod,
We'll trust his love, and fear no ill.

Our "God is in the midst," we know,
And, trusting, we shall not be moved;"
Our "God shall help," as swift, as slow;
His word is sure; his promise proved.

"God is our refuge and our strength,"—
Through blinding tears we sing this song;
His wisdom we shall prove, at length,
And praise him with the heav'nly throng.

—JENNIE WILSON-HOWELL in Boston Transcript.

Christ Waits for Faith

And, finally, I shall not speak of the "mystery of iniquity," that vivid characterization of evil. Christ will deal with wickedness, yet wickedness will not call him. His church will call him. He waits for faith. Will he find it upon the earth? Great forward movements for his kingdom have begun with promise, then faltered by the way—the Reformation, the Wesleyan revival, the movement of modern missions. More depends on a united church in China, in India, than any of us dream. Can we fellowship with men who love our Lord yet do not speak our shibboleth? Can we walk with men who love his words yet read it in a language new to us?

Divine personality is a stupendous truth. But dimly, yet, are we able to apprehend it; and to understand it, not at all. Yet here is the mystery and the glory of "the appearing." It lies deep hid in the personality of Christ himself. One day on the slopes of Mount Hermon that personality shined forth. Shined through the flesh that veiled it. Shined through the common linen garments until they became "exceeding white as snow, so as no fuller on earth can white them." Christ's personality that day was unveiled. So it shall be again. Christ shall shine forth and "every eye shall see him."

And in that City of God upon the earth we shall sing the old old story. The Lamb shall be the light thereof. The cross shall lift up our head.

Realizing the Program of Jesus

"The kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ and he shall reign forever and ever."

By W. F. Bostick

THE first word of comfort Adam uttered to his spouse after their expulsion from Eden was: "Well, Eve, this is indeed an age of transition." No preacher since Adam has so keenly felt the infallibility and inspiration of that utterance and its application to the present as the preachers of today.

It is a commonplace to say: "Our age shows a decline in the authority of the Bible, the church, the home, the Sabbath, the preacher." Man has so suppressed the call of duty and ignored the rights of others by asserting his own rights that for a large percentage of our church members, Sunday instead of being a day of "rest and gladness" is a day of "speed, hurry, pleasure, and feasting."

Muscles and Empty Stomach

We are wondering "Why the increase in crime, why the disrespect of law, why our resistance against evil diminishes?" Did you ever hear of men keeping up their muscles on empty stomachs? Many of us are trying to keep up our moral fibre on an empty pew. Our Christian salt would have a little more savour in it if we could endure an hour and a quarter in a place of worship as readily as two hours and a half in a place of amusement.

Our belief in hell fire and brimstone has vanished; our old sense of fear is gone, both the fear of God and the fear of hell. But we have forgotten that man's soul is a "broadcasting station" from which silent messages are emenating in successive waves over our invisible nervous system, leaving ever deeper impressions of our thoughts and deeds upon ourselves. No man can get away from himself. Here is the new hell for the old, "for whatsoever a man sows that shall he also reap." Our materialism says: "We are more interested in the means of living than in the meaning of life." I pray you, what are the means of living in bolshevism where the meaning of life has gone?

Let us examine for a brief moment the program of Jesus and the challenge of Jesus for this changing social order.

Jesus came into a world far different from ours. It was a comparatively small world in which the means of intercommunication were slow and limited at best. Ours is a known world, accessible the globe around, with ever increasing means of communication. His was a world of monarchy, ruled by conquest and force, ours is increasingly a democratic world. His world was only beginning to get a smattering of science. Ours is a world with a scientific world view. We have wrested one secret after another from the world till we are masters of land, sea and air. Our view of history, the origin of man and institutions, has been greatly widened and changed from the view held by the world Jesus lived in.

We live in a world that has infinitely multiplied the wealth, comfort and privileges of certain classes and has stirred with increasing unrest those who are in a less favored social strata of society. Has Jesus a program for this world? "Lord, to whom shall we go? Thou hast words of eternal life."

We believe the program of Jesus has elements that are eternally adaptable to this and any and every age to come. Jesus was an idealist, as such he emphasized the priority of the spiritual in man's interpretation of nature; God, not law, clothes the lilies and feeds the sparrows. Man is a spiritual being with a soul worth more than the world. Jesus emphasized the spiritual view of life over against the material view. He emphasized the moral over against the ceremonial in religious observance. "Not what goeth into a man defiles him but what comes out of a man's heart defiles him." He emphasized the priority of the practical over against the speculative. He would not speculate about the end of the world, but told men to be good neighbors. How to organize a social order where brotherly love ruled was his passion. Christ's emphasis on the spiritual, moral and practical view of life is vital today.

The Superlative Man

Jesus defined for us the superlative man: "He that will be greatest let him be servant of all." The superlative law: "Thou shalt love God with all thy strength and thy neighbor as thyself." The superlative loss: "What shall it profit a man if he gain the world and lose his soul?" The superlative good: "Seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness." The superlative achievement: "Greater love hath no man than this, to lay down his life for his friends." The superlative bondage: God's will—"Take my yoke upon you." The superlative commission: "Go ye into all the world and make disciples of all nations." The superlative challenge: "If any man will come after me let him renounce himself and take up his cross and follow me."

The Father of All

Jesus taught that God was the Father of all men and that all men were brothers. Men must so love God their Father that they will treat all men as brothers. "If ye forgive not men their trespasses neither will God forgive you." He called this new social order where love was to be the rule, the kingdom of God. That kingdom was here when he was on earth, is here now, and spreads just as fast as men everywhere come under the sway of Christ's spirit. To extend this kingdom world-wide through the spread of Christ's teaching and spirit is the eternal task of Christ's followers. Service, love, character, righteousness, self-sacrifice, the doing of God's will, the spread of the kingdom, the willingness to die for ideals and the salvation of men—on these things Jesus let the stress of his thoughts and actions fall repeatedly until on his cross he could say: "It is finished." It was finished so far as his life on earth was concerned, but it is the eternal, unfinished task that confronts each successive generation. This unfulfilled ideal for which we spend ourselves is our very life and breath. Well did a socialist reply when asked, "What do you think of Jesus Christ?" "I think so highly of him that if men would follow his teachings he would transform the world." And John Stuart Mill, who was not an ardent admirer of Christianity, said in appreciation of Christ and his program: "The best life that man can live is so to order his life that Christ can approve it."

Realizing the Program

How can we hasten the realization of Christ's program? It will not be realized by merely taking off our hats and bowing to the ideal; we must take off our coats, roll up our sleeves and work for it. This program will be realized from the pulpit point of view to the degree we leave out of our preaching the non-essential, the speculative and the unpractical elements of theology and stress the things Jesus stressed. It will be realized from the point of view of the church member to the degree men and women see that they are God's stewards of time, their natural and acquired gifts, talents, and their money. "Let this mind be in you which was also in Christ Jesus." That mind was possesser of certain rights, but he emptied himself of his own rights and instead asserted the rights of others.

As long as the pew says, "I have a right to do as I please with my time, my service, my money, my interests," the program of Jesus halts and goes limping. If I must be thrown with human beings in my business to such a degree during the week that it is a cross to go to church and teach a Sunday-school class or to assist in some other way in putting across Christ's program, and if I flee from that program to the woods or to my bed and newspaper I should remember that I am not worth the name Christian and respectfully ask my name to be dropped from the church roll. I should remember that salvation comes only by way of the cross. As in the first century so in this twentieth century the program of Jesus challenges us to the cross. Are we willing to bear his cross after him?

The realization of the program of Jesus today calls for a heroic faith. Jesus came to his ministry with a faith in God, faith in himself, faith in his gospel and faith in man. He believes without a doubt in the responsiveness of man to the gospel message. The greatest tribute to that faith is seen in the sneer of his enemies. "Behold he eats with publicans and sinners." Jesus believed in the latent efficiency of man; he transformed fishermen into apostles. "Follow me and I will make you fishers of men." He believed in the dependableness and loyalty of men to his great commission. As I see him with outstretched arms saying "Go ye into all the world," and then see him vanish, I understand his great faith in us. He believes in us, in our response to his message, in the possibility of our lives under the influence of his spirit, in our faithfulness to carry out his program. Surely we will not disappoint our Lord.

Present-Day Equipment

"Be diligent to show thyself acceptable unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth. 2 Tim. 2:15."

By John G. Briggs

THE apostle Paul is writing to a young Christian concerning his equipment for service; the counsel is apropos today. "Be diligent" in getting the preparation, "make haste" in the operation; there is to be no loitering along the way, every moment is to be utilized in fitting oneself for the task before him.

Every rabbi was obliged to learn a trade. To learn a trade, he served a period of apprenticeship under some capable instructor; the skill of the apprentice depended not only upon the skill of the instructor but upon the attention and diligence of the pupil. The apostle was anxious for this young Timothy to learn to be acceptable to God in his preparation. In our solicitude to be active, we often forget the training; being comes before doing, or it must come in the doing, at least. The self first needs to be disciplined. In the midst of the conflict, the great warrior of the New Testament shouts, "I beat my body and bring it into subjection, lest, after I have preached to others, I myself may be a castaway." Often in fighting an evil people manifest a worse spirit than the evil itself. If a man have not the spirit of Christ, he is none of his. "The law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death." That which we are often speaks so loud that people cannot hear what we say.

Good for Something

But there is something more than being good in this present-day equipment. One must be good for something; other things being equal, the Christian worker with a well-stored mind is the better qualified to serve. While Paul was in prison he sent for his books and his parchment. There was no time to be lost. Dante and John Bunyan learned the lesson. Every person should ask himself concerning his opportunities for qualifying for life.

The Christian church has never lacked outstanding defenders and interpreters of the faith in critical periods. Believing as we profess, that God is love, Immanuel, the power dwelling in the very center and soul of man and in the world, we need not become discouraged as to the outcome; yet we are to be coworkers with God. "My Father worketh hitherto and I work," said Jesus. To be effective co-workers we must know the laws of action which God has written in human nature. John Wesley, Spurgeon, Moody, we designate as religious geniuses because, without long and laborious study, they understood the motives that lay behind human actions. Thanks be to psychologists many of those motives which once were so hidden from the most of men are now thoroughly understood if one will take the pains to learn.

Underlying all actions there are three laws which it behooves every parent and every Christian worker to know if he is to be acceptable unto God. In the first place every person is seeking satisfaction. King Solomon is an illustration of the various ways men seek satisfaction. Neither wealth, fame, pleasure nor learning brought repose to his soul; only the Lord could do that. Jesus said "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest." Paul is ever calling attention to that "peace that passeth understanding." Many a one has discovered that "his soul is restless 'til it rests in thee." Sir Henry Jones in "The Faith That Enquires" says we should preach and teach with the firm conviction that no one can find real and lasting peace outside of God in Christ.

"I Have Kept the Faith"

By Arthur E. Cowley

TO keep the Faith—what does it mean?
This word we glibly say,
As if it were an easy task
The Faith to keep alway.
Does it but mean allegiance
To man-made creed or form:
Just nod of head, assent of will,
To some external norm?

Ah, no, for Life itself reveals
That man may do all this,
And yet go blind through all his days
And Faith's true glory miss.
To keep the Faith means that, supreme
Within the heart we hold
A fellowship with Christ the Lord
Which speech can ne'er unfold.

And we keep the Faith, so we
With reverent soul must give
To fellowman, the same great right
By his own Faith to live.
For Faith thus kept will show how God
Spoke in the past to men,
Yet it will hear anew today,
His voice as they did then.

For Faith must venture toward the dawn,
Truth aging, lay aside,
To keep the Truth that ages not
And shall for e'er abide.
And set of sun will prove to all
Who keep the Faith the best—
They who through Christly deed and life
Its keeping manifest.

In the second place, every one is an adventurer, or has been one. Homer's masterpiece relates the story of the man who loved to wander in youth, but in old age was content to abide in the shelter of his home and friends. Some scholars now hold that the American Indians probably came from an island in the Pacific Ocean. There they lived on some island wondering what lay beyond the horizon. Finally the wanderlust seized them and they started in their little sailboats; the west wind caught and drove them until they landed on the Pacific coast. The same adventurous spirit lays hold of the boy on the farm or in the town or city after he has roamed over every rod on the farm or has investigated every alley in the city and he wants to migrate somewhere, usually west. To be a successful director of such mystifying motives, we should understand this spirit, calling it by the correct name, and seek to satisfy it in legitimate ways. The teaching of immortality appeals to some from this standpoint. The world will not soon forget the words of the hero on the sinking "Titanic" who said to a friend that the outlook was the most thrilling adventure in his life.

In the third place, every one seeks recognition. You say that statement is too bald and selfish in meaning. Yet it is the truth. Seeking recognition lies at the basis of ambition, envy, jealousy, hate and a whole brood of sins and virtues. A certain lecturer visiting in a town where he was brought up was persuaded to accompany a former schoolmate in buying a coat. After the woman was disappointed again and again in the fitting process, the clerk finally said, "that one makes you look distinguished"—that was the coat she bought. The salesman understood at least one actuating principle of human nature.

"Self-Respect"

A milder and more acceptable word is "self-respect." It is the basis of all advance. So treat your pupils that it will enhance their self-respect. A social worker in the hall of a tenement house in New York city was taken for a servant girl by a well-known man and was greeted with words of such disrespect that that uplifter of humanity has never since been able to look upon him as a gentleman, to say nothing of being a Christian. "Give diligence to show thyself acceptable unto God."

In the first part of the text, the preparation is emphasized, while in the second the action is emphasized. The instrument is polished to be used; the organism is grown to be of service—"a workman that needeth not to be ashamed." It is an established truth that it is hazardous to one's inner life to allow the emotions to be aroused unless action follows.

Much harm comes from emotions being misdirected or suppressed. The emotion of fear is a terrible enemy. If you do not believe it, read "The Conquest of Fear" by Basil King. It has been proved that the hypnotized person's strength is lessened by one-third when the thought of fear is injected into the acting mind, but the person's strength is increased by more than one-third when the thought of strength dominates the consciousness. Often we cause the defeat of young Christian workers because we set them at too difficult a task. Many a fine colt has become balky by being hitched to a solid load. A prepared worker should be set to work at such work as he or she is capable of doing. Still we must not stress too strongly the human limitations, for God works mightily in the person who allows the working of his spirit. If one doubts the power of the gospel, induce him to read "What Is there in Religion" by Henry Sloane Coffin, then let him go to work again knowing he may become "a workman that needeth not to be ashamed."

The third part of the text suggests the instrument or the force to be used: "rightly dividing or rightly handling the word of truth." The Vulgate translates it, "to teach the truth correctly and directly;" to proceed by straight paths, to hold a straight course. What is it to teach the truth "correctly?" Luther said Zwingli was not a Christian because the latter could not say "this is my body" literally. Luther would have anathematized most of us. We agree that the phrase was not interpreted "correctly."

Baptists, at least, do not accept literally, "this is my body;" we interpret quite alike the Lord's Supper; we accept the power of the resurrection and Christian experience; most of us agree with Dr. E. Y. Mullins, that we should be ready to work with him who accepts any one of the three views concerning the coming of Christ; we believe that God is living and that he is striving to make himself more real to us; my neighbor tries to make his dog understand his own signals, but the master cannot impart to his pet all that is in his mind. Is not God's revelation to us hindered by our own limitations? If we could better understand the mind of God as revealed in Christ, doubtless many of the difficulties would disappear. After the writer, Giovanni Papini, felt in the uniqueness of Jesus some precious but indefinable spell of divinity, he has not ceased to sing his praise, because he has felt his continual presence. Would we not be making great strides in peace and progress, if we would ever hold before us the difference between fact and theory? Many know Christ as a fact, in whom they live and whose presence is as the breath of life; he is in the world in tremendous and transforming power. Men of all shades of belief recognize that. When one seeks to formulate a theory of that mysterious life, the theory may serve him and a few others as a confession of faith, but the explanation may not satisfy another who has received just as impressive a revelation of the Living Christ. Here are Canon Gore and Dean Inge, called the spiritual and intellectual giants, in the same historic branch of the church yet their systems of theology are diverse. In Mark's account of the appearance to the two, we read, "He appeared unto them in another form." If we kept this passage before us, we would be better able to accept the genuine type of a man's Christian experience though we might not accept his interpretation of the same.

Again, the Christian worker needs to divide the word aright concerning God's presence with men. Our interpretation determines our attitude as one of pessimism or of hope. In the seventh chapter of Romans, Paul's better man struggles with the baser man. Yet apparently there was no time in his life when the spark of life was entirely snuffed out. It was dimmed; the spark needed to be connected with the great Dynamo in order that it might flare forth in brightness and in glory. Jesus knew what was in man. He might deny, betray, even crucify him; yet he knew that there was something good in man, that there was a touch of the divine in him. A Hamlet may lose faith in his fellowmen; a benefactor like Timon may die cursing the ungrateful, but Jesus understood human nature better. He knew "there is a light that lighteth every man that cometh into the world. That mean, dirty boy may seem to be hopeless but some day you may find that he has a tender spot for his mother who has passed on. That is the spark to work on and through it you may cause to come to the boy a glow of the Great Light.

Finally, no more assuring truth can possess us than the consciousness that we are living in God's world, that his power and love are unlimited. He is the "infinite and eternal energy;" he is the "power that makes for righteousness;" he is "the strain in the atom;" he is the "active principle that subsists in all things;" he is Wisdom, the Absolute, and at the same time, Love.

Thanks be to the Christian interpretation of those scientists and philosophers who are doing so much to make this world more intelligble to us and to make it all aflame with God. We have long been using the word Immanuel and now the scholars verifying the teachings of the scriptures are making the meaning more real to us in that God is in man's nature and in his moral strivings. Even this material world which seems often "red in tooth and claw" is a good world, the very best for man and it would be a blessed reality for us if we could feel as Browning:

> "The thing that seems
> Mere misery, under human schemes,
> Becomes, regarded by the light
> Of love, as very near, or quite
> As good a gift as joy before."

An Interview with the Southern Baptist Commissioner of Europe

By Lee Lewis

"MY field begins on the west with Spain, takes in Jugo-Slavia, Roumania, Hungary and Ukraine. My position is that of representative of the Southern Baptists in these small but important fields," said Rev. Everett E. Gill, in his office in Lausanne, Switzerland. "My position demands that I visit all sections of my large field, so I have located in Lausanne."

A glance at the map of Europe reveals that Lausanne is about midway east and west as well as nearly midway north and south, in Europe.

I was especially interested in seeing Doctor Gill, since in 1900, when he was pastor of the Calvary Baptist Church in Hannibal, Mo., he came to the Vermont Street Baptist Church, Quincy, Ill., and held revival meetings. It was in these meetings at his invitation that I yielded to the claims of Jesus Christ, and confessed him publicly, by immersion, one cold February night. Since his Hannibal pastorate, Doctor Gill has held several others, and has spent about seventeen years as Southern Baptist representative in the ancient city of Rome, Italy.

It was cold in that fireless study. The heat is turned off in Switzerland about April 1. The cold was still turned on, however, and to me, after six years in Burma, the room was quite chilly. When I entered, Doctor Gill greeted me with, "Come in and sit down. Keep on your overcoat, for you will need it." So once in a while in the interview I got up and looked at the map or the books, or the typewriter, in order to keep my blood astir.

In answer to my question about recent developments in Baptist work in Europe, he said: "Our chief task is the strengthening of the hands of the nationals, and not to send over a lot of Americans to do the work for them. We need an educated ministry. To that end, we have made modest beginnings in organizing theological seminaries. The school in Rome is over twenty years old. Budapest, Hungary, Seminary was begun in 1910. One in Barcelona, Spain, was started last year only, and the school in Bukarest, Roumania, is in its infancy. My task in Europe, you see, is not that of an ordinary missionary, or that of a mission society secretary, but simply that of representative of the Southern Baptist Foreign Mission Society board of managers. I have to do with the various executive committees in these countries. They receive the money from America through me, and administer it themselves. They make a budget and submit it to me. I pass it on to the board in Richmond, Va. They approve it. I make an annual report to Richmond. So, you see, the work is done by the various national executive committees. They are being trained to do it. I offer advice freely and give them the results of our experience in America, but they are actually doing the work.

"Jugo-Slavia has two new meeting houses to report this year; one being in a small village and the other in a large center. With the aid of our loan fund, church buildings may be erected and the loan paid back within ten years. We loan this money without interest to a recognized group for a contracted period of time. When one church pays back the money by installments, we loan this same money to another group and thus the work grows. The rate of interest in some of these countries is 15 per cent, but we loan money to a church and charge no interest.

"The Baptist work in Hungary was founded by the great Baptist apostle of Europe, J. G. Oncken. They have lost one-half of their members by the peace treaty. In other words they have decreased from 20,000 to 10,000. Nearly all the work is self-supporting, and there were 1,000 baptisms in 1922. A new training school for women has been started and the theological seminary at Budapest has twenty men enrolled."

He said that in Roumania they have a growing work which must be done in four languages: Roumanian, Hungarian, Russian and German, named according to largest number of members. Each holds its convention meetings and selects members for the all-Roumanian central executive committee. "It is with this central committee, that I have dealings," said Doctor Gill. "In spite of persecution, the work has never been so prosperous or the workers so zealous. Since the war severe persecution has been endured. The state or Orthodox Greek Church has not been friendly in this richest of all Balkan states." But owing to the efforts of Doctor Rushbrooke, Doctor Gill and native leaders, persecution has about subsided. The new constitution which has just been adopted by parliament, ostensibly grants full religious liberty to all. The total membership of 23,000, welcomed 3,000 by baptism last year. Here too, the building and loan fund is in action. "It has been demonstrated," concluded Doctor Gill, "that a strong self-supporting national Baptist church can arise in an European Latin country."

Doctor Gill was the first Baptist to enter Russia, since the revolution, for he went in as a worker of the American Relief Administration. At this time he was able to confer with, and give much help to, the leaders. In Russia, two large Baptist bodies work side by side. They preach the same message and have the same confession of faith. They will be united in one organization soon, and will be the largest continental Baptist group. Soviet officials estimate there are three and one-half million Baptists in Russia, but a safe, conservative estimate is upwards of one million. When these two groups, the All-Russian Baptist Union and the All-Russian Evangelical Christian Union, are united, they will make undoubtedly, the third, or perhaps, the second largest Baptist body in the world.

After fifty years of Baptist work in Spain, by ten different Baptist bodies of several lands, there are but 4,000 church members. There were 100 baptisms in 1922. One of the many beneficial results of the London Baptist Conference of two years ago, was to leave Baptist work in Spain to be advised by the Southern Baptists of America. Nearly all the eight other societies have discontinued their work in Spain. The new theological seminary at Barcelona will greatly assist in the evangelization of Spain by training leaders.

Doctor Gill is of the opinion that a church of about 200 members should be able and willing to support its own pastor in nearly all of the countries of Europe. He believes that churches should be helped until they can become self-supporting and that they in turn should begin home mission work on their own account. Help direct to weak churches in supporting their pastors, should diminish as the years go by. However, in three departments he believes help must be continued for some time. These are the departments of schools, publications, and chapel building loan fund. He believes in Sunday schools, for he said at the conclusion of our talk: "One of the first of our great tasks is that of finding a way of getting the world of information and inspiration of our Sunday schools into the life of these beloved, but untrained Baptist churches."

Tharrawaddy, Burma.

Stripped for Action

By Edwin M. Poteat

It is a military phrase, and on that account I do not like it; but it is a precise description of the requirements laid on Christianity as it confronts the non-Christian world. Dr. P. T. Forsyth in his powerful book "The Church and the Sacraments" (Longmans, Green and Co., 1917) says our Christian faith is in a struggle for life "on a scale and depth which has not been seen since the second century. We are at a far more critical juncture than the Reformation was. The Christian Church is in the first mortal battle since the early centuries against paganism in thought, conduct, and religion. * * * * There is no compromise at last between the egoist spirit of the proud world and the sacrificial gospel of holy love, between the obedience which is the first thing with Christ and the independence (rising to self-will) which is the first with the world. It is war. And the social order evolved by egoism cannot surely be mightier in the end than the moral order and society of the Cross, if our clans do not fail it by ignoring or thwarting each other in the battle." (pp. 107, 108).

He is speaking of conditions of both thought and life in Europe, including Great Britain; he was not thinking of mission lands. But what he says fairly tingles and twitches with new and portentous meanings when applied to the present situation in China, for example. Not the least disturbing feature of the situation is that so few appear to feel how serious it is. The same Doctor Forsyth has somewhere said that the first qualification for handling a difficult subject is the ability to see how difficult it is. I have now spent two years in China, in association with missionaries the latchet of whose shoes I am not worthy to unloose; and I should set down as a first qualification of a missionary the ability to see how deep the Christian proposition is and the imagination and sympathy to feel how radical and sweeping is the transformation required to meet it.

I have seen a battleship stripped for action. It was bare of every hindrance. It looked bare and grim. It seemed to say, "I am steel and intelligence, and my heart is fire. I am ready for destruction." I could willingly see every one of them sunk in the depths of the sea, and they will be if Christianity prevails. But if Christianity is to prevail it too must be stripped for action. It must be reduced to final simplification. "No soldier entangleth himself"—an army blanket, a water flask and his rifle and he is ready.

Here one comes upon all those books and articles—their name is legion—which try to tell us what is the essence of Christianity. What indeed is the final simplification? What must be set down as surplusage, impedimenta? Have we any excess baggage? And who is qualified to give authoritative answer to these questions? Ritschl with his aversion to dogma attempted to pare down Christianity to make it acceptable to a scientific age. The paring process is still going on. And in the hands of many successors of Ritschl what remains bears but slight resemblance to the religion of the New Testament.

Now when all is said and done, the New Testament is and forever must remain the source book of the Christian religion. Prof. James Moffatt in his Hibbert Lectures (1921) "The Approach to the New Testament," sets down on his frontispiece this sentence from Percy Gardner: "It is now unthinkable that any Christian should either reject the New Testament as the norm of his faith, or should try to add to it." What is Christianity? It is the religion of the New Testament. Augustine said: "We do wrong to the Old Testament if we deny that it comes from the same just and good God as the New. On the other hand, we do wrong to the New Testament if we put the Old on a level with it."

There are few indications today that men are trying to make additions to the New Testament; there are many indications that they are disposed to make subtractions from it. They are seeking for the irreducible minimum which may still be entitled to the name Christianity. "Rabbinic eschatology" is especially difficult for some. In my humble judgment we shall have to content ourselves in the end with the statement that Christianity is the religion of the New Testament. Here are our original documents and they will not budge. Nor will they stoop to the attempt to conciliate minds puffy with pride and irritated by their high demands. Christianity is stripped for action when it comes with nothing but the New Testament in its hands. Here is the final, the only authoritative simplification. It is a mistake to try to go beyond this.

I venture in conclusion to raise three questions. Must Christianity, especially in non-Christian lands, consider these items as hindrances to the most effective action?

1. Where in the New Testament do we find denominationalism? "To the one God, the one Gospel, the one Christ there can be but one answer—the one church. That unity was not put together by organization. The church is not an organization but an organism. It was born one. This "distinctive Christian idea of the church makes mere denominationalism intolerable" (Forsyth, "The Church and the Sacraments," Chap. III). Parties arise who "claim to have a special guardianship of the evangelical principle. * * * * The attempts to establish purity of communion by the vote of the communicants, however worthily meant, have only issued in the formation of sects. And while these have had their providential value for the church, they tend if they are left to themselves to fall to pieces in a new Babel. For the exclusion of those deemed to be Babylonians does not destroy the Babel in the souls of those who are left within. Separation begins to divide the separate themselves and reformation goes on to change the most reformed." (Ibid. Chap. IV). And the process is of course endless! The New Testament had "the idea of one Christian people. * * * It was called a church, an Israel, a flock, a brotherhood, and all these terms mean the same thing —a chosen people of God united in Christ, and living in his choice, his grace, his love, his Holy Spirit as each soul's new life. It was a sporadic unity. * * * * the body of Christ" (Ibid. p. 62). Can a missionary church be anything less; can it be anything more?

2. It will be inferred from the above that the unity of New Testament believers was not constituted in polity but in spirit; and therefore that the slogan "No bishop, no church" is wholly alien to its atmosphere. And here I quote a recent word of Prof. David Smith: "Here (Acts 20:28) overseer (R. V.) is the word usually rendered bishop, a term which should be expunged from the Bible and replaced wherever it occurs by overseer. In the apostolic church there were no bishops in the later ecclesiastical sense. The word is a corruption of the Greek episcopos * * * * which was properly a pastoral term. * * * * Here is the New Testament idea of holy ministry (1 Peter 5:2-4) Christ is the Chief Shepherd; and he has many flocks and has entrusted each to an overseer—an undershepherd, appointed by the Master, the Chief Shepherd of the sheep (Heb. 13:20) and responsible to him."

3. My third question as to excess baggage refers to infant baptism. Doctor Forsyth, in the book which has suggested this article, has written the best argument for infant baptism I have ever seen. He calls himself a "modern paedobaptist" (p.168), and is willing to make two "great concessions" to Baptists. "First, there is no infant baptism in the New Testament. I mean in the practice of the New Testament. It is within the principle of the gospel, but not in the New Testament use * * * * The New Testament practice, here as elsewhere, is that of a a missionary church" (pp. 168-9). The other concession he makes to the Baptists is adult baptism, but he throws into a parenthesis ("The question of immersion matters nothing")—this after writing on the preceding page—"the baptism not into Christ merely, but into Christ's death, not simply by self-sacrifice but by burial with him and the rising with him to newness of life" (p. 167).

On page 198 he says: "The point of origin for infant baptism is obscure. As I say, it is not in the New Testament. 1 Corinthians 7:14 even excludes it. Perhaps the growing influence of the heathen mysteries helped, since children were initiated there * * * Only in the third century however, did it become quite universal, and especially as the church became identified with the nation or a whole people."

On another page he asks: "Would Christianity really be reformed by abolishing infant baptism? * * * Is that the only way to keep magic out?" And he thinks that this would "reduce the church to the permanent condition of a missionary church only, amid a quite pagan society" (p. 201).

This, of course, amounts to an argument for dropping infant baptism on the mission field. A recent issue of a Chinese Christian monthly—The Life—(Apr. 1923) carries this argument to a demonstration to the Chinese mind, uninfluenced as it is, by the history and traditions of our Western Christianity. The article is written by a student who has had all his education in Christian schools but who is not a baptized Christian himself. He asks: "Isn't Christianity a matter of belief in the truth? Does not the church seek true believers? What do these infants understand of the truth—how can they believe in the Lord? I truly believe that this business is of harm both to the church and to the child."

Certain it is that Christianity on the march to the conquest of the non-Christian world is hampered and hindered by excess baggage. Are our home churches willing to see her stripped for action?

Shanghai College, June 20, 1923.

The Two Merchants

BY MORGAN L. WILLIAMS

THE rumble of the train lulled my senses, and suddenly I was again amid the bustle of a great store. By my side stood the merchant prince graciously saying to me: "We take delight in showing you our business. Here are counters of costly goods, and clerks trained to sell them to the public. Every article is carefully priced. In fact we never demonstrate or display our goods without advertising the price; and we say nothing of prices unless we lay the goods before our customers."

We advanced upstairs, and this merchant continued his conversation. "Our advertising is constant and educational. The buying public must be led to appreciate values. Unless we set forth the worth of our goods in terms of the dollar sign, we couldn't do enough business to keep open. Did you overhear the conversation of those women?" he asked as I marked his keen appreciation of his business. "One shopper said 'I refuse to buy a suit for less than $40, and the other woman replied: 'You are foolish, I can get the best quality for less.' The first woman represents our buying public generally. The price of a gown marks its value for her. She is more concerned with the dollar sign than with the quality of the goods. And we try to educate such people in trusting our judgment as indicated in our prices."

Suddenly the merchant vanished, and I found myself in a great building with beautiful stained glass windows amid an atmosphere of quiet and reverence. Instead of counters of goods in the great store, it seemed as though a strange merchant with his arms full of precious things was passing down the aisles and among the many people in the pews trying to distribute them. Most of his customers silently took what he handed them, and a bit later I saw some well-dressed gentlemen pass to all a little basket in which were dropped, as I suppose, pieces of money. And I thought, "This is a queer business! I must talk with this merchant."

"You are doing quite a business here," I ventured to remark as this man plainly dressed in a long coat cordially shook my hand.

"I should like to do a bigger business if I had the chance," said he.

"But haven't you the chance?" I questioned.

"My friend," he replied earnestly, "we are greatly handicapped for money. We can hardly pay running expenses, and moreover we are behind right now in paying maintenance bills and salaries."

"But why is your business in such a bad way?" I ventured. "You offer the people the best goods surely."

"Yes, I do that as God knows, yet the multitudes do not often come to this place and the gifts of those who do come are hardly adequate." He explained. "Yes, you have guessed aright, we set no price on our goods. My father who was in this work before me, offered untold values without money and without price. The people are free to show their appreciation by such gifts as they choose to bring."

"Certainly then the success of your enterprise depends on the appreciation of the public; and what are you doing in training the public to appreciate the splendid goods you offer them?" I queried. "Are you thoughtful and persistent in reaching the public by use of the press? Are you telling them what they should know?"

"Well, hardly," he replied with a slight tremble of the lip. "I have hoped that the goods would advertise themselves, or that the good people would pass the word around. Perhaps this side of our problem has been neglected."

My interest was intense as I asked further, "What are you doing among the children who may become your best customers in the future? Can you teach them to value this enterprise and eventually give in return for what is done for them in such amounts as shall finance the work at least?"

A smile played over the kind merchant's face. "Come with me. I'll show you what we have been doing" said he as he led the way down to a room where many children were gathered around earnest teachers. We watched the school for a few minutes, and I could not repress this question: "What appreciation do the parents show for this splendid work?"

"Oh, it is hard to say," he answered, "I hope very much; but they seldom visit the school, and their gifts would not keep the work going."

"And what value are the children led to place on this work and this institution?" I asked impatiently. His reply was a request that we wait and observe the ceremony as the children gave their gifts.

It was a pretty sight, many little folk marching around the room past an offering basket where each placed a penny or more as they sang, "Hear the pennies dropping." Yet I could restrain myself no longer, and I prayed "O, Lord, open this man's eyes that he may see." And it seemed as though I rushed out of the place smitten with the conviction that while the outside world demands dimes and dollars for its service, this institution is content that children give paltry gifts passed to them from their parents—gifts which every little child knows are not adequate to buy a stick of candy or a package of gum. It is little wonder that children grow up with penny notions of the value of this work.

As I rushed out into the busy street a bell in the tower seemed to be ringing and I knew that I had been in a church; but I do not recall the place or the name of the preacher, for the trainman rudely shouted my station and aroused me to other realities.

---

Let every one remember that he who violates the laws of the land tramples on the blood of the fathers and tears asunder the charter of his own and his children's liberty.—Abraham Lincoln.

The New World Movement

"Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world."—Matthew 28:19, 20.

A Brilliant Victory Promised

The first message of Corwin S. Shank, president of the N. B. C., to the churches

Never has the great Baptist denomination entered upon a challenging task with finer zeal and more promise of accomplishment than this year. There seems everywhere to exist a grim, silent and determined purpose to make this a record year. The roll call may not be made on earth at the close of this year which will mark the end of the alloted New World Movement but there surely will be bulletin boards in heaven. That is where doing not talking will be reported. That is where we will get data making up the balance sheets that God keeps. When we shall have raised our $12,000,000 this year, as we surely will, we can say that the whole task for these five years has been more of a success than we planned when this program was set up. We have been taught that true success lies in that deep and powerful force we call spiritual values. This we are receiving. The church that is not in "with bells ringing" will be wearing crepe.

There is a chorus of jubilation everywhere promising that we shall see sinners converted by the thousands, our churches deepened in faith, our mission lines flung further to the front and the full $12,000,000 raised. With God in heaven looking on, reviewing our efforts I do not think there will be even one church that will not look up and say, "I come and bring my full share of what is thy due." The angels will then rejoice. So shall we.

If

A NEGLECTED, lonely little orphan in far away Alaska will be fed, clothed and told about Jesus for a week if you are interested—and send $2.

The rent on a native school building in Masaya, Central America, can be paid for a month—if we receive a check for $25.

A month's gas, oil and upkeep for a Ford car on an Indian reservation is assured—if you care to the extent of $18.

The salary of a first-year native probationary nurse in Puebla, Mexico, will be provided for a month—if the mail brings us $5.

Natives in many villages of Central America will hear the story of Jesus for the first time—if $12 is secured for our missionary's monthly traveling expenses from outstation to outstation.

Eight dollars a week will enable a sewing teacher in a Christian center to teach a group of little girls who never owned a nightgown—if you care enough to send it.

Six hundred dollars will deliver a Ford car to a footsore missionary in some lonely area—if you turn fairy godmother to her.

A Chinese Christian teacher on the coast will take the message to her own people for a month—if $60 comes to our treasury.

Twenty-one dollars and seventy cents will pay the salaries of all the teachers at Mather School for a day—if this call touches your heart.

A Cycle of Prayer

"Evening and morning and at noon will I pray and cry aloud: and he shall hear my voice"

Special topic for emphasis during September—Facing the task: Rallying the forces of the local church for the season's work.

Our Work and Workers Abroad

15th day—India, including Assam, Bengal-Orissa and South India
16th day—Burma.
17th day—China.
18th day—Japan.
19th day—The Philippines.
20th day—Africa.
21st day—Europe.

The undernourished little children in our day nursery at Ponce, Porto Rico, will be given milk and crackers for a day—if $2 is provided.

Two dollars and fifty cents pays the day's expenses of a missionary home on furlough—if you are interested in providing rest for her.

All our schools in Central America will run smoothly for a week—if you apply the words "freely ye have received, freely give" and send $250.

Many foreign mothers will learn that America is truly a Christian country—if you provide $75—the salary of an American secretary for a month.

A kindergarten among little Porto Ricans in Santurce will be maintained through your interest for a month—if you sign your name to a check for $50.

Seventy-five dollars a year will provide a scholarship in our boarding school in Santa Ana for a bright-eyed Salvadorean—if you are interested in her struggle for an education.

The interest on our borrowed money will be paid for a day—if you care $33.77 worth.

Christian training will be provided a keen Porto Rican girl—if you adopt her for a month at an expense of $15.

Our whole big program in church, mission, school and hospital will be projected for another twenty-four hours if God has blessed you richly—and you wish to further his work with $1,027.39.

All these items are included in the regular operating budget of $375,000 for the Woman's Home Mission Society for the year 1923-1924. This budget will not be wholly raised unless the denominational goal for the year is attained.

Companionship

NO distant lord have I,
Loving afar to be;
Made flesh for me, he cannot rest
Until he rests in me.

Brother in joy and pain,
Bone of my bone was he.
Now—intimacy closer still—
He dwells himself in me.

I need not journey far
This dearest friend to see.
Companionship is always mine,
He makes his home with me.

I envy not the twelve;
Nearer to me is He;
The life he once lived here on earth
He lives again in me.

Ascended now to God,
My witness there to be,
His witness here am I, because His spirit dwells in me.

—Maltbie D. Babcock.

The Objectives of Co-operation

"The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ."
Rev. 11:15

I. To reach every member of every church with the call to active service and to an acceptance of definite part in providing the money required for our local needs and for our world-wide missionary enterprise. This means that every member of a Baptist church shall be

(1) An informed member.
(2) A praying member.
(3) A giving member.
(4) A Bible student.
(5) A soul winner.
(6) An exponent of Christ's teaching in community life.

II. Financial objectives, in the interest of securing the funds required to meet this year the needs of our

7 national societies and boards
36 state conventions
17 standard city mission societies
52 schools and colleges
3 foreign-speaking conferences and other organizations.

A. A total of $12,161,521.67 cash paid in by April 30, 1924.

B. Payment in full of pledges made between April 1, 1919, and April 30, 1924.

C. The observance of an underwriting period in each church:

A simultaneous canvass during the fifteen days, December 2-16, with the definite aim of completing the underwriting of the church's share of the $12,161,521.67. All pledges to be paid on or before April 30, 1924.

D. The observance of four pay-up days in each church:

1. Was Pre-pay-up Day, June 24 to pay in advance amount due first quarter, ending July 31.
2. Pay-up Day, October 28. Pay amount due to end of second quarter.
3. Pay-up Day, January 27. Pay amount due to end of third quarter.
4. Pay-up Day, April 27. Pay amount due to end of fourth quarter.

An Interview with Gypsy Smith

By George E. Burlingame

GYPSY SMITH arrived from England in mid-August to begin another evangelistic campaign in this country, where he is almost as well known as in his native land. He has been visiting the United States for the past twenty-nine years, and has conducted missions in many of the largest cities in the country with blessed and abiding fruitage for the churches where he has ministered.

The Gypsy spent a few days at Indianapolis, immediately after his arrival, as the guest of Mr. Henry E. Ostrom, son of the veteran evangelist of that name. On Sunday, Aug. 26, he preached to an enthusiastic congregation of 10,000, in the Cadle Tabernacle, where the Northern Baptist Convention met in 1922. The great Gypsy Smith choir, organized for his Indianapolis mission two years ago, has continued its work in the tabernacle, which was built as a consequence of the Gypsy's work there; but serious dissension has developed and the choir has been disrupted and its affairs carried into the civil courts.

The Gypsy was manifestly greatly distressed over the existing trouble, and as he faced the choir, all again in their old places, reunited for the moment by their love for him, he poured out his heart in a passionate plea for their reconciliation and for the eradication of all bitterness and misunderstanding. The announcement was made from the platform that the tabernacle management had offered the building to the Indianapolis Church Federation for another Gypsy Smith campaign next winter if the evangelist can be secured; and efforts are being made to complete plans for such a campaign under his leadership.

The Gypsy, although preparing for an auto drive to St. Louis on his way to Wichita for his first mission, generously gave an interview to the writer, who had a joyous share in the Gypsy Smith Mission in San Francisco in the winter of 1911-1912. The Gypsy was informed that he was being asked to talk for the churches of the Northern Baptist Convention through their official denominational organ; and he was manifestly pleased to give his impressions and to voice his convictions concerning the several matters discussed.

The interview is reported here substantially as he replied to the inquiries propounded by the interviewer, and for convenience is cast into direct discourse.

"I have been preaching the gospel for over forty years, beginning at seventeen. I spent three and one-half years in work with the army during the war, and since then I have given each winter, save the last, to evangelistic work in America. I left home Aug. 8 to fulfill engagements made long since for meetings in the United States, beginning at Wichita, Kans.

"If I had not been definitely committed to these engagements I should have been loath to leave England at this time, for the 'pull' is just now very strong there in evangelistic work, and my missions during the past year have been marked by deep spiritual interest. It is yet too early to say what permanent residuum the war has left in the spiritual life of England. Of one thing I am quite confident: the churches blundered when the soldiers came back after the war was over. They had been through harrowing experiences and were ready to respond to a spiritual ministry. The churches seemed to think that what they wanted was a good time and so they feted them and entertained them, and the men said to themselves, "Is this what we have been fighting to preserve?" Just here the churches lost their opportunity. The present trend is hopeful, and for the most part the churches are better attended than before the war. Yes, there is a decided turn for the better.

"My work for the past year has been with my own church (Methodist), and has been carried on in eight leading cities: Sheffield, Bradford, Bolton, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Central London, Plymouth, Glasgow, and Hanley (the "Five Towns" of Arnold Bennett, in the pottery district). In all these meetings the churches generally have cooperated, and there has been a splendid fruitage. As I have already said, I could not have considered leaving England when the interest was so promising, if I had not been bound by engagements of long standing.

"This campaign of which I have spoken began at Hanley, where I had served four years as pastor, going there at twenty-two. Here, and in all the other cities named, I found that converts of the earlier missions which I had conducted were the leading men and women of the churches today; while the youth who knew of me only by hearsay were ready to welcome me on the testimony of their fathers and mothers who had been led to Christ under my ministry years ago.

"Lord Birkenhead's statement in a recent address in America, to the effect that self-interest is the dominant principle in national life, is in flat contradiction to the spirit of Christianity, and does not represent either the attitude of the British government or the predominant conviction of the English people. There have been three great men in history. Greece had a great man, who said, "Know thyself." Rome had a great man who said, "Control thyself." But the great man of the ages is the Jew of Nazareth, who said, "Lose thyself." The law of self-sacrifice, not the law of self-interest, is the true principle of national life. That law has been in operation in England in our recent labor troubles in a very potent fashion. Last year when the country was threatened by a general strike which would have been ruinous, the labor leaders themselves finally said, 'We cannot let this thing come on and bring disaster; we must avert it somehow;' and they adopted an attitude of conciliation which saved England from the threatened catastrophe.

"Lloyd George has not 'shot his bolt,' and will be heard from again in British politics. When he resigned from the premiership, the Daily Mail, which had opposed him during his official career, said of him that he is the greatest Britisher in 500 years. Labor, which is at present the opposition, has in Ramsay Macdonald an able and conservative leader, and the labor party is liberal and votes with the liberals on many questions. England is keenly watching the workings of prohibition in America; and Lloyd George is right in saying that if it succeeds in America it must come in time in England as well. The triumph of Lady Astor in carrying her bill through the parliament despite the opposition of 'the trade' is symptomatic of the growing demand in England for control of the liquor traffic and for its ultimate abolition. The Free Churches are a unit in their advocacy of prohibition, and it is certain to come with us, as it did with you, along the line of local option and finally complete suppression.

"My engagements for missions in the United States as far as definitely determined are: Wichita, Kans.; St. Joseph, Mo.; Roanoke, Va.; and Chattanooga, Tenn., which carries me to Feb. 15. As far as methods of preparation for my missions, or methods of conducting them, are concerned, I have made no essential modification from the plans I followed ten years ago; I am simply more and more assured and more firmly convinced of the blessing of God under these conditions. As to particular emphasis on any one factor in evangelism I can only say that all such factors need emphasis: the use of the scriptures, personal testimony, preaching, intercession, gospel song, and a consecrated spirit-filled life. I avoid all fads, and give myself to the fundamental realities of the gospel.

"As to new translations of the New Testament, such as that just announced by Doctor Goodspeed of the University of Chicago, I want to say that I keep Moffatt's version by me constantly, and read from it in my meetings. Doctor Moffatt—I call him Doctor Jim, and he works with me in my meetings when I am at home—is one of the very greatest scholars in Europe, and his New Testament is the most accurate translation in the language. The English churches love and trust him as a great Christian leader, true to Jesus Christ and thoroughly sound in the fundamentals of the gospel.

"As to the my own ministry through the forty years since as a gypsy lad I

The Gypsy's Message to the Baptist's Readers

PREACH Jesus and the resurrection. No man can preach Christ who isn't in love with him. To talk about love one must be a lover; and when any man can say with Wesley, with all his consecrated, enlightened, redeemed manhood, 'Jesus Lover of my soul,' he can preach him. But to preach about Christ when the heart is not in love makes the words fall like gravel instead of the gentle rain."

began to preach Christ, I will tell you the secret of my success: I behold a new Saviour every morning. I have never yet lost the wonder element of my salvation."

Practically every topic of this interview was introduced by the interviewer, and the Gypsy was answering questions put to him. I asked him, in closing, for a brief message from his heart for the readers of THE BAPTIST, and he said: "Preach Jesus and the resurrection. No man can preach Christ who isn't in love with him. To talk about love one must be a lover; and when any man can say with Wesley, with all his consecrated, enlightened, redeemed manhood, 'Jesus, Lover of my soul,' he can preach him. But to preach about Christ when the heart is not in love makes the words fall like gravel instead of the gentle rain."

Preaching Today in America

A foreigner's first impressions of pulpit oratory in "the land of the free," as recorded in the "Boston Transcript"

THERE was once a budding author who published a book running into ten volumes, entitled "Twenty-four Hours in India." I do not wish to court a similar reception and so I hasten to say that what I am about to write must be considered only as a series of impressions which have not, as yet, solidified into beliefs. First impressions are not necessarily right, though occasionally they contain a modicum of truth. At all events it may be of interest to those who are interested in church work to learn some of the impressions a stranger from another land gathers on seeing the churches in operation in America.

Entering through such a doorway as New York City a visitor is impressed by the many noble church buildings, and wherever he goes in the United States this impression remains. It would scarcely be fair to compare the church buildings in a comparatively new country such as this with the product of the age which built the cathedrals; and yet with commendable zeal many beautiful places of worship have been erected in this land. It is true that occasionally architectural monstrosities offend the eye, but they are not peculiar to any land. One feature especially stands out in connection with the church buildings in this land and that is, their extraordinary adaptation to the needs socially and spiritually of the people. But apart from this adaptation, America may, with some degree of pride, point to many beautiful church structures. One immediately gathers the impression that here are to be found many people who hold the church in high regard.

Nor is this impression dissipated on visiting the churches. Naturally some preachers by reason of their superior gifts attract more than others, still, on the whole, attendances at church services are somewhat better than I have found elsewhere. In addition, one cannot but be impressed by the alertness, the resourcefulness and the vigor of the American pulpit. And yet in spite of these things the churches in America appear to be failing in their ministry of the Word. In this country, more perhaps than in any other, the churches have yielded unconsciously to the spirit of the times. They have accepted, unknowingly perhaps, the ideals of the world and have sought to impose them on Christianity. This, of course, is true of the churches in other lands. Eucken, for example, speaks of "the cry of an age rent inwardly asunder, its heart at enmity with the work of its hands." Organized Christianity has not been able to answer that cry, because it has itself yielded to the same pressure of the world that brought forth the cry. As Eucken points out, "the labor of the preceding centuries, nay, of the last few decades, has indeed been immeasurably fruitful. It has given birth to a new culture and to new views of the universe.

> "FIRST impressions are not necessarily right," says this observer, "though occasionally they contain a modicum of truth. At all events it may be of interest to those who are interested in church work to learn some of the impressions a stranger from another land gathers on seeing the churches in operation in America."

But its triumphal progress has not implied a simultaneous advancement of the inner life; its dazzling victories have not been won for the spirit and substance of man. We have become the mere tools and instruments of an impersonal civilization, which first uses and then forsakes us." We are, of course, accustomed to ascribe to the introduction of machinery the beginning of the modern factory system with all its horrors and inequalities in the distribution of wealth, which make for unhappiness. All this is true, but perhaps a greater evil has been introduced by it into human society through our adoption of what may be called "machinery ideals." In some respects we have been hypnotized by the cold-blooded and brutal ideals of our engines of commerce.

But let none of us suppose that all this stands for real progress. Our very machines may blast us. In the United States more perhaps than in any other land the churches have yielded to the spirit of the times and have been captured by the ideals of the industrial world. Nor could one expect to find that the churches in this land would be immune. Here, for example, in this youthful and triumphant republic which has grown great commercially by systematizing its business, it can only be expected that the churches will be infested with the same spirit as that which has made for commercial success. Hence one cannot but be impressed with the splendid equipment and the intense organization of the various departments of church work. But it does seem a pity that the churches have apparently adopted only one factor of good business and that is quantity production and not quality production.

After all it is not the quantity of Christianity which is to save the world, but the quality of those who profess it. Organization can never take the place of life. The second factor which apparently has operated to a considerable extent in the American churches is what I may call the political factor. Naturally one great problem which confronts a republic such as this is the moulding of the heterogenous mass of humanity into a homogeneous whole. There must of necessity be some common point around which these must be gathered. That point is the national play. The focussing of all eyes on that play and giving to it its full need of reverence is a vital work and at the same time a noble work. But it is not primarily the church's work. The function of the church is to focus the eyes of all on the cross of Christ. In this respect I must confess that I have found it a difficult matter in the American churches at times to see the cross of Christ for the Stars and Stripes. Whether the churches recognize this or not a stranger attending many of the church services will gather this impression that the churches have been captured by the state ideal. I am well aware of the fact that in making good American citizens—citizens of enlightenment, politically and socially, the churches are doing a noble work. But while the church through its ministrations will always make good citizens they will become so simply because they have been made Christians.

As I read my New Testament it seems to me that Jesus insisted on certain fundamental principles. He placed first of all, sorrow for sin, and then a forsaking of sin. He demanded love for God, and, after that, service for man as a result of our love for God. But the chief fundamental, if I may use that term, is sorrow for sin. It comes somewhat in the nature of a shock to find that there is a tendency, in the churches, at all events those I have attended in America, to put the emphasis on service for man. Indeed in the services for public worship I have heard little or nothing about the great fundamental principle enunciated by Jesus. I take nine services at random from my notebook, and I find that in only one case was the soul made to feel its need of pardon: simply and plainly without any denunciation on the part of the preacher, the soul was made to feel its unworthiness, its need of God and then, cleansed and pardoned, desired to express an adoring love in service.

The minister in this case was an imported Scotchman.

Of course it may be argued that I have been singularly unfortunate in my choice of preachers. My reply to this is, that I have sought out the men who are the acknowledged masters of the American pulpit. At all events, it would seem that quite unconsciously the political ideal or citizenship ideal if you will, has captured the pulpit to a very large extent and to some degree destroyed the true spirit of worship. If I remember rightly, Mr. Austin Freeman some years ago complained that the church was carrying too much luggage—that the body of truth carried by the church was too large and that much of it should be scrapped. Possibly Mr. Freeman was right, but you cannot dispense with man's absolute need of humbly confessing his sins without destroying one of the great purposes for which the church gathers in public worship. The impression, however, gained at many church services in America is this, that whilst the promise runs, "He healeth those that are broken in heart and giveth medicine to heal their sickness," yet the churches are offering to the worshippers all the effervescent monstrosities of the soda fountain instead of the spiritual medicine they need, and what is more to the point, what they want.

Maybe this wrong emphasis and its resultant loss in worship accounts for the many incongruities one encounters so often at church services. I have listened at times to a perfect orgy of sentimentalities, every emotion has been tickled but the will has not been stirred. I have listened with amazement to a well-known preacher state why Miss So and So was a better actress than Miss This or That, and my soul has shrieked out, "My God, is this the gospel our ministers are expected to proclaim?" I have listened to many semi-political addresses and social talks. Some of these addresses were brilliantly delivered and would command attention on any public platform. And some of them were of such a standard that one wondered if the minister's knowledge of spiritual truth were as poor as his knowledge of science, and race movements and political and social economy. Two great examples of the incongruous, however, stand out in my mind with startling clearness. The first was a large church, where an especially large congregation gathered. The occasion was the annual memorial service of some friendly society. The music was all pitched in a minor key as befitted so solemn an occasion. The address of the minister, however, was in a class by itself. The whole domain of domestic and foreign politics was his playground. Boodling editors, boodling politicians, grafters, bolsheviki, all called forth the fiercest invective. Running through this wonderful speech was a rich vein of humor. The audience was in a fever of delight from its beginning to its close. And then in order that the occasion for which that audience of over two thousand people might be fittingly commemorated, the memory of the sacred dead was appended to that amazing address like the wart on Cromwell's nose. For certain reasons I abstain from mentioning the church. It will be sufficient for my purpose to state that the preacher has an international reputation.

The second example of the incongruous occurred recently. I happened to attend a church service in order that I might hear a sermon on the topic, "The love that survives a thousand shocks." Now, in the church calendar, which I held in my hand in order to follow the service, was the following announcement:

> Have you a good second-hand suit of clothes, suitable for a clergyman, to whom the missionary box is to be sent, chest measure 40 inches; also for his son, a lad seventeen years of age, average size; also a woman's coat, size 38, or any other clothing suitable for his family? If so, send them at once to the church, etc.

I must confess that on reading this announcement the ponderous platitudes of the preacher fell on one pair of ears that were deaf. Here was the case of one who for the sake of his master was having a full share in "the love which bore a thousand shocks" whilst a well dressed congregation could sit unmoved in the presence of such a system and by its apathy could contribute an additional shock to that thousand. The well dressed congregation faded out of sight and the vision of that missionary's home appeared—a home bare almost to the point of poverty. I could see the wife who needed a coat so badly that she was ready to swallow her pride and to accept somebody's thrown-aside garment. Once she loved pretty things but hopes long deferred have well nigh blotted all that out. She still works on bravely with her husband for the God they both love.

I thank God for the vision of the man and woman out in the firing line of the kingdom, having fellowship in "the love which bore a thousand shocks." It has given me the impression that in spite of all which may seem amiss in the churches I have visited, the churches still have power to produce some wonderful saints. But the gross stupidity and the brutal ignorance of such a church system which permits these saints to labor under such conditions can only denote a lost sense of values and the dethronement of a true Christian sentiment.

The Practicalness of Jesus

By O. P. Eaches

IT has been held by many that the teachings of Jesus are impractical in a work-a-day world like this. They are too idealistic and visionary except in a millennial age among first-class saints. An examination of the life of Jesus as given in the Gospels reveals him as a leader of men, wise in judgment, adapting means to ends, sane in his methods, an executive knowing how to use men and agencies to bring about efficiency. Jesus was in himself a Palestine Home Mission Society, reaching all the towns and villages of his home land. He worked in a sympathetic way laying plans, appointing agencies to bring about the desired ends. He sent messengers ahead of him to prepare lodgings for him, contributing thereby to personal comfort and larger results. To a confidence in a Father's guidance and watch-care were added his personal piety and his planning power. A visionary, one-sided leadership would not have added business forethought to God's plan to widen his kingdom.

The spreading of Christianity was aided by a Benjamin-Franklin-like sagacity (Luke 9:52). He was preaching in the open air in the method of Whitefield and Wesley. He was sowing spiritual seed, that, through the truth presented men might be led into discipleship. It was the part of wisdom in Ezra's work to have a pulpit higher than the people that they might hear his message. In a like emergency Jesus constructed a pulpit so that he could be heard by hundreds instead of by scores. He got into a boat and pushed from the shore. This was not an act of omnipotence, or genius, it did not require the fulness of the Holy Spirit. It did reveal him as a person of large good judgment, one who could make circumstances serve him.

He was a leader who knew how to utilize agencies at hand so as to bring about larger results. He claimed equality with the Father and he studied the details of daily life. There came a time in Jesus' ministry when the strain of work began to tell upon the physical nature. He had the limitation of a human nature that could break down under a constant pressure on the nerves. It was the part of wisdom and reason to husband his strength to care for the body for the sake of a world's redemption. A Middle Age piety that delighted in emaciated bodies and tortured physical nature would have thought it unworthy of a saint to leave his work to reconstruct bodily strength. Mark 6: 21-22 speaks of a time when they had no leisure even to eat. Then Jesus proposes a vacation "Come ye yourselves apart into a desert place and rest awhile." They all needed quietness, rest, sleep and the strength that comes from the hills. The spiritual mindedness of Jesus was consistent with and contributed to a rational concern for their bodies. In that same spirit our Foreign Mission Society furnishes rest places in the hills of India and grants a furlough every few years.

In feeding the five thousand, there was the divine power, the sympathy that would not let them faint by the way, the kindly helpful spirit and at the same time, the orderliness and systematic method of working. They were seated in groups of fifties and hundreds. Jesus' life was what it was because it paid attention to the details of life. The general and the business man make their large plans successful by giving attention to the minute things. A church will have larger spiritual results through paying attention to ventilation and ushering. Jesus knew how to make all parts of his life conduce toward spiritual results.

In his own personal methods of work he showed his accustomed wisdom. He never heard or used the word psychology, but he was a trained psychologist. He suited his teachings to their ability to receive them. It is a significant expression in Mark 4:33, "He taught them as they were able to hear it." The teaching concerning his sufferings and death he did not give until the closing part of his ministry. The doctrine of the cross would have been too heavy a burden for them to bear at the beginning of their discipleship. The larger teachings were for larger minds. In all his ministry he showed a supreme desire to do God's will and exhibited at the same time, the controlling principle of adapting his ministry to surrounding circumstances and the capacities of men. He was not a visionary teacher, he never forgot that his feet were on the earth and his work among men. The practicalness of Jesus is everywhere shown in the Gospels. He did not go through life by the simple push of omnipotence. He prayed and planned and studied the best method of doing things, the art of a fitting approach to men. That was tact that led Paul to address his cultured heathen audience at Athens "I percieve that you are very religious." That same tactfulness and good judgment formed an integral part of Jesus' ministry. He knew how to reach men and bring things to pass through his open-eyedness and his reason.

Haddonfield, N. J.

Young People's Work

Topic for September 30

SCHOOL DAYS IN CHERRY BLOSSOM LAND

Prov. 4:5-7

Materials.

"From The Himeji Gardens," 3 cents; "Waseda," 10 cents; "Our Girls' Boarding Schools in Japan," 5 cents; "The Mabie Memorial," 5 cents; "Woman's Christian College," free. These may be secured from the literature department of the General Board of Promotion, 276 Fifth Ave., New York City; 143 North Wabash Ave., Chicago; 313 West Third Street, Los Angeles, Calif.

Education, Plus or Minus Christianity

Japan is the most literate of all non-Christian countries. A complete government-controlled educational system, comprising nearly 28,000 schools and culminating in six universities, is effectively administered, and all the schools are overcrowded. The desire to learn is universal. Even the jinrickisha man, about the lowest type of laborer, reads the daily paper while waiting for passengers. Japan is able to boast that practically all its children of school age (six to twelve years) are under instruction; and that 98 per cent of its population can read and write.

Why, then, is it necessary to establish schools in a country so awake to the advantages of education? The answer lies in the non-Christian character of the public schools of Japan. The worship of the emperor is general. School children are taught to bow before his portrait, for "the emperor is heaven-descended, divine, and sacred," and "by obedience to that which the emperor commands we develop and perfect our lives. The standard of right and wrong, good and evil, is found only in the imperial will."

It is obvious that Christian leaders cannot be advantageously trained in non-Christian schools.

Another reason for mission schools in Japan is their value as an evangelistic agency. In the higher schools a gratifying number accept Christ before graduation.

The comparative weakness of Baptists in Japan, and their relative lack of outstanding leaders in public affairs, may be traced to the slowness of our denomination in establishing schools.

Types of Baptist Schools.

Because of the fact that practically all Japanese children from six to twelve years of age are in government schools, missionary educational work is confined largely to kindergartens and to higher schools for girls and boys. Through the kindergartens hundreds of homes of all classes are reached, and many doors are open to the gospel. We have three boarding-schools for girls, and one, the splendid new Mabie Memorial School, for boys; also a training-school for kindergarten teachers, another for Bible-women, a theological seminary for training pastors, and a share in the Woman's Christian College of Japan.—Adapted from Service.

Good-Bye

I am writing this little note to express my sincere appreciation for the many courtesies extended me by the young people during my term of office as general secretary of the Baptist Young People's Union of America, and to say "Good-bye." I expect to take up my work as President of Colorado Woman's College, Denver, Colorado, about the first of September.

Assuring all the young people of my very great love and continued interest, I am

Very sincerely yours,
James Asa White.

The 1924 Convention of the Baptist Young People's Union of America

This meeting should be held in Denver for the following reasons:

This invitation was placed before the board of managers at St. Paul a year ago.

The convention has met eight times (one-fourth of all its meetings) between Chicago and the banks of the Missouri River. It has met in all the region west of the Missouri River only twice. It is time to come west again.

The Baptists of Colorado and of Wyoming heartily join in this invitation.

The governor of Colorado and of Wyoming, United States senator, United States congressman, Denver City administration and various civic organizations of Denver have concurred in the invitation.

The unexcelled convention hall in Denver where the Northern Baptist Convention met in 1919 has already been reserved from July 2 to 14, 1924. There is no better place on the American continent to hold the B. Y. P. U. of A. convention than this hall. It was here that the New World Movement was formally launched. Who knows but that young people meeting in this same hall might catch a great vision that would lead to still further denominational advance?

Summer railroad rates lower than the usual certificate plan rates are always in force from practically every part of the United States to Denver.

To come to Colorado would give our young people a great opportunity to "see America first." It would be an ideal vacation.

The coming of B. Y. P. U. of A. to Colorado would mean an inestimable stimulus to the life and work of our Baptist young people in all the Rocky Mountain region. We believe that in fairness to all parts of our constituency the invitation to come to Denver in 1924 should be accepted.

W. F. Ripley.

Convention Impressions

This is the first convention I have attended and I am so full of new ideas that it will take me a week to tell them all.—Mary L. Kelley.

The B. Y. P. U. of A. has presented to me a vision of a world-wide task.—Harold A. Lumsden.

This convention has been a great inspiration to me because it has brought Christ nearer to me. I realize more fully his need of me as a worker for him.—Leola Williams.

The Boston Convention has made very clear to me the need of the modern world and my duty and privilege in helping it.—James W. Dahir.

This is my first B. Y. P. U. convention but it has indeed been a great blessing to me. I have enjoyed it all through. My vision has become clearer and I can say "I'll go where you want me to go."—Rose M. Nason.

After attending this my first B. Y. P. U. convention I feel that we have a right to our place as the greatest, biggest, and best of the Protestant church bodies in America and if the delegates at this convention hold the enthusiasms they have obtained here we will continue to lead them all for some time to come. Praise God for it all.

The convention has awakened a desire in my heart to make "the attractive Christ" more attractive and real to my fellowmen whether he be white or black and with God's help I hope I shall be able to show some one the way to Christ. —Clara B. Creed.

The B. Y. P. U. convention held in Boston this year has given me more inspiration—which covers a threefold subject: religion in the spirit of "the attractive Christ"; historic inspiration, inspiration of the most complete modernation of Boston.—V. H. Cookson.

This is my first convention. I have enjoyed it very much and am so glad I live here in Boston. I am glad I know of the one Saviour, Jesus Christ.—Lydia Graumann.

This has been the most inspiring convention I have ever attended and has led me to surrender my life to God in service.—Florence E. Hyam.

The Chimney Corner

The Home of the Brave

Chapter II. Home, Sweet Home

THE Princess Maria Teresa Alicia de Beppo was strangely clad on the morning of the thirty-first of August. As much of her dress as could be seen in a front view showed a very faded plaid, which reached only to her knees, below which were two thin little legs in tattered stockings and shoes much stumped at the toes. The back view of the princess was equally curious, for, hanging from her shoulders, was a thing that looked exceedingly like a dust-sheet; but it cavorted majestically behind her as a sumptuous calico train—a royal robe, indeed; while on her head was a big gold crown that looked suspiciously like a brass jardiniere turned upsidedown. A giant palm leaf fan, with wood shavings gracefully decorating the width of the curve, cooled her heated cheeks—ah, she was a very solemn and impressive sight as she marched majestically around the big deserted room, holding long and interesting conversations with imaginary grand dukes and gallant generals, conversations brought to an undignified end by the abrupt entrance of a gentleman with a suitcase and a satchel.

Although it was surely the place of royalty to utter an astonished "Sir?" at such unsolicited interruptions, it was the gentleman who did the ejaculating. He stood startlingly still for a second; then he said, dazed:

"Shades of my ancestors! Who are you? And what are you doing in this house?"

The princess longed to bolt through the door, but unfortunately the stranger filled that only outlet to an embarrassing situation.

"Well?" he repeated. "Who are you? Or better yet, who do you think you are?" It was the twinkle in his eye that saved the day, as far as the princess was concerned. With a return of her former dignity she replied:

"I'm the Princess Maria Teresa Alicia de Beppo, and I bet youse an agent or something, hey?"

"Especially an 'or something,'" the stranger replied, somewhat in doubt how to treat this amazing young lady. Bowing to her politely he continued: "But perhaps your highness would prefer to have me withdraw?"

The princess giggled: "Say, I'm on to youse!" she chuckled "To first I got an awful scare, but sooner I sees them bags I knows youse the plumber. Say, my mommer she wants as how you should fix them tubs quick—she can't make no washings mit the water running no wetness from them pipes. You get a hustle on, mister."

This department is conducted by Miss Margaret T. Applegarth. Communications to her may be addressed in care of THE BAPTIST.

"Mister" grew red in the face. And weak. His bags dropped from his hands as he leaned limply against the door jamb. "This is priceless!" he murmured —"The Princess and the Plumber!"

But the princess was plainly disgusted. I am sorry to state that she resorted to an unpleasant bit of slang in her boredom: "Aw, dry up!" she yawned, "sooner my mommer gets them pipes fixed, sooner you can get away. See? Get a move on, and follow me."

With an absolutely perfect manner she led the way toward the basement. Passing through the well-remembered kitchen the stranger caught sight of pantry shelves where the cooky-jars of other years had had such an irresistible charm . . . he stood gazing at a certain mottled jar . . . but the princess had small use for reminiscing plumbers: "Step lively!" she admonished briskly. "For the land sakes, fetch your bags along mit. Mommer ain't feeling any too swell today, so get a move on!"

It was at this juncture that the stranger weakly abandoned the role of plumber. "Mommer" began to appal him.

"Look here, princess," he said confidingly, "I'm not a plumber! In fact, my dear, I own the house." Then, adapting a touch of local color, convincingly added: "See?"

But the princess was still bored. "Smarty!" she sneered, "sooner I ever heard tell of this house, I heard how it belongs to a awful swell lady mit rings-from-diamonds and dresses-from-silk. And she aint never got her no husband —so youse nutty, mister! There!"

"Yes, but I'm the swell lady's handsome, haughty brother," the stranger further confided, with a keen remembrance of a phrase from Laura Jean Libbey's novel. "Of course, you may not consider me handsome enough for the part, princess, but nevertheless—"

"Fishing, ain't you?" Sneered the princess. "Well, I got no time to waste on compliments. Mommer she'll have an awful mad if you don't fix them pipes real quick."

It was at this point that a lady appeared through the pantry door, lured by the voices.

"Ricky," she called, "where are you?"

Richard Brave turned to the princess. "Beat it!" he ordered tersely in the princess' own idiom. "She'll wipe up the floor with you if she finds you here, my dear."

Something solicitous in his tone led her to obey, but unfortunately her train proved an entangling alliance; for, in turning to flee, it wound itself around her feet so that she stood rooted to the spot, literally petrified by the astonished stare of Miss Patricia Brave.

"And who may this person be, Ricky?" she asked in a frozen sort of voice.

He laughed. "That depends on one's point of view, my dear sister. To me, she is the Princess Maria Teresa Alicia de Beppo; to you, I'm afraid she will always be merely the laundress's daughter. You will be concerned to know that on account of a recalcitrant plumber, the laundress can't launder today, which is unfortunate as "mommer" ain't feeling none too swell anyhow."

"You silly!" laughed his sister, "You haven't changed your manners, have you, Ricky? But why is the amazing child tangled up in this absurd calico piano cover? And why the brass jardiniere?"

"You're the amazing one, Pat! Can't you recognize a court train when you see one, or a crown?"

"Oh! And the wood shavings?"

"Ostrich feathers, darling!"

"You're absolutely absurd to foster such nonsense, Ricky. We don't want laundresses' daughters to feel so free with us. Run along now, little girl; and you can leave your train behind. I presume it belongs to our piano, anyhow, doesn't it?"

"Yes, mum," said the princess, meekly unpinning the borrowed plumage.

But Richard Brave, with gentle irony, stopped her: "Patricia, do all your friends come by their trains any more honestly than she? Suppose we pretend that the piano belongs to you and the piano covering to me, which leaves me free to give the princess a slight token of my re———"

But up from the cellar steps emerged a voice! A truly terrible voice!

"Sophie! Stop ya gabbin'! Send down that plumber like I told ya of!"

Sophie, awestruck at the double catastrophe of a cross householder and a crosser parent, unwound her feet and swam to the cellar door to explain the situation. Miss Brave linked her arm in her brother's and led him into the front hall.

"'Mommer' must be an awful character!" he groaned, with a regretful glance behind at the princess. Then, in the hall, he said: "How do you like home, sweet home, Pat?"

She kissed him affectionately: "I shall like it, dear boy, if you don't get familiar with all the neighbors and laundresses and their daughters. And of course I think we really should have waited until after Labor Day to take possession, for none of the servants can come until then; we'll just have to camp out until they arrive; but you didn't want to wait, so this is the penalty—an empty house, possessed by laundresses' daughters. But I will say this for Rupert Antisdale and the scrubwomen he engaged, they've cleaned this place up! You wouldn't know it for the same house it was six weeks ago. Of course the new wall paper helps, too. Come on, let's have a tour of inspection. See, he's even had the grandfather clock repaired. Ricky, do you remember the time we played hide-and-go-seek, and I hid in the case of the clock and ruined the works by pulling on the pendulum?"

"Um'm!" murmured her brother; but he was gazing out of the window. "Patricia, our day is done down here. Take one look at this neighborhood! When I saw the calico princess ruling our parlor, I knew it. I can't think why you don't see it whenever you look out of the windows."

"I don't look!" she said, as if that were the final answer. "If a Brave can't live in the old Brave homestead then I think this country has come to a dreadful pass. We are what we are because of families like ours, and it's high time that some of us who have been bulwarks of our land should show what's in us. I don't care a fig for the neighborhood! I'm a Brave, Ricky."

He looked at her quizzically. "I wonder!" he answered gently.

(To be continued next week.)

The Young Reserves

When Our Teacher Had a Party

By "Peggy"

WE had no least idea, when we were invited, what kind of a party it was going to be, so some of us wore our best Sunday clothes and some of us wore our every-day dresses, feeling very uncomfortable about it. But as a matter of fact, it really didn't matter at all for Our Teacher had a small brass bowl in her hands, full of slips of paper. She told us to close our eyes, reach inside the bowl and choose a paper, which would tell us what to do next.

Oh, such a clatter as we made then! For one slip of paper said: "Your name is Kuppamal now, my dear. If you know how to read, please run upstairs and find your name on a box on the guest-room bed. This box contains your Hindu sari. Put it on at once!"

Another slip of paper said: Your honorable new name is Wang May May, and your Chinese suit is in a box on the guest-room bed marked with your name. Dress up in it right away."

A third slip said: "Honorable Little O Shika San from Japan, you will find your new kimono in a box marked with your name on the guest-room bed."

There was a slip for "Laughing Water, one little Injun maid," one for "Dukhi of India," another for "Little Miss Robinson Crusoe," another for "The Blue Cotton Nurse." You can see for yourself that it was immense fun to rush upstairs and find out what our new clothes were going to look like on us. We really hardly knew ourselves when we suddenly found that we were Chinese, Japanese, Hindu, American Indians and nurses. We wanted to know all about each other at once, so Our Teacher finished pinning us into our new clothes, then we scampered down to the fireside where we sat in a circle while she told us stories about ourselves!*

O Shika San of Japan discovered that she worked in a factory, Dukhi found out that she had been hungry for days and days, Miss Robinson Crusoe discovered a tell-tale footprint, Wang May May heard about a most peculiar squeak in her wheelbarrow. I was Kuppamal of India and was surprised to find that my name meant "rubbish heap" and that I had the flu! Poor me! Our Teacher had us act out our stories while she told them to us, so there was a lot of commotion all the time, of course; and then, after we had become well acquainted with ourselves we played a game about our new countries.

For instance, for India, we had a "Hunt in a Hindu Jungle."

1, Soongome. 2, Padrole. 3, Talligora. 4, Present. 5, Lulgborf. 6, Kacopec. 7, Trapor. 8, Noocrips. 9, Obar. 10, Pedicteen. 11, Somsoup. 12, Ocrab. 13, Peelthan. 14, Repthan. 15, Yemnok. 16, Tophyn. These are all Indian animals, snakes, birds, etc., well known to you, but misspelled. Perhaps you will want the fun of puzzling them out yourself, so the answers will be given next week instead of now.

In China, you know, they greatly "venerate old age," and are exceedingly polite to old people. So the game for China was called a "Chinese Age Contest."

1. In what age did the Chinese grandfather's house stand?
2. At what age did Chinese grandparents marry?
3. What age shows how brave he is?
4. What age does he worship in the gaudy temple?
5. What age was he afraid of from evil spirits daily?
6. What age will grandpa receive when he dies and his spirit "enters" on wooden ancestral tablet?
7. What age does poor meek grandma endure?
8. What age do Chinese birds wear?
9. What age does the Chinese missionary need on his travels?
10. What age did the village carpenter build for him to live in?
11. What age did he use to write to us about his village?
12. What age will grandpa reach if he lives long enough?

Although these are all truths about the Chinese they are also all words that end in "age." Watch for the answers next week.

For Japan the game was very interesting: "Missing Letters In a Japanese Home." x stands for the missing letters to be guessed:

1. Max—underfoot in every Japanese home.
2. Lxxe—no Japanese can live without it.
3. Xoxe—the more the Japanese take from it the larger it grows.
4. Rxox—it's all over a Japanese house?
5. Xoxs—found in Japanese suburbs?
6. Xraxt—gives the Japanese a cold, cures a cold, and pays the missionary's salary?
7. Bxaxtx—desired by homely Japanese girls?
8. Xexthexs—often called down in Japan?

Xaxy—gets a good backing from an older Japanese sister?

10. Xixrxkisxa—a grown-up Japanese baby carriage?

For the American Indian game we were each given a feather and a pin; then, just as in "Tailing The Donkey," we were blindfolded, turned around rapidly several times, and headed for a picture of an Indian chief on whose war bonnet we were supposed to pin our feathers. Only nobody did, of course!

But the nicest game of all was following Miss Robinson Crusoe's footprints which suddenly appeared all along the floor leading from the room where we were playing back to the dining-room. There were little remarks on every footprint; for instance: "Please rub the place where you feel hungry." "Please pat the red gates through which you can let some food enter." "Please wiggle the red sentinel who guards those gates." "Please flicker the ten assistants at the ends of your arms which will lift the food up to the gates." By the time we had obeyed all these orders we had reached the dining-room where the nicest kind of a party spread was laid out for us.

The Blue Cotton Nurse went around and gave us each a candy pill from an enormous pill-bottle so that what we ate could not possibly make us ill! After which we ate and ate and ate, until it was time to go home.

We think our teacher was very wise to have this kind of a party, because the next Sunday when our Sunday-school superintendent asked us please to listen while he told us about "The New World Movement of Northern Baptists" we all sat there more interested than anybody else could possibly be when he spoke of "China," "Japan," "India," "Africa," "America." You see, we had belonged to those countries for one glorious, blissful afternoon, and we said to Our Teacher: "Can't we do something special this year for the New World Movement? Now that we've been heathen we know what it means so much better."

So next week I hope I can tell you what she said, and what we did!

The stories about these characters are in "Friday's Footprints," Publication Society.*

Religious Education

Six Reasons Why Your Church Should Advertise

1. To enlarge its membership. Of course, that is the one obvious reason—the fundamental reason. Every church wants to increase the roster of its members. And just as a business house must advertise to sell its product and increase its list of customers, so must the church advertise for that same obvious reason—to "sell its product" and to increase its "customers."

2. To inspire its present members. The church that advertises is unquestionably the church that is alive—not only alive to reach onward and increase its membership, but alive within, because the spirit of advertising reaches both ways. And the people belonging to the institution that is truly alive are always proud of it.

3. To deepen its influence in the community. Your church should advertise for an even larger task, i. e., to influence your community in a broad and enduring way that simply church membership alone cannot compass.

In other words, you cannot hope to gather in every individual and every family in your community. There will probably always remain some unchurched. But they can be influenced. Your church can be a power of good in your neighborhood with its advertising.

4. To cooperate in the united evangelical campaign of the other churches of your city. The united evangelistic drive has undoubtedly become an institution in our own church. So, get in the game—take your part in the advertising of your community drive or campaign, whether cooperative advertising or individual advertising. It is the cooperative spirit that wins.

5. To get the unchurched element to thinking. Your church advertising reaches and influences many a man and woman who never enters a church door—make no mistake about that. You can never reach those people through the accepted channels of church services, sermons, etc. But those people read advertising and you can get over to them many a definite thought about the value of the better life if your church will advertise.

This is extremely important. Remember that your church advertising reaches an element that you can probably reach in no other way.

6. To keep abreast of modern times. Advertising is modern salesmanship. It is mass selling. And the church must keep modern. Else it hardens and crystalizes into mere formality—simplicity going through the motions, as it were. The church as an institution, is peculiarly susceptible to this danger.

To keep alive, keep modern.

Advertising helps mightily therefore, to keep the church modern in spirit and abreast of the spirit of our times.

Duties of the Superintendent

What are the duties of the superintendent?

This officer himself, the pastor, the school, the church, the people want to know. Listen again to the voice of experts:

Foster says the superintendent is to superintend the school, arrange the school in classes, choose teachers, open and close the school, plan details, direct others, have right ideas, determine the religious atmosphere of the school.

Spilman says that during the week he should plan constantly for the school, do some visiting, conduct (or least attend) the teachers' meeting. During the Sunday-school session he should be on time, call to order promptly, conduct opening exercises, while lesson is being taught supply teachers, welcome new scholars and visitors, sound warning bell five minutes before close of teaching period, and conduct closing exercises.

Semelroth says in general he is to lead the school, interest teachers, study methods, develop workers, visit parents, teachers, scholars. In the school before opening—be on time, have all things in order, greet attendants; during opening—direct the service, place substitute teachers, counsel with teachers; during lesson hour—observe all things, inspection, visit special classes; during closing—direct service, review lesson, present the week's work.

Peters says that in the school he is to begin on time, lead general exercises, have oversight during class work, use blackboard for platform review of lesson, and make closing exercises helpful. Out of the school he is to prepare for work of school by holding cabinet meetings, weekly teachers' meeting, visit pupils as often as possible, read and study along the line of his work, attend Sunday-school institutes and conventions, and prepare all details of work in the school.

"Who is sufficient for these things?" And yet, dear fellow-workers, we can be all we ought to be and do all we ought to do through Christ who helps and strengthens us.—Sunday School Builder.

The Good Teacher

THE Lord is my teacher,
I shall not lose the way.

He leadeth me in the lowly paths of learning,
He prepareth a lesson for me every day;
He bringeth me to the clear fountains of instruction,
Little by little he showeth me the beauty of truth.

The world is a great book that he hath written,
He turneth the leaves for me slowly;
They are all inscribed with images and letters,
He poureth light on the pictures and the words.

He taketh me by the hand to the hilltop of vision.
And my soul is glad when I perceive his meaning;
In the valley also he walketh beside me,
In the dark places he whispereth to my heart.

Even though my lesson be hard it is not hopeless,
For the Lord is patient with his slow scholar;
He will wait a while, for my weakness,
And help me to read the truth through tears.

—HENRY VAN DYKE.

International Sunday School Lesson for September 30

REVIEW: GREAT MEN AND WOMEN OF THE NEW TESTAMENT

Golden Text: Hebrews 12:1

A key thought to each of the quarter's lessons:

Lesson 1: "This is he of whom it is written, Behold, I send my messenger before thy face who shall prepare the way before thee."

Lesson 2: "How is it that ye sought me? Know ye not that I must be in my Father's house?"

Lesson 3: "Thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church."

Lesson 4: "Love is of God; and every one that loveth is begotten of God, and knoweth God."

Lesson 5: "He saw a man, called Matthew, sitting at the place of toll; and he said unto him, Follow me. And he arose and followed him."

Lesson 6: "Mary Magdalene cometh and telleth the disciples, I have seen the Lord."

Lesson 7: "Mary hath chosen the good part which shall not be taken away from her."

Lesson 8: "He kneeled down and cried with a loud voice, Lord, lay not this sin to their charge."

Lesson 9: "He was a good man, and full of the Holy Spirit and of faith."

Lesson 10: "I press on, if so be that I may lay hold on that for which also I was laid hold on by Christ Jesus."

Lesson 11: "Take Mark, and bring him with thee; for he is useful to me for ministering."

Lesson 12: "Only Luke is with me."

Lesson 13: "I have no man likeminded, who will care truly for your state . . . ye know the proof of him, that, as a child serveth a father, so he served with me in the furtherance of the gospel."

Our Own Folks

Wisconsin News and Notes

By Robert W. Shaw

Now that the vacation days are over, Baptist churches are getting back to normalcy. Each one of the churches will observe some sort of a rally day during this month. Under the direction of the Baptist Union the Milwaukee churches are undertaking a large program of advance.

Conventions

During the summer the Polish and German brethren have held two conventions within the state. The Polish brethren had their gathering at Pound, where we have two Polish Baptist churches and a German church. The First Church of Pound is said to be the largest Polish Baptist church in the world, having over 300 members. The German brethren held their young people's convention at Wausau the latter part of June. The programs at both of these conventions were of a high order. Speaking of conventions reminds us that next year Milwaukee is to entertain the Northern Baptist Convention. Plans are already being made looking toward the work of entertainment.

Death of A. LeGrand

Adrian LeGrand, father of our state superintendent, Dr. A. LeGrand, passed away the last week in August, after a long illness. Mr. LeGrand was a unique character of sturdy Dutch stock. For more than thirty years he was sexton of the First Church of this city. Several years ago he told the writer that he considered his life's ambition realized in the preparation of his son for the ministry, and those of us who know both the father and the son can appreciate the modest pride which the father took in his son's leadership and ministry. The sympathy of the Wisconsin brethren goes out to Dr. A. LeGrand and the family in their bereavement.

Some Pastoral Changes

Rev. John Schroeder has resigned as pastor of the Raymond Church and returned to South Dakota. Rev. O. P. Lovik has accepted the work at Omro, having resigned at Rio and Wyocena. Rev. R. H. Crawford has accepted the pastorate of the Juda Church, resigning at Pewaukee and Merton. Rev. G. D. Hargis of the Walworth Church has resigned, as has Rev. L. Kitznuller of Dodgeville.

Building Improvements

During the past year there were many churches which improved their property. On July 1, the Wild Rose Church rededicated its building, having spent nearly $6,000 in improvements. Dr. A. LeGrand, F. F. Parsons, E. G. Mintz, W. W. Woodward and the pastor, H. E. Mansfield, took part in the services of the day.

The church at Big Bend is in the midst of rebuilding its plant.

Kingdom Enlargements

Among the churches reporting additions by baptism are Evansville, five; Green Bay, eight; River Falls, six; Warrens, two; Tabernacle, Milwaukee, West Allis report baptisms, while Immanual and North Avenue of Milwaukee each report eight and six respectively. Doubtless there are many other churches which have had baptisms, but they have not been reported to the writer.

Other Notes

Dr. W. T. Dorward is the stated supply at the First Church, Madison, until its new minister arrives. It is reported that Dr. N. B. Henderson, of Minneapolis, has accepted the call to the Madison Church. This is an important field.

The honorary president of the state convention, Mr. E. J. Lindsay, recently celebrated his eighty-fifth birthday. Mr. Lindsay is still active in the work, serving as a member of the board of managers and on the executive committee. His son, Mr. Frank Lindsay, is a member of the finance committee of the Northern Baptist Convention.

Rev. R. L. Lindsay, who was recently laid aside on account of illness, is back at his post at Delavan and planning for an aggressive year of work.

The Green Lake Assembly was a decided success. Full reports are not at hand and will have to be given later.

The state convention will meet with the First Church of LaCrosse, Oct. 15-18. A strong program is being prepared. One of the features will be the Bible and missionary conference to be held in connection with it.

An Important Appointment

By Charles A. Brooks

In connection with the sessions of the American Baptist Home Mission Society at Atlantic City, Rev. John M. Hestenes, who spoke of the work in our Christian centers, was introduced as the newly appointed director of Christian centers for the Home Mission Society.

This appointment is of more than passing interest and deserves special notice, not only because of Mr. Hestenes' marked fitness for the position, but also because of the importance of the work he has been called upon to direct.

Mr. Hestenes has had several years of experience during which he has won distinguished honor in the direction of social center activities in congested sections of Chicago. For the past four years he has been the director of Brooks House at East Hammond, Ind., where his personality and influence have been a determining factor in shaping the life and activities of that community, and where he has become a recognized factor in the public life of the city of Hammond.

His characteristics qualify him for directing the policy and helping shape the program of our growing Christian center activities. Mr. Hestenes is a Baptist and has refused more advantageous offers to work with other denominations because he has preferred to serve with his own brethren. But he is not so narrow a denominationalist as to prevent the heartiest and most cordial recognition of and cooperation with those of other faiths, which is imperative in a sincere community effort.

I, personally, have been impressed with his high human sympathies and understanding of mind and heart. His strong, genial personality wins the confidence of all the right-thinking and forward-looking people of the community. He is a hero to the boys, a brother to the working men and comrade to the business men who have the community spirit and who desire to serve. With a deep religious faith and conviction that only in the redeeming grace of God is there any possible solution of our perplexing social problems, he never "soft pedals" in any degree the Christian note and message.

As a denomination we have frankly committed ourselves to a thorough going and vigorous program of Christian service and interpretation of the gospel through these centers in our industrial and polyglot neighborhoods. But there is no magic in names and no miracle working power in houses and programs and each community has its own peculiar problems so that it is impossible for us to superimpose a standardized cut and dried program from headquarters upon some distant community.

The Woman's Home Mission Society has its district directors of the general work, including the woman's work in Christian centers.

The Christian center work in nearly every case is carried on in direct cooperation with the local state or city boards and Mr. Hestenes will be the Home Mission Society's representative to confer with them and with the local women in developing plans and helping solve difficult problems. He will continue to make his headquarters at Brooks House, East Hammond, but will be directly related to the department of city and foreign speaking missions.

May I add that at the meeting of the Home Mission Board at Atlantic City, it was voted to make the title of the general workers (who are each specialists) in this department, uniform. They are all to be known as directors of the Home Mission Society's work in their several fields: Rev. Charles R. Shepherd, director of Chinese work; Rev. E. R. Brown, director of Mexican work in the United States; Rev. E. W. Moore, director of negro work; Rev. Theodore Fieldbrave, director of work among the Hindus; and Rev. J. M. Hestenes, director of Christian centers.

A Virile Christian Layman

By Thomas H. Sprague

We can ill afford to lose any of our virile Christian laymen whose influence is so greatly needed in these days, both for the strengthening of the kingdom forces and the maintenance and extension of our denominational program. Such a loss, however, has come to us in the passing on to the unknown of Mr. K. Allen Lovell of Pelham, N. Y., formerly of Philadelphia, Pa.

Mr. Lovell was born in Huntingdon County, Pa., July 20, 1841, and died Aug. 28, 1923. Early in the Civil War he enlisted in Company E, 122nd Regiment, Pennsylvania Volunteers, taking an active part in the battles of Fredericksburg and Chancellorsville.

Mr. Lovell studied law in the office of Hon. John Scott of Huntingdon, and began to practice in 1865. He was twice the choice of his county for presiding judge, and once for state senator.

Being identified with the Baptist denomination, he had for a great many years taken an active part in the Christian church. For twenty-five years he was superintendent of the church school of the First Church of Huntingdon. His contribution both through the impact of his personality and his consecrated service in the helping of the weaker churches of Huntingdon County can never be estimated. Later, having removed to Philadelphia, he became vitally interested in the work of the Chestnut Street Church and at the time of his death was the senior deacon. He was also a member of the board of trustees of the Pennsylvania state convention.

Mr. Lovell was respected as a genuine Christian gentleman. His culture, courtesy and sterling character won the deep admiration of all who came in contact with him. His judicial temperament combined with his unwavering integrity and unsullied reputation made him much sought after for counsel and advice. While he had real convictions concerning Christian truth, he had charity for those differing from him in their interpretation. For him the great essential was the possession of the spirit of the Christ rather than mere creed or dogma. His vital fellowship with his Lord was beautifully expressed in the words read at his funeral services taken from "The Sure Guide."

"So, whether on the hilltops high and fair
I dwell, or in the cloudless valleys where
The shadows lie, what matters? He is there.

And more than this; Where'er the pathways lead,
He gives to me no helpless, broken reed,
But his own hand, sufficient for my need."

Mr. Lovell is survived by his wife, who was Mary G. Leas, daughter of the late Judge William B. Leas; four daughters, Mrs. Charles A. Campbell, wife of Doctor Campbell, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Elizabeth, N. J.; Mrs. Horatio C. Wood, Jr., of Philadelphia, Pa.; Mrs. Thomas H. Sprague, wife of Doctor Sprague, pastor of the Emmanuel Baptist Church, Ridgewood, N. J.; Miss Mary W. Lovell of Pelham, N. Y.; and two brothers, Dr. Albert G. Lovell of Maryland, and Mr. J. Barton Lovell of Denver, Colo.

Funeral services were held in Philadelphia, and owing to the absence of his pastor, Doctor Baldwin, were conducted by Dr. Charles A. Soars, assisted by Rev. B. F. G. McGee, a former pastor. The interment was at West Laurel Hill Cemetery.

Church Celebrates Sixtieth Anniversary

By Charles H. Easley

The First Church of Golden, Colo., is sixty years old. It is the oldest existing Baptist organization in the state of Colorado. The members with their families and guests celebrated the occasion in special services on Sunday, Aug. 11. Dr. Joshua Gravett, for over thirty-two years pastor of Galilee Church, Denver, was the honored guest of the day. Doctor Gravett aided our pastor in special meetings thirty years ago and has met with us on frequent occasions since. On the day of celebration he delivered an inspiring sermon at the eleven o'clock service and in the afternoon interwove another message in his historical sketch. At 12:30 a basket lunch was served on the church lawn to more than 100 persons.

There are fourteen members living who cast their lot with this church thirty years ago, eight of whom attended the meeting. Deacon James A. Lewis, who was present, but is now a member of the Fruitdale Church, was baptized in the First Church in May, 1878, forty-five years ago, and remembers all of the early pastors of the church. His brother, Paris E. Lewis, was baptized the following year and has the distinction of being the oldest in point of membership of those now living. The last of the charter members to lay down the work for a crown of glory was Deacon Seth Lake, who died Feb. 8, 1888, the year of our twenty-fifth anniversary. Kind words were spoken of a large number of those who, in the early and later history of the church, were its trusty burden bearers.

Our sister, Susan Hubbard Martin, wrote a poem "Sixty Years Ago" especially for the occasion, which was read during the afternoon session and was well received. The church was never very large and because of changing population was frequently called upon to dismiss members, at times almost to the breaking point. But there is consolation today in the fact that some of these dismissed members became the most efficient founders and sustainers of Baptist churches in others parts of Colorado, some of which have far out-grown the little First Church at Golden.

The church at present enjoys the largest membership ever attained, about 175, forty of whom are non-resident. Under the pastoral care of Rev. Walter L. Jaeger the church is carrying on a forward campaign. Our slogan for the year is sixty accessions for our sixtieth year, and it is not an impossibility for more than half that number have already been received since the beginning of the year.

Sixty Years Old

By Susan Hubbard Martin

I'M sixty years old but it doesn't seem long
Since my walls first went up in his place.
I've been happy in him as I've sheltered in turn
The saints of his love and his grace.

When the Lord of the harvest called some of them home,
How I mourned o'er each desolate pew;
How I yearned for the voices I'd never hear more,
But his will must be done—that I knew.

I've never had beauty as some churches have,
I've always been humble and small.
But listen, from here have great ministers gone,
Who obedient were to the call.

There are mothers who daily teach children to pray,
And that they by his blood have been bought.
They can teach them, because in these sacred walls
The same truths to them were once taught.

In far away countries where mission fields lie
There my children are serving each day—
Telling the story and healing the sick,
And pointing in love to the Way.

I am sixty years old, oh, but with what joy,
Do I think of the years that are past.
For my work is a work that is not of this world
But will through eternity last.

I'm only a church that is humble and plain.
But for the best things have I stood.
For peace and for pardon, redemption from sin,
For all that is noble and good.

I greet you with gladness—I bless you each one,
The faithful, the fervent, the true.
And this is my message I leave with you now,
The Lord requires service from you.

The Memorial Service in Westminster Abbey

By Arthur T. Fowler

American visitors are very numerous in London this summer. The Baptist Congress at Stockholm has added to this number so that one is constantly seeing familiar faces. The sudden and unexpected death of President Harding has made a profound impression upon the British people and upon London in particular. The outstanding event of the past week was the service in Westminster Abbey in memory of Mr. Harding.

The service was as simple as it was impressive. For nearly five minutes the vast congregation, which filled the noble edifice, stood with bowed heads while the strains of the Dead March in "Saul" came from the organ. The service began at noon and long before that time the Abbey was filled. An overflow service was held at the same time in St. Margaret's Church nearby, which was also crowded. A large number of Americans were present and many were in deep mourning. The members of the American embassy were in evening dress. The only color amid the somber throng was the color of the attaches of the diplomatic corps of other countries with their gold braided uniforms. The Duke of York represented the king, wearing the full dress of the Royal Air Force. He came up the center aisle accompanied by Canon Carnegie who is also chaplain of the House of Commons. As the last strains of Chopin's Funeral March died away, there was a profound stillness. The vast congregation and the shafts of sunlight streaming through the windows made a most impressive and wonderful scene. The rose window over the western entrance never looked more beautiful. The choir chanted an anthem, "I am the resurrection and the life." When its fine melody was finished, the twenty-third psalm was sung. Then the twenty-first chapter of the Book of Revelation was read. The congregation joined in the hymn "Lead Kindly Light" sung as only an English cathedral congregation can sing it. It was as the voice of many in one universal aspiration. The address by Canon Carnegie was short and to the point. Among other things he said: "Two great nations connected by ties of kinship and fellowship stand in spirit by Warren Harding's graveside today and wish him Godspeed in his new enterprise. It is fitting that in this church, which is the central shrine of our parent lineage, Americans and British should unite in giving religious expression to the sentiments of mutual good will and sympathy which are aroused."

The service lasted just forty minutes and concluded with the playing of the Dead March in "Saul." This was followed by the muffled peal of the bells of the abbey, and the service in memory of our late president was over! President Harding was held in high esteem over here, and sympathy has been expressed by British people wherever Americans have gathered!

London, Aug. 11.

Church News by States

Atlantic Coast

EASTERN PENNSYLVANIA

THE FIRST CHURCH, PITTSTON, is the oldest church in the Wyoming Valley, having been organized in 1776. Rev. M. H. Jones has been the pastor for eight years. Under his leadership, the church has made progress.

NEW YORK

THE FIRST CHURCH, PENFIELD, unveiled a new bulletin board in front of its building on Aug. 26 as a memorial to its late pastor, Rev. George A. Keetch, who died last February after a pastorate of two years. Mr. Keetch was a senior at Rochester Theological Seminary last year. The church called Rev. Finley Keech, a member of this year's middle class at Rochester, as pastor, and he has already begun work on the field.

Mississippi Valley

OHIO

REV. T. M. HOFMEISTER has devoted the past several months to the building of a country home at South Solon, Madison County. He has reentered the evangelistic field.

THE FIRST CHURCH, COLUMBUS, suffered no summer slump. Congregations and receipts equalled those of previous months. The church building was recently redecorated. Rev. Daniel F. Rittenhouse is pastor.

ILLINOIS

REV. AND MRS. M. C. TUNISON recently moved to Elgin where he will be pastor of the First Church. Practically all their household goods were destroyed by fire while being moved in a van, but members of the congregation contributed articles to furnish the parsonage.

DURING THE SIX YEARS that Rev. W. C. Rutherford has been pastor of the State Street Church, Rockford, there have been 375 additions to the church membership, 220 by baptism.

ILLINOIS

THE CORDOVA CHURCH, the only place of stated worship in the Cordova community, is marshaling its forces for a three weeks' evangelistical campaign. The pastor, Rev. Frank Woodhull, will be assisted by Rev. Leslie D. Sander of Indianapolis.

REV. CHARLES LEWIS of the Bethel Church has announced Sunday, Sept. 16, as Rally Day in the interests of Sunday-school and young people's work. The speakers will be Rev. Donald H. MacGillivary and Rev. Louis H. Koehler.

THE CHURCH AT MORRISON, after being closed for a thorough over-hauling which includes a new roof, decorating and rearrangement of the baptistry, had a reopening. Rev. Andrew Martin is closing his work at Morrison. He is planning to attend Colgate University.

REV. A. W. FLEISCHMAN of Sterling, after a successful pastorate of three years, has resigned. He will, after a short vacation, begin his new work as a member of the faculty of Virginia Union University, Richmond, Va.

THE PLANO AND SOMONAUK CHURCHES, under the leadership of Rev. W. H. Dickman, are progressing. A spirit of cooperation is evident. The parsonage has been redecorated and a new furnace installed.

REV. WILLIAM MCINTOSH resigned at East Alton and moved to Colorado. The East Alton Church called Rev. Robert Leitz as pastor. He is already on the field.

THE KEMPER CHURCH has called Rev. L. H. Williams to become pastor for half time. Mr. Williams is also pastor for half time at Rock Ridge.

REV. W. E. PIKE recently became pastor of the Trinity Church at Benton.

THE O'FALLON CHURCH has raised its pastor's salary $200. The church did this in order that the pastor, Rev. O. E. Myerscough, might move to Alton and attend Shurtleff College. Mr. Myerscough has been serving the O'Fallon Church for two years and attending McKendree College at Lebanon. He will enter Shurtleff as a junior.

REV. F. W. JOHNSON has been serving the Staunton Church for nearly a year. A parsonage has been built and the work of the church has prospered. The church has voted to permit Mr. Johnson to attend Shurtleff College and continue as pastor. O'Fallon and Staunton recognize and appreciate the services of these young men who serve them as pastors and who desire to fit themselves thoroughly for the Lord's work.

THE BLUFFDALE CHURCH has made a number of improvements on its building.

THE CARROLLTON CHURCH has organized a brotherhood with a membership of thirty-three.

REV. W. W. MARSHALL of Wales will assist Rev. J. W. Gillispie in special meetings this fall at Olney.

THE BENTON CHURCH recently suffered a loss in the death of its senior deacon, Wesley Payne. He had served the church as deacon for over forty years.

REV. FRANK CHAPMAN assisted by Rev. T. O. McMinn held a two weeks revival meeting with the Blue Point church in Wayne County. The meeting resulted in ten converts.

THE MAKANDA QUARTERLY CONFERENCE was held at Creal Springs Aug. 24-26. Sermons were delivered by William Brush, C. F. Stalker, J. W. McKinney, and J. D. McMinn. An address was given by Rev. T. O. McMinn held a two weeks' revival Task." Two timely topics were presented, "Preparation for the Ministry," and "Prayer." The following officers were elected: Pres., C. F. Stalker; secy. William Coleman. The next meeting will be held with the Carterville Church.

REV. C. A. GORDON passed away at his home at Ava on Aug. 25 at the age of eighty-one. He had been a minister of the gospel for fifty-five years and was held in high esteem and love by his brethren. Funeral services were held at Campbell Hill. Rev. T. O. McMuinn presided, and Rev. J. H. Barwill preached the sermon. Fourteen ministers were present and made brief remarks.

MR. ROBERT CRAIG held special meetings with the Pleasant Point Church, five miles north of Greenfield. There were a number of professions.

THE GREENE JERSEY COUNTY ASSOCIATION was held with the Barrow Church Aug. 28-29. It proved to be one of the best associational meetings held in years. Two hundred thirty delegates and visitors were registered. The introductory sermon was preached by L. E. Ellison and the doctrinal sermon by Minor Goodsell. J. A. Carwile delivered a sermon on Tuesday night. Dr. A. E. Peterson delivered two helpful messages. Miss Grace Finney of Burma told of her work on the foreign field. The closing session was given over to the B. Y. P. U. The young people put on a fine program on the general theme "The Relationship of Home and Church." J. A. Carwile was elected moderator for the coming year and Miss Anna Williams, clerk.

IOWA

REV. GEORGE H. THOMPSON, harp evangelist, supplied the pulpit of the Walnut Street Church, during the vacation of Pastor MacDonald. He is now free to conduct evangelistic campaigns.

REV. R. B. DAVIDSON, pastor of the First Church, Ames, and university pastor for the state college located there, is anxious to secure the names of all Baptist young people who expect to attend the college the coming year. Pastors and parents who can furnish such information are asked to communicate with Mr. Davidson at once. Experience has proved that unless the student is reached during the first thirty days, it is difficult to establish a religious connection.

MISSOURI

Evangelist George W. Griffin of Denver recently concluded a successful series of meetings in the state. He will spend the fall and winter in Missouri and Illinois.

Rev. Warren P. Clark has resigned at Chillicothe after serving nine years and is pastor of the Robberson Avenue Church, Springfield.

Pacific Coast

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

Rev. John Snape, pastor of the First Church, Oakland, is preaching a series of Sunday evening sermons on "What I Saw in Europe."

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

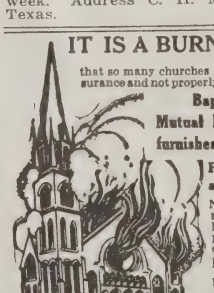
John Marvin Dean, pastor of the First Church, Pasadena, has been preaching a series of ten sermons on ten great chapters of the Bible. Unusual interest has been manifested in this series.

Dr. H. A. Hultan of Oklahoma City has accepted a call to the pastorate of the First Church, Monrovia. Doctor Hultan supplied the church during August. Monrovia furnishes an excellent opportunity for service.



David D. Ward, for many years Sunday-school missionary of the Publication Society in South Dakota and California, will spend a few weeks this fall in visiting friends in Iowa, Illinois and South Dakota. He is at present superintendent of a Sunday school in Pasadena.

Want Ads

Wanted: Teachers for Bishop College, Marshall, Texas, an American Baptist Home Mission school for negroes. Piano, $900; high-school chemistry, physics, science, $1,035; librarian, $900; hall matron and campus chaperon with some teaching, $900; college physics and mathematics, $1,125; for coaching athletics, $125 additional. Furnished room, board, laundry for $3.50 per week. Address C. H. Maxson, Marshall, Texas.

IT IS A BURNING SHAME

that so many churches are without sufficient insurance and not properly safeguarded against fire.

Baptist Department
Mutual Insurance Corporation furnishes protection AT COST
FIRE, LIGHTNING and WINDSTORM

No assessments; easy payments; profits to policyholders; legal reserve for protection of policyholders same as stock companies.

Parsonages, Homes and Personal Effects of Church Members also insured. No agents. Deal direct.

National Mutual Church Insurance Co., 22 years old under same management. Address Henry P. Magill, Manager 1800 Insurance Exchange Chicago, Ill.

If Some One Should Ask You About a Will

And when you make your own Our Corporate Name is:

The American Baptist Home Mission Society

CHARLES L. WHITE, Executive Secretary
SAMUEL BRYANT, Treasurer
23 East Twenty-Sixth Street
New York, N. Y.

Rocky Mountain States

WYOMING

The fifth annual summer assembly was held in Hyattville, Aug. 5-12. The faculty consisted of Dr. W. F. Ripley, Hal P. Fudge, Miss Mary Sundell, C. M. Thompson, Jr.

COLORADO

The Harry O. Anderson evangelistic party of Berkeley, Cal., recently closed a series of meetings with the Mt. Hermon Church, Denver. The result was 141 decisions. The party will conduct meetings at the Galilee Church, Sept. 23-Oct. 15.

---

The American Baptist Publication Society Centennial

As nearly every Baptist knows, Feb. 25, 1924, is the one hundredth anniversary of our Publication Society. It has been a century of unusual development and increasing efficiency. The society intends to make much of this one hundredth anniversary, making known the facts of growth and the great need of further enlargement.

Dr. L. C. Barnes is finishing a history of the one hundred years which will be a book of outstanding merit. It will tell the whole story of this important work, and will be illustrated with photographs of our distinguished workers.

The board of managers has appointed a centennial committee which is now busily engaged in making plans for this important celebration.

The board of promotion also appointed a committee to cooperate with this centennial committee of the Publication Society.

Dr. Charles N. Arbuckle of Newton Centre is preparing an elaborate pageant for presentation at the great meeting to be held in Philadelphia, Feb. 25, 1924, and to be repeated in large centers within the territory of the Northern Baptist Convention. This pageant will also be the feature of the Publication Society night at the Northern Baptist Convention meeting in Milwaukee.

The plans now being put into operation include the issuing of a monthly bulletin called "The Golden Century." The editor of this bulletin, which will be published for at least one year and a half, will be J. Sherman Wallace. Members of the centennial committee will be contributing editors.

It is planned to make Feb. 24, Publication Society Sunday through the Northern Baptist Convention.

A summary of the hundred years of history is being prepared and will be mailed to the pastors of the Northern Baptist Convention with the request that they speak of the work of the society both as history and prophecy. There will also be a stereopticon lecture prepared, with slides illustrating the work of the one hundred years.

Among the outstanding events of this centennial year will be the publishing of the four gospels translated by Mrs. Helen Barrett Montgomery, with a great New Testament reading campaign seeking for 100,000 readers of these gospels, fixing in their minds the matchless life of Christ by the time the International Uniform Sunday School Lessons begin on the same topic, July 1, 1924.

Doctor Conwell has contributed a manuscript of special sermons which will be published in book form as one of the features of the celebration.

An effort will be made to reach a million Baptists through the radio with Doctor Conwell, or some other widely known man, to deliver the address on the Publication Society on a Sunday near the one hundredth anniversary date.

The society is preparing a beautiful calendar with an unusually fine artistic drawing illustrating the outstanding features of the society's work, and also a memorandum book containing an outline of its history.

It is hoped to have a column every week in our leading denominational papers which will tell the story of a hundred years' achievement.

An effort will be made to have in the daily press some of the outstanding stories which have so much of human interest in them.

Every letter and every package sent out by the society, and a large per cent of the periodicals printed bear the seal with which this column begins.

Our Book Shelf

Leeden's League, by James Albert Knowlton. Tipton, Ind.: J. Otto Lee.

A closely-printed spiritual allegory of nearly 200,000 words. The author has undertaken the meritorious task of producing a contemporary "Pilgrim's Progress," although we dare not predict for "Leeden's League" either the fame or the persistence in literature of John Bunyan's masterpiece.

The Magyars in America, by D. S. Soudars. New York: Doran. $1.

The editor of this admirable series of surveys of foreign-speaking groups in America, Dr. Charles Hatch Sears, has already fulfilled his promise to publish six of the studies projected by the Interchurch World Movement. This is volume six, and it is written by a Reformed Church secretary familiar through long experience with the Magyars, of whom there are in America nearly 500,000 of foreign birth and parentage.

The European Magyars, although a minority of the Hungarian kingdom, are the most aggressive element of the population. Doctor Soudars tells us that about 25 per cent of them are Protestant, chiefly of the Reformed Church of Hungary. He computes 46 Roman Catholic congregations in America, in eight states; and about 200 Protestant congregations. The Magyar immigration is found chiefly in New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Illinois and Michigan; although St. Paul and Los Angeles each have 2,500.

This careful and comprehensive study of this racial group in our country, with its discussion of the problem of religious work for these people, is indispensable to pastors, teachers, and missionaries in whose fields Magyars are found. A complete list of Magyar Baptist churches (20) and missions (25) is given.

Why Not Try Christianity? by Samuel Zane Batten. New York: Doran. 15 cents.

The books of Doctor Batten have been in our review column so often that their trend and errand are quite familiar. This pamphlet is a vigorous plea for applied Christianity in the life of the world, its civilization and progress. It is written with the vigor and virileness that characterize the writings of the author and it will immensely please many people. It would be a godsend to civilization and especially to the church if a leader could be found with the ideals of Doctor Batten and with the ability to make them real and practical. The latter is the consuming need of the times.

Spain in Silhouette, by Trowbridge Hall. New York: Macmillan. $3.

To understand the Spain of the present, one must understand the Spain of the past. Such knowledge Trowbridge Hall possesses. Partly because of this, his book is so delightful and informing. He has a pleasing habit of dropping out of the present into the past and parading historical scenes of centuries ago before the reader with a realism that makes old history live. Mr. Hall's is not a Baedeker trip, nor, as may already be inferred a Baedeker account. For nearly a year he lived in Spain, traveling through the entire country, studying the people, lecturing and writing. His book catches the spirit of the land of manana, where nothing is ever done today that can be put off until tomorrow—whose ideal of happiness is to do nothing. It is more than a mere geographical or historical treatise: it is as well a psychological glimpse of a people fascinating for their background, for their picturesqueness and for the peculiar capacity for pleasure.

Church Life in the Rural South, by Edmund deS. Brunner. 370 Seventh Ave., New York: Committee on Social and Religious Surveys.

This book is the result of an intensive study of six counties in the South with a comparison with sixty-four other counties from the same region. It is one of a series of volumes on the town and country church throughout the whole country. Every rural pastor should read at least one of these books. Doctor Brunner has a way of giving convincing statistics in a readable manner, and his recommendations are always valuable. In the 2,415 churches covered in this survey 15 per cent of evangelistic meetings held had no results, yet the churches in city and country are growing more rapidly than is the population. The country churches have a grip upon the people which is difficult to explain. The main part of its program is the preaching. Very few of the Sunday schools make mission study a part of their work. A large per cent of the churches have only once a month preaching. Modern equipment and cooperation among the various organizations is almost unheard of in many localities. There is, however, a transformation taking place. There is being shown an effort to have a better educated ministry. More interest is being shown in religious education, in the economic situation, in good roads, health and education, and also the churches' program. The book is understandingly illustrated.

Churches of Distinction in Town and Country, by Edmund deS. Brunner. 370 Seventh Ave., New York: Committee on Social and Religious Surveys.

A book long needed. We like to think there are churches which are doing a big work for the kingdom. These fourteen churches convince us. The volume is as interesting and as helpful as an autobiography of a successful man who struggled up from poverty. The ministers who are described are of the kind who "worked to protect their parishioners' water rights just as faithfully as he preached the ten commandments." How these men accomplished what they did inspires any Christian worker and also gives practical ideas. The churches have been chosen from a large field. There is the small rural church, the church taking care of the migrant laborer, the student-supply church, the large parish with several ministers working together, the denominational community organization, and churches for negroes, Indians, mountaineers and churches on a circuit. All have successfully carried out plans for developing the religious life of their communities, and in every case the community has rallied to the church.

Alexander Duff, by William Paton, acting secretary of the India National Missionary Council. New York: Doran. $1.50.

This is the second volume in the new modern series of missionary biographies published by the student Christian movement of Great Britain, Ireland and the United Societies for missionary study. It has been the aim of this series to give a fresh interpretation and a fuller understanding of the great personalities who have done outstanding work in the cause of foreign missions. Mr. Paton maintains this aim as he tells in a stirring way of the life of this great pioneer of missionary education. He shows that there is a striking similarity between the problems that faced Alexander Duff in India in 1836 and the great crises which must be faced in India today. Those interested in biography as well as the student of missionary education and policy will find this work not only intensely interesting but refreshing and instructive. This is also a helpful book for class study.

Social Service Through the Parish, by Jeffrey R. Brackett. 281 Fourth Ave., New York: The National Council.

Doctor Brackett shows an appreciation of the importance of the individual in social service. Attention should not only be paid to the individual who is unfortunate, but each church should make an effort to enlist each Christian in some phase of social work for that one's own soul development. The book is easy to read, and is full of practical suggestions which will help any size church to put into practice the teachings of our Master. Chapter six is well worth studying by all Christian organizations because of its descriptions of

It's Worth Looking Into!

1. Our annuitants now number over 250.
2. We are handling over $250,000 in annuity money.
3. The smallest sum invested by one person is $50.
5. The largest amount held by an individual is $20,000.

Write and let us tell you more about this safe plan for receiving an income, protecting your principal, and at the same time furthering Christ's program for America.

The Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society
MRS. MARY E. BLOOMER
Treasurer
276 Fifth Avenue New York City

plans which have already been proved workable. The whole field of social work deals with persons and families, the neighborhood, the mass and research. These four divisions are treated by methods adaptable by any church. It is a sane, and sensible book which one would expect coming from a leader in the Episcopal church.

The United States and the League, by Thomas H. Dickinson. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co.

Frankly, clearly, temperately, respectfully, it is argued that the United States is bound by the highest considerations of morals and of international politics, to join the league. Facts herein presented make the American who cares for the respect of the world feel uncomfortable. "The League of Nations was defeated by a senate which was overwhelmingly in favor of a league of nations." "There has never been a popular referendum on the league. The election in 1920 was not such a referendum." "The circumstances of the composition of this treaty, the wide scope of its provisions, and the high hope which has been raised for a rebuilt world combined to make this defeat one of the tragedies of history. "You should know that if you do not get this League of Nations you cannot within the span of your short life-time see another." And the book tells you why.

A Permanent Income

Life Annuities on One or Two Lives

On one life the rate of income varies from four to nine per cent a year, payable semi-annually.

On one or two lives the rate varies from four to eight and three-tenths per cent a year, payable semi-annually.

A survivorship agreement provides a permanent income for two lives.

For annuity booklet and samples of single and survivorship agreements, please address

CHARLES L. WHITE
23 East Twenty-Sixth Street
New York City

The American Baptist Home Mission Society

Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society
(CORPORATE NAME)
ALICE M. HUDSON, Treasurer
276 Fifth Avenue New York City

TRALLE
Service in Religious Education, Sermons, Lectures, Addresses, Conferences. Churches saved from costly mistakes in building. Some open fall and winter dates.
HENRY EDWARD TRALLE
150 Claremont Ave., New York City Tel. Morningside 3938

COOK ACADEMY 50th year. Prepares Boys for college or business careers. Graduates are successful in leading colleges. In Finger Lake region with splendid health record. All Body-building athletics. Swimming pool. Christian influence and training. Music advantages. For catalog address The Principal, Box B, Montour Falls, New York

CHURCH FURNITURE
Pews, Pulpits, Chairs, Altars, Book Racks, Tables, Communion Ware—EVERYTHING. The finest furniture made. Direct from our factory to your church. Catalog free.
DeMoulin Bros. & Co., Dpt. 17 Greenville, Ill.

The Religious Experience of John Humphrey Noyes, by George Wallingford Noyes. New York: Macmillan. $2.50.

A biographical study of the early life of the founder of the Oneida Community; a book for the man of leisure, the specialist, and the reference library, rather than for the busy pastor or layman, whose reading must be more severely selective. John Humphrey Noyes was a convert of the great revival of 1830-34. He became an advocate of perfectionist doctrines, and with a group of his fellow-converts founded a Community at Putney, Vt., in 1838. The volume under review deals with his experience and his theology only to this point in his life story. A second work covering the history of the Putney and Oneida movements is promised by the author.

America's Twin Gifts to China

I MET him on a miniature steamer which plies daily between the coast of China and the principal island of that group known as the Chusan Archipelago. Quite the polite thing by way of a casual introduction is a presentation of the open cigarette case. On informing this wellbred, thoroughly educated Chinese gentleman who happened to be my traveling companion in the unpretentious first cabin that my habits were contrary to his in this respect, he remarked rather naively, "So the teacher does not always practice his precepts to his pupil."

This seemed enigmatical enough to warrant a question for information.

"I beg your pardon, sir. I am aware that you Chinese are noted for your intellectual subtlety, and I confess to be proprietor of a large stock of Western dullness of mind. Will you please explain your statement?"

"What!" he exclaimed, "Don't you know that America is teaching the Orient to smoke the cigarette?"

He was in the tobacco business, it appeared, and was quite familiar with the customs reports on quantities and value of imports in his own business. I was poorly equipped to argue and could only take refuge in the exception of the case, which part I had played when I first declined the offer of a cigarette. I went home humbled and decided to know exactly if our country, as this native had stated, was in truth teaching the Orient the use of the cigarette.

My search for facts seemed to indicate that the Chinese had adopted the republican form of government and the cigarette as the twin gifts of the western world. At the time of the revolution in 1914 the importation of cigarettes barely amounted to 600,000, perhaps enough to supply the foreigners in China and the Chinese in contact with them who had adopted the foreigners' method. But by 1919, in spite of the tremendous growth of native factories for the manufacture of cigarettes the number of cigarettes imported into China from the United States had increased thirteen times!

While this increase was taking place in China, the United States was exporting cigarettes to eighty countries but to none of them did she export as many as to China. In fact, China is the best customer of the American cigarette companies, purchasing in 1922 70 per cent of the total number exported.

American cigarette companies are excellent teachers for they succeeded in selling no fewer than eight and one half billion in 1922, thirteen times as many as in the year preceding the war, a sale of twenty-one American cigarettes to every man, woman and child in China. They showed a customs value of $24,000,000, eight times as much as in 1913. This importation took place in spite of the fact that nearly all foreign tobacco companies have their own factories in China and, as previously stated, a great development has taken place in native establishments.

New evils for old may seem to many to be a sign of advancing civilization. Those of us in China who seek to bring to China first the good news of the gospel and only secondarily those western ways of living and working which will make the gospel more effective look with chagrin upon the share our own country has in introducing the cigarette habit into this country.

(The figures given above are taken from the "Trade Record" published by the National City Bank of New York.)

"It Is to Laugh"

A rural editor thus writes of a society wedding: "The groom's gift to the bride was a handsome diamond brooch, besides many other beautiful things in cut glass."

---

"My body is in the valley," sings one of our younger poets, "but my soul is among the mountain tops." Apparently one of these sad cases of a poet being unable to keep body and soul together." —Life.

---

Ikey (eagerly): Fadder, I vos in de woods an' I saw a nest full of young birts an' dey did nothing but sing "Cheep! Cheep!"

Cohenstein: Mine cracious, Ikey! Get all dem birts you can. I'll hang dem in der front of der store and let dem holler 'bout der goods.—Boston Transcript.

---

A man was suffering with toothache. The only other person in the room was his matter-of-fact aunt. Presently the man burst out, "Oh, I wish to goodness people were born without teeth." His aunt glanced up from her paper. "A moment's consideration, my dear Alfred," she said, "will remind you that that is precisely what does happen."—Tit-Bits.

---

"Ah," said Granny, "times have changed sadly since I was a girl. Nowadays girls don't seem to know what needles are for." "That we do, Granny," said sweet sixteen. "They are what we use to make the gramophone play, of course!"—London Post.

---

"Johnny," said his aunt, "did you enjoy the book I sent you on your birthday?"

"Haint looked at it yet."

"Why, how is that?"

"'Cause ma said I'd have to wash my hands when I read it."—Boston Transcript.

---

"I'm afraid, dearest," said young Mr. Justwedd, "we shan't be able to afford any help at first."

"Oh, Tom, whatever will the neighbors say if they see me doing my own work?"

"Why, darling" he replied, genuinely puzzled, "whose work do they expect you to do?"—Boston Transcript.

OUR MUSIC CORNER

CONDUCTED BY WILLIAM LESTER

PROBLEMS OF SMALL TOWN ORGANIST AND CHOIR-MASTER

The problems confronting the organist and choirmaster of most small town churches with volunteer choirs of mixed voices are many and varied. Probably the most disheartening feature in the management of the average choir of nonsalaried adult singers is that of tardy and irregular attendance. The writer has resorted to every known expedient within reason to encourage punctual and regular attendance and has only partly succeeded in bringing about the desired result.

As is usually the case, the least desirable voices, that is, those possessing a limited range or inferior tone quality, or worse still, that breed which lacks the ability to read a note but whose all-consuming ambition is to sing solos, are usually most in evidence at rehearsals and services. To handle such a situation with as little friction as possible, the organist and choirmaster needs to be a diplomat of the first water, and to possess the patience of a saint. The really worth-while singers in most choirs are generally the most unreliable in point of attendance, and to win them over requires an overplus of persuasion and coaxing on the part of the choirmaster. Coercion and threats seem to avail nothing. Timely praise, with a dash of flattery, sometimes raises the enthusiasm a degree or two. But the rank and file of choristers nowadays seems to have no definite object in view in becoming identified with a church choir other than to exchange gossip or meet their friends in social intercourse.

Some years ago I gave a fifteen-minute talk on harmony and the rudiments of music, with blackboard illustrations before each weekly rehearsal, which seemed to encourage punctuality and regularity in attendance for a time. The "know-it-alls," of course, were usually conspicuous by their absence, while the worth-while element took the instruction with profit. To further encourage interest I provided at least one new anthem for study each week, and scheduled a musical service at least one Sunday evening a month. Those possessing small but sweet voices, and ambitions to sing solos, were given a try-out at these special services. One or two cantatas a year, either Lenten or Christmas in character, with a spring or fall musicale, likewise helped to hold the interest of a majority.

It pays to keep an accurate attendance record and to reward faithful members at the close of the year. Some years ago I gave to every one of over thirty singers a gift each Christmas, of chocolates and oranges, at the close of the morning service, in addition to awarding prizes of bound volumes of church hymnals or oratorios. I likewise persuaded the music committee of the church to present to every chorister on this occasion a book of fiction or verse.

I do not believe in governing a volunteer choir by too many hard and fast rules, mainly because of the difficulty of enforcing them. Choirs usually have one or more cliques, or have several members from one family among the singers. To give offense to one means to incur the displeasure of perhaps two or three others in the choir. It requires no little tact and lots of forbearance on the part of choirmasters to get members to live up to any fixed set of rules.

When I took charge of my present choir, it virtually became necessary to effect a complete change in the organization, and to insist upon obedience to certain rules. Singers came and left the rehearsal room at will. Talking during the rehearsal hour was considered to be quite as necessary as singing. Choristers blurted out their likes and dislikes of the music we happened to rehearse, without the least regard for my feelings. Grouping of the voices had never occurred to them—a bass, perhaps, sitting between two sopranos. I saw that some discipline was needed; so I drew up the accompanying set of rules and posted them in the choir room:

1. Reularity in attendance at all services and rehearsals is expected of every chorister, if the standard of the music is to be maintained or bettered.

2. Punctuality in attendance is likewise desired of every member of the choir. Rehearsals are to begin promptly at 7:45 o'clock every Friday evening and to last about one and one-half hours. If a few choristers persist in coming in late others will follow suit. Rehearsals are then interrupted, causing loss of time and energy of those who are punctual.

3. A reverent attitude in and about the church is earnestly requested. Loud or boisterous talking, laughter, shuffling of feet preparatory to singing the processional, or upon dismissal after the singing of the closing verse of the recessional is irreverent and uncalled for.

4. Neatness of your hair and footwear greatly enhance the appearance of our choir, particularly while in procession.

5. Proper care of vestments, hymnals, anthems and other church property entrusted to you is earnestly requested.

6. During the service, and while seated in the chancel, avoid unnecessary talking or doing anything that will attract the unfavorable attention of the rector or congregation to the choir.

7. Join heartily in the recitation of the psalms, prayers, collects or other recited portions of the service, both for the good it will do you and for an inspiration to the rector and the congregation. Should any incident out of the ordinary occur during the service, please do not allow reverence to give way to mirth. Levity has no place in the sanctuary, much less during the service.

8. Be charitably minded one toward another. Avoid giving offense among yourselves, either by word or deed.

9. Esteem it a privilege to be permitted as choristers to lead the congregation in the singing of God's praises. Let us be thankful for the talents he has given us, and use them in the furtherance of his work here in the church.

10. A careful record of the attendance of every chorister will be kept. Those who fail to measure up to their responsibilities and privileges by habitually missing rehearsals and services without cause, will have their names erased from the choir register.

11. The organist takes time each week to prepare typewritten programs of the Sunday music, and it is his wish that choir members refer to them more frequently. Anticipate what is to follow during the progress of the service, and arrange your music accordingly. Kindly take the trouble each week also to read the announcements at the bottom of these programs.—The Etude.

A CHURCH IDEA
—spreading like wildfire!

Someone got the idea that Candy Mints would easily sell. Everyone agreed. So they called on Strong, Cobb & Company—big makers of best mints—who got up a new package—four flavors: Peppermint, Wintergreen, Cinnamon and Clove—put up in four boxes (80 rolls to a box), a total of 320 5c rolls to a case. The Company calls it

"22 MINTS"

A case costs only $9. You sell the 320 rolls at 5c a roll. Total receipts—$16. You thus make the big profit of $7 on a $9 investment! It's no wonder this Church Idea is spreading like wildfire. Enthusiastic endorsements of success sent on request.

S. S. Classes; Societies; Young People everywhere! You can do what so many are doing! Send us $9 today and we will ship you a case of "22 Mints"—charges prepaid!

STRONG, COBB & COMPANY
433 Central Viaduct, Cleveland, Ohio

When Making Wills and Legacies Remember
Our Corporate Name Is:
"WOMAN'S AMERICAN BAPTIST HOME MISSION SOCIETY"
Mrs. Mary E. Bloomer
Treasurer
276 Fifth Avenue, New York City

Van Duzen Bells
formerly Van Duzen & Tift
Guaranteed Genuine Bell Metal Bells made of Copper and Tin. Famous for full rich tones, volume and durability.
The E. W. Van Duzen Co.
Buckeye Bell Foundry
CINCINNATI, OHIO
Est. 1837 428-434 East Second St. Send for catalogue.

CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL
Ask for Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 10
ESTABLISHED 1858
THE C. S. BELL CO. HILLSBORO, OHIO

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS.
UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.
Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

TEXAS OFFERS: We need some Christian men with money to help in development of eastern Texas. Mercantile and factory business each offer good opportunities. One or two abandoned log roads to which electricity may be applied. Used interurban can be bought cheap. Some fine land for colonization cheap. Address E. S. Jameson, Tatum, Tex.

Season 1923-24 Thirteenth Year
T. M. HOFMEISTER, D.D., LL.D.
Evangelist
South Solon (Madison County) Ohio

Church Atmosphere

By W. L. MUSICK

A MAN'S love for his church depends in a large measure upon the relationship established between himself and his fellow members. The friendships formed in church life and work are among the most sacred and enduring into which the soul of man can come, and are superior to those of club friendships where the church friendships are promoted as they should be.

An audience is a crowd, but a church is a family. One naturally loves to be in the atmosphere where the soul can live and grow. It is the business of the minister and the laymen to build this relationship into the membership and create this atmosphere.

It is easier to convert people than to educate them. Converts are many but the real workers are comparatively few. Only a small percentage of those who start in the Christian life ever reach spiritual maturity. One reason is that the atmosphere is often so cold that the new convert becomes chilled. This applies equally to new members, even those who are not recent converts, and to the membership in general.

The minister who does not make this "building the church"—developing this proper, invigorating atmosphere—his real business, is making a fatal mistake, but he cannot do it alone. This spirit must be developed by the cooperation of all. All are not trying to do it, but it is a great opportunity for all who are workers and who are interested in establishing this relationship, to teach and lead all the rest of the church family into it.

A church made up of people of but one social class or grade is a church doomed to a shortage on spiritual experience. A church of the rich only is not the ideal of the Lord Jesus, neither is a church wholly of the poor. It is when the rich and the poor can sit down together that they come to value each other and realize that the Lord Jesus is the same to all.

The purpose of the church is to knit together the lines of those whom the distracting forces of the world have driven into the attitude of doubt and uncertainty. Confidence is established and faith strengthened when the laborer and the capitalist, the rich and the poor can come together and join hands before the cross of Jesus.

In the church people are converted and led to accept Christ as their Saviour, then should follow the efficient building or knitting into the social fabric of congenial brotherhood, for a strong spirituality. The greatest foundation for this is efficient preaching of the gospel, emphasizing the saving power of the Lord Jesus, and the spirit of love essential to spiritual growth and power.

The minister can preach the gospel with greater and increasing power when the conditions are right, when the atmosphere of the church is altogether favorable. It is then that the gospel sermon is a real feast to the souls of the church family. With such a condition and atmosphere, the church has the leaven that will leaven the whole lump.

Brotherhood is a spiritual creation, the unity of those who have been re-created in Christ, the fellowship of souls based upon real fellowship and vital relations with the only begotten Son. The redemption of people is carried on by this knitting together of Christian hearts and lives; without it faith is empty, hope is dimmed and love is starved.

The church is the school ordained of God for the carrying on and developing this unity of purpose, softening antipathies and eliminating all antagonisms. When Jesus selected twelve men of widely differing stations, temperaments and ideas, he contributed much to the solution of the social problem in every city. It is the united power of all the elements of the brotherhood of the church family that helps the minister to kindle the fire that blazes forth into the powerful gospel sermons that draw all people to Christ.

As shown in the case of the apostles, love when it is once kindled travels far and influences all civilization, but it must first be kindled. It is the great purpose of the church to kindle this love; to do this it must knit together the lives and souls of its members, and create this relation of true fellowship and helpful church atmosphere.

Evanston, Ill.

COUNTRY CROSS-ROADS and CROWDED CITIES

The State mission work of Northern Baptists extends from the cross-roads of the open country to the very heart of the crowded cities. It is a constantly enlarging and upbuilding force.

Work of the Pioneers

"Let us go into the next towns," said Jesus. Missions are always projecting adventures into new territories. The Colorado Convention organized eighteen new Baptist churches last year. Another western state reports twenty strategic opportunities for immediate advance. Now is the frontier confined to the West. New England is now a field for new pioneers.

Revisits and Revivals

The counsel of Paul is still good for our practice: "Let us go again and visit our brethren in every city where we have preached the word of the Lord, and see how they do." To rally a discouraged church is often more difficult than to start a new one. Each State has found the process essential in its plans for the development of self-governing, self-supporting and self-propagating churches.

For New Americans

In addition to its work of aiding feeble churches, Massachusetts now supports twenty-eight missions to new Americans. Wisconsin, Minnesota and the Dakotas serve the Danes, Germans, Italians, Norwegians, Poles and Swedes. Our Pacific Coast forces labor effectively with Chinese, Japanese and other Orientals. The Mexican population stretches from Kansas City to Los Angeles. All the complexity of World Missions is found in some of our states.

Help Us Safe-Guard the Future!

If Baptists are to make missionary conquests at home and abroad, they must not fail adequately to support their State Mission enterprise with all its varied responsibilities and all its manifold tasks.

"Make America Christian"

FINANCIAL NEEDS TO APRIL 30, 1924, $12,161,521.67

THE GENERAL BOARD OF PROMOTION OF THE NORTHERN BAPTIST CONVENTION

Volume IV September 22, 1923 No. 34

UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS LIBRARY

The Baptist

Univ. of Ill. Library Urbana Ill.

Published Every Week by the Northern Baptist Convention

THIS restful spot in North Dakota is dedicated to the Walhalla Martyrs. The grave of Elijah Terry, the first martyr and a Baptist, lies in the same plot, divided by the walk, with the graves of two Presbyterian missionaries' wives, one of whom died of exposure the year after Terry's death. The other was shot by Indians the following year as she was standing near the window, holding her infant child in her arms. In the plot back of this lie two Presbyterian missionaries who died natural deaths.

Fresh from the Field

The "Baptist New Mexican" devoted all of its Sept. 6 issue to Montezuma College.

Rev. John K. Goode, pastor of the Clemson College Church, S. C., has accepted the call of the Salem Church, Salem, Va., and will begin his pastorate Oct. 1.

Dr. F. A. Agar's new book "The Deacon at Work" has just come from the Judson Press. A working board of deacons can make or remake a church. Why not see that the deacons in your church have a copy?

Prof. John W. Work of Fisk University has been elected president of Roger Williams University at Nashville, Tenn. Professor Work is the leader of the famous Fisk Jubilee Singers. He has been for more than twenty-five years a member of the Fisk faculty.

"The movement away from the Roman Catholic Church in Czecho-Slovakia is gaining momentum" says Sherwood Eddy who has been studying the conditions there. Since the war more than 800,000 persons have withdrawn from the church and formed a new national church.

Marcus Garvey, president-general of the Universal Negro Improvement Association, who has been in jail since the early summer, has been released on bail. He was convicted for use of the mails to defraud in connection with the mythical Black Star Steamship Company.

Church leaders at a "specially urgent" meeting of the administrative committee of the Federal Council of Churches held Sept. 7 condemned the "hasty and ruthless measures" taken by Italy in retaliation for the "wanton murder" of the Italian commissioners on the borders of Greece and Albania, as being "without justification" and as endangering war. They called upon the two governments to have the matter settled by such "impartial tribunals as already happily exist." Some of those who took part in the meeting stated that the League of Nations and the Permanent Court of International Justice were the tribunals meant.

What is America's attitude toward the problems of Europe? Secretary Hughes in a recent address said: "Our attitude is one of independence, not of isolation. Our people are still intent upon abstaining from participation in the political strife of Europe. They are not disposed to commit this government in advance to the use of its power in unknown contingencies, preferring to reserve freedom of action in the confidence of our ability and readiness to respond to every future call of duty. They have no desire to put their power in pledge but they do not shirk cooperation with other nations whenever there is a sound basis for it and a consciousness of community of interest and aim. Cooperation is not dictation, and it is not partisanship. On our part it must be the cooperation of a free people drawing their strength from many racial stocks, and a cooperation that is made possible by a preponderant sentiment permitting governmental action under a system which denies all exercise of autocratic power."

Miss Winifred Myers, who for the past two years has been pastor's assistant at the First Church, Topeka, Kan., has been secured for a similar position in the First Church, Seattle. Dr. A. M. Bailey, pastor. The church has planned a series of loyalty luncheons and expects to meet one-half of its $27,500 missionary quota by the end of October.

Dr. John Snape of the First Church, Oakland, Cal., is evidently making use of information gained in Europe this summer. Note the subjects of some of his sermons and addresses: "In Paris on Bastile Day," "At Quentin Roosevelt's Grave," "Where Edith Cavell Fell," "What I Saw in Germany."

Summary of Presbyterian Church statistics for the year ending March 31, 1923: Synods, 46; presbyteries, 301; candidates, 1,187; local evangelists, 171; licentiates, 253; ministers, 9,979; ordinations, 183; ministers received, 102; communicants, 1,803,593, increase of 46,675; ministers dismissed, 43; ministers deceased, 200; elders, 47,703; deacons, 19,089; churches, 9,706; churches organized, 82; churches dissolved, 95; contributions, $45,377,166.

AFTER this manner therefore pray ye:
Our Father which art in heaven, Hallowed be thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done, as in heaven, so on earth.
Give us this day our daily bread.
And forgive us our debts, as we also have forgiven our debtors.
And bring us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil.
—Jesus.

The Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions is threatened with a debt of over $1,000,000, it is reported. Three reasons are assigned for this condition. The inroads made in giving to regular objects by the appeals of the Near East Relief, the controversy over fundamentalism and the vast number of special appeals which have been made to the churches. The home board is in much better financial condition.

Dr. Charles L. Goodell of New York, secretary of the commission on evangelism of the Federal Council of Churches, will give the keynote address at the Union Chicago ministers' meeting, Sept. 24, speaking on "Pastoral Evangelism." Dr. Floyd W. Tomkins of Philadelphia, representing the Protestant Episcopal church, will speak on "The Spirit of Evangelism." The national evangelistic secretaries of the different denominations will be formally introduced. Every pastor in Chicago should be present at this meeting.

Prof. E. O. Sellers, of the Baptist Bible Institute, New Orleans, writes: "I must tell you how I look for your paper each week. It helps me to keep in touch with friends and work of former years. Am greatly enjoying the work down here where we are not disturbed as you seem to be in the North." The Baptist Bible Institute recently closed its fifth year. It has already nineteen buildings including the homes for the professors and married students. Its library numbers 40,000 and is constantly growing. The faculty numbers eleven professors and six assistants.

Rev. H. B. Cox of the Calvary Church, Davenport, Ia., has the hearty cooperation of his church. During the summer extensive repairs were made on the church property.

Did you ever hear of Transjordania? Well, Transjordania is the name of a new semi-independent state in East Palestine. It was recognized by the British government "subject to the approval of the League of Nations." It has an Arab population of about 350,000.

According to statistics gathered by the International Labor Office at Geneva, Germany leads in the number of soldiers disabled in the world war receiving pensions from the government. France and Great Britain are second and third respectively. Italy stands fourth and Russia fifth. In the United States 157,000 receive pensions.

War talk is a mania with some persons. War does not settle our disputes and jealousies. It does, however, exact a terrible toll. Remember that in Germany alone 1,808,000 men fell in battle and 4,250,000 were wounded. And the lot of those who fell in battle is envied by many of those who remain only to suffer a sorer fate.

Methodist conferences are being held throughout the country. Hundreds of ministers will be sent to "greener" pastures and hundreds of congregations will hear a "new" voice in the pulpit. We have always had a little prejudice against the Methodist system of placing ministers but there certainly are advantages. Just think of the Baptist churches and ministers that long for a change and have to await an act of Providence!

The new Baptist Temple, Indianapolis, Ind., has completed the first of its triple unit building and the first services were held Sept. 8. The Temple Church is a direct product of the work carried on by the Federated Baptist Churches of Indianapolis. This federation is composed of all the Baptist churches in the Indianapolis area, with Rev. F. A. Hayward as executive secretary. Mr. Geo. F. Woody is president of the federation. The organization of the Temple Church took place a little more than a year ago as the result of several important features in Baptist life. The first was the call, and an urgent one, on the part of the Baptist people living in the area of the Riverside Park for a church. The first service held was a daily vacation Bible school, planned to be held in a little store. Inability to engage the store resulted in the school being held and carried on with success on the front porch of Mr. and Mrs. John L. Mertz on Herschell Avenue. A building formerly used for a plumbing store was then obtained, and remodeled for services and the new church was organized in this building. The Northwestern Baptist Church was asked to unite in the new work and others unchurched asked to place their memberships in the new work. The name Temple Baptist Church was adopted; a budget set up which included current expenses and $200 for missions for the first year. Rev. Joseph Belcher, formerly of the Southern Avenue Church, Indianapolis, was called as pastor and the program opened happily. The time for a new church came. The beautifully located site on the Parkway Boulevard was

(Continued on page 1060)

The Baptist

Vol. IV Chicago, Ill., Sept. 22, 1923 No. 34

THE BAPTIST, founded in 1919, is published every Saturday by the Northern Baptist Convention at 417 South Dearborn Street, Chicago, Illinois. Entered as second-class matter, February 4, 1920, at the post office at Chicago, Illinois, under the Act of March 3, 1879. Acceptance for mailing at special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized February 4, 1920.

Managing Editor: Edgar L. Killam
Committee on THE BAPTIST
EMORY W. HUNT, Chairman
CLARENCE A. BARBOUR HUGH A. HEATH

RATES: Single subscriptions, $2.50 a year; church clubs equal to 10 per cent of church membership, $2.00; single copies, 10 cents. In foreign countries the postage is $1.04 extra; in Canada, 52 cents extra. CHANGE OF ADDRESS: Both old and new addresses should be in our hands at least two weeks before the change is to go into effect. Always give key number as it appears on your label.

REMITTANCES: Should be made payable to THE BAPTIST. Acknowledgment made through change of label date. If check on local bank is sent, please add exchange.

SPECIAL: Renewal notice will be sent each subscriber previous to the date to which subscription is paid. Subscriber should give attention to notice by sending in renewal promptly, or, if paper is not desired for the coming year, should send in a discontinuance order.

ADVERTISING: Display: Rate per agate line, 30 cents; full page (420 agate lines), $125. No time or space discounts. Classified: 6 cents per word. Obituary notices: One hundred words free; 4 cents per word for additional. Cash to accompany order.

CORRESPONDENCE relating to subscriptions should be addressed to THE BAPTIST, Subscription Department, 417 South Dearborn Street, Chicago, Ill.

BRANCH OFFICES: The office of the state director of promotion in each state is an office of THE BAPTIST.

Table of Contents

| | Page |
|---|---|
| FRESH FROM THE FIELD | 1058 |
| EDITORIAL | 1061 |
| THE COMING OF THE COMFORTER, BY G. H. O'DONNELL | 1064 |
| WORK OF CHURCH SCHOOL AMONG STUDENTS IN HIGHER INSTITUTIONS OF LEARNING, BY J. O. HASSLER | 1066 |
| KEEPING THE MISSIONARY PERSONNEL FIT, BY CHARLES H. PARKES | 1068 |
| NORTH DAKOTA BAPTISTS CELEBRATE TWO ANNIVERSARIES IN 1923 | 1069 |
| SEEKERS AFTER TRUTH, BY W. E. DARROW | 1070 |
| SOCIAL UNREST AND THE CHURCH | 1071 |
| A LESSON IN GRAMMAR, BY MRS. HELEN S. BROWN | 1072 |
| AN INTERESTING CONTRAST, BY ROLLIN H. WALKER | 1072 |
| LEARNING TO PRAY—A SYMPOSIUM | 1073 |
| EVERY MAN'S INHERITANCE, BY FRANK S. HARWOOD | 1074 |
| THE NEW WORLD MOVEMENT | 1075 |
| RELIGIOUS EDUCATION | 1076 |
| OPEN FORUM | 1077 |
| THE CHIMNEY CORNER | 1078 |
| YOUNG PEOPLE'S WORK | 1080 |
| OUR OWN FOLKS | 1081 |
| OUR BOOK SHELF | 1086 |
| OUR MUSIC CORNER | 1087 |
| JAPAN DISCHARGES HER PLEDGE, BY D. C. HOLTOM | 1088 |

Who's Who in This Issue

J. O. Hassler is a member of the faculty of the University of Oklahoma — department of mathematics.

G. H. O'Donnell is pastor of the Goshen, Ind., church.

Dr. Charles H. Parkes writes on a subject to which he has given careful study. He is a Chicago physician.

W. E. Darrow is minister to the First Church of Ainslee, Neb.

Killam's Kollum

Editor Phelps on the Stand

The Michigan Christian Advocate has served the Methodists of that state for half a century. "No man ever went to his task with more of combined eagerness and dread. It was a harder task than had been advertised, and bigger than his fondest dreams had pictured it." He then tells of three things which he felt he could never accomplish. He could never "feel" like an editor; he felt sure he would run out of copy and he knew he could never live cooped up in a city. He has been made to feel his part. He is swamped with copy and is still alive in spite of living in Detroit.

There were three things he expected to accomplish almost at once. He was sure he could "run up" the subscription list. He had underestimated the combined effect of the radio, the auto and the movie before which the reading habit has evaporated. He thought he could easily make the Advocate "the circulating medium in the church, discussed in prayer meeting, debated in board meeting, consulted in Sunday school and study class." He felt sure that it would be easy "to intensify the pastors' old time cooperation" in the subscription plans of the paper. Then follows a word as true as ever came from the pen of an editor of a church paper.

"The Advocate owes practically everything to the pastor, and goes up and down with his cooperation or indifference. If he is too big to bother with it, then the Advocate list drops in an inverse ratio to his greatness. If he is too busy to bother with it, somebody else with a half-passion does a half-job and we have a half-list. If he is too small to do it, then our list dwindles with him. If he is blind to his chance for an assistant pastor, then our list fades to the vanishing point. A careful survey of the lists reveals the fact that the big churches that need an assistant pastor the most are the ones where the Advocate is pushed the least.

"When the pastors neglect their own child, the Advocate, this fight will be over. No adjectives therefore are quite adequate to express our appreciation of the average pastor—who loves the Advocate with all its faults—puts it into his homes, and teaches the people to read it, gently leading them from the worship of the McNutts, Jiggses, Sapps, and Gumps to a diet of the Advocate brand."

A Restoration

Having permitted our brother John G. Briggs to enjoy the presidency of a college for a week, we now restore him to the pastorate of his St. Paul church.

Fresh from the Field

(Continued from page 1058)

chosen and the Indiana Baptist Convention aided in securing it. A financial canvass was made and this building costing about $20,000 is the result.

Presbyterians of the South report steady increase in receipts for foreign missions. It is said that if gifts for this cause continue to show a proportionate gain for the remainder of the year it will be possible to maintain the work and at the same time greatly reduce their debt.

Three new dormitories for women to accommodate fifty to sixty students have been remodeled during the summer under the direction of a committee of women commissioners appointed in June by the Hillsdale college trustees consisting of Mrs. Lorenzo E. Dow, Mrs. Albert L. Walrath, and Mrs. Walter H. Sawyer.

Dr. John R. Mott estimates that the loss to the Y. M. C. A. in buildings alone in Japan will be above $1,000,000. There is no question that the loss will prove the greatest ever suffered by the association in its world-wide work. The Y. M. C. A. makes no separate appeal for relief funds but throws its strength into the efforts of the Red Cross.

Mr. Willfred O. Mauck succeeds Prof. D. M. Fisk at Hillsdale College with the title of assistant professor of history and acting head of the department. This is an especially pleasing appointment since Mr. Mauck, the only son of President emeritus J. W. Mauck, will enter the service of the college just after his father, beloved "prexy" for over twenty years, is relieved of the onerous duties of the presidency.

Dr. Bruce Kinney writes:. "I feel under obligation to deny the exaggerated reports that have filled the papers about the wealth of David Paddelty who accompanied me to Stockholm. To the average reporter an Indian is wallowing in petroleum wealth. Very few have any considerable wealth of income. David has a small acreage of ordinary Oklahoma land with eight children. He has never had a drop of oil on his land nor a cent of oil income. He has been pestered with letters and telegrams asking for large gifts and I have been besieged to assist in separating him from large sums which he is supposed to have. The sooner our people know the truth the better for all concerned."

On Sept. 15 the Chaplain's School opened with thirteen new chaplains for the regular army and one for the officer's reserve corps enrolled. The school continues for three months at Fort Wayne, Ind. The courses cover the subjects of army administration, problems and methods of chaplain's work, military law, military courtesy, map reading, the organization of the army, regulations governing field service, educational and recreational activities, military hygiene and first aid, identification and burial of the dead, psychology and sociology related particularly to soldiers and the history and character of American institutions. Among the number of students we find the names of two Baptists, Stanley C. Ramsden, Fort Hamilton, N. Y., and Charles M. Griffin, Spartansburg, S. C.

The Wilkinsburg Church, Pittsburg, is to lose its pastor, Rev. F. L. Carr, who has resigned to take up general work under the General Board of Promotion. He will make his home in Providence, R. I.

The Home Mission Board of the Southern Baptist Convention has made a loan of $30,000 to assist the First Church of Chickasha, Okla., to build its new building.

Rev. Charles Boyd, of Milwaukee, director of young people's and religious education of the Wisconsin Convention has accepted the call of the Temple Church, Detroit, Mich., to become its executive secretary. He will begin his work Oct. 15.

Cablegrams as follows have arrived just as we go to press: The Mabie memorial school wrecked. Several Japanese killed. Four Yokohama churches and five mission residences destroyed by fire. Other Tokyo and Yokohama property seriously damaged. The woman society property Kamagawa, also the Scott Hall damaged. Six women missionaries lost their homes and all personal possessions.

Love

By Luella Kilpatrick

LOVE is the haven of a mother's arms,
The trust that closes a baby's eyes,
The peace of infinite lullabies,
A sure defense against all harms!
Love is the secret and the sign—
Love is divine.

God's love it is that through the years,
A sun of ever-radiant gold,
Has shone alike on young and old,
O hope of man against all fears!
Love is the secret and the sign—
Love is divine.

Prof. C. A. Henderson, of the Babson Institute, in his new book "Personal and Business Efficiency," says: "The efficient life never really begins until an emotion begins it. To be pushed from behind by our instincts is not enough; we must be pulled from before by our emotions. To satisfy some resentment or pride or affection we will gather ourselves together and work, but not till then."

"The Chicago Tribune," in a recent editorial entitled "Monkeying with the Bible," almost weeps to think of Moffatt and Weymouth and Ballantine and last of all Goodspeed "tampering" with the King James Version of the New Testament. This act in the eyes of the Tribune seems to rank with the crime of tampering with the constitution in the case of the eighteenth amendment.

According to the "Western Christian Advocate" the average age of the active pastors, probationers and supplies in the West Ohio Conference is fifty-two years. This does not include those on the retired list. Attention is called to the fact that in Bishop Asbury's time the ministers were nearly all young men, unmarried and militant itinerants. The question as to the why of this shift is raised. Is it due to increased educational requirements which throws the period of active work forward; or are the younger men shunning the ministry; or is the ministry such an easy berth that men do not die as in other callings. We imagine that no one of these factors tells the whole story. At any rate the Advocate says "Page Dr. Osler."

The Normal Park Church, Chicago, has extended a call to Rev. Milton McGorrill, associate pastor of the Temple Church, Brooklyn. Mr. McGorrill was for several years connected with the educational work of the Publication Society.

Miss Helene Burniaux, a Belgian girl, has been elected president of the International Federation of Working Women which recently concluded its third biennial congress at Schoenbrun Castle, Vienna. Miss Burniaux succeeds Mrs. Raymond Robins of Chicago.

The San Francisco Bay Cities Baptist Union, the Northern California Convention and the American Baptist Home Mission Society, have finally secured title to a desirable piece of property for a Chinese boys' home. Three thousand one hundred and fifty has been subscribed to improve the property and the Chinese are ready to give $4,000 to equip the building. The work will be pushed rapidly forward to completion.

Evangelist George R. Stair who recently preached for three weeks at Wharton Grove Camp, Weems, Va., has returned to his summer home, Emery Mills, Me., where he will continue until he leaves for Warsaw, Winona Lake, Ind., to begin a union campaign of all the churches Sept. 30, to continue five weeks. Mr. Stair's present engagements promise him a busy season.

Miss Vera Rice, a graduate of the Chicago Kindergarten College, the Baptist Missionary Training School and Denison University, has become associated with the Temple Church, Brooklyn, of which Rev. E. L. Dakin is pastor. Miss Rice is well known in the Middle West having served as director of young people's work in Wisconsin.

Rev. Floyd Adams has accepted the call of the Lincoln Square Church, Worcester, Mass., and will close his work at the Strong Place Church, Brooklyn, on Oct. 31. In his letter of resignation to the church he said:

"I congratulate you upon your achievements in the face of peculiar problems. The changed conditions in the region of our church have made the opportunity very different from that of former years. Now the large opportunity for service is in ministering to the needs of the immediate community while at the same time caring for the members who through affection, loyalty and tradition still retain their membership with us though removed from the neighborhood. You have responded nobly to this urgent need by using the church building and grounds for community purposes and by purchasing adjoining property for a community house which is now open and running successfully with a good staff of employed workers. Your institutional activities in the buildings and on the playground, summer and winter, have given you the hearts of the people. They know that this church is here for service as well as for services.

The work among the new Americans is most helpful and you have an opportunity to build up one of the strongest Italian Baptist churches in America. This beautiful Gothic auditorium will be thronged again with earnest worshippers, not of the same type as filled it in former days, but people whose souls are just as precious in the sight of our loving Master."

(Continued on page 1088)

The Baptist

One Cent a Million

ONE tragedy among the results of the world war, and one of the most spectacular, has been the depreciation in values which has befallen the currency of various lands affected by the war. American money almost alone has held its full face value, becoming the standard of world values, and commanding a premium everywhere throughout the world. But in Russia roubles have decreased in value and multiplied in quantity until they are handled in bales. France and even England have suffered much in the process of declining values, though England has recovered rapidly.

Germany, however, land of prodigious industry, of remarkable prosperity and boundless reaches of intellectual, financial and military achievement down to the year 1914, although its homeland was never invaded or desolated by the enemy in the late war, has yet, like Russia, seen its unit of currency, the mark, depreciate disastrously under the constant issue of paper money from its presses, the mark falling steadily as the issues mounted higher, those for a single week of late being reckoned in trillions of marks. A trillion, it must be remembered is a million million. As a result the steadily sinking mark on its abysmal downward journey has already passed the point where it was quoted at the rate of one million for a cent of our money, whereas a decade ago and for long years previously the German mark was worth almost one-fourth of an American dollar. Marks at a cent a million! That seems to us almost like a decimal fraction of nothing.

There have been tragic results of this stupendous financial debacle. Many elderly people of refinement who had investments sufficient for their support in a modest way saw their income dwindle and vanish. Creditors were repaid in almost worthless money, while debtors were practically relieved of their obligations and enriched by the disaster. Suicides were many, and many nobles and the professional classes were made paupers. The greatest damage, however, was caused by the utter uncertainty in values which prevailed, and this is the horror of horrors in an earthquake, that the fundamental thing physically in all our personal and inherited experience, the solidity of the earth under our feet, suddenly fails us as terra firma pitches, sways and yawns open before us.

But we need not be too pharisaically complacent here in prosperous, well-stabilized America, where every coin and piece of paper money is worth its full value. Are there no instances of depreciation in values amongst us that compare with those of the German mark or the Russian rouble?

What of the values of speech? A word may be such a potent or such a futile thing. The fitting word spoken at a critical moment, the felicitous putting of a thing; the one choice expression out of a possible score of prosaic or awkward or offensive ways of speaking; the crystal-clear sentence where most would have been obscure; the thrust of a keen, penetrating phrase instead of the dull, untempered push of a poor wit; the kindling flame of the proper characterization of a wrong; the fine appreciative word for a noble soul or a noble deed; the felicitous wording of that which has been the unspoken sentiment of millions; the winning word which turns a human life from sin into God's pathway of peace and forgiveness —what values may be in these simple words, composite of heart and brain and breath!

But think of the countless words, trillions of them, splattered out over the world daily from the lip and the printing-press. How many of them have held to their proper value? How careless the most careful of us seem. There is such a constantly-augmenting mass of slipshod speech, of hurried, inaccurate, ignorant speech; of angry, spiteful, profane, scurrilous, salacious speech; of obscure, deceitful, slanderous, brutal speech. But for the most part it is the unceasing stream of thoughtless speech that increases the volume but debases the value of human utterances until the words which should be worth their weight in gold drop to less than the low point of the mark or the rouble.

AND what of the value of church membership? Christ recognized a variation in value even among genuine members of the kingdom in his parables of the talents, the pounds and the seed sown on good ground, but he also relegates to outer darkness the one who simply neglected to produce any profit from the treasure entrusted to him by his lord. Doctor Aitchison gives Doctor Agar as authority for the statement that only about 40 per cent of our church members in residence, and only about one-third of the total membership of the denomination are givers of record either to current expenses or missions. There are no statistics available, but how large a number of church members have never in all their lives brought in a single new recruit for the kingdom. What decimal fraction will represent the value to the church of one of these non-participating members?

Fellowship

HATRED and not love has ruled the world during the past few years and the consequent wreckage is on every hand. Nation is steeled against nation. Because hatred rules instead of love in national circles, recently when so-called peace came in place of war, even those nations that were allied in the midst of conflict became in a greater or less degree lined up against each other; and their hatred has grown apace with each passing month.

This lack of love, of fellowship, makes a sorry spectacle for the God of love to look upon after all that he has done to teach and bring mankind into a state of mind and heart where brotherly love and real fellowship could rule. By fellowship we mean love expressed in common united service. We feel inclined to face the facts just now and seek to determine the causes that have produced national and individual hatred, thereby banishing love.

A nation is an aggregation of individuals. If enough individuals are ruled by love and have the courage to let love rule them and theirs in contact with their fellowmen, no nation would be in a position to make hatred the path of its individual goals. If love ruled in the individual life, the national goals would be different because the impact upon other individuals and nations would not permit of unjust or unwise self-aggrandizement, or of selfish prosperity at the expense of others.

We ask ourselves again and again why so many individuals in so many nations that boast of a knowledge of Christ and whose cities and lands are thickly dotted with churches are ruled by hatred instead of love and therefore have no fellowship with each other. Is our Christianity a fraud or mockery? No, a thousand times no! Is our church life as we now develop it, unreal? Or has the practice of Christianity been lost in a crude desire to be a saved life in the next world only? We tremble in soul when we face such queries. The church of Jesus Christ must get at its task more effectually, with more dynamic, with more positives and with reality now as its goal. Unless it does this promptly individuals who are to be ruled by love will not be produced in this and the next generation and mankind will not have fellowship with their kind, but hatreds will go on and the world will be sorely torn asunder.

As individuals we need a real fellowship with each other in order to build a nation of brotherly minded people. We can never get such a nation until we forsake politics and our personal likes and dislikes in a love for people who need us and need the loving Christ who transforms us.

Let us begin with our own heart and life and enthrone love there in order to produce a real fellowship. Then let us spread, aggressively the leaven of love and thus banish hate from among us. When we have actually done that we shall soon have a nation ruled by a Christlike fellowship and we can altruistically help other nations to reach the same plane. We shall have to sacrifice some greatness of a certain kind in order to do this. The church must lead in it all, and our Christianity must be practical and be applied to life now.

The church is made up of you, my readers. Let it help all of us to produce a world of fellowship as well as individuals who have fellowship with all men everywhere.

The Restless Club

MOST of us belong to the "Restless Club." We became members as we became members of the race. We were born into the club. From the days of tireless infantile activity until this day we have proved our qualifications for membership.

The motto of the club is "Any place but here." Ministers hang the motto over their study desks and gaze upon it as they write influential friends for assistance to get away from their present parish into another where they will again soon tire.

Every man thinks his own task peculiar in its difficulties and handicaps. If he could only be in the shoes of some other man he would be both contented and useful. But would he? Contentment is not a matter of surroundings and circumstances. It is a state of the heart. Contentment has to be cultivated and nurtured. "I have learned," said a very wise teacher, "I have learned in whatsoever state I am therewith to be content." Contentment is a great accomplishment attained by few individuals who pass through the degrees of the Restless Club and find at last in a clear sense of God's over-ruling presence and in a deep conviction of a mission and a commission from him the true meaning of "now" and "here." And even these past masters of grace should not be chided if now and again they desire to depart and to be with Christ, for the true members of the "Restless Club" have their citizenship in heaven.

Eighty Cent Wheat

IN our twentieth century Babel, it is comforting to find one thing in which there is common agreement, namely, that the farmer is not getting a square deal.

In fact, the real farmer, who makes his living by digging in the soil, always was economically an under dog. He who can hitch up with his farming some other profitable occupation may save himself, but not as a farmer.

This is the meaning: How many men start with nothing, do nothing but work on a farm, rear a family, and come to old age with a safe net income of $1,000 a year? Is that figure too high for an income to support two old people, the farmer and his wife, who can work no longer?

It is no answer to say that multitudes of people in other callings fall below that standard of income. How much is the farmer helped by knowing that some miner or steel worker lives in a shack, or that some quarryman went to the poorhouse or the potter's field?

What is the farmer's remedy? Politics may help if rightly selected and applied. But an occasional political spasm, without a clear, consistent and steady program, is like a man trying to pull his feet out of the quicksand by standing on his head.

The real remedy is hard to take but certain to cure. It lies in a regimen of education and organization and neither can be taken as a drug.

A Page of Opinion

We Wonder, But We Trust

AN earthquake shakes more than the crust of the earth, and disaster always tries the foundations of our lives.

Yesterday, in Detroit, a little six-year-old boy, running merrily home from his first day at school was struck by an auto and his skull was fractured. That household is just a little miniature of the sorrow that has swept over Japan.

And everybody is asking that old unanswered question as to why God permits these terrible disasters. It is not so easy as some would maintain who have not felt the iron in their souls. Neither is it to be solved by a child's simplicity. A little girl was about to say her prayer one winter night and her mother said, "Clarissa, put on your kimono or you will catch cold." Instantly she replied, "Do you think that God would be so mean as to let me catch cold while I was saying my prayer?" And yet, while her reasoning was dead wrong, her fundamental faith in the fatherliness of God was dead right, and we do not get beyond it.

Thank God, we have passed the stage of trying to think of God as thus visiting his wrath upon his world for their sins. We know him too well for that!

But the mystery of the release of these terrible forces of nature remains still a mystery. We have to fall back by faith on the fact that God still rules his own world; it has not run away from him; he has not run off and left his world.

We still trust in the dark that the hand that guides the worlds is still a father's hand and go forward on that basis.

We shall hear of a thousand evidences of divine love, that will come to us from the zone of sorrow. The world is startled a bit from its forgetfulness of God and the terrible price has some compensating values. Love and mercy will spring up everywhere and our better natures will have a better chance.

God bless the Red Cross that is trying to do the task of rescue speedily and adequately. Blessings on our mission board that is wiring relief to the folks we sent from our own homes.

By faith, we still maintain that this is a good world, considering what worlds are made for.—Michigan Christian Advocate.

The Real Cure

IN Babson's reports Roger W. Babson says: "Many times we have diagnosed certain industrial troubles as spiritual rather than material. By that we meant that the motives and viewpoints of the people involved were wrong. Consequently they found themselves in difficulties. Probably at least two-thirds of the troubles of this world are spiritual. Certainly 95 per cent of our social evils, and I hesitate to say how many of our political troubles, would immediately disappear if people really believed the religion they profess. The relations between capital and labor, the struggles between nations, and the conflict between individuals depend upon whether or not the parties involved have the right spiritual insight. Physicians are also agreed that a very large percentage of our bodily ailments would be avoided if we were at peace spiritually.

"This is what we mean when we say that lack of religion is responsible for most of the world's troubles. From this standpoint it is interesting to see the tremendous amount of interest which Coué has created by demonstrating the effect of mental peace on bodily welfare. Aside from the question of divine healing it is assuredly a fact that the gospel of St. Paul, which most people have heard preached from their childhood, contains all and more than Coué or any other scientist has ever offered. The moment, however, that some one comes along with only a part of the same story dressed up in scientific language, every one hails it as a new discovery.

"The reason is that the majority of people have come to look upon their religious activity as an abstract duty rather than a source of practical power. Even the ministry itself seems to have lost sight of this most important phase of its work. If it had not, every minister in the country today would be on his toes proclaiming that faith in God will do all and more than Coué can offer. The fact is, however, that practically all of the Christian ministry are willing to stand by and let Coué monopolize the most valuable part of their work. It is true that the love of God is the only solution of our greatest troubles. When our churches really wake up and show people how to secure this great power we shall hear no more about lack of interest in religion!"

Public Ownership

PUBLIC ownership is coming forward as a candidate for study and discussion.

Two years ago Detroit took over its street-car lines. Chicago is moving in the same direction. Toronto owns the greatest hydro-electric system in the world. New York city owns and operates the greatest waterworks on the continent. Of cities in the United States, 2,318 own and operate their electric light and power plants and over 4,000 their water-works.

The Canadian government has one of the greatest railroad systems in the world, comprising 22,600 miles of track.

The United States government owns 1,000 miles of railroad, the army, the navy, the Panama canal and the postal system.

And who owns the highways, the streets, the state and municipal buildings, the public schools, the public forests and parks?

The growth of this movement presents a new group of problems, and promises great industrial and social changes.

The Coming of the Comforter

An exposition of John 16:7-13.

By G. H. O'Donnell

IT was the last night of the earthly life of our Lord. He had gathered his little group of close disciples together into that upper room somewhere in Jerusalem. There he had washed their feet to teach them the lesson of true humility and true service. There, too, he had established the memorial supper, which they were ever afterward to observe in memory of him, that supper which sets forth in symbol the fundamental truth of the gospel, that Jesus is the Bread, the Wine, of life to all who believe on him. Then he gave to them his farewell address. A very prominent emphasis is given in this address to the promise of the coming of the Comforter, as he called the Holy Spirit. It is his words concerning this promise that we are to study.

> NEVERTHELESS I tell you the truth; it is expedient for you that I go away, the Comforter will not come unto you; but if I go I will send him unto you.
>
> And he, when he is come, will convict the world in respect of sin, and of righteousness, and of judgment.
>
> Of sin because they believe not on me;
>
> Of righteousness, because I go to the Father, and ye behold me no more;
>
> Of judgment, because the prince of this world hath been judged.
>
> I have yet many things to say unto you but ye cannot bear them now.
>
> Howbeit when he, the Spirit of truth is come, he shall guide you into all truth; for he shall not speak from himself; but what things soever he shall hear, these shall he speak; and he shall declare unto you the things that are to come.
>
> —John 16:7-13

Calamity or Blessing

These words were spoken to men who were about to lose by death the dearest, closest, most inspiring friend they had ever had, or might ever hope to have. How they had learned to love Jesus as their Shepherd, Comrade, Companion, Teacher, as the very Light of their lives. All that life had come to mean to them, it had come to mean through the gracious words and the inspiring presence of this One who now told them that he must part from them by death. What wonderful words had been his! What infinite, tender sympathy! What perfect gentleness! Yet what an imperial demand his high and holy life had made upon them! The presence of the only man who never knew the taint of sin upon his conscience, who never disobeyed God, and so could look with perfect vision upon the face of God! Could it be that such a one was to die? Was he to leave them alone, desolate, orphans in the world? No wonder sorrow filled their hearts, sorrow so exceeding great that none thought to ask him whither he was going!

Now to these sorrowing disciples came the words of this wonderful promise. It was as if he had said to them: "You, my disciples, have the wrong conception of my departure. You think it your greatest calamity, when in reality it is your greatest blessing, the most wonderful and blessed thing that could happen to you. For, if I go away, I will send the Comforter to be with you, the Holy Spirit, and he will be your Companion and Helper and Comforter forever. He will be to you all that I have been, and more."

Why Such a Blessing

Why was the departure of Jesus and the coming of the Comforter to be such a marvelous blessing to them? Because:

(1) In no other way, perhaps, could the conception of the kingdom of God as material, temporal and worldly, be rooted from their minds, and replaced by the true conception of that kingdom as spiritual and inward, as Jesus had constantly taught. Even after this night they still clung to the worldly conception of the kingdom, as is witnessed by their question at the very foot of the mount of the ascension, "Lord, dost thou at this time restore the kingdom to Israel?" But after Jesus had risen from the grave, after the Holy Spirit had come into their lives with his enriching, sanctifying power, after they could look up to a Christ at the right hand of God, then they could understand the spiritual nature of the kingdom which Christ had come to establish.

(2) As a human Christ, even though at the same time Son of God, he could hope to reach a limited number only of the vast number of mankind. Then he would remain forever inaccessible to the multitudes who could never hope to know him personally. Then he would inevitably have given the kingdom a local, temporal center. But as the risen, spiritual Christ, seated at the right hand of God, and represented on earth by the Comforter, he could be equally near, and equally accessible, to every person of every nation, age and time. Thus his going was in reality his coming to be with them, as he had promised, even unto the end. What they had thought their greatest calamity was their, and humanity's, greatest, profoundest blessing.

What the Comforter Is

The word translated "comforter" in the English version means a helper, an intercessor, one who acts as an advocate. Jesus has just given no encouraging picture of the future of the disciples. He has told them that the world will hate and persecute them as it has him, that they will be excommunicated, even killed, because of their position as his messengers. But in all of these trials One will be ever by their side, sustaining, helping, comforting. The Holy Spirit is the constant Companion, Advocate, Helper, Guide and Protector, of all who have surrendered their lives to Christ.

Notice, too, that the coming of the Comforter is expressly stated to be to his disciples. "It is expedient for you that I go away, for if I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you; but if I go, I will send him unto you." It is nowhere stated in these verses that the Holy Spirit comes to the world. On the contrary this is ex pressly prohibited. The Spirit is coming, as Jesus is here speaking of his coming, only to the disciples of Jesus Christ the Lord. But the work of the Comforter for the world is to be done because of and through his coming to the disciples. "And he, when he is come (unto you), will convict the world." What a holy position is that of Christians! The Spirit of God comes into our lives and then through us reaches out to the world which knows not God and brings to that sin-cursed world the conviction of sin which leads to the cross of Christ and forgiveness. Upon our lives as Christians Jesus our Lord founds his words for the conversion of the world. How the Holy Spirit works in the world apart from the lives of Christians we know not. But we do know the gracious truth, that only as our own lives are filled by, possessed by, this Comforter, will he shine forth in glory and power upon the world.

The Threefold Conviction

Notice the threefold conviction which the Holy Spirit brings to the world. "And he, when he is come, will convict, i.e., show to be guilty, the world in respect of sin, and of righteousness, and of judgment." It is wholly in regard to Jesus Christ that this conviction consists. The sin, the righteousness, the judgment are directly connected with Jesus. In other words the Spirit is to convince men that Jesus is the Christ who is able to forgive their sins and to impart righteousness to them. Jesus is the Christ—this is the message of Christianity to the world. All other doctrines spring from this fundamental. This is the message of the New Testament. It is likewise the message wherever Christianity has been vigorous and victorious. The Lord Jesus is, and must forever remain, the changeless message of the ministry and of the Holy Spirit to the world. We may phrase that message to suit the thought of our times, but we dare not compromise. The characters and destinies of men are determined solely by their attitude toward him. The work of the Holy Spirit is to convict men in respect to him.

(1) Of sin. "Of sin, because they believe not on me." This is the great sin, refusing to believe on Jesus Christ, refusing to surrender one's life to him. No one has ever yet been able to point out defect in either the teachings or the character of Jesus. He is the one and only Perfect One. In him goodness becomes so transparently clear that the blindest cannot fail to see it. So, to refuse to believe in Jesus means that one refuses to believe in what he recognizes as the only perfect revelation of God and the only holy way of life. It means that one deliberately chooses the evil knowing it to be evil, that he prefers his own sins to forgiveness in Christ. Hence this sin of unbelief in Christ is the deadliest of all sins. It is the root sin from which all others spring.

LORD, for the erring thought
Not into evil wrought,
Lord, for the wicked will,
Betrayed and baffled still,
For the heart from itself kept,
Our thanksgiving accept.
For ignorant hopes that were
Broken at our blind prayer,
For pain, death, sorrow sent,
Unto our chastisement
For all the loss of seeming good,
Quicken our gratitude.
—William Dean Howells in "The World's Great Religious Poetry."

(2) Of righteousness. "Of righteousness, because I go unto the Father and ye behold me no more." The righteousness of Jesus is proved by his going to the Father to sit at his right hand forever more. He is no longer to be in the world. Hence the world will be without its only perfect man. "Ye behold me no more." The righteousness of Christ is the only righteousness to be had. The world lacks this, and so it stands convicted, clothed in its garments of filthy rags. Those who believe in the risen, exalted Redeemer alone are sharers of the righteousness of Christ. They are not of the world although they are in the world. The unbelieving world will see in the lives of the disciples the righteousness of Christ, and will acknowledge its own lack thereof.

(3) Of judgment. "Of judgment, because the prince of this world hath been judged." Satan, the prince of all things evil, was judged when Jesus died and rose again. All who have not accepted Christ, (the world as the word is here used by John), are citizens of Satan's kingdom of evil, and hence when the sentence of judgment was passed upon the prince, it included condemnation for all of the citizens of his dark kingdom. Satan, and all of whom he rules, stand judged by the death and by the victorious resurrection of Jesus the Christ.

This is the work of the Holy Spirit through our lives, to convict the world of these three things, the three great realities of life; of sin, the deadliest, most horrible thing in the world; of righteousness, the most beautiful, radiant, glorious thing in the universe, the white and holy life of Christ; and of judgment, the righteousness of Christ triumphing over the deadliness of sin. That judgment may not yet have been enacted upon unbelieving men. But one day it shall be. Then those convicted of the sin of unbelief in Christ will enter the outer darkness, and the righteous shall shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father and of their Christ.

The Constant Revealer

One more work of this Comforter in our lives must be mentioned. "Howbeit when he, the Spirit of truth is come, he shall guide you into all the truth." How? "He shall take of mine and shall declare it unto you." The Comforter is to be the constant Teacher of our lives in spiritual truth. But notice that it is of the things of Christ that he teaches. Through all the Christian centuries the Holy Spirit is constantly revealing the meaning, the fulness, the supremacy, of Christ to us.

What a glorious thing it is to go all along the years with the presence of the Comforter within us, making our hearts to sing and our faces to shine with that holy companionship. What a wonderful thing it is to listen throughout all our days to the still small voice that ever speaks in the souls of men, and which gradually deepens and strengthens our experience of the risen Christ, until at last we see him face to face and become like him yonder in that eternal land.

It is a mighty partnership which Jesus gives to us in the Comforter. God grant his Holy Spirit to us all in full measure, that we may share in like full measure the winning of the world to the Lord Christ, the one and only Saviour, to whom be glory and honor and dominion world without end.

Work of the Church School Among Students in Higher Institutions of Learning

By J. O. Hassler

I. Principles

1. A new definition of church school.

Many definitions of the church school and its functions have been put forth by our leaders in religious education. Each emphasizes certain viewpoints. I have tried to assemble into one statement a comprehensive definition of the church school and its functions which, I think, adequately sets forth a true conception of what the modern church school should be and what I firmly believe the future church school will be.

The church school is the main educational department of the church and its functions are to recruit members of all ages, win them to Christ, develop them into intelligent, consecrated, missionary Christians and train them for Christian service.

What is the work of such a department of the church among students? We will take up first the second function named in the definition—that of evangelism.

2. Educational evangelism.

To the old methods, tried and effective, of convicting sinners by bringing them dramatically face to face with the hideousness of their sins and emphasizing the power of an avenging God and the inexorableness of the final judgment has been added the newer methods of educational evangelism. The church has begun as never before in the nineteen centuries of its existence to heed the Lord's command, "Go ye, therefore, and teach."

By teaching the truths of the Bible and their relation to life we awaken the individual to an intelligent realization of his responsibility to God. He is encouraged to seek intelligently a solution of his life problems. Surely Paul meant this when he said to the Philippians, "Work out your own salvation." Emphasis is being placed on a calm quiet decision of the individual, based on previous instruction concerning the fundamental principles of Christian faith. This does not presume to omit the emotional, for when we have known him with our minds—his omnipotence, his grace, his mercy, his long-suffering—we will love him with our hearts and let his love and power come into our lives to transform them and supply them with a never-ending source of spirituality and zeal for his cause. If we take the emotional out of religion we will lose some of our enthusiasm, but we cannot win educated thinking young men and women by methods solely emotional. The college age is the age of the intellectual type of conversion as contrasted with the emotional type of early adolescence. Having escaped being swept into the kingdom on the tidal wave of adolescent emotion, and now living in the age of doubt and criticism, our unchurched college student is not likely to arrive at a decision unless he is convinced intellectually. My opinion is that it is through the methods of educational evangelism that we must reach the college student and the church school is the logical department of the church through which it should do the work of evangelism in this field.

3. Development of Christian lives.

The performance of the third function (as given in the definition) of the church school involves two great principles, namely, theory and practice. An athlete may study the theory of football until he has it letter perfect, rule book and all, and yet be worthless on a team if he has not practiced. Again, a fellow of mighty strength, with hardened muscles and no knowledge of the game, if substituted suddenly for a regular player in a game would certainly jeopardize the team's chance for success. In training the team the coach gives the lessons and the players at once put them into practice. Drill must be had. The same dual training is necessary to develop useful Christians. If we teach missions and overlook an obvious chance to do missionary work in our college town, or neglect to train in missionary giving, we are likely to develop insincere lives. Religious instruction without practical application is incomplete. So is religious piety without a corresponding activity commensurate with the person's ability. The best way to warm one's self up in the Christian faith is to work. Our young people should be taught by actual practice to realize the value of activity in keeping one's faith. An active church member will become a praying church member because he will feel the need of prayer. If he is conscientious his Christian life will become more exemplary because his prominence in religious activities will make him careful about the kind of influence his life exerts. The instruction that should accompany his practical training will teach him this. While the church school has not by any means the monopoly on the jobs to be done in a church, it does have a broad enough field to do the major part of this religious training by practice.

It requires a stretch of the imagination to suppose that a student whose relation to the church for a period of four years has been passive will go back to his community and home church and assume that portion of leadership that is due him because of his education with the enthusiasm and intelligence that he would if he had been in the work all the time at college. If we produce useful Christians among our college students, we must use them in the church while they are in college and by this means develop their Christian lives. The church school has a very large share of this work to do.

4. Training for service.

The discussion of the development of Christian lives dovetails with the discussion of the fourth function of the church school—training for service. One involves the other. It seems to me that the opportune time to train for Christian service is at the time a student is getting his education. In most cases at this time he is away from his home church. To the church at the school town then falls the responsibility of giving this training. It should have a very important place in the school's program.

A few years ago I was directing the teacher training for a church school in a middle western state. In securing recruits for our classes we found a dearth of young people of college age, for practically all of the young people of the church went away to college, and the teacher training classes consisted mainly of junior and senor high-school students. Many of my students could complete only one year of the required three-year New Standard Teacher-Training Course before going away to college. I had letters from some who went to denominational schools telling me of the continued training they were receiving in the college. None of those who went to state schools received such training. There are very many more of our Christian students in the various state schools than in the denominational colleges. The church school in a state school town that does not feature courses in training, both for Sunday-school teaching and other church duties, is not meeting its full responsibility.

In justice it should be said that policies should be pursued by the denominations of the state Sunday-school associations that would furnish assistance to these churches in the school towns that have this extra burden thrust upon them.

II. Methods.

5. Plan of organization of church school for work among students.

In Patience Wait

By Fred Scott Shepard

Though the vision tarry, wait for it.—Hab. 2:3.

My restless heart impatience feels,
I long to see and know;
The Lord so strangely with me deals,
I know not how to go:
But as in doubt I hesitate,
I hear a quiet voice say, "Wait!"

I see so much of sin and shame,
Of sorrow, loss and grief,
I am perplexed. Where is the blame?
Can no one give relief?
As in a maze I thus debate,
I hear again the message, "Wait!"

My troubled soul would flee away
In solitude to rest;
Forget the troubles of the day—
Life's vain and weary quest:
Oppressed by fear, almost distrait,
My heart finds comfort in God's "Wait!"

I would more active be—alert
To need of things around,
But find my ev'ry way begirt—
With hindering causes bound:
Impatient of my untoward fate,
I hear this word, "They serve who wait!"

So then, my Soul, wait on the Lord,
According to his certain word,
For waiting brings reward at length,
Of clearer sight and added strength.

There should be a distinct college department with separate period of worship the same as the usually organized departments. Of course there would be occasional days when the whole school would unite in worship. I don't think that any nationally prepared plan of grading by ages (seniors, intermediates, etc.) should be allowed to separate these college students in two departments. The most ardent enthusiasts for standardized grading could not refuse the church schools of the college towns the right to vary from the standard plan in order to organize to the best educational advantage. It is actually done with success in many places. An attendance of thirty is sufficient for a separate college department. If there are as many as fifty in the department I would have five classes, first-year men, first-year women, upper classmen, upper classwomen and a training class. The training class should include only Christian members who feel a desire for purposeful study and preparation for teaching in the church school or doing some other form of church work. If the size of the department does not allow five classes I would have three, first-year, class, upper class and the training class. I believe that more effective work can be done both in recruiting and in the quality of instruction if we have separate classes for freshmen even at the loss of the chance to segregate the sexes. I believe further that the doubtful gain in a complete grading of the upper three years is more than offset by the power attained by large classes that could be had by combining the upper classmen. They do mingle considerably in their courses in college.

6. Courses of instruction.

No plan of lessons based on a six or seven-year cycle should be used. We have the college student for four years and if any cycle at all is to be used it should be a four-year cycle. Again, the uniform lessons are chosen to satisfy the religious needs of all ages and we have not all ages in this department. It is as if in the college we should teach them "hit or miss" lessons from kindergarten stories up to courses in philosophy and after four years of it call it a college education. There should certainly be no course given during those precious four years that does not minister directly to our purpose of making well-rounded, consecrated, purposeful Christian men and women. We must have Bible courses that emphasize truths helpful in a college student's life. We must have courses (not one lesson each month or quarter) dealing with missions, church history, church management, questions of recreation and the problems relating to a choice of one's life work. In treating the last topic we must not forget that recruits are needed in the ranks of Christian workers, preachers, missionaries, etc., and none are more desirable than consecrated conscientious college graduates. From the Association Press and various denominational presses can be had textbooks covering courses planned for young people of the college age.

The training class will study those topics which have to do with preparation for teaching in the church school and it is highly desirable to add courses in training for leadership of the young people's societies, Boy Scouts, Camp Fire Girls and similar organizations. It would improve the efficiency of the churches of the future to give courses of instruction on the duties of various church officers.

7. The teachers.

The most vital problem about the organization of this department is the selection of the teachers. They may or may not be teachers in the college; they must be consecrated Christians. They should be such as could give time to the outside recreational activities of the students. Granting at the outset that they should be educated, I believe that their personalities and plain human characteristics should be more seriously considered than their degrees. I would avoid the stiff, learned, hyper-critical professor who is rather vain of his liberal beliefs even though he may be a prominent member of the church. A students' class is no place for a teacher to criticize. The students will do that; let the teacher be careful.

On the other hand, I feel that dogma and adherence to fixed doctrines are out of place. We ought to be training independent thinkers as the colleges are doing and it is no encouragement to independent thinking to have it appear that one's religious beliefs have already been thought out by some one else and need only be adopted in some kind of a statement of faith. Our college students haven't the reverence for their ancestors and ancestral beliefs that the Chinese have. It is largely because we improve on the ideas of our ancestors (we have dropped witchcraft among other things) that we stand today without a peer as the foremost Christian missionary nation on the earth. It seems strange that some people will pay money to send missionaries to persuade other people to study, think and arrive at a conception of God which differs from that of their ancestors and deny the same privilege to their own and neighbors' children. Do not misunderstand me to mean that college students should be encouraged to look with suspicion on everything of the past and to think out new and varied beliefs. I mean that they should be helped to adjust their conceptions of God and things fundamental to Christian faith to their growing store of knowledge, to harmonize the teaching of the Bible with the truths of science as they honestly find them in their study and research in the college. If we can not do this much for them we will lose them. A teacher with a consecrated life, a burning evangelistic message, a noble missionary vision and a generous, charitable, tolerant attitude toward the beliefs of others can safely do this. Of all the people with whom the college student comes in contact in the church during his student days none can have more influence on his Sunday school class if that teacher be of the right kind.

8. Recreational activities.

The church is realizing more and more the need of ministering to the play life of its members—especially its young people—and has begun to promote recreational activity, usually through the church school. It does little good to train a person's mind and body for efficiency in performing certain tasks in life and then let him waste his energies in his leisure time because he has not been taught wholesome and restful recreation. Again our old team, theory and practice alias precept and example, must be called in. Neither moral warning against certain recreations nor positive instruction along the lines of pure wholesome recreation will be sufficient. The youth must be trained by example in the art of play and recreation. The organized classes of the church school or the organized departments of the church school are very convenient agencies for this training.

III. Results

9. Recruiting made easy.

I have purposely postponed the discussion of the first defined function of the church school, recruiting, so as to place it under the head of results. If the school organizes and develops a strong college department, with that esprit de corps and loyalty to things collegiate that is so easily instilled in college students, selects the best available teachers, gives courses of instruction that appeal to the intelligence of the students while satisfying their desires for spiritual help, and furnishes for them wholesome recreational activities, recruiting members will be an easy task. The class organization is the proper agency to do this recruiting.

10. The finished product.

What kind of member should the home church expect to receive back from the college church after four years? If we consider the results of one year in a certain state school town (where there exist no separate college departments in the church schools) then

"An Arsenal of Dislikes"

By Edwin M. Poteat

Mr. George Wyndham was Chief Secretary for Ireland under Mr. Balfour as Prime Minister. He was a gentleman, a literary man, an able administrator and a sport. In writing of the French Legitimists he said, "Apart from an arsenal of dislikes they were unconscious of the universe."

By which he meant that they lived in their prejudices, in their disagreements, in their dislikes. These filled their horizon, were indeed their universe.

"I do not like you, Dr. Fell.
The reason why I cannot tell;
But this I know, I know full well—
I do not like you, Dr. Fell."

I presume we all have our likes and our dislikes. But when we allow these latter to shut out the universe, and then proceed to make them our arsenal, that is, our guns and ammunition with which to shoot up the town, the government, the denomination, the Christian church—well, to put it as mildly as possible we are making fools of ourselves!

And did not our Lord more than hint at this folly when he held up to ridicule the man with a stake sticking in his eyeball who proposed to pick a mote out of his brother's eye? There is no conceit so protruding as that of the man who so relishes his dislikes of other people as to feed his soul on the luxurious fare of always trying to set these other people right. Mr. Wyndham has told such a man where he may expect to find himself—apart from an arsenal of dislikes he will become unconscious of the universe.

five out of every six sent away would come back without having had appreciable contact with the church school's influence, for the statistics actually compiled at the end of the year showed an average attendance at Sunday school by students of 17 per cent of the various denominational enrolments in the state school. Four years of negligible contact with the church will not develop a useful Christian life. If the church school does its full duty under the plan of work I have outlined, I believe this ratio would be reversed and there would go back to every church five well-trained, clean-minded, vision-filled Christian students for every six sent away to college. It is also assumed that many who would go away to college not Christian would come back useful Christian members of the church. A student trained as the church through its school should train him would be the kind of Christian that prays, "Thy kingdom come" and goes out immediately to help make it come; that prays for the heathen and reaches for his pocketbook; that says, "Nobody can come between an individual and his God. Every one should have the right to his own convictions. Luther, Calvin, Bunyan, Roger Williams, Wesley, Campbell and others were heroes of the faith," and proceeds to drop the word heretic from his vocabulary; that does not believe that the New Testament aims to outline details of business organization and methods of the church for twenty centuries in advance to fit the modern changing conditions of life; that feels it his duty to help his church and his God win men to Christ; that realizes that his church must not consider the life to come to the exclusion of the life that now is; and that believes the old adage, "'An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure," applies to sin and therefore furthers all projects that lead to conservation of child life and preservation of the ideals of youth. Such a person would be a valuable church member and a valuable citizen.

Keeping the Missionary Personnel Fit

By Charles H. Parkes

DO we recognize the importance to our whole Baptist missionary enterprise of keeping its personnel fit?

Great effort is exerted to fill the ranks of the missionaries. This recruiting activity, beginning at the annual meeting of the Northern Baptist Convention, extends through the different organizations in all the churches among Northern Baptists, reaching out to the smallest woman's society and B. Y. P. U. unit in the most remote rural district of the country. In our desire to secure life service we emphasize the great good to be accomplished among the peoples in the faraway places of the world. We show what wonderful things may be done in the slums and the crowded districts of our home industrial centers and among the isolated peoples under the jurisdiction of the Home Mission Society.

These glowing pictures are all very well, provided the physical requirements of the individual recruit to withstand the undermining effects of the work involved are given the requisite consideration.

Our great industries have long recognized this fact in their operations. They spend vast sums of money on initial physical examinations of all employes, and on subsequent periodic physical examinations. Expert care is provided for personal injuries. Inspections of housing and living conditions are made and improvements instituted. Provision is made for cleanliness, sane recreation and physical development. These activities are given the prominence of departments, so important are they considered.

The motives involved producing these innovations need no comment here. Suffice it to say that the industries admit it pays to raise the mental, moral and physical efficiency of its personnel.

To show that the value of the care of the physical well-being of the peoples to be reached is duly recognized, it is only necessary to call attention to the medical missionaries and nurses sent out, the hospitals built and maintained in the Orient and other fields reached by the Baptists, and the medical work in the Christian centers. Looking at the question from a materialistic standpoint alone, it would seem that the evangelistic effort follows the medical.

Recognizing this fact, it is appalling to realize that as yet we have not advanced to a point where the mainstay of the work, the missionary personnel, receives anything like adequate attention to its physical needs.

Investigation of this question brings the information that in one of the general boards during the last three years progress along this line has been made. Doctor Lerrigo is entitled to credit for this advance, in developing the requirement of an adequate physical examination on entrance into service. Considerable progress in the examination and care of returned missionaries attached to his particular board is also noted. The Woman's Foreign Board has advanced to a point of adopting Doctor Lerrigo's methods. These signs of progress are encouraging, but they are altogether too slow. The reason for this delay must be found and corrected.

This article is intended to call the attention of the rank and file of Baptists of the North to this great and important question.

Turn your sympathetic imagination to the physical needs of these missionaries, going to all kinds of enervating climates. If in their systems there is the slightest mark of tuberculosis, it will explode promptly into consumption. If there is the least beginning of a goiter, it will develop rapidly to a point where the individual becomes a mental and physical wreck. If there is an old chronic appendix, hernia or gall-bladder disease, isolation far from medical aid will take its toll in death. A run-down, tired-out physique, mingling with the slums of our cities, where all kinds of disease and infection run riot, needs no further comment to tell the story of the future of the individual, if below par physically.

The most casual thought given to the few details enumerated above will indicate what should be done before the missionary is accepted for service. It is appalling how careless we have been and are of the welfare of our missionaries. We are more than a big business enterprise—to do things because it pays. We have induced these people to go into the far countries for us, and should assume the obligation of their care.

This does not mean that we must spend vast sums of money and build big institutions. Let us apply prophylaxis to this question. First, see that the individual is physically fitted for the work; then, before he has worn himself to a physical wreck, give him an opportunity to learn his exact physical condition, and, if there is anything wrong, see that he gets proper medical attention. Under any circumstances, give him adequate facilities for recuperation during his periods of rest.

Let me ask you: "Are we fair to the missionaries? Do we recognize the importance to the whole Baptist missionary enterprise of keeping its personnel fit?"

The Silent Revival

WE have recently been impressed by the Gothic elements introduced into the architecture of some of our office buildings. They bring touches of the religious sentiment into our business environment and this has suggested to us something still more significant.

We have rejoiced to note the revival of high moral principles in business. No one can doubt that there is a growing desire to obey the law, and not grudgingly but gracefully. The Golden Rule in business is in many places becoming popular. We are informed that a Christian merchant in New York recently dismissed the head of a department because he advertised for sale on a certain morning goods which were in transit to the city and which did not arrive at the time they were expected. Any salesman promising to deliver that which he has not in stock in that store is not tolerated for a moment, and if he misrepresents articles which are for sale he is instantly dismissed.

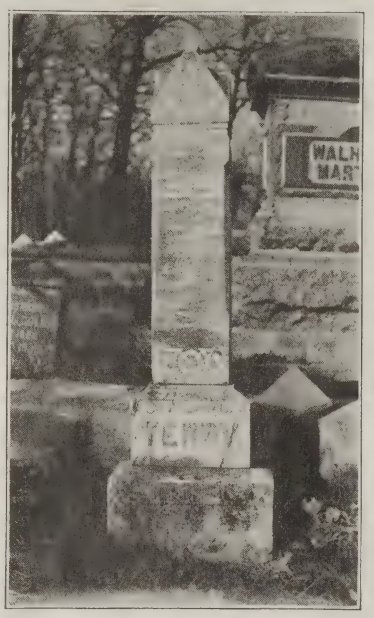
A business man of wide experience was asked in recent years to address a woman's club in a thriving city on "Dishonest Men I Have Met in Trade." They expected to hear an exciting story. The gentleman, however, declined the invitation, replying that his business life had indeed brought him into touch with all classes, and yet, he assured the women, although his transactions with thousands of different men had run into the millions, he had never met but two men who were dishonest.

A wholesale merchant who deals extensively with the representatives of a race that is commonly thought to be inclined to dishonesty, informs me that he is personally acquainted with at least a thousand of these men by name and has had extensive and constant business relations with them for many years. He assures me, however, that they are quite as honest as those men of his own race with whom he has had business relations. He declares that he has sometimes been badly deceived by his own people but has very seldom been disappointed in his financial dealings with the representatives of this race of strangers.

Religion is doubtless filtering into the regulations of business, and we hope that the religious architecture noted here and there in our modern office structures foreshadows the widespread attainment of spiritual ideas. The gothic arch that overtops the doors through which the feet of our business men enter, foreshadows, as we trust, that day when the feet of all shall be shod with the preparations of peace as they enter with clean hands and pure hearts into the modern temples of mercantile life.

North Dakota Baptists Celebrate Two Anniversaries in 1923

JUNE 28, 1923, was the seventieth anniversary of the martyrdom of Elijah Terry, the first Baptist, as well as the first Protestant missionary in Dakota Territory. He was massacred by a band of hostile Indians at Walhalla in 1852. Terry came to North Dakota from St. Paul, where he was a member of the First Baptist church.



May 13 was observed by Dakota Baptists as "Elijah Terry Memorial Day." Upon this day all of the churches in the state made contributions toward a fund to provide a suitable memorial of Elijah Terry, consisting of an oil painting, to be presented to the National Baptist Memorial. Roger Williams Church, Washington, D. C. It is hoped that the painting will be completed in time to be exhibited at the meeting of the North Dakota State Convention in Fargo, Oct. 3-7. This will be the fortieth anniversary of the organization of the convention and extensive plans are under way to make this one of the memorable events in North Dakota Baptist history.

The Martyrdom of Elijah Terry

By J. E. Naylor

BACK in the time of the Hudson Bay Company, in the days of the hardy pioneer, a young Baptist missionary fell suddenly pierced by eight arrows and one bullet. The missionary's name was Elijah Terry; the date, June 28, 1852; the place, Walhalla, at that time a thriving trading post where Indians, half-breeds and whites brought their buffalo hides and other pelts. Two Baptists, Terry and Tanner, were the first non-Catholic missionaries to work in what is now known as North Dakota and Terry was the first martyr; others followed.

It happened on a bright morning in June. Terry, accompanied by a Frenchman, went into the woods to cut timber with which to build a schoolhouse. He was singing an old church hymn as he walked down the path that wound among the trees when, without warning, a party of Sioux Indians in ambush fired and Terry fell upon his face pierced with the arrows and his shoulder broken by the bullet. When his companion, who escaped brought back help, they found the savages had scalped their victim and on turning the body over, saw that two of the arrows had driven completely through, entering the back and the points coming out in front.

The day after his death, Tanner with much persuasion gained permission of the priest to bring the body into the Roman Catholic Cemetery, there being no other burying ground in Walhalla at that time. Years later when the shallow grave was discovered, it was found almost under the fence among the unbaptized children and heretics. Next to him was the body of a half-breed who had been killed in a drunken brawl. A few years ago, the body was removed to the beautiful spot shown in the photograph on the cover page. This restful place has been dedicated to the martyrs. The grave of Elijah Terry is divided by the walk from the graves of two Presbyterian missionaries' wives. One died of exposure the year following Terry's death and the other, the next year, was shot by the Indians as she was standing near the window in her home holding her infant child in her arms. Buried in the plots back of this lie the bodies of Presbyterian missionaries who died natural deaths.

In 1852 this old building was a trading post. It has since been a store and is now a barn. Terry lived here, and it was from this building that he went with his ax on his shoulder across about one-quarter of a mile of open prairie and into the timber where he met his death.

Pershing's Interest in Boys

GENERAL JOHN J. PERSHING'S interest in boys is eloquently expressed in a letter accompanying a gift of a large silk American flag to the Second World's Conference of Y. M. C. A. Workers with Boys, held May 30 to June 11 at Portschach, Austria, with approximately 900 delegates present from nearly fifty countries. The flag of each nation represented was hung in the auditorium, specially built for the meetings. The letter and gift from General Pershing were sent through Dr. John R. Mott. The letter follows:

"It is a pleasure to be given the privilege of addressing this brief message to you who are charged with such all important responsibilities. The citizens of tomorrow are moulded through the influence, teachings and directions of today. We have confidence that with your wise counsel and guidance the boy will not only profit in the present but will be better prepared to meet the problems and opportunities that are certain to confront him in the future.

"If I may be permitted, I trust you will accept this American Flag as an expression of my deep personal affection for, and interest in, the boys of every land, and my cordial good wishes for the highest success in your deliberations."

Another American flag was presented to the conference by the Rotary Club of Washington, D. C., Secretary of the Navy Denby as a member of that organization placing it in the hands of William Knowles Cooper, secretary of the Washington Y. M. C. A., who took it to Portschach.

Twenty-two Mexican Baptist churches of Texas, which reported to the recent Mexican Baptist State Convention, contributed $12,560.25 during the past year for general denominational work, such as local improvements and support and missionary work. Five young ministers were ordained and eight new churches organized among the Mexicans. This general work is under the direction of the home mission board.

Seekers After Truth

"Ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free."

By W. E. Darrow

SAID Jesus, "And ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." Such is the promise to all who continue in his word and who are his disciples indeed.

In early years the writer became a disciple of Jesus, and has been ever since a seeker after truth. The time came when he sought through training in a theological seminary the preparation needed for the full work of the gospel ministry. At the time he was quite immature in character and conviction, awkward in manner and speech, yet anxious for light, clear and certain, upon the verities of the Christian faith. Notions and opinions, some good and some not so good, these gathered by him in the earlier years from various sources, needed to be tested as to their trustworthiness and value, and in the seminary he found abundant opportunity for their examination and separation. Without the collegiate training afterward received his task was far from easy, but the result was satisfactory in every particular. Good men in the faculty of the seminary, such men as Dr. Ebenezer Dodge, Dr. H. Harvey, Dr. S. Burnham, Dr. A. M. Beebee, Dr. W. N. Clarke, Dr. W. H. Maynard and others, left their impress upon his life and ministry.

One Teacher's Influence

Of the influence exerted by Dr. W. N. Clarke we wish specially to speak. This teacher was in the second year of his service as professor of Christian theology when we entered his class-room. Already, the air was full of rumors as to his teaching, and we were not a little suspicious, ready to combat vigorously every approach to the truth from other than the accepted order. His winsomeness, his clear-cut statement of truth, and his fair-mindedness, won us from our ultra-conservatism, though some things he told us have not yet been accepted by us; not that they are untrue, but we have not yet grown into consciousness of their validity. He stressed the things vital in theological thinking and indicated plainly what was opinion merely. On such broad basis we have been able to erect the structure of our own thinking, and it has stood securely amid the changes of the years. Well do we remember our first day in his class-room. He told us a little of the conflicting opinions current at the time and suggested the two ways in which we must deal with them: we must either keep the window closed against their approach, or let them in for examination and sifting. As men charged with the duty of leading the religious thought of others, we must put them to the test. If we were going to fall, it was better to fall then than later, but no fair and thorough examination should lead to such an outcome. How often we have wished all teachers of truth might have the benefit of such instruction. It is true that many people misunderstood him, misconstrued his teaching, actually opposed his leadership, but as a pioneer soul he has blazed a trail that many others have followed and his influence abides in ever-widening power, wherever his teaching is really known and appreciated.

Recently, a young man of our acquaintance, once a member of a church in a neighboring state, to which we ministered, wrote us about the teaching and influence of a certain school, here nameless. He felt that it was offensively narrow in its sympathies and spirit. To it he came in the hope of getting the preparation he needed for the work of the ministry. He came to its from a school decidedly undenominational in character, where evangelism is stressed, and properly, but where many vital Baptist doctrines are discredited and discouraged. At our suggestion he changed from the undenominational school, but he is very much dissatisfied with his selection. Our advice was in behalf of another institution better suited to his need.

The experience of this young man, no doubt the experience of many others similarly situated, has led to the preparation of this article. Religious institutions of various grades and tendencies over the land are bidding for patronage, each claiming to be simon-pure in its loyalty to truth and essential Baptist conviction. Some of them are broad-guage, others narrow-guage, still others no guage at ... opportunity here for any and eve.. type of theological thinking and temper. If an earnest seeker after truth could know in advance just what these various schools really are, and if he were able at the time to make decision in harmony with his own peculiar need and desire, the harm to him and others might not be so serious. Unfortunately, where a wrong choice has been made, the life is colored ever after by the influence of the school attended. In time, every seeker after truth will come to know its fuller meaning, but some never persist to the end. Therefore, the need of the most careful training and the wisest caution. No one should give out as true any opinion unless he has first tested for himself its meaning.

It is our profound conviction that the positive note should be sounded in the class-room as well as in the pulpit, and that vital truth should be clearly indicated. Why, for instance, stress evolution, favorably or unfavorably, and forget the fact that man was not man until after God breathed into his nostrils the breath of life and man became a living soul. Let men differ as they please with respect to the evolutionary process, that is a question of biology, of method in creation. Man is from God, whatever the process. Why debate as to the time in which the Almighty made our planet ready for human habitation? The Genesis story states that the day and night of twenty-four hours length did not begin until the fourth day of the creation period. What about the length of the days that preceded? Civilization has undoubtedly advanced since the first man appeared on our planet, but human nature is just as sinful, just as prone to go astray as in the beginning and still needs Christ as a personal Redeemer. There may be particular time and manner as to our Lord's coming again, but whatever our conviction as to the method we should all have our lamps trimmed and burning, ready for his return.

We May Well Rejoice

Naturally, an individual or a school stresses certain particular teachings and thereby the thinking of our age is enriched, only that truth be presented. Like the tacking of a sailing vessel, the thinking of the Christian centuries has veered from one extreme to another, but the progress of Christianity has been straightforward. Who is able to control the process? What organization or school, however orthodox and conservative? Why think and act unkindly toward another whose shibboleth may differ from our own, if only he is essentially right in his conviction? The fact is, we all differ from each other in training, in temperament, in thinking, in tendency. The wonder is, not that we differ, but that we agree so greatly as we do. And however Christ is presented, whether of envy and strife, or from higher motive, we may well rejoice that Christ is preached and glorified thereby.

In the face of so much human need there should be no misunderstanding of our marching orders. We should, indeed, teach the young converts to observe all things commanded — baptism, church order, etc.; but the direction to evangelize the world is also fundamental and forcible. While we are discussing matters incidental and subordinate, the world of today, for which we are responsible, is passing away. Let us follow the things that make for peace whereby we may edify one another. In theological quibble, even about things vitally important, we may lose sight of the Christ, whose we are and whom we serve. No matter how big or narrow the fence around our thinking, there is always more on the outside than within it. Some other brother or sister ma have a segment of the truth of God, to which we ourselves may be stranger. Let us receive the truth of God, in the love of it, wherever we may find it, separating it from the dross with which it may be surrounded, digging for it as for hid treasure. Let us make it to glow in loving and living Christian service, for the power of truth over us is not so much the straightness of our conviction as to its meaning as the sweetness of our living under its influence.

THE human mind has a fondness for applying long names to small things, and expressing its more important concepts in words of a single syllable. Monosyllabic terms are vocal with the interest of the ages. There is that greatest of all thoughts, God. There is that ever expanding realization, world. There is that perplexing problem of the past and present, man. There is that accusing sense we have been unable to rid ourselves of, sin. There is that continual incentive to pondering and reasoning, hope. God, world, man, sin, hope—what greater thoughts have ever stirred the human intellect, what factors figured larger in the spiritual progress of the ages? These five great monosyllables have been spelt and respelt, as it were, one age handing down the correct spelling to the other age, and no age satisfied with the orthography of its predecessor, but bent on learning to decipher the terms anew and grasp their fundamental meaning.—F. W. C. Meyer.

Social Unrest and the Church

THERE is a marked demand in the public libraries of the country for books and magazine articles discussing the industrial unrest which is the most conspicuous fact marking our time, and the propaganda which urges a reorganization of the existing social order, Dr. Howard Agnew Johnston, president of the Chicago Church Federation, says: Moreover, it is significant that a large majority of the people seeking this material are not found in the membership of the church. This is one of the weaknesses of the church.

With the amazing growth of industry, with unprecedented accumulation of wealth in the hands of a few, and the rapid increase of power in the hands of the many, we have the combinations of capital and the organizations of labor as the significant storm signals of the time. These organizations and combinations may be quite unobjectionable in themselves if they be inspired by a right spirit. All too often they are not thus inspired, and we behold bitter antagonisms finding expression in various ways that hurt and hinder the progress of the social order.

Every intelligent and fair-minded student of the world's life knows that there must be some readjustment in our social conditions and relations. It must be recognized at the outset that extraordinary progress has been made in the last century. The value of personality, in contrast to property, has steadily been emerging into the place of recognition. Had Karl Marx had the slightest notion that such progress could have been realized within the interval since his life, he would never have written his famous attack on capitalism. He did not believe such progress could be realized without a revolution. The fact that it has been rapidly changing conditions of the people for the better, admitting that much yet needs to be accomplished, should of itself lead us to be patient while persisting in the effort to have the spirit of Jesus Christ find increasing place in the program of those who seek the fullest possible solution of the problem.

For the only solution of the problem is to be found in the application of the principles found in the teachings of Jesus Christ and the injection of his spirit into the lives of individuals and groups seeking to help along the increasing progress toward a righteous readjustment of conditions and relations between employers and employes. Roger W. Babson is right when he asserts: "National resources, available labor and capital are important, but these things are of little value until they are released by people filled with the spirit of God." W. L. MacKenzie, in his book, "Industry and Humanity," is in accord in the statement: "A solution of the problems of industry is not to be looked for in forms. Something more vital than forms is needed. A new spirit alone will suffice."

Just at this point the duty and privilege of the church appears. It would be a mistake for the church to identify itself with any political platform, or economic program; for these can never solve the problem apart from the true spirit of brotherhood. Instead of the cynical cry of Cain: "Am I my brother's keeper?" there must be a new cry: "I am my brother's brother." Judson G. Rosebush, president of the Patton Paper Company, Appleton, Wis., has become a conspicuous figure among leaders in the realm of industry in the effort to infuse this right spirit into the discussion and the endeavor to find the way toward a better understanding. He recently said: "Of all the criticisms leveled against modern industrialism, none is so basic as the allegation that the underlying mental trouble with the capitalist-labor controversy has been its militancy, its total absence of cooperation and fair-dealing all round."

The message of the church must challenge men on all sides of the controversy to cultivate a willingness to appreciate the other man's point of view. Today they do not want to see the other man's position. They distrust each other. They see nothing good in the other side. We know that both are wrong in this attitude. Both are far better than their opponents describe them to be. But they must cease to stand apart in the spirit of bitter, uncompromising criticism and condemnation. This message of the church must strive to reach the leaders of both sides. For manifestly the character of the leadership of the movement will go far toward determining its outcome. Unless that leadership shall become increasingly Christian, it will never realize the desired end of justice and fair play.

"Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself" is the basic principle on which the program must be established. If men refuse to recognize their neighbors, as the man in the gospel did, there must be a growing demand in the influence of the church that such recognition be given. The consciences of men must be stirred. We believe they still have consciences, and that they will prove amenable, if only the church shall speak out within its clear prerogative to urge the principles involved in the spirit of Jesus. Mr. Baldwin, the British prime minister, has given the world an illustration of the way a Christian statesman may help to heal the hurt. Let others follow in increasing numbers. The one only and adequate hope is the program of Jesus Christ.

Opportunity

By Luella Kilpatrick

TO BE a part of the world at this, the greatest moment of its existence, when the prophecies of past ages have in part been realized, and the future is limited only by the range of man's imagination; to see rich and poor, Jew and Gentile, black and white, pass in procession before us, the greatest moving picture of the age-long drama of life—this is the first great opportunity.

Our duty is not merely to live, however; we must also act. Each must take his rightful place on the stage—to do the heroic deed—to speak the words that may change the destinies of nations; to invent what seems impossible as others have done in the past; to sacrifice willingly, and, if need be, to lay down life for a friend; in sum, to leave the world better than he found it.

The second opportunity ready for each to grasp is the opportunity of achievement. The only life worth while is the life of vision. The only man who advances is the man who looks forward to a new day. The apostle calls the star that leads him hope. Without hope achievement is impossible.

Opportunity comes to every man; success only to him who has the wisdom, energy, courage, and determination promptly to grasp and utilize his chance.

At the beginning it is best to be modest in one's demand. On the other hand, a lazy waiting for one's time to come is a dangerous invitation to indolence. Nor should one expect to be helped along, to be coddled. Some young people are so often befriended that they do not have to look out for themselves at all.

Opportunities that are too plentiful are often not much appreciated, and consequently are not improved, and so are lost.

As the Far East offers unusual business opportunities to young men, so it offers great opportunities for young women along educational and social service lines. "There is just one opening," Robert Gray was told; "if you can leave for the West in two days, we can promise you a good salary and promotion." The young man doubtless preferred to stay at home. Yet there had been no such opportunity for a year and there might not be again. However, he had a certain duty to his present employer, who would be left in an unfortunate position because there was unfinished work on young Gray's desk.

"I cannot accept the position," he said. "I must finish certain work on my desk that no one understands. If I leave it, it means the loss of advantage to the company that I meant for them to have. To go would be to destroy the results of my year of work with them."

Robert Gray never attributed his achievements of after years to the fact that his character won recognition when his work had failed. He believed that his decision had been natural, a casual act.

No act is casual; what seems so is merely the attracting force of the life at the center. The Christ-light is not an outside factor from which to gain rapture in special moments of meditation. With Christ in the heart and mind, every emergency is met with the right principle and every act of the temporal life is spontaneously pure.

To those who go the way of lost opportunities for acquisition of knowledge, of mental discipline, of preparation for useful service, of winning fame and fortune, all count as nothing when laid over against the delirious pleasure of a single forbidden hour. Opportunities lost, generally speaking, are lost forever.

"A thousand years a poor man watched
Before the gate of Paradise;
But while one little nap he snatched
It oped and shut. Ah! was he wise?"

The final opportunity is the opportunity for service. He who is willing to serve should create the opportunity to do so.

When the great war came on, Catherine Booth might have said: "These men do not need nurses, the war department provides nurses; they do not need entertainment, the Y. M. C. A., etc., provide that; they do not need preaching, the chaplain will attend to their religious needs; the Salvation Army is not needed at the front; I will stay home." What she said was "I will bring the influence of home to these young men suffering the hardships and character-racking terrors of the war;" and she created her opportunity and magnificently dedicated herself to service.

The real proof of a Christian is how he meets this test: "Do I avail myself of all my opportunities of daily Christian service?"

In our actions we should all be Christian ministers. It is not necessary for us to get up into pulpits and proclaim the truth of brotherly love. Our lives will be our sermons, and we shall exert an influence for good that will shine out as a beacon in a world that would, without such opportunity-bearers, be ever dark.

A Lesson in Grammar

By Mrs. Helen S. Brown

GOD exhausted language in revealing to men his love and nearness. By means of it, from the mouth of prophet, priest, king and Christ himself he brought himself down from an infinite distance into the intimacy of life's daily round. Every part of speech has contributed its share in giving us a close up of our loving heavenly Father. How well he knew that life would offer some struggles before which the stoutest hearts would quail unless his presence was made real. He knew that as courage or fear dominated our natures we would advance or retreat, "for nothing routs us but the villainy of our fears." Hence we have the priceless "fear nots" of the Bible and the ringing calls for courage!

It is through the use of that little, insignificant part of speech, the preposition, that God has so made his presence felt as to take all the fear out of fearfulness and leave the fullness of a perfect trust. Our grammars teach us that a preposition is a word which shows the relation between its object and some other word in the sentence. With that in mind let us see God as our teacher pointing out his relation to us, the objects of his love. The promises cited are only suggestive of the many.

First, God is within us.

"Christ in you, the hope of glory."

"Now I no longer live, but Christ liveth in me."

No one is so sure of the home citadel that a strong defense is not needed there.

Second, God is all about us. Recall for a moment Moses' beautiful metaphorical picture of God's protective care over and under us.

"As an eagle that stirreth up her nest,
That fluttereth over her young,
He spread abroad His wings, He took them,
He bore them on his pinions."

Again,

"Who is over all, God blessed forever."

There is another preposition that makes even earthquakes on land and tempests at sea, powerless to harm.

"The eternal God is thy dwelling place.
Underneath are the everlasting arms."

We use grammatical license here, changing underneath to a preposition by supplying "us" which is understood.

The three cited below, show how impossible it is for the enemy to overpower us on either flank, in the front, or rear.

"Because he is at my right hand, I shall not be moved."

"As the mountains are round about Jerusalem, so Jehovah is round about his people."

"The angel of Jehovah encampeth round about" them that fear Him, and delivereth them.

All these promises bring out the matchless beauty of the name Immanuel—God with us. That presence within and all about us means love, understanding and infinite power. It doesn't mean that the conflict is eliminated, but it does mean that with him we are invincible. Elisha could not be terrified by the threatening hosts at the city's gate for he saw that the mountains beyond were filled with heavenly hosts.

A seamstress, after years of close work with her needle, had trouble with her eyes. She consulted an oculist. "Have you windows in your sewing room that give you a good view of the sky and distant hills?" he asked. "Yes," she answered. "Then frequently lift your eyes from your work and let them rest on those far away scenes." She followed the advice and was cured. There is rest and assurance in lifting our eyes to those "hills whence cometh our help." Paul summarizes in one sentence the thought of all these references.

"And your life is hid with Christ in God."

Los Angeles.

An Interesting Contrast

By Rollin H. Walker

THERE are two notable passages, one in the Old Testament and the other in the New, presenting opposite sides of a great truth. The first is found in the prophecy of Amos, and is that terrible passage where, referring to the immoral and paganistic people of God, he says, "Though they, dig into Sheol, thence shall my hand take them; and though they climb up to heaven, thence will I bring them down. And though they hide themselves in the top of Carmel, I will search and take them out thence; and though they be hid from my sight in the bottom of the sea, thence will I command the serpent, and it shall bite them."

This is Amos' way of saying that a man cannot run away from his skeleton, and that when the people of a nation are saturated in sin there is no place that they can go that prevents God's mighty universal laws from working upon them and making them feel the results of their sins.

The Israelites felt then, as pagans do now, that the gods might be deceived, or that a person could get out of the territory of a god, just as Jonah imagined he could do when he took ship for Tarshish to flee from the presence of Jehovah. One of the fundamental tasks of the ancient prophet was to seek to make Israel know that the moral law was unescapable.

The truth which God has given the modern world to know about the absolute and unvarying uniformity of natural law, has made it much easier for us to believe this great principle, although even yet men do not half realize that the breaking of an obligation or a social injury is certain to cause terrible results sooner or later in the life of the man who is guilty.

And now for the opposite side of the shield. If one will turn to the eighth of Romans, he will find that great passage where Paul says, "Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? shall tribulation, or anguish, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword? Nay, in all these things we are more than conquerors through him that loved us. For I am persuaded that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor things present, nor things to come, nor powers, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord."

Paul has realized the presence of a new type of natural law, and has come to know that the law of love and the law of protection for any man who believes in the goodness and mercy of God as revealed in Jesus Christ are just as inexorable and unescapable as is the law which punishes the guilty offender. An accident is impossible in the universe. God always punishes the guilty; God always protects the righteous.

Of course this does not always seem to be true. The guilty seem to escape; "their eyes stand out with fatness, they have more than heart can wish." And the righteous seem to be punished. As Paul says, quoting the old prophet, "For thy sake we are killed all the day long." Nevertheless, when time has its opportunity to work out the inevitableness of law, it will be found that the man who, in faith and sincerity and humility, shelters himself under the protection of the Most High is unsinkable. No submarine in the angry ocean of life can send him to the bottom. And on the contrary, no powerful protection of huge brute force can prevent the august laws of righteousness from working for the destruction of the immoral and the selfish.

There is a tendency in our modern thought to say that Paul's great law of love has supplanted Amos's terrible conception of Nemesis. But this is not true. In fact, the inevitableness of the operation of the laws of grace is based and founded upon the inevitableness of the operation of the laws of punishment. The universe of love is built upon the reenforced concrete of the universe of law. We must have Amos in order to have a firm hold upon Paul. And to this agrees the whole teaching of Jesus who, while he spoke the tenderest words that ever fell from mortal lips, also, beyond all question, uttered the most terrible and awful warnings

Learning to Pray

THE department of prayer and stewardship of the General Board of Promotion is constantly bringing together some personal testimonies in the two fields. Experience is the best teacher, and these experiences of learning to pray are full of instruction for others.

Naturally they are published anonymously, under an understanding of the department with the writers, but they are vouched for by the department as the testimonies of men and women widely honored among us, who, for obvious reasons prefer that these inner aspects of their life should not appear over their own names.

Prayer More Than Petition

"FROM infancy I have been in the school of prayer. In earliest years I learned by imitation the posture and formulae of prayer to which I am now accustomed. In early boyhood I chose Jesus Christ as my teacher. During all subsequent years he has been interpreting to me the meaning of prayer, as he taught his first disciples. He has taught me that prayer is far more than petition, or asking, as white light is more significant and more inclusive than the colorrays that compose it. Petition has been only one of the many attitudes of my soul towards God and Christ. As years have multiplied in the school of prayer with my Saviour, I have been learning more and more his character and purpose, until now I know that one petition that God answers is prayer for pardon and righteousness. I have learned, too, that my dominant desire is, or ought to be, for light.

"'I ask no dream, no prophet ecstasies:
No sudden rending of the veil of clay;
No angel visitant, no opening skies;
But take the dimness of my soul away.'"

A Valley of Decision

"I THINK that I began really to pray when I was ten years old. My father had died two years before, and my mother was left with the responsibility of the spiritual welfare as well as the material care of her two boys. With her we went continually to a series of meetings held under the leadership of Moody and Sankey. One night, as a result of one of Mr. Moody's messages, there came to me such a realization of the direct relationship between this life and that which is to come that I cried out in my soul that I might be found worthy to be with my father who had gone from me after a life for which there could be but one destination. If I mistake not, that was my first real prayer, though the habit of prayer at night and morning had been fixed in me from very early days.

"I suppose that I prayed in some more or less meaningful way from that time until I was seventeen years of age, but there was no positive decision for the Christian life until the age of seventeen. I was to begin my life in college the next day. Wisely and tenderly my older brother presented to me the alternative of beginning college life with or without a positive and definite decision for Christ, with the probable consequences of the choice. That was my 'valley of decision.' I can see now that the seven years which had preceded had been leading me steadily to the decision which was then reached. Quietly and definitely I then decided that I would enter this new and significant stage of life's journey as a Christian, and this decision was sealed in prayer. That hour with my brother and with the Master I can never forget.

"Then came four years of college life. During all of the years the ministry as a life calling pressed hard upon me, but I had other tastes and ambitions and I steadily fought what I now see to have been God's call. In my pravers during the college days I think there must always have been a reservation as to my life work, for not until after the college course was done did I give him the key to the last room in the house. Then came a new experience of the profit and power of prayer. I hope that by God's grace neither the profit nor the power have been wholly lost in the years which followed.

"During a somewhat varied and exacting work for the more than thirty years which have passed since college days, prayer has been a real factor under many circumstances. I have absolute confidence that I have seen men and women converted in answer to prayer; that I have seen stubborn and hard hearts softened and changed through prayer, and that many a time what looked like a closed door has been opened through petition to him who holds the stars in his right hand. When I have been willing to do his will, he has not failed to realize in me the promise which he made that I should know of the teaching. When the promise has not been realized. it has been because the condition has not been fulfilled."

Its Practical Efficacy

"WHEN did I learn to pray? I have not learned yet. Sweet, helpful, powerful as prayer often is, any experience of mine has touched only its outermost fringe. The philosophy of prayer never troubles me. I realize the philosophical difficulties, but have always been enabled to rest upon its practical efficacy; somehow it does move the arm that moves the world, as I have found not once or twice. I cannot point to any one moment when I discovered a hitherto unknown major secret of prayer. Sorrow has made it more sweet, bringing Jesus near. Great perplexity has driven me to it. My task for eighteen years has called especially for dependence on God and constant recourse to him. Great comfort has come, as well as marvelous answer. I have never been able to argue much with God in prayer; perhaps not to plead as much as I ought. It has always seemed that he knew before I spoke, and while he wanted me to speak, and speaking was a real and efficacious thing, I could just make my request known, and leave it; or refer to it again, as one of Jehovah's remembrancers whose renewed reminders are not vain repetitions. Prayer as petition is very precious; prayer as communion still more—the two inextricably linked. In private, ejaculatory prayer, the swift arrow flight upward, inward, yields the greatest reaction of assurance and power. The degree varies too, greatly. Sometimes the answering manifestation of God's presence in Christ swells and lifts up like a tide; but the assurance of his presence does not ebb, however, the feeling may. And greater than prayer is he."

The Soul's Hospitality

"I cannot recall a time when I did not believe in God. From my early childhood I was taught to speak to him. I cannot now imagine myself living for twenty-four hours without doing so.

"When I have done anything that my conscience condemns I get no peace until I have frankly spoken to my heavenly Father about it and asked his forgiveness. It would seem strangly unnatural to begin a day without asking for his constant presence and help. Facing serious responsibilities I am drawn irresistibly to pray. Before any important decision I ask him to guide my judgment. With reference to all my higher hopes in life I feel helpless to realize them except as I draw wisdom and strength from God through prayer.

"Of course, such prayer would be impossible unless God were really there! No sane man would fool himself into talking habitually to any one who did not answer. But he does forgive and he

A View of Prayer

By J. V. Whiting

PRAYER is an interchange of thought and life between God and the human soul.

Prayer is not merely asking for something. Asking is but an incident in the prayer life. It is said, "Enoch walked with God." Perhaps it could be said with equal truth, "While Enoch walked he talked with God." Of an old Bible scholar it is said, when he had finished the day's work, he read a bit of scripture and closing the book exclaimed, "Lord, we are on the same old terms," and fell asleep.

A child in the home lives the home life of father and mother. He thinks as they think, feels as they feel, and talks as they talk. He is a part of the home life. What needs he has he voices with confidence of getting: "Father, I must have some school books." "Very well, son, I will see that you get them." But the big thing to him is that he has this father and mother whose life he shares.

One who gets to the heart of living, says at the close of the day, "Father, this has been a good day because it was your day and my day; we lived it together." In the morning he starts out to work and says, "Father, you are with me. All is well today—I know it now, for you are with me."

So does prayer ennoble, inspire, spiritualize all the life.

gives the assurance of it. He does guide and strengthen and help in a thousand ways. And he speaks to one and meets one's every need as only a divine friend could do.

"In my experience, prayer is not conquering the divine unwillingness but laying hold of the divine willingness. It not so much puts God on my side as myself on God's side. Prayer is the act of appropriating the constantly extended mercies of our Father. God is ever seeking entrance into the human heart (John 4:24; Rev.3:20). Prayer opens the door. Prayer is the soul's hospitality to the unseen Guest and Friend. Intercession is the wireless message sent by my soul to another through the ether of God's love."

Every Man's Inheritance

By Frank S. Harwood

"WE ourselves will go ready armed before the children of Israel, until we have brought them unto their place: we will not return unto our houses, until the children of Israel have inherited every man his inheritance.". Numbers 32, 17-18.

The Israelites had come by the tortuous way of the wilderness to the very border of the Promised Land. It had required the most skilful leadership on the part of Moses to preserve morale among these insurgent tribes. Now that they were about to enter into Canaan their troubles were not over for from this time they would be without the proved generalship of Moses and the difficulties would be none the less. If ever a strong united spirit was needed among the Hebrews it was now.

But what should be proposed to Moses but a request which if granted would divide and weaken the forces! And at such an inopportune time! It was like the request the two disciples made that one might sit on one side and one on the other side of Jesus when he came into his kingdom. The petition to Moses and the petition to Jesus were prompted by selfishness and shortsightedness, and were both completely out of place. But Moses and Jesus each used the occasion to send home to the unenlightened hearts a great truth. This was the thing desired of Moses. While encamped on the plains east of the Jordan, it occurred to the two tribes of Gad and Reuben that as they possessed much cattle it would be a very satisfactory arrangement for them if they could be allowed to remain right where they were and not have to go across the Jordan, for the plains were well adapted for grazing. And so they asked if they might do this.

At once Moses saw the folly of any such course and replied with the question: "Shall your brethren go to war, and shall ye sit here? And wherefore discourage ye the heart of the children of Israel from going over into the land which the Lord hath given them?" The great leader knew that in taking the land of Canaan there would be fighting and they would need no discouragements from the ranks. Probably the two tribes had not thought of this. Then they proposed to leave their families and flocks on the plains and to have the men accompany the other tribes in the conquest of their inheritance. This modification of their request was acceptable to Moses who urged them to fulfil their word, promising them the land which they had chosen if they did as they promised. He assured them, however, that if they did not keep their word they would be sinning against God and their sin would find them out.

There are several things about this incident which reveal human nature as it is and as it may be. One thing is the fact that Gad and Reuben felt that they had gone far enough and were now ready to enjoy the fruit of their labors, with little thought of how their action would affect others. This spirit is characteristic of every one who has not tasted of that abundance of living of which Jesus spoke. This is the spirit of the person who has not outgrown the mechanical idea of religion. He reads a chapter of the Bible every day. He has not done his duty if he does not read the chapter, and he has done his duty if he does read it. He does a good turn for some one every day. If he forgets it one day he has not done his duty, but if he does one good turn he has done his duty. Probably he who reads one chapter will read more, and probably he who does one good deed will do more, but human nature is too quickly satisfied with its accomplishments. We are all tempted to say: "Let this land be given unto thy servants for a possession, and bring us not over Jordan." What is the difference between the most of us who live the average life, and the few of us who live the unusual life? Is it not that the most of us have done "that which it was our duty to do" and have never known the intoxicating joy of the few who give themselves hilariously?

That was an arresting question which Moses asked: "Shall your brethren go to war, and shall ye sit here?" Their answer was a modification of the original request which brought out the true Christian spirit. Of course, they did not know it was the Christian spirit for they knew nothing of Christ, but the spirit they showed is Christian wherever it is found and by whatever name it is called. They said: "We will build sheepfolds here for our cattle, and cities for our little ones: but we ourselves will go ready armed before the children of Israel, until we have brought them unto their place: we will not return unto our houses, until the children of Israel have inherited every man his inheritance." Where can you find a nobler statement? Is not this an ideal example of unselfishness and cooperation? For it was no small thing for these men to leave their wives and children and possessions to spend weary years in a hostile land for the sake of helping some one else into an inheritance. Perhaps no greater sacrifice, except death, can be asked of a home-loving man than to leave home for a long time to serve others outside the family. Many are doing that now and no doubt great will be their reward. What must be the agony of heart of those missionaries who must leave their children in the home land not seeing them for years! Dan and Reuben caught the larger spirit. It dawned upon them that not only were they responsible for their own wives and children, but also they owed something to all the rest of the race. And so an entirely new purpose filled their minds. They were converted by the words of Moses.

It is an encouraging thing for Christian workers to think of the great change which Moses' word produced in these people, for it reminds us that many are the hearts which might be changed if some one would only speak the needed words. Blessed is the person who knows how to speak the word in season. It is well said: "And they that are wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars forever and ever" for it surely takes wisdom to do the work of changing lives. People are not easily convinced. But it is encouraging to think that if they are tactfully shown what their spirit really is and what it might be, that some, at least, will be noble enough to act as did the tribes of Gad and Reuben.

Surely it is a wonderful work our Lord has given us—it is to help every man to come into his inheritance. Can it be that any one else will not reach the mark because we think we have gone far enough?

Migratory Workmen

A study of the migratory birds and as to why they travel from one place to another, makes a very interesting subject. Barn swallows and chimney swallows leave in the latter part of the late summer because they have a long journey before them, as they spend their winters in Northern Africa. The golden plover travels each year from the Arctic circle to Patagonia and returns by another route.

It is also interesting to remember that large groups of men also roam from one part of our land to the other, and many of these journeys are made with almost the regularity of the birds, that come and go. The Navaho Indians and some other tribes go from the valleys to the mountainsides each summer, and wander from place to place in search of the best pasture land for their flocks and herds. Many other Indian tribes are broken up into small groups, and pass from one region to another, where the vineyards and harvest fields need workmen. There are also certain tradesmen who have the tramp habit. Barbers, masons, carpenters, blacksmiths and other workmen, governed by a desire to see the world, travel from one city to another, staying a few months in each place, and seldom find it difficult to secure work. Salesmen travel widely also from one part to another, and certain of their routes extend from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean.

The bringing of workmen from various parts of the country to another to break up a strike; the moving about of pleasure hunters from the North to the South and from the East to the West; the movement to have college students work on the farms, which are often located a thousand or more miles from their homes and the bringing of the negroes each summer from the South to work on the farms in Connecticut and elsewhere, tells the story of what is going on each year.

All these movements and mixtures of men at once lead to social and spiritual situations and call for fresh initiative and intelligent work on the part of Sunday schools, young people's societies, brotherhoods and churches. Without doubt God is at work in all these changes and migrations of men. Dr. J. C. Clifford once said that in America "divine forces are making the ideal man."

The New World Movement

"Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world."—Matthew 28:19, 20.

The Strategy of Cooperation

"So built we the wall; . . . for the people had a mind to work."

—Nehemiah 4:6.

Inspirational Activities

Loyalty Luncheons for women in about 60 centers throughout the country.

Echo Meetings for women at 1,000 points, bringing echoes of the Loyalty Luncheons.

A series of significant three-day Bible and missionary conferences at about thirty strategic centers for purposes of inspiration, information and organization.

Bible and missionary rallies at 200 or more points for presentation of the denominational task.

Method

Setting-up meetings in each state, association and local church for the purpose of acquainting workers in each field with the plans for the year's work and placing responsibility for carrying them out.

A chain of selected leaders from every local church through the association and state convention to the organizations that represent the whole denomination in the Northern Baptist Convention.

Stewardship Program

Stewardship Education. Create new feeling and understanding about local church membership. Devise new practices to replace old ones. Study the receiving and dismissing of members; church discipline; non-resident membership; enlistment of membership for worship, service, witnessing and giving. Study how to produce continual church activity.

Stewardship Program for October, 1923. Sermons, Sunday school, young people's and prayer meeting topics on the following themes:

Oct. 7—Stewardship and the Lordship of Jesus.
Oct. 14—Stewardship and the use of energy, time and personality.
Oct. 21—Stewardship and money.
Oct. 28—Stewardship and the enlistment of the entire church in its task. (Another month may be chosen where October is not suitable.)

THE LOCAL CHURCH AND THE PROGRAM

In planning its own work for the year, each local church is asked to consider these suggestions and so far as possible build them into its program. The importance of setting aside special periods for emphasis of particular types of work will be recognized fully by pastors and local church leaders. Churches will see the advantage of setting aside a certain period for acquainting their people with the facts regarding the work being conducted by our denomination as follows:

1. Our foreign mission fields and activities.
2. Our home mission fields and activities.
3. Our state convention and city mission fields and activities.
4. The missionary work of the Publication Society.
5. The importance and place of Christian education.
6. The work of the Ministers and Missionaries Benefit Board.
7. Stewardship and local church efficiency.

One of the points to be safeguarded in any cooperative program is the necessity of presenting the information about phases of work being conducted by the organizations which have been created to serve the denomination in its various fields of activity.

The General Board of Promotion has stereopticon lectures on 80 different subjects, 539 sets, and easel lectures of nine different subjects about 100 sets, also six moving picture themes for the use of churches desiring to present missionary facts objectively.

The General Board of Promotion has also interesting literature on the work of all our national societies and boards, which can be obtained from any of the Literature Bureaus.

A Cycle of Prayer

"Evening and morning and at noon will I pray and cry aloud: and he shall hear my voice"

Special topic for emphasis during September—Facing the task: Rallying the forces of the local church for the season's work.

Our Work and Workers at Home

22nd day—Negroes.
23rd day—Indians.
24th day—Orientals.
25th day—Alaskans and Mormons.
26th day—Latin Americans.
27th day—Europeans.
28th day—Rural and Mining Communities.

Suggested Plans for Securing New Pledges to Assure $12,161,521.67

I. Underwriting period, Dec. 2-16. Ask each local church to participate in simultaneous canvass during these fifteen days with the definite aim of completing the underwriting of its share of the $12,161,521.67. All pledges to be paid on or before April 30, 1924.

II. Plans for adequate preparation for solicitation period to be emphasized in Bible and missionary conferences, rallies, state, association and local church setting-up meetings.

III. Ask local churches to conduct period of thorough preparation preceding the underwriting period.

IV. A pamphlet containing suggestions as to how to secure full participation of every member during the underwriting period to be furnished free. Pledge cards for current expenses and missionary budgets also to be furnished free.

V. The Woman's Continuation Campaign Committee will promote the use of "might" boxes for the collection of thank offerings and small day-by-day gifts. These are not to take the place of pledges, new or old.

Where Home and Foreign Missions Meet

By Constance Jackson

THE native churches of El Salvador, Central America, struggling for existence themselves, have seen and taken to their hearts the needs of the world, and through Miss May Covington, a missionary of the Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society, sent a check to the Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society as their offering toward foreign missions in the Continuation Campaign. This money meant real sacrifice, and is only a part of what they have pledged themselves to do.

Miss Covington writes:

"One native pastor said that his Sunday school was laying by a little offering each month for a Christmas celebration, but that he was going to see that it was used for missions instead; a vote was taken that each church should make an annual offering to missions; and as the enthusiasm deepened another man, with tears in his voice, came forward and said, 'Our little offerings will not accomplish much; we must give life, and I want every one to witness the fact that this little daughter whom the Lord has given me, I now give back to him for service on the mission field if he be so pleased to use her. From now on, I shall do all in my power to educate her and prepare her for that task.' It was a touching scene, to see that father standing there with his little girl of about ten years, and almost the entire audience in tears. Then another woman spoke, saying that as the Lord had not given her any children, she would give the amount that it would have cost her to feed and clothe them, to the cause of Christ in other lands.

"At last one of the oldest believers in that church arose and brought two pesos to the desk and said 'We are making good resolutions for the future and I hope we shall carry them out, but in the meantime why not make a voluntary offering now while the fire burns in our hearts.' Then followed a stream of pesos and small change, until they had given thirty pesos, or $15 United States gold. We said this was our 'over the top' offering to help in the present financial crisis."

---

Henry L. Whitfield, who has been nominated for governor of Mississippi, is an active Baptist layman and deacon, teacher of a men's Bible class, and one of the leading educators of that state.

Religious Education

The Pastor and the Sunday School

The pastor should attend the Sunday school promptly on Sunday morning. His presence will greatly encourage the superintendent as well as all the other officers and teachers and really be an inspiration and joy to the entire school. He will also be able to make a study of the school before the school opens and during the period of opening worship.

If he wants to teach a class he should do so by all means. Next to preaching the gospel many pastors get their greatest joy out of teaching a large class of men at the Sunday-school hour. Pastors testify that they have been able to broaden and strengthen their ministry in this way. Scores of men will join the pastor's class who would not otherwise attend the Sunday school. Likewise, many fine men can easily be enlisted in service to assist in building the pastor's class who could not be induced to serve elsewhere in the Sunday school.

This is a question, however, that every pastor will have to settle for himself. All pastors who teach great classes for men testify without exception that in their judgment the pastor should teach a Sunday-school class. Certainly, if teaching a Sunday-school class would interfere with the pastor's Sunday morning sermon it is probable that he should not teach. On the other hand, it is also probable that teaching a Sunday-school class would help man pastors in their preaching.

The argument is sometimes advanced that if a pastor is teaching a class he cannot give attention to the other part of the Sunday school. This is partially true; however, before the lesson period, and also after the lesson period, the pastor will have opportunity to study the school. He will also find that the weekly teachers' meeting will afford him perhaps the best opportunity to find out what is going on in the Sunday school. Well-kept records will also furnish the pastor most accurate knowledge concerning each department and class in the Sunday school.

At intervals, perhaps once a month, the pastor should have a substitute teacher supply for him, and he should go with the superintendent through the Sunday school for the purpose of making a close study of the school in operation. To be sure he should time his visits wisely, making sure that no program or class is disturbed or interrupted by these visits.

The pastor and superintendent should meet together often for conference concerning every phase of the work of the school. With the records before them they can easily get into the problems which most need attention. The method of conducting the teachers' meeting may need changing. The organization may need expanding. The pupils may not be attending the preaching service as they should. The soul-winning spirit in the school may be at at low ebb. A training school for the workers may be the imperative need. These and other vital questions would claim attention as they meet for prayer and conference. In this way the pastor will put his stamp upon the Sunday school as he can perhaps in no other way.

He will find here his best chance to exercise proper oversight and direction of the Sunday school through the superintendent. The pastor and the superintendent together are an irresistible force in building the Sunday school and in "pulling down the strongholds of Satan." In speaking of these two men, Pastor J. W. Pepper, of East St. Louis, says: "The pastor can chase a thousand and the superintendent can chase a thousand, but the pastor and superintendent together can put ten thousand to flight."

The pastor, or the superintendent either for that matter, should not appoint teachers without consulting each other. Both are interested in this vital matter and the wisdom of both is needed in the selection of the men and women who should teach in the Sunday school. One of the most difficult tasks in the work of the entire church confronting the pastor is the enlistment of men and women to teach in the Sunday school.

With the church roll before them the pastor and superintendent would be able to make a long list of capable men and women who have teaching gifts. These should be assigned to the departmental grade in which they will best be able to teach, in the judgment of the pastor. With this list in hand the pastor and superintendent should visit these prospective teachers and secure their consent to enter the work. Often more than one visit will have to be made before consent can be secured. Time for thought and prayer will be necessary before a decision can be reached. Such work pays large dividends and should constantly find a place in the activities of the pastor.

Next comes the training of these workers. Just here is one of the pastor's richest fields of labor. Certainly there should be a well-defined policy for training Sunday-school workers in every church. The pastor should be the best equipped man in the church to lead in this work. It is his place by virtue of his calling and position, and he neglects it always at the period of seeing his work suffer.—The Sunday School Builder.

International Sunday School Lesson for October 7

ABRAHAM, A BLESSING TO THE WORLD

Lesson: Gen. 12:1-4; 18:17, 18; 22:15-18
Golden Text: Genesis 12:3

Introductory

The general subject of the new quarter's lesson is the missionary message of the Bible. Abraham "the hero of faith" was studied in the second quarter's lessons of this year. In today's lesson he is studied as a religious pioneer.

The Lesson

"Get thee out of thy country and from thy kindred," is not always the easiest command for a man to obey. But thus came the word to Abraham from Jehovah and it was accompanied by the promise: "I will make of thee a great nation, and I will bless thee, and make thy name great . . . and in thee shall all the families of the earth be blessed." The separation must come if the blessing was to follow. In this manner of choosing Abraham to go forth God was working for the ultimate blessing and redemption of the world. The second selection reveals the close relation existing between God and Abraham—that of confidential friends. "Shall I hide from Abraham that which I do?" asks Jehovah, but the question is a negative statement that nothing shall be concealed from Abraham. The third group of verses record the scene following the offering up of Isaac, Abraham's only son, as a sacrifice. Knowing the sincerity of the man with whom he is dealing Jehovah takes the will for the actual deed—it was as though Isaac had really been made a burnt offering. This act causes a renewal of the promises of Jehovah to the Man of Faith.

Leading Thoughts

1. It is only the man of faith who can become a "friend of God." 2. The person who is lacking in a sacrificial spirit will never be a blessing to any one. 3. "We have promised great things to God, but God has promised greater things to us."—St. Francis.

An Interesting Observation

By H. D. Riggs

While working with the boys of the church vacation school at Warrens, Wis., and making shelves with blocks to represent the books of the Bible, we noticed that the number of chapters in Isaiah was the same as the number of books in the Bible—sixty-six. But more interesting is the fact that the portion now termed First Isaiah has thirty-nine chapters, and Second Isaiah, twenty-seven which is the numerical division of the Bible, there being thirty-nine books in the Old Testament and twenty-seven in the new. This may be used as an aid to memory.

The Open Forum

PLEASE DON'T ALL ANSWER AT ONCE

What has become of our prayer meetings of late? The time was, when we gathered on a mid-week night and gave expression to our individual experiences of the work of grace in our hearts and lives, or other phrases of Christian experience—this on the part of the laity. Now, the pastor, in a "few remarks," absorbs all the time then announces a hymn to close the services. The "few remarks" may be, and often are, more edifying than the stereotyped ten minute response or prayer of a prosaic "old faithful," but are we always to sit as sponges or as spoon-fed babies? Many of us, when an occasional opportunity is offered, find we have become tongue-tied. If the best prayer meetings are those in which one has taken part (a time-honored expression), then the pastor is monopolizing all the "goodness." Is this change for the better or for the worse? If for the worse let's head it off quick, and I'll cease to be

A. KICKER.

"HONESTY IN THE PULPIT"

In a recent number of THE BAPTIST an article appeared on "A Page of Opinion" under this caption. The contents of the article are altogether commendable, and the eloquence, ability and sincerity of the man who uttered the sentiments quoted are unquestioned; yet the article illustrated with startling emphasis the impassé in which the church finds itself today. By what laws of thought a man as big as the speaker quoted can persuade himself that the promotion of honesty in the pulpit requires a congregation to accept with encouragement if not with approval whatever comes over the top of the pulpit, while no requirement lies upon the preacher to be honest enough to quit voluntarily and insistently when he has ceased to believe what the pulpit he occupies was built to promote—this is a problem too deep for solution.

We all admit that a man has no right to speculate in the stock market with other people's money and that an employe must not prosecute his private enterprises in hours for which his employer pays; but it seems that a congregation of Christians must listen with patience and without the withdrawal of support to the sentiments of Celsus or Cerinthus simply because the preacher announces them as "new" discoveries in the fields of truth. Just what brand of honesty are we expected to promote?

The church of Jesus is fighting over again the Gnostic battle. The attack is with new weapons but the issues are 1800 years old. We desire to be charitable, but it is difficult to believe that men as big as some of the radical leaders do not understand where they are trying to lead Christian thought. The opera house is open—why not be honest enough to go there when one has ceased to believe nearly everything for which historical Christianity stands? What is a "crook," if not the man who preaches one kind of doctrine and accepts another kind of pay? If the attempt to promulgate pagan philosophy in Christian pulpits is not dishonest, what would constitute dishonesty?

D. H. WOODWARD.

Edmeston, N. Y.

THE CHURCH AND ITS COLLEGE STUDENTS

When young people leave home to go to college it is for the most part an indication of purpose and worthy ambition. They do not go away to become "high brows" as so many of those who remain at home so often seem to think but to get an education that they may prepare themselves to live their lives and to do their part in the world's work to the best degree possible.

When young people so move out beyond the home town opportunities it is an honor to the churches which have reared them. Should the church not therefore express its appreciation of this honor by some kind of open recognition of it? It is also a critical time in the lives of the young people who are leaving. The church has a responsibility at this point which should be exercised in order to keep its young people in close and friendly contact with the church. Why should not the church or the Young Peoples' Society recognize this by having a rousing send-off social for their college young people—even though there be but one or two, or some kind of recognition of it in the regular Sunday morning service. The pastor might speak a few words letting them know that the prayers and interest of the church would follow them. He should also point out to them that in going to college the development of the religious life is fully as important as is the development of the intellectual life and urge them to affiliate themselves with their college church regularly and at once.

Another critical time is the student's Christmas or other vacation periods. The student does not come home feeling that he is above other people. More often when he finds his place in the church taken by some one else he is lonesome. Why not a B. Y. P. U. social at Christmas time for all those who are home for vacation?

The third critical time is when the college student comes home with his diploma. I know of one church which one Sunday last June had a special morning service in which it honored four of its young people who had just graduated from college and at the same time seven others who were just graduating from high school and in behalf of the church each of these graduates was presented with a copy of Weymouth's "New Testament in Modern Speech."

Are these not ways in which are brought home to a church's young people something of the call of the church and of its Christ?

Champaign, Ill. MARTIN S. BRYANT.

Moving Pictures Have Helped This Pastor

REV. J. A. VACHON is pastor of the church at Cheshire, Mass. We learned that he made considerable use of moving pictures in his work and have asked him to tell us frankly his experience. His letter follows:

Some time ago you wrote and asked me to write an article relative to the use of motion pictures in our church. We do use motion pictures—we have not yet secured a stereopticon—but there does not seem to be very much to tell about them.

We have a machine of the safety standard type, a Victor Safety Cinema. It works very nicely and simply. It has the advantage of not requiring a fireproof booth or a state licensed operator. These operators nearly all belong to the union and demand big pay and double pay for Sunday work. One of my deacons runs the machine with the help of a young man. The supply of films has not been as satisfactory as I could have wished as there were very few biblical and distinctly religious films from which to choose from the list furnished me by the company from which we bought the machine, the United Projector & Film Corporation of Buffalo, N. Y. They do have a few excellent subjects which they advertise in THE BAPTIST and other religious papers I have seen, but these could be almost counted on the fingers of your two hands. The service I have received from these people has been very good. They have fine educational and scenic pictures which we have used very satisfactorily. How the rentals compare with those of ordinary theater type films I do not know but we find these to be fair priced though their best and newest biblical pictures are among their highest priced films. There are very few places where one can get films for this type of machine so our choice is limited. The choice is growing all the time, however, and will have to, for the theater film folks are beginning to refuse to rent to churches because they fear competition and know the churches are the first to complain at bad pictures.

There was very little opposition on the part of the people here to using pictures, though a few have stuck out until

(Continued on page 1085)

The Chimney Corner

The Home of the Brave

Chapter IV.: The Battle of the Tubs

Dear Rupert:

If you only knew it, my dear fellow, there's better sport down here on Mansion Avenue than in all Canada, so do come home. Our first week is not yet over, but I feel a new spice in life. Why travel after all? See America first! Especially this particular corner of America.

Let me regale you with some of our problems. The butler whom you selected for us is all that he should be—his figure is "not lost, but gone before," if you know what I mean, and he adds a butleresque dignity to our mansion. Patricia had quite set her heart on a maroon uniform with dull medieval buttons, but I think it's utterly inhuman to require anybody to be a flunky, so I thrashed that question to a finish in a really masterful way. Frankly, however, I hardly know whether the last deciding voice was mine or not, for 'Awkins informed us that 'e 'adn't never been hasked to doll up like that, and 'e 'adn't no wish to begin, hif you please. So that catastrophe is averted. He solemnly sentinels the house day and night in his perpetual dress suit. One thing I shall appreciate about heaven is that there is no night there, therefore no dress suits.

As we sat at a late breakfast on our third morning here 'Awkins was absent at the front door in brisk conversation with persons unseen—but not unheard!

I wish I could picture to you the scandalized horror on his face when he returned. Wild horses could not draw it out of him in Patricia's presence, but alone—as man to man—he opened up. It seems that three of our neighbors had come to apply for baths! Personally I think that they were entirely within their rights, for during your tireless putting of this house in order had not five very large and substantial bathtubs been deposited on the front walk, where they leisurely rested until escorted indoors and connected with the city water works? Well? What more do you want? A house with five tubs must be a public bath place for the neighborhood; naturally—

It seems self-evident to me.

Not so to 'Awkins.

And not so to Patricia. She quite went up in the air over it. The Great Unwashed are nearer than she supposed!

"My dear," said I, "they need not remain unwashed as far as I am concerned, for my own tub stands idle eleven and three-quarter hours out of every twelve. Allowing fifteen minutes to a bath it could easily clean up forty-seven gentlemen neighbors a day, or 329 a week, or 1,155 a year—no small contribution for one tub to make to mankind." I have really become quite serious about it. My bathtub haunts me! Who am I to have sole possession of a utility which would bring such comfort to my neighbors? Especially with four other tubs in the house also standing idle.

This is just to prepare you for the next Battle of the Tubs which will be fought on your return, for you are a man of sense, and I think you'll see eye to eye with me. Patricia is scathing in her remarks. She assures me that I've always had a 'queer streak,' and she hopes to goodness I won't let it grow on me now that I've passed my fortieth birthday. Forty is a horrible age, she said. One is either susceptible or adamant. She, she assured me, is susceptible, I, on the other hand, am adamant.

"My darling sister," I say, "you are adamant. You are as hard and as cool and as useless to this neighborhood as all five of those useless tubs put together! I, on the other hand, am susceptible. I see what a bathtub stands for, for the first time in my life, and I am determined to share my blessings."

"Tubs!" wails Patricia. "Are we to wreck this blissful being together just because of modern plumbing, Ricky Dear?"

"Not if you're sensible, Pat," I answer and stroll out for a walk. You are needed, Rupert, either as umpire or general, I care not which.

My walks in this old changed neighborhood are absolutely Rip Van Winklian. Second-hand and fruit stores two blocks away where the Brantinghams used to live! Fancy! The house where the proud Covingtons used to live is now inhabited by more families than I can count, apparently a family to a room—and the families not small.

I used to court Beatrice Covington in the good old days when I was susceptible instead of adamantine, so yesterday, after a third skirmish in the Battle of the Tubs, I went out for my usual ante-bellum stroll and saw the Covington house. For auld lang syne's sake I ventured up those appallingly steep steps and actually went indoors. It smelled like seventy boiled dinners and the hold of a ship in rough weather when the hatches are down. I even dared to knock at the door of the very room where Beatrice and I used to sit and vow eternal devotion to one another; there was no answer, so I turned the knob and walked in. But hades of my ancestors! Except for the memorable and ineffacable black marble mantelpiece the room was unrecognizable. It is appalling that people must live in this crowded way—two beds, unmade; a kitchen table still littered with unwashed dishes; three broken chairs; and junk everywhere—piles of clothes; boxes of litter; coal in one corner; and, in the sacred old Covington grate, potatoes were stored! My dear boy, I saw for the first time how the other half lives, and I went home to fight anew the Battle of the Tubs. If we're going to live in this neighborhood I, for one, am going to be a neighbor.

As I passed out of that house I heard a strange sound: a mother crooning to her child. There's just as much chance

This department is conducted by Miss Margaret T. Applegarth. Communications to her may be addressed in care of THE BAPTIST.

The Cottage of Content

By Carol Haynes

As I went to the village, looking for a lark,
I heard a woman singing, singing in the dark.
She stood before the window; I saw a lamp flare up;
I saw her scrub a shining pan and fill a china cup.
I saw her rinsing saucers to set them in a pile;
I watched her fold a white cloth, singing all the while.
A deep tune, a dear tune—like a lullaby:
The little leaves were listening, beneath the bending sky.
A sweet song, a slow song—I held my breath to hear;
And all the night was hearkening, and all the stars came near.

Meadow-larks and church tunes, the tricks that fiddlers learn;
There's a lot of music to make a man turn.
But there's naught can equal, when all's said and spent,
A woman's low singing in a cottage of content.

"Peace be on your threshold, and blessings good and great—"
I went bareheaded past the little gate;
I forgot the village, and I forgot the boys—
The brave streets, the broad streets, full of light and noise.
I sat on the hillside to watch the moon rise
With songs on my own lips, and dreams before my eyes.

—Good Housekeeping.

for that child as there ever was for me, and today I saw it out on the stoop of the Covington's house. A nice gurgling little fellow. I got to thinking of Beatrice's mincing thin-waisted effeminate boy who might have been living in this neighborhood if fashion had not moved eastward. I'm sincere in saying I think the gurgler has more in his favor! He even has the prospect of my tub, you see.

Give my love to the family, and bring them home. Canada's no place to be in September, when there's a dinner in the oven of a certain house on Mansion Avenue. Come and share it with—

Rick."

(To be continued.)

The Young Reserves

The Air-Ship Lady

JIMMIE didn't like to do it! He said he'd rather do almost anything than get up in a street-car and give his seat to a lady. But his father said that that was perfectly ridiculous, and that no gentlemen ought to feel that way, for ladies were ladies, whether they were young or old, black or white. They did a great many tiresome difficult tasks in somebody's home all day long—picking up things dropped by careless men, taking care of boys who might (but of course one hoped, not) or might not grow up into rude boys, but who were a whole armful of trouble for at least three long weary years, keeping mothers indoors to watch them, etc., etc., etc. Oh, you'd love the things Jimmie's father said about the work that ladies did, and the heavy burdens they carried for all of us which made it quite in order for any boy to be polite to them in public.

"Just so," said Jimmie, who always said that when he was convinced about anything.

Well, he could hardly wait for his next street-car ride, and how he did hope that the car would be full and that he would have a seat which he could offer to somebody.

It was! And he had! And he did!

She was the littlest bit of an old, old lady. A big puff of wind would have blown her quite away. Jimmie rather liked giving her his seat. She was dreadfully cheerful about it, too. She didn't just take it. Neither did she gush. But she squeezed herself over in it and said: "There's room for you, too."

Jimmie simply had to share half of his own seat. No sooner had he sat down than she said: "It's very windy today."

Jimmie said indeed it was—very.

"When I was a little girl," said the old lady, "I waited a whole week for a windy day just like this. You'll never guess what I wanted the wind to do! Give it up?"

Jimmie gave it up!

She beamed at him over the tops of her spectacles: "I wanted to fly away!"

"Goodness!" said Jimmie.

"Exactly!" beamed the old lady. "Goodness! And the nice part of it was that my brother waited a whole week for the same windy day for we had quite made up our minds to blow away together."

Jimmie moved closer to her. He wasn't afraid any more. "Was your brother as little as you?"

"Not exactly," she smiled. "He was really as little as you. And that's quite big, isn't it?"

"Indeed it is," boasted Jimmie; "and when your windy day came did you really blow away?"

The little old lady chuckled. It was a perfectly darling sound. "I'd better begin at the beginning," she said; "you see, he'd heard a wonderful thing. He heard that if you jumped off a high place with an open umbrella in your hand the wind would blow you miles and miles! Well, he was so small, and I was so small, and the umbrella was so big, that we thought it would be more fun to blow away together. We decided that the first time we'd start from the roof of the stable shed. It was high enough but not too high. We waited and waited for the windy day, and finally it came; so we kissed my mother, we kissed my father, we kissed our baby sister and our nurse. Then we climbed to the roof of the shed, we opened the umbrella. We both clung tightly to the handle with both hands. We jumped off into space and fully expected to be carried miles and miles and miles from home."

"Were you?" asked Jimmie breathlessly.

"What do you suppose?" asked the old lady with a perfectly comical grin on her face.

"I'm sure I don't know!" Jimmie said. "Half a mile, maybe?"

"Not an inch did we blow, my dear boy; but the two of us went falling down, down, crashingly, sickeningly, right down into the pig pen, where the astonished pig was wallowing around in nice rich black wet mud. He didn't know what to make of an umbrella and two such muddy aviators. He grunted in circles all around us."

"Were you hurt?" asked Jimmie, spellbound.

"My pride was awfully hurt," the old lady chuckled," and I broke my arm and my collar bone. As for my poor brother he broke his ankle. And the pig broke the umbrella. So whenever I see a high wind like the wind today I think of the day I tried to be an airship."

Jimmie sat and looked at her: "You know," he said timidly, "I'm afraid maybe you might blow away today, it's so dreadfully windy and you're so very little. When you get off the car maybe I could come along, too, and hold your elbow on the street."

"Aren't you the politest boy that ever was! I think that would be very nice. I'm going to see my brother."

"The one you blew away with?"

"The very same. He's an invalid now. He lives at 910 Ardmore Court, it's an apartment house."

Jimmie gulped. And gasped. And gurgled. "I live there too!" he said. "Your brother's the man who whittled me a boat, isn't he?"

"No doubt of it!" said the little old lady, as arm in arm they left the street car. Jimmie has solemnly told me again and again that it pays to be pleasant to street-car ladies because you never can tell who they are! You never can tell!

Answers to Last Week's Puzzles

A Hunt in a Hindu Jungle:

1. Mongoose. 2. Leopard. 3. Alligator. 4. Serpent. 5. Bullfrog. 6. Peacock. 7. Parrot. 8. Scorpion. 9. Boar. 10. Centipede. 11. Opossum. 12. Cobra. 13. Elephant. 14. Panther. 15. Monkey. 16. Python.

A Chinese Age Contest:

1. Village. 2. Marriage. 3. Courage. 4. Image. 5. Damage. 6. Homage. 7. Bondage. 8. Plumage. 9. Baggage. 10. Parsonage. 11. Postage. 12. Dotage.

Missing Letters in a Japanese Home:

1. Mat. 2. Life. 3. Hole. 4. Roof. 5. Lots. 6. Draft. 7. Beauty. 8. Feathers. 9. Baby. 10. Jinrikisha.

---

B. Y. P. U. of A.

Convention Impressions

This convention has meant to me a new awakening and a new vision of "the attractive Christ," a vision which with God's help, I am going to take back home and try to give to others.—Harry E. Balcom.

The convention has been such an inspiration that I desire its prayers joined with mine that my son, John J. Wade, may be led to give his life to the service of our Master, Jesus Christ.—John's mother.

I have seen a new vision and reconsecrated my life to my Lord and the extension of his kingdom on earth. I accept the responsibility that faces my generation.—May F. Crowley.

The happiest days of my life.—D. L. Murser.

Never before have I realized that God really needs young people for his work so greatly. This convention has given me inspiration to last all my life. Not only did "Acres of Diamonds" surpass my expectation but so did the convention in every respect.—Floyd Glisson.

What did I lose by coming to the convention? Nothing. What did I gain? Friendship and inspiration to go back and work for "the attractive Christ."—Dolly Heidenburg.

This B. Y. P. U. convention has given more inspiration for better Christian work than ever before.—Alberta R. Lange.

Never before have I realized the value of getting together. Most of all was I impressed by the early prayer meeting in the open air. It has been the greatest thing of my life thus far.—Harriet Davis.

Young People's Work

Topic for October 7

LESSONS FROM THE PSALMS: GUIDE POSTS FOR YOUTH

Psalm 119:9-16, 105

By E. A. Shulls

It will be difficult to comprehend the beauty of the psalm unless we are able to catch a glimpse of the psalmist's conception and purpose. The unnamed author has expressed his meditation in the Law of Jehovah in twenty-two sections corresponding to the Hebrew alphabet. Each section contains eight verses, every verse beginning with the letter heading the section. The apparent repetitions occuring in almost every verse, bring out the beauty and power of poetic expression by reiterating the single subject. "Its verses are like ripples of a sunny sea, alike and impressive in their march, and yet catching the light with a difference and breaking on the shore each in a tune of its own" (McLaren). Like a violinist he has produced most wonderful variations of poetical music, yet with only four strings. We stagger at the depth of thought brought out in the new setting of each verse. We are told that St. Augustine, after finishing his comments on the Book of Psalms, hesitated to express himself on this psalm and said to his friends, "As often as I assayed to think thereon, it always exceeded the powers of my intent thought and the utmost grasp of my faculties."

As we read the section (vs 9-16) which constitutes our lesson, we are impressed with the synonymous terms used to designate the Law of Jehovah. Word—the whole body of divine revelation, i.e, what God has spoken, the Bible; commandments—what God wishes us to do or leave undone; statutes—the line of conduct we are to pursue; judgments—God's standards of right and wrong; testimonies—God's witness in the revealed law, to sin and holiness; precepts—God's specific charges in all concerns and duties of life; ways—the course man should take to fulfill the end of his creation and redemption as made possible through him who is "the Way, the Truth and the Life." All this the psalmist concludes tends to the purifying of life and is the source of holiness to those who give heed to it. And let us not forget that the psalmist's "law of Jehovah" was not our whole Bible but in all probability only the books of Moses, the early historical books and perhaps some of the early prophetic books. Compared with our own complete Bible his was an unfinished book, yet he could find in it the source of right conduct and purity as well as guidance for life's duties (vs 105).

The psalmist does not deal merely with theories but occupies himself with the most practical problems of life. From contemplating the blessedness of the "law of Jehovah" he turns meditatively to life itself. The light of God has entered his soul and in this light he saw life from a new angle. (Compare Isaiah's experience in chapter 6). A question of grave concern now occupies his thought. How shall a young man make a clean way—with purity of life and conduct—through this defiling world? The temptations of youthful lust are besetting sins; life is pliable and will yield to influences. What lives are marred through the follies of youth! (Read the exhortations contained in the twelfth chapter of Ecclesiastes). And there is but one answer to the problem of youth. It is found in verse eleven; by shaping our conduct and life according to the "law of Jehovah." The Bible is the only source of inspiration to clean holy living. Examples of this truth are abundant. Only those seeking God with a whole heart shall find it (vs 10).

We dare not pass over the personal element in this meditation. Note how often the psalmist uses the personal pronoun. It is the personal element of the scriptures that appeals to men. The life experiences of Bible characters become our own as we learn to use their personal pronouns. Their confessions and prayers become the cry of our hearts as we catch a glimpse of our own imperfect lives.

In the last portion (vs. 13-16) the psalmist expresses his delight in having had respect unto the "law of Jehovah." Like the traveler in the Alps he has climbed the summit and looks back. How much pleasure he has had in measuring his life by the holy standards! But that is not all, he looks forward with anticipation. The statutes of Jehovah shall be his continued delight. The constant application of these principles make for happiness in life. The meditation closes with a vow, "I will not forget thy word."

Out at Pa's

Every year, on the day when one doesn't labor, the tribe of Indians known as the "Os-ka-wa-was" or more familiarly as the "Oskies," meet at the home of Big Chief "Pa" Phelps in Wilmette, one of the Chicago suburbs. This annual "pow-wow" is always held in great anticipation by both the old and the new Oskies.

This year a group of sixty or more Indians gathered together and beat a path (by train) to the Big Chief's home. After greetings were over, the blonde Indians played the brunette ones in a game of baseball. Their strength was readily exhausted and after a strenuous hour or so of playing, they all lined up for the "eats." My! did ever anything taste so good? Even the mosquitoes hovered around waiting for their share of the feast. Salad, sandwiches, pickles, olives, cakes, lemonade, quickly disappeared and the Oskies were scattered all around the lawn, draping trees, sidewalks, swings, kiddie-kars, and steps. In spite of the fact that they were appeasing their hunger, the Oskies found plenty of time to talk between bites. Laughing, talking, joking, they could be heard for blocks around, for hadn't some of the Oskies been away for a whole year and wasn't there just lots and lots to tell them?

"Run, sheep, run!" was heard a few minutes later, as thirty of the Indians, posing as sheep (?) tried to get away from thirty more Indians. Of course, with such signals as "Boston," "Denver" and so on, the sheep tried to win. We'll not say just which side did win, though.

After being so overheated, it was proper for the Oskies to cool off, so down to Lake Michigan they went, ten or twelve in each machine. Bathing suits were donned and in a few minutes the cool waters were receiving the Indians. By the time they got back to the Big Chief's home, they were literally starved, and ready for the big feed. The "hot dogs" hadn't barked once, before they were captured. Salad, beans, fruit, cake, coffee, followed quickly. The big fire was lighted, and the Indians roasted corn and toasted marshmallows. Wild war whoops were given, and then they quieted down. Songs were sung, sweetly or reverently, as occasion required. It was indeed a wonderful sight: a hundred young people, around an immense bonfire at twilight, singing songs of praise and loyalty in honor of their Christ. In the hush that followed the singing of the "Doxology," one of the Oskie Bee Segsworth, bade them, as a group, farewell, for she is going to carry on the principles and ideals of B. Y. P. U. as she has learned them, in China. Then came that wonderful song, "God be with you till we meet again," and the loyal Oskies parted once more, filled with enthusiasm and reverence, and ready for the fall and winter work.

Convention Impressions

This convention has helped me to more fully realize that there is nothing more attractive than having the spirit of Jesus Christ within us.—Irene Klauder.

I have enjoyed all the sessions that I have attended and hope to go to another.—Daisy Wells.

This B. Y. P. U. convention has made me desire and eager to see others won to Christ.—Ruth Reid.

Our Own Folks

Sixteenth Annual Hungarian Convention

By Edwin L. Kutz

Hungarian Baptists of America held their sixteenth annual convention at Cleveland, Ohio, August 21-26. This convention embraces over thirty churches and mission stations in the United States and Canada. Twenty-four churches, scattered from the Atlantic seaboard to the Mississippi River, sent about 200 delegates and as many guests. It is estimated that at the nightly evangelistic services congregations varied from 700 to 1,000 persons. The entertaining church, Buckeye Road and 118th Street, Rev. William Dauda, pastor, was compelled to request a neighboring American Evangelical church to place its building at our disposal. This was done with a grace and courtesy that we shall never forget.

The gathering was characterized throughout by genuine Christian fellowship, enthusiasm, and a spirit of progress. Far-reaching decisions were made that will render our official organ, the Gospel Messenger and our Sunday-school quarterly more efficient than ever. The first mentioned paper was published at a profit for the first time last year. The book concern, only three years old, declared a dividend of 5 per cent for the year. Through the foreign missionary board $1,189.42 was forwarded to different parts of the world, most of it going to crippled Hungary. This amount does not include the New World Movement pledges. The Women's League maintained three missionary pastors in Hungary last year and voted to do the same this year and to send a Christmas gift of $2.00 to every Hungarian Baptist pastor in Hungary who has suffered untold privations since the war. It is worthy of note that additions to churches by baptisms amounted to 189, or an increase of 12 per cent. Several mission stations were reported and a new church voted into the union. Our insurance and sick benefit association indicated progress. A responsible bureau for broadcasting Baptist news in Hungarian publications was organized.

For the first time in the history of the convention, several public figures appeared and spoke words of commendation. These were the pastor of a Hungarian Presbyterian Church, the Hungarian consul of Cleveland, the Hungarian alderman of the district where the meetings were held, the city editor of the second largest Hungarian daily, the editor of a local weekly paper, and Mr. Louis K. Birinyi, a distinguished Hungarian barrister who presented the congressional leaflet, "Justice to Hungary." This means that Hungarian public opinion is beginning to recognize the Hungarian Baptist movement as a force to be reckoned with.

The Women's League, the Young People's Union and the Sunday-school Association also had enthusiastic meetings which indicated vision and achievement.

Of the many inspiring speakers we will mention but one, Dr. E. McDonald, the indefatigable secretary of the Cleveland City Mission Society, who on two occasions brought telling messages of cheer and power to us.

Officers for the ensuing year are: Pres., Rev. S. Gazsi; vice-pres., Rev. S. Orosz; clerks, Rev. M. Majorcsak and Rev. Andrew Toth; treas., Rev. M. Fabian; gen. secy., Rev. S. Orosz. Next year the convention will be held at Garfield, N. J., Rev. N. Kovacs, pastor.

Word from India

Dear home friends:

We are glad to be back in Contai again. There is no place like home, especially when it has in it the chubbiest, happiest baby on earth.

An old villager says we are sure to have a famine this year because the weather signs are identical with those preceding the two previous famines which he has seen. There were rains for about a week at the end of February and the weather was crisp and cool for a month longer than usual.

Leprosy seems to be on the increase. It was discovered that one woman here was a leper and she was told she must be examined. Immediately her temperature rose a number of degrees and she said, "I will put a rope around my neck and commit suicide but I will not go to the doctor." Another leper was informed that he should receive treatment. He answered in no uncertain tone, "I will drink poison. I will cut my throat but I will not leave my native village." After an immense amount of persuasion both decided to go to the leper asylum. There they would have received injections which probably would have prevented the spread of the disease and might even have produced a cure but they stayed only a few hours, then went into the jungle and have not been seen since.

Yesterday there was a big Hindu festival in Contai. In front of the idol house was a bamboo trapeze beneath which a fire was burning briskly. The feet of the worshippers were roped to the trapeze. With bent heads and clasped hands they worshipped the flames below them. While a native clarinet with all its shrillness mingled its notes with the angry beating of a couple of drums, a man danced with frenzy around the fire's edge. This heathen festival is supposed to last ten days. At its closing sessions worshippers walk barefooted through the fire and have spikes put through the flesh of their backs. The spikes are attached by ropes to the trapeze. The devotees swing back and forth sometimes until the flesh is torn from their backs and death is the result of injuries received.

India certainly does need Christ. There is no hope except in him. But, blessed be his name forever, the gospel was never listened to with more receptiveness than it has been this season. The story of Christ and him crucified has been constantly proclaimed to these terrifically needy souls. We have daily used one of Nelson's large pictures of the crucifixion. "I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me" has been proved to be true. To all classes from the crudest jungle man to the college graduate, the sacred attraction of Calvary has made a powerful appeal.

In one village where persecutions have been rife, the Christians have remained faithful. Threat of fines, beatings and lawsuits have only drawn the servants of the Nazarene closer together. From the mouths of Hindus have come the words, "We will also become Christians." One man in this same village a year ago was an idolater in dense heathen darkness, with no hope for this life or that to come. He has now accepted Christ and during the past twelve months he has been faithful in prayer and Bible reading. A short time ago he said to us, "The religion of Jesus is a religion of great joy."

One girl from the fisher village has been very happy in her newly found Saviour and her life is a drawing power to her Hindu brother. We shall depend on your petitions to the throne that her entire village may soon accept Christ. We were encouraged when two others followed the Lord in baptism. A high-caste farmer, a weaver and a priest have all said they hope in the near future to become Christians.

There are so many who have only one step between them and eternal joy. They will take the last step providing you dear home friends will continue in persistent faithful prayer. The great need is the power of the Holy Spirit to bring conviction and decision. The victory depends on you. The battery must be charged if the lights burn brightly. We are depending implicitly on you to charge the battery.

Three of our Illinois friends on their world tour have given us the great pleasure of a visit. The latch string hangs out for all of you. Your good letters have cheered our hearts.

John A. Howard and Family.

Contai, Bengal, India.

April 10, 1923.

Chicago-Iowa Letter

By J. W. Weddell

Itinerary

Things move straight along among the Iowa churches. Dr. W. B. Hutchinson, who was called from Burlington to take hold of the Northeastern district of the state, has his work well in hand. He first took up the old reorganized church at De Witt, where church invigorator, Earl D. Sims with the aid of the state did such notable work, leaving the property in splendid shape and all bills paid. But of course the main thing was to get the house full, and after years of a closed sanctuary—God's judgment seems to be on an empty meeting house—this is a difficult thing to do. But Doctor Hutchinson took vigorous hold, and with his large optimism, summoned the people to the help of the Lord against the mighty; then laid hands on this pastor at large to carry on the work for a season. It has been slow and taxing, but the attendance by the end of the month had multiplied itself by seven, which is not saying very much—but something.

Doctor Hutchinson, on the other hand, lately visited Strawberry Point where he had to close up the work, and take steps to turn over the property to the state convention, as is right and prudent. And yet that is the country church from which Doctor Clough hailed, though he did not come out and join the Baptists till he got to Burlington under Dr. G. J. Johnson's strong influence.

My Church by the Side of the Road

The road is the Lincoln Highway, which someone has aptly called "America's Main Street." One's experience here is interesting though novel. It is good to greet the friends from East and West as they motor through, a ceaseless procession. One that would make himself friendly will find friends everywhere and renew old friendships. Here this morning at the hotel breakfast table is a good fellow from Sioux City, our former preaching station; and here in the evening at the side is a family from Irving Park, another place of acting pastorate. They come and go daily. What I would like to see sometime is a wayside chapel kept open all the time, where any time, particularly on the Lord's day, the hastening traveler might pause and decently worship. Some of our Christian people keep their Sundays thus: why not oftener? Why not more?

Here is a little episode. The other day, at another preaching point, Doctor Conant and his wife were en route across the country. They passed the Iowa City Baptist Church at the hour of service. "Let's go in and see whether the minister here preaches the truth" our brother said unawares. The next moment as he looked toward the pulpit, he exclaimed sotto voce, "Wife, where do you think we are? There's W—." Well the said preacher was perhaps a bit more orthodox than usual that day; so it was all right.

Better try it, whenever the church door is open on the road. You might do worse.

"They Know not what They Do."

All over the country you run across "new thought" and kindred cult. I am convinced that a great number of people are led into such fads, Christian Science, for example, unwittingly, or at least at first unthinkingly. They do not know what it involves. Indeed it is a judgment upon us for our past failure to establish men and women in true evangelical doctrine. The general good habits of health and amiability so pronounced, draw many to its genial associations, who do not stop to consider the inner, rank denial of the faith. At best, as a theological system, it is distinctly unitarian in its conceptions, denying Christ's deity, and, though adopting his name, recognizing him only as climbing humanly up to the Godhead, which Godhead we may all attain by the same mere mental process. Thus all of us in a way are smaller Christs; each his own savior. Moreover they are essentially harking back with Mrs. Besant into incipient pagan theosophy, setting before them a kind of an intellectual Nirvana as regards outer conditions that really only separates them from Hinduism and Buddhism by their good-natured recognition of each other on the way. Do they know what they do?

What would you say, if it was suggested to use a Baptist church for a Christian Science service? Of course in ordinary sympathy the Christian sanctuary would at once readily be granted for a simple, Christian burial service, whoever it was that had passed away. But what if the gloss of "Mother Eddy's" interpolations and interpretations were proposed to be superimposed upon the Scripture reading? I think I know your instant answer, as I know my own.

Nothing but the word of God in an evangelical meeting house on occasions of sorrow and loss—this and nothing else! "Lord, to whom shall we go, Thou hast the words of eternal life." We close with this statement of clear fact that ought to determine the attitude of all true Christians toward Christian Science—in life or death. Christian Science has no place for the tears of Jesus, because, according to Mary Baker Eddy, there is no suffering. Christian Science has no place for the blood of Jesus, because, by the same bold mental leap, there is no sin. One shudders to think of it.

What is this but plain apostasy? No, as we cannot by any means get together fraternally or sympathetically in a Roman Catholic service, that puts the name of the Mary, known and loved, before the Christ, so we cannot give place to any Christian Science service, which puts another lesser Mary, however much regarded by some, between us and our divine Lord.

"For there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved."

Something New in Summer Camps

By Smith Thomas Ford

Do you like to see children happy? Not only children with toy automobiles and toy horses and tricycles in summer and sleds in winter, but children from homes where they see these things only through store windows—children from no home at all, with eyes longing for love and beauty and little bodies suffering for food. This summer, if you were at Delavan Lake, Wis., where the Central Baptist Children's Home, Maywood, Ill., has its summer camp, you would see children who have forgotten their longings for impossible things because of the possible things this camp provides.

A summer camp is something new in the history of any children's home with which I am familiar. Here on an island connected with the mainland by only a causeway, are forty-two acres left as a legacy to the home by Deacon Arnold of the Delavan Baptist Church, a man who loved children. Under giant forest trees were six tents for the boys and a huge tent for the girls. Each child had a cot of his own. An administration building, constructed substantially of wood contained the mess hall, the quarters of Superintendent and Mrs. MacGillivray, the matron, and of the rest of the staff.

Connected with the camp were several vegetable gardens where the older boys practiced intensive gardening each morning. At two o'clock each day the boys enjoyed swimming for an hour under the supervision of a caretaker. From three to four, under similar supervision, the girls had their swimming hour. Play life was encouraged. Religious instruction had its appointed place not only on Sundays, but on week days. The camp was occupied during July and August by the entire staff and all the children. The Northwestern Railroad extends the courtesy of free transportation, a kindness greatly appreciated by the home board.

Next year, do as I did. Drop in at the camp unannounced and I am confident that you will receive a royal welcome. You will find a hearty earnestness in the work on the part of Superintendent and Mrs. MacGillivray, and a response of cooperation and confidence on the part of the eighty children.

Church News by States

Atlantic Coast

MAINE

Pastoral Changes: Rev. T. B. Hughes, after several years of service in the old and important Damariscotta Church, goes to the church at Kennebunk. Rev. A. W. Brown of Franklin, becomes pastor at Gray. Rev. C. D. Nutter of Hodgdon, has entered upon his new pastorate at Old Town.

North Haven: One of the most attractive church edifices in the state was dedicated Sept. 2. The large expense involved in its construction was met both by the generosity of the summer people and the residents of the island. The building will be used as a community church. The title is with the Baptists; Episcopalians will have the use of the building for their services on certain days. Rev. L. G. Perry, the pastor, has brought into working harmony the religious forces of the whole community, including those who are resident only a part of the year.

Danforth: A new parsonage has been provided by the church. Five new members were recently received.

The Free Baptist and Congregational churches of Harrison are working on plans for federation.

Parker's Head, Popham, and Small Point: Prof. Herbert L. Newman of Colby College spent his summer vacation in earnest and important work on these fields. He called on the entire parish and was helpful in many ways.

Oakland: The church and community extended a hearty welcome to Rev. Francis S. Bernauer and family on Sept. 4. Deacon George B. Manter spoke for the church; former pastor Kennedy presided; greetings of the local churches were presented; Dr. I. B. Mower bore the greetings of the United Baptist Convention of Maine. This strong church with effective leadership will certainly give a good account of itself in service rendered to the community, the state, and the kingdom of God.

NEW YORK

A community service effort is being tried out at Bolton Landing, Lake George, where the pastor of the church took over an undesirable moving picture house and with the help of a committee supervised the films. The pastor is Rev. G. J. Smith.

THE CHURCH AT ROMULUS called Rev. John Filson of Stamford. He is already on the field.

THE BAPTIST, PRESBYTERIAN AND METHODIST churches of Essex Village, Lake Champlain, recently federated and are now worshipping in the Baptist building. The Presbyterian building is used for social and community purposes.

THE BAPTIST TEMPLE, BROOKLYN, maintained its reputation for a strong preaching ministry during the summer months. Dr. J. D. Freeman of England preached during July; Dr. E. P. West of Houston, Tex., ministered the first Sunday in August; Dr. Edward C. Kunkle of the Metropolitan Board of Promotion, supplied the second Sunday; on Aug. 19 and 26, Dr. A. H. C. Morse of Denver preached; Dr. Peter C. Wright occupied the pulpit Sept. 2. The pastor, Rev. E. LeRoy Dakin, returned Sept. 9. The church will observe Oct. 28-Nov. 4 as anniversary week, celebrating the close of the first hundred years of the church's history.

AT THE RECENT MEETING OF THE JEWELL Association with the church at Smith Center, a council was called for the purpose of ordaining to the work of the ministry W. A. Howland, pastor of the entertaining church. Rev. J. D. Kelly, pastor of the Downs Church, was moderator, and Rev. H. P. Blunt, pastor of the Cawker City Church, clerk.

MASSACHUSETTS

ATTENDANCE AT THE NEW ENGLAND Conference on Evangelism was large and representative. All of the numerous speakers were home talent except Dr. C. L. White and Dr. H. F. Stilwell who represented the Home Mission Society under whose auspices the conference was held. Dr. J. J. Ross gave three opening devotional Bible expositions.

THE FIRST CHURCH, MELROSE, will entertain the Boston East Association on Oct. 10.

DR. J. E. CUMMINGS, veteran missionary in Burma, after a refreshing vacation period in the Maine woods, has been visiting in Boston. He appears in prime condition to take up his valuable service.

DR. PHILETUS H. MCDOWELL closed his work at First Church, Melrose, on Sept. 9 and goes at once to take up his charge with the church at Glens Falls, N. Y. The social farewell of the Melrose people to Doctor and Mrs. McDowell took place on Monday evening, Sept. 10.

THE BETH EDEN CHURCH, Fitchburg, has called Rev. J. B. Crabtree to succeed Rev. B. G. Ewald. Mr. Crabtree has been pastor of the church at Truro, N. S.

CONNECTICUT

AT THE OLIVET CHURCH, New Haven, Rev. George C. Chappell began the eighth year of his pastorate on Sept.2. During this time 153 persons have united with the church. It is of interest to note that during the first year of Mr. Chappell's pastorate twenty-four young people united with the church at the teen age, and today all are workers in the church. For the first time Olivet and the Summerfield Methodist Church held union services through July and August.

MANY OF THE PASTORS ATTENDED the New England Conference on Evangelism held in Tremont Temple, Boston, Sept. 9-12. Among those who participated in the program were A. B. Coats, J. N. Lackey, James McGee, David A. Pitt, Chester H. Howe and E. E. Gates.

CONNECTICUT BAPTISTS ON THE MOVE: Sept. 25, Ashford Association, Mansfield, First Church; Sept. 26, Fairfield Association, Danbury, New Hope Church; Sept. 30, Laymen's Sunday, throughout the state in all churches; Sept. 30-Oct. 7, Convention Centennial, Thank Offering Week, throughout the state in all churches; Oct. 1-Oct. 30, Stewardship, throughout the state in all churches; Oct. 3, New Haven Association, West Haven, First Church; Oct. 15, 16, 17, State Convention Centennial Anniversaries, Hartford, Central Church; Nov. 12, Loyalty Luncheon, New Haven; Nov. 13-14, Bible and missionary conferences, New Haven.

VERMONT

State Workers' Conference

The annual workers' conference for pastors and state workers was held for the third successive year at Vermont Academy, Saxtons River, Sept. 4-6. The attendance was unusually good, about 97 per cent of the 110 churches being represented by pastor or delegates, or by both.

On Tuesday afternoon the delegates gave their attention to the discussion of the purpose, value and possibility of a school of missions in each church. W. G. Towart, C. T. Brownell, C. O. Dunham, J. J. Fowler and H. B. Rankin told of their experiences in starting and conducting such a school. All agreed that a school of missions was worth while and that the results were beneficial. During the evening session the conference broke up into groups for a demonstration school of missions. The adult class met with Doctor Brownell, the young people's class with Mr. Towart, the intermediate class with Mrs. Dickerman, and the primary class with Miss Thelma Jolivette. The address of the evening was given by J. J. Ross on the subject "Life on the Highlands. The three sub-topics were "A Holy Life," "A Ready Life," and "A Filled Life."

At the Wednesday morning period, W. A. Davison presented and explained the "Report of the Committee on Future Denominational Program" as adopted at Atlantic City and also presented certain recommendations of his own. The conference voted to recommend the adoption of the Atlantic City report by the board of the state convention. Doctor Davison's recommendations were adopted unanimously.

The program was so arranged that both afternoons were devoted to sports. While the men were thus engaged, the women held a conference of the newly formed Woman's Baptist Mission Society. Miss Alma Rice conducted the devotional service. The following subjects were discussed: new societies, Mrs. H. S. Moses; Continuation Campaign, Mrs. J. A. Greenwood; White Cross work, Miss Carmen Walker; contest, Miss Ada A. Brigham; appointees of national societies, Mrs. G. W. Peck; reports of national societies, Mrs. W. A. Davison. Then followed an address by Miss Elsie P. Kappan. Miss Abbie Sanderson, daughter of Rev. E. Sanderson, pastor of the Sutton Church, was present having returned on her first furlough from China.

At the evening session Rev. H. E. Tralle gave an address on "Bigger and Better Sunday Schools" in which he made pertinent suggestions concerning suitable buildings, adequate equipment, and long-range vision in teacher training. The closing address on Wednesday evening was given by Doctor Ross on "The Ready Life."

At the business session on Thursday morning, resolutions were adopted endorsing the denominational program as outlined at Atlantic City; and urging the support of Vermont Academy. J. J. Fowler was chairman of the committee on findings.

At the closing session Doctor Tralle delivered an address on "The Preacher Himself." Doctor Ross completed his series on "Life on the Highlands."

NEW HAMPSHIRE

A COUNCIL ON ORDINATION was called by the Penacook Church and met Sept. 4 to consider ordaining Mr Everett Leslie Washburn, to the Christian ministry. Mr. Washburn was a member of the last graduating class of Newton Theological Institution and had already become pastor of the Penacook Church when the council met. Delegates were present from the churches of the Salisbury Association. Rev. F. S. Boody of Franklin was chosen moderator and Rev. W. P. Robinson of North Sutton, clerk. Rev. S. Paul Jefferson of Framingham, Mass., former pastor of Mr. Washburn, preached the sermon.

COLBY ACADEMY BEGAN ITS eighty-seventh academic year Sept. 11. A great many im-

Over $75,000.00

was paid by

THE AMERICAN BAPTIST PUBLICATION SOCIETY

to Annuitants last year

Were you one of this happy family? If not, send for our descriptive circular. Interest rates range from 5 to 9% annually.

Write today for full particulars

THE ANNUITY DEPARTMENT

The American Baptist Publication Society

1701-1703 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

provements have been made possible by a recent gift of $25,000. The faculty changes consist of one new member, Malcolm E. Hardy of Phillips, Me., Hebron Academy and Bowdoin College star track and baseball man. Mrs. Sarah Gray of Fairfield, Me., has accepted the position of preceptress. Mrs. Gray was acting preceptress during the latter months of the 1923 year. The old academy building (1837) is in the process of reconstruction and has nearly been restored to the original exterior outlines. The interior will be remodelled into four apartments for faculty and other employes of the institution.

Rev. Thomas Brewster of Worcester, Mass., has accepted the call of the church at Brentwood.

A well attended meeting of state workers gathered in Manchester, Sept. 7 for a conference conducted by Dr. P. C. Wright. It was a successful conference and doubtless will aid in the furtherance of New World Movement activities.

A recent survey of Baptist work in New Hampshire covering a period of fifty years has been made by the state office. Although the population of the state has remained about stationary for a considerable period of years, that in cities has increased while the population of rural communities has decreased. Baptist churches as a whole show an increase in membership in the face of the fact that the majority of churches are in rural communities. This favorable result would not have been accomplished had it not been for the fact that evangelism has been a constant factor in church work throughout the state.

Want Ads

For Sale: 100 acre farm; 12 acres in fruit; all good land and well watered. Natural gas. One-half mile from Denison College. J. A. Riedle, Granville, Ohio.

If Some One Should Ask You About a Will

And when you make your own Our Corporate Name is:

The American Baptist Home Mission Society

CHARLES L. WHITE, Executive Secretary
SAMUEL BRYANT, Treasurer
23 East Twenty-Sixth Street
New York, N. Y.

WANTED—Useful firsthand reminiscences of

D. L. MOODY

We wish to secure bona fide firsthand unpublished records of incidents and anecdotes connected with D. L. Moody. Tell your story as briefly as possible, and mail to RECORD OF CHRISTIAN WORK
(The official Northfield magazine)
E. NORTHFIELD, MASSACHUSETTS, U.S.A.
Inclose postage coupon if you want your MSS. returned

WE TYPEWRITE Sermons, lectures, stories manuscripts, letters, books, etc. Price 1 cent per line. Minimum charge $1. PRINT 500 Bond Letterheads 8½x11 and 500 envelopes $5. FORM LETTERS that look like typewritten, 30 lines, $4.50 per 1,000. Special prices on larger orders. Neat, accurate work. Prompt service. Satisfaction assured. Be sure to write in plain letters. Proceeds go to Christian work. Postage extra.
AMERICAN ADDRESSING CO.
Golden Rule Service
3147 S. Millard Avenue Chicago, Ill.

PICTURE SERMONS DRAW CROWDS
We have over 250 religious lectures, travelogues, illustrated hymns, etc., for sale or rent. Special lectures on the life of Christ—1922 Passion Play—
Special Easter Services—Just Out
Five lectures by Marion Lawrence on Japan, the beautiful. Write for slide bulletins. Complete line of stereopticon and projection machines.
GEO. W. BOND SLIDE COMPANY,
27 Years Supplying Churches
Room 13, 6 E. Lake St., Chicago, Ill.

PASTORS, PASTORS
I am booking engagements for fall and winter. Ninth season. John Imrie, Scotch evangelistic singer—inspiring leader. Mrs. Imrie, pianist of ability. Address Topeka, Kansas.

RHODE ISLAND

Homecoming Sunday was observed Sept. 9 at the Cranston Street-Roger Williams Church, Providence. Rev. Horace Hartley Hayes is pastor.

EASTERN PENNSYLVANIA

Collegeville Assembly

The summer assembly at Collegeville, Aug. 27-Sept. 3 reached the high-water mark in attendance and interest. There were 191 full-week registrations in addition to the faculty. About forty registered for part time. The educational work was of a high order. Commencement exercises were held on Saturday evening, with Dean Romeyn H. Rivenburg of Bucknell University as the speaker. Diplomas were granted to nineteen and certificates issued to 112.

The vesper services conducted daily by Rev. Arnold E. Look, the morning and evening sermons on Sunday by Rev. Geo. B. Allison and the address by Rev. Will H. Houghton, together with the earnestness of the young people, created a spiritual atmosphere. Sunday evening five accepted the call of special life service and a large number indicated their determination to devote themselves more earnestly to definite work in their home churches.

WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA

Rev. W. F. Rawlins, formerly of the First Church, Philadelphia, N. Y., recently began his duties as pastor of the Emanuel Church, Donora. Since his coming, eighteen persons professed conversion. A $35,000 building campaign has been started.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

On Sept. 9 the cornerstone of the $65,000 house of worship of the Takoma Park Church, was laid with appropriate exercises. On the program were Dr. Clarence A. Barbour, E. Hilton Jackson and Dr. H. W. O. Millington. Of the $65,000, $47,000 has already been raised. Besides the donations from the residents of Takoma Park, the Columbia Association gave $7,000, and the Southern and Northern conventions each pledged $10,000. Rev. William Earl Larue is pastor.

The summer supplies of the Metropolitan Church were Dr. Rolvix Harlan of Richmond College, Va.; Rev. H. I. Stewart of Richmond, Va.; Rev. H. J. Goodwin of Newport News, Va.; Dr. Henry Tiffany of the Church of the Redeemer, Brooklyn, N. Y.; and Rev. J. E. Balderson of Atglen, Pa. Pastor Ball celebrated his twentieth anniversary Sept. 9. More than 1,400 members have been received. A new building was erected in 1911 making the property value $100,000. Last June an adjoining lot was purchased for $20,000 on which it is planned to erect an addition to the Bible school house.

WEST VIRGINIA

The cornerstone of the Temple Church Charleston, was dedicated Sept. 16. Addresses were made by Governor Morgan of the state, Drs. A. S. Kelley, W. M. Shultz and Secretary Leonhart of the Sunday-school council. Within the past few weeks $25,000 was received for the three funds. Pastors Kemper and Ostergren are enthusiastic concerning the work of the coming year.

Mississippi Valley

MINNESOTA

The executive secretaries of the state conventions of the Northwest, together with leading laymen of the denomination, met in conference on Tuesday, Sept. 4, in session both in St. Paul and Minneapolis concerning matters pertaining to the new million-dollar hospital which is to be erected by the Northwestern Baptist Hospital Association. The purpose of the conference is to consider plans for the erection of a new Baptist edifice and to arrange for the presentation of the hospital cause to various state conventions and gatherings meeting during the fall. John A. Earl of St. Paul presided at the morning session, Norman T. Mears at the noon and afternoon sessions, and Robert Earl, chairman of the board of directors of the hospital association, at the evening session. Considerable attention was given to the question of free beds and other philanthropic work to be conducted in the new building. Attention was also given to the matter of the training of nurses for home and foreign fields. At the evening session inspiring talks on "The Christian Element in Hospital Work" were given by Carl D. Case of Oak Park, Ill., and Earl Pierce of Brookings, S. D. The following out-of-town men joined in the conference: F. E. Stockton, S. P. Shaw, A. E. Lewis, Jay J. Allen, and J. N. Jensen. A. C. Hageman, who recently joined the ranks of the Northwestern Baptist Hospital Association, also met with the group and outlined plans for the new institution.

KANSAS

On the first Sunday in September, Dr. John Bunyan Smith began his fourth year as pastor of the First Church, Wichita. During the three years, 855 persons have been added to the membership, 343 by baptism. Doctor Smith has held his own evangelistic meetings. In the last year not a Sunday passed without additions to the membership. The list of the membership has been revised and at present numbers 1710. In addition to this large increase in membership, the church has made rapid progress in finances. It has given to missions during the three years over $75,000, and has spent for local expense more than $60.000. The Sunday school has grown until the church proper and the two annexes are over-crowded. The church is uniting in a city-wide evangelistic campaign under the leadership of Gypsy Smith.

IOWA

The cornerstone of the new $75,000 meeting house of the First Church, Council Bluffs, was laid Sept. 9. President John W. Million of Des Moines University delivered the address. The pastor, Rev. J. Frederick Catlin, began his sixth year of service with the church Sept. 1. During the past five years there have been 301 additions to the membership; a parsonage has been purchased and paid for; the subscriptions to benevolences have increased 300 per cent; and $30,000 has been paid into the building fund.

MICHIGAN

THE SEBEWA CHURCH is pastorless. Mrs. Ethel Daniels, Lake Odessa, is clerk of the church.

WISCONSIN

AFTER NEARLY SIX YEARS OF SUCCESSFUL service, Rev. Everson R. MacKinney has resigned as pastor of the First Church, Eau Claire. He has announced no definite plans for the future.

ILLINOIS

REV. AND MRS. LEE LEWIS of Tharrawaddy, Burma, foreign missionaries for the Central Church, Quincy, were welcomed home Aug. 31. Sunday, Sept. 2, Mr. Lewis delivered a message about his work in Burma. The church tendered Mr. and Mrs. Lewis a reception.

THE BELDEN AVENUE CHURCH, CHICAGO, of which Rev. J. W. Hoyt is pastor, reports 425 additions to the church membership within the past three years. There is an average attendance of 100 at the mid-week service.

REV. W. H. PARKER begins his second year of service with the Alpha Church, Oct. 1. At a reception tendered Mr. and Mrs. Parker on Sept. 6, the church presented them with a gift of money.

IN MEMORIAM

Mrs. J. E. Bush, the devoted wife of the senior deacon of the Eastern Avenue Baptist Church, Joliet, whose death preceded hers, was called to her reward June 6, 1923.

Mrs. Bush was a woman of rare ability and beautiful Christian character, devoted to her Lord, her home, the church and the missionary cause. She served for seventeen years as treasurer of the Woman's Mission Circle, and her sweet spiritual influence was felt in the Sunday school, the prayer meeting and especially the missionary society. When she led a devotional service, it was an inspiration to all. Her reports were unique, often in the form of a poem, and while conveying all the facts, rich with humor. To listen to her accounts of the mission fields and the labors and trials of the missionaries was like being with the missionaries themselves, so deep with sympathy and understanding was her presentation. Her home was ever open for the missionaries of the church. All who entered her home received both physical and spiritual refreshment.

The members of the church, now the First Baptist, Joliet, wish to express their love and appreciation of her life and service. The world was made better and brighter by her presence. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord. . . . they may rest from their labors, but their works do follow them." Loving sympathy is extended to her sons and daughter.

Moving Pictures Have Helped

(Continued from page 1077)

now after two years' use of them. Every one of the officials of our church, however, is in favor. This was partly accomplished by an educational work I carried on before we got the machine.

The pictures have been used on Sunday nights in connection with the evening services. They have brought in about three times as many people as we used to get without them, which was the real aim I had in using them. I always have a religious service and speak, using some lesson from the pictures shown. A recent testimony from my men is to the effect that they always go away feeling that they have been to church and not to a movie show. What more can one wish for? The pictures have increased my congregation, have brought in many children, and have usually paid for themselves from the collection. We have also used the pictures at missionary meetings, and for public shows which were wholly for entertainment purposes. They have been satisfactory in this way. We need a stereopticon to supplement the movies to use for throwing notices, responsive readings, scriptures, hymns, etc., on the screen and that they may take up the time when the moving pictures are stopped to change the reels. A machine that could combine the movie and the stereopticon features would be especially valuable. One really needs both or two moving picture machines so that there can be one running all the time, with no breaks and pauses while the films are being changed.

We believe in the motion pictures (this is the only name I ever use for them in connection with the church work), and know they are full of possibilities for good in the church. We here are only limited by money and help, I mean too little money and too little help in choosing the programs and doing the work in connection with them. The minister does about all of it now. He has a few other things to do and so this does not get done nearly as well as it should.

We use one of the best silvered screens and have splendid results. Our pictures are 8 by 10 inches. The size can be made anything you want it by getting the proper lens, and the right size of screen to go with it.

"Like A Mighty Army"

Extending across the entire continent, the State Conventions with their army of workers, constitute a vast enterprise of denominational advance. Reports from the states clearly demonstrate the volume, the strategy, and the immense inspirational value of this work. State Missions form an important factor in the Baptist program of enlargement.

Last year the New York State Convention employed 132 missionary pastors. The Kansas State Convention joined in the support of 100. Every state had as many such workers as its resources would permit.

These self-denying men labored in the open country, in the village and in the growing cities. They led churches that were weak, or were passing through severe struggle, or were in the heroic effort for better equipment. Their fields furnished some of our most striking examples of conservation, of progress, and of missionary achievement.

To these pastors should be added the great host of evangelists, employed by the State Conventions in their various lines of activity and plans of operation. They presented the claims of Christ to hundreds of thousands during the year, and won their victories from coast to coast.

Baptists should strengthen their State Conventions by prayer, cooperation and financial support, so that this vast State Mission Enterprise, with other interests, may steadily advance in new and remarkable achievements.

"Make America Christian"

FINANCIAL NEEDS TO APRIL 30, 1924, $12,161,521.67

THE GENERAL BOARD OF PROMOTION OF THE NORTHERN BAPTIST CONVENTION.

Our Book Shelf

The Psychology of Power, by J. A. Hadfield. New York: Macmillan

This is one of the "Little Books on Religion" series published by this company. Let the author speak: "Our discussion of the psychology of power has a very direct bearing on the power possessed by the Christian religion of liberating energies which can transform the living soul into a quicking spirit. I have tried to show that the experience of applied psychology, and especially psychotherapy, points toward the conclusion that we are living far below the limits of our possible selves. There are open to us resources of power available through the right use of our instincts, which if directed to noble purpose, will rid our minds of those worries, anxieties and morbid fatigues which spoil our lives and will free us for a life of energy and strength."

The Contents of the New Testament, by Haven McClure. New York: Macmillan.

From center to circumference here is a modernist exposition of the New Testament. The Synoptic problem finds its usual documentary solution. The author of the Gospel according to John is unknown. In fact, "Every Gospel is anonymous, and the author gives no clue to his identity." There are miracle stories but no miracles. Paul was neurotic and epileptic. The body of Jesus did not emerge alive from the grave; but personally, Jesus triumphed over death and ever lives. Second Thessalonians is Pseudo-Pauline. The letters to Timothy and Titus are of unknown authorship. Revelation is the "most ragged and blundering of all New Testament writings." And so it goes, through a regular course of scholarly expurgation. The point of view is intelligible, intelligent and apparently honest. Preachers and teachers in the churches would do well to understand it.

What Is Mysticism?, by Charles Morris Addison. New York: Macmillan.

This slender booklet of fifty-four pages is full of meat. It is a sympathetic and clarifying study of that tendency of the human soul which under varied forms, in many lands, throughout all ages and in widely different religions is described by the term mystic. The author perhaps best defines Christian mysticism in a quotation from his own earlier work, "The Theory and Practice of Mysticism" as follows: "Beyond or underneath the usual course of the Christian life there is in mysticism the use and development of a faculty which works best when both mind and will are in abeyance and which seems to have the power of receiving intimations directly from God."

The book points out the psychological implications of the discussion of the tendencies to extravagance to the influence of a neurotic temperament, but gives large place to mysticism as a medium of the highest and most helpful experience of God. Possibly he assigns too little importance to the necessity of correcting the extravagances of the individual mystic by the deliverances of scripture and the consensus of Christian thought and experience; but of course, it may be claimed that the essence of mysticism is its direct, immediate and individual experience of God and divine things. At any rate, the study takes hold on truths of the utmost significance to the Christian life, truths which tend to become neglected or obscured by ritualism, bondage to a creed, or by mere familiarity with the routine of a long established religion.

The Editorials of Henry Watterson, compiled with notes by Arthur Krock. New York: Doran. $3.50.

The middle of the nineteenth century was notable in the newspaper life of the United States by its great editors. Now, the popular newspaper is owned by a corporation and the editor is the "hired man" of the interests that employ him. Then, a great editor like Greeley of the New York Tribune, Medill of the Chicago Tribune, Forney of the Philadelphia Press, Halstead of the Cincinnati Commercial, gave those newspapers their powerful influence with the public. The newspaper was seldom quoted, but the editor was named as saying this or that. The man, not the machine, was the important factor.

The youngest and last of those influential men was Henry Watterson of the Louisville Courier-Journal. He was a soldier in the Confederate army. At the end of the war he accepted the results and became a loyal unionist and one of the leaders of the democratic party, especially in the South. His editorial career was contemporaneous with the tempestuous politics of the reconstruction period and he was in the midst of the fray. The editorials of this volume were selections compiled by his closest official friend, the managing editor of the Courier-Journal, appearing in the paper from the beginning of Mr. Watterson's connection with it about 1868. They cover the exciting years of the "reconstruction," the presidential campaigns when the candidates were Greeley, Grant, Garfield, Tilden, Hayes, Cleveland, Blaine, Bryan, Roosevelt, and the stirring events which featured those stormy years. This volume reproduces with great vividness the personalities and character of the men conspicuous in those times as statesmen and political guides, and the political principles involved. Watterson was in the hot edges of those conflicts and as correspondent, platform orator, and masterful writer, his influence was great. His editorials were quoted liberally and his voice in the councils of his party meant much in constructing a platform or in nominating a candidate. These editorials quicken into a realistic life those turbulent years, and make their history as present events. The literary reader will enjoy in them the luxuriant florid style of the Southland and the rhythmic diction of a master of the writing art. The exposures of the political trickeries of parties, the keen light shed on the foibles and errors of party leaders, the blistering rebukes of hollow pretensions make an entertaining reading.

"It Is to Laugh"

Jack: "Where was the Declaration of Independence signed?"

Jill: "At the bottom."—Upper Collegian

Fussy Lady—"Oh, doctor, I felt so ill I simply didn't want to live—and so I sent for you."—London Mail.

A colored woman in Florida, presenting herself as a candidate for confirmation, was asked to repeat the creed, the Lord's Prayer and the commandments. She got through the first two fairly well, as somebody had evidently been coaching her, but when it came to the last she bungled and hesitated and finally remarked in a confidential tone to the officiating clergyman, "De fac' is Mistah Turpin, ah hasn't been practicin' de ten commandments lately."—Boston Transcript.

Extra Money for Your Church

Quickly and Easily Raised Selling Messenger's 1924 Scripture Text Calendars

This Church Made $51

Anna Holkeboer, 9th St. Christian Reform Church, Holland, Michigan, says: "We decided to try your plan in order to raise money for missions. The 300 Calendars were distributed among 20 members and sold in their spare time in 10 days. We recommend the sale of your calendars to anyclass or society."

Churches everywhere successfully raise money for budgets, pledges, etc., clearing net profit of $50 to $500. Easy to sell. Big profits. An article for church sale that has no equal. Every family needs one and buys on merit as well as the desire to help the church.

Kalamazoo, Michigan, North Presbyterian Church, says:

"Our treasurer sent for one hundred calendars which were sold before they arrived. Afterwards sent for two hundred more which were sold quickly, and we are closing our year with a good amount of money in our treasury which we could not have had if we had not sold your beautiful calendars."

Plan Endorsed by Ministers

Ministers everywhere endorse our plan as a dignified method of raising money for the church. 1924 calendars now ready. Write today for Messenger's Money-Making Plan and Special Prices to Churches.

MESSENGER PUBLISHING CO.
314 W. Superior St., Dept. 24 Chicago, Ill.

TEXAS OFFERS: We need some Christian men with money to help in development of eastern Texas. Mercantile and factory business each offer good opportunities. One or two abandoned log roads to which electricity may be applied. Used interurban can be bought cheap. Some fine land for colonization cheap. Address E. S. Jameson, Tatum, Tex.

THE BAPTIST INSTITUTE FOR CHRISTIAN WORKERS

Exceptional opportunity in Bible study, Religious Education and in Practical Methods. For catalogue write

J. MILNOR WILBUR, D.D.
1425 Snyder Ave. Philadelphia, Pa.

Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society
(CORPORATE NAME)
ALICE M. HUDSON, Treasurer
276 Fifth Avenue New York City

When Making Wills and Legacies Remember
Our Corporate Name Is:
WOMAN'S AMERICAN BAPTIST HOME MISSION SOCIETY"
Mrs. Mary E. Bloomer
Treasurer
276 Fifth Avenue, New York City

Season 1923-24 Thirteenth Year
T. M. HOFMEISTER, D.D., LL.D.
Evangelist
South Solon (Madison County) Ohio

WILSON B. PARKER, Church Architect
507 Board of Trade, Indianapolis
Sketches and suggestions submitted

OUR MUSIC CORNER

CONDUCTED BY WILLIAM LESTER

WILLIAM BYRD ON SINGING

Modern writers on singing often employ many more words, and say very much less, than the founder of the English Madrigal School, William Byrd, wrote in 1588. In the same year that witnessed the destruction of the Spanish Armada and saved England from the blight of the Inquisition, an earnest composer worked quietly in seclusion at his part songs, as if there was no such thing as war and no enemies on the high seas.

While Drake was getting his ships together and Queen Elizabeth was in the saddle, haranguing her troops and volunteers. William Byrd set down his reasons why singing should be cultivated:

"Reasons briefly set down by th' auctor, to perswade everyone to learne to sing:

"First, is a knowledge easely taught and quickly learned wher there is a good Master and an apt Scoller.

"2. The exercise of singing is delightfull to Nature and good to preserve the health of Man.

"3. It doth strengthen all the parts of the brest and doth open the pipes.

"4. It is a singular good remedie for a stutting and stammering in the speech.

"5. It is the best means to procure a perfect pronunciation and to make a good Orator.

"6. It is the onely way to know where Nature hath bestoweth the benefit of a good voyce: which guift is so rare as there is not one among a thousand that hath it: and in many that excellent guift is lost, because they want Art to express Nature.

"7. There is not any Musick of Instruments whatsoever comparable to that which is made of the voyces of Men, where the voyces are good and the same well sorted and ordered.

"8. The better the voyce is the meeter it is to honour and serve God therewith: and the voyce of man is chiefly to be imployed to that ende.

Omnis spiritus laudet Dominum

"Since singing is so good a thing I wish all men would learne to sing."

William Byrd is careful not to say that instruction in singing will supply a good voice. Good voices, as he asserts, are very rare.

He also says that learning to sing is easy when the teacher is good and the pupil is intelligent.

As a stut cure, however, it will probably attract very few students, and we must add that the finest instrumental music today is a more serious competitor for public favor than it was in the days of Byrd. He, however, judiciously remarks that the voices must be good and the choir well trained to compete successfully with instrumental music.

ARTISTS FROM THE CHOIR LOFT

According to the Bloomington, Illinois, Bulletin many of America's foremost artists commenced their early training in the choir loft. Among these are such singers as Louise Homer, whose father was a clergyman, therefore it was natural that the noted contralto should commence her career in church.

Merle Alcock, who has been engaged by the Metropolitan Opera Company, is another who first sang in a choir. Her father was also a member of the clergy.

Early in their careers, four of the leading tenors of the "Met" lifted up their voices in church—Edward Johnson, Mario Chamlee, Orville Harrold, George Meader. Lambert Murphy, Theodore Karle and Allen McQuahe are other members of the profession whose early training was had in a choir, as is also the popular Reinald Werrenrath.

There seems to be a peculiar something in choir training that makes opera and concert artists. What is it? They receive firstly valuable musical training, secondly tradition, and third, but most important, experience in ensemble singing.

C. Harold Lowden, composer, organist and music editor of the Heidelberg Press, who has been an ardent supporter of the radio as a means of disseminating good music since the first experiments proved its practicability, has lately demonstrated that it is possible to utilize the radio for broadcasting the singing of choral bodies. A few weeks ago he was requested by a station in Philadelphia to supervise a test with eight voices and replied by using the entire chorus of forty-two singers of the Linden Baptist Church, of which he is director. He finally succeeded in massing the voices in such a manner that the broadcasting was pronounced a success, as attested by 180 letters received from various parts of the United States and Canada. More recently Mr. Lowden received word from Atlanta to "listen in" in a program to be given on a certain date from that city. All the numbers on the program were by Mr. Lowden, who has published more than 3,500 compositions in various forms. The concert was given under the direction of C. E. Sheldon, city organist of Atlanta.

Every anthem is bound to have its limitations, and none can be expected to fit every possible occasion. A praise anthem may be a very good anthem even though it cannot very well be used in a funeral service. The value of an anthem can never be judged apart from the purpose for which it is written. Some anthems, it is true, are more or less neutral in character, and can therefore be used in a great variety of services. Others are more specific and for that reason limited in their usability. But their limitations may then be their very excellency. Unless a director constantly bears this in mind, he will often pass by many an excellent number, because at just that time when he is looking it over it may not entirely fit into the special needs for which he seeks to make provision, and he is judging from the viewpoint of his special need. The director who plans his choir work far ahead, is not likely to make this mistake, for he necessarily has a great variety of needs in mind and can then more easily find just the place for each anthem.

A Permanent Income

Life Annuities on One or Two Lives

On one life the rate of income varies from four to nine per cent a year, payable semi-annually.

On two lives the rate varies from four to eight and three-tenths per cent a year, payable semi-annually.

A survivorship agreement provides a permanent income for two lives.

For annuity booklet and samples of single and survivorship agreements, please address

CHARLES L. WHITE
23 East Twenty-Sixth Street
New York City

The American Baptist Home Mission Society

TRALLE

Service in Religious Education, Sermons, Lectures, Addresses, Conferences. Churches saved from costly mistakes in building. Some open fall and winter dates.

HENRY EDWARD TRALLE
150 Claremont Ave., New York City Tel. Morningside 3930

PIPE ORGANS

of any size or construction. Estimates cheerfully submitted. Also Reed Organs for Church or Home.

Electric Organ blowing outfits for organs of any make.

Write, stating which catalog is desired.

Hinners Organ Co., Pekin, Ill.

CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL

Ask for Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 19
ESTABLISHED 1858
THE C. S. BELL CO. HILLSBORO, OHIO

McSHANE BELL FOUNDRY CO
Baltimore, Md.
CHURCH, CHIME AND PEAL
BELLS Memorials a Specialty

BOVEE'S COAL AND WOOD FURNACES

AT MANUFACTURER'S PRICES

Central Heating, Regular Pipeless, or with piping to each room, as desired. The Bovee requires thirty per cent less coal than the average furnace used. The Bovee Horizontal Wood and Coal Furnace has large 26 inch combustion chamber, burns 4 foot wood, with double doors 16x16 inches. Average wood requires little cutting and no splitting and saves 75 per cent of cost of coal for fuel. Write for descriptive catalog and manufacturer's prices.

We make Church Furnaces in single or multiple units with gravity circulation of cold and warm air, also with forced fan circulation for both winter and summer use.

BOVEE FURNACE WORKS, 85 W. 8th ST., WATERLOO, IOWA

Fresh from the Field

(Continued from page 1060)

The executive committee of the Baptist Bible Union of America met in the Jarvis Street Church, Toronto, Sept. 11-14.

More than ten million people in America and Europe are now drawing pensions because of the great war. Another world conflict—and the few who were left would have to pay their own pensions.—Christian Statesman.

The Home Mission Society has been deeply interested in the development of the Jewish missionary work being carried on under the immediate leadership of Mr. Machlin and several workers under the Buffalo Baptist Union, which holds the title to the well-equipped building known as the House of the Prince of Peace. Under the auspices of the Home Mission Society Mr. Machlin has been invited to visit Denver and Los Angeles to speak in prominent pulpits. The society would be glad to have him fill appointments which may be made for him, and accept any invitations which may be proffered. He can be reached in Denver through the office of Dr. F. B. Palmer, 612 Exchange Bldg., and in Los Angeles through Rev. J. B. Fox of the Los Angeles City Mission Society, 501 Columbia Bldg. To friends especially interested in the evangelization of the Jews who have sent designated gifts for this work in Buffalo, the Home Mission Society reports it had a prosperous work throughout the summer months when a daily vacation Bible school and other activities were carried on in the House of the Prince of Peace.

Christians throughout America were called upon to heartily support the Red Cross appeal for Japan in a resolution adopted by the administrative committee of the Federal Council of Churches, which met Sept. 7. Messages of sympathy were also sent to the Japanese government, the American missionaries in Japan, Japanese Christian churches, and the Japanese ambassador at Washington. Reports made by various persons present indicate that as far as is known there has been no loss of life among American missionaries, but the property loss is very great. The call for help is as follows: "The administrative committee of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America on behalf of its constituency of over 20,000,000 adult church members hereby expresses to the government and people of Japan the profound sympathy and sorrow of the Christian people of America as we learn of the appalling calamity that has come to their land, and suggests to our churches that prayer to God for Japan and her people be widely offered throughout our land. We urge the Christians of America to cooperate heartily in the emergency program of the American Red Cross in response to the proclamation of the president. Pending accurate knowledge of the needs for reconstructing our Christian churches, schools, colleges, hospitals, orphanages and asylums, to which it will be our privilege also to respond, it is clear that the first and immediate need of Japan is for food, shelter, clothing and medicine. For this immediate need let us respond promptly to the call of suffering humanity in the spirit of brotherhood and for the practical expression of the ideals of the kingdom of God."

Japan Discharges Her Pledge

By D. C. Holtom

THE year 1922 in Japan has been called one of decomposition, of decay of old forms, of withdrawals and relinquishments and again, as a time when in political, financial, industrial and social fields a strong fermenting agent was working. From the standpoint of one who is interested in spiritual progress no words characterize the events of the year better than peaceful reconstruction. The peace movement has made significant conquests in the practical politics of Japan, and what is much more fundamental, in the public opinion of the nation. It is probably safe to say that there has been no year in the history of modern Japan in which the ideals of peace received more substantial confirmation than they did in 1922. This is far from meaning that the forces of militarism have been routed. Militarism is still strong and has a powerful influence in the determination of budgets. Yet in 1922 the militarists were obliged to make a partial surrender to the forces of peaceful reconstruction and peace ideals made very tangible gains in the thinking of the people as a whole.

Definite progress in the peace movement on the part of Japan began with the signing of the Shantung agreement and the naval limitation treaty by the Japanese representatives at Washington in February, 1922. Japanese newspapers, except those from a negligible jingoistic section, hailed the work of the Washington Conference with outspoken joy. One paper went so far as to declare that between Nov. 12, 1921, and Feb. 6, 1922, more was accomplished by men for the benefit of mankind than during any equal period in the entire history of the world. The results of the conference were finally endorsed by all three of the mainly political parties of Japan, a fact that is full of significance to any one who is familiar with the extent to which the opposition parties go in most ordinary issues in attempting to discredit the measures proposed by the government.

The pledges which Japan made at Washington are being discharged with honor. Withdrawals of Japanese soldiers from the Asiatic mainland began in July with the removal from Hankow of a few hundred troops who had been stationed there to protect foreign interests against possible depredations by Chinese bandits. On Oct. 25 the withdrawal of Japanese expeditionary forces from the Siberian mainland was completed, except from northern Saghalien. On Dec. 17 the Japanese garrison was withdrawn from Tsingtau, after an occupation that had extended over eight years. In this way Japan redeemed her pledge made at the beginning of the World War for a final and complete transfer to China of authority over the Shantung peninsula.

In naval affairs the adoption of the 10-10-6 ratio has already saved the country millions of yen. Certain ships have been scrapped although it is impossible to state the number and tonnage with accuracy. The militarists have proposed a reduction of the army by 56,000 men and 10,000 horses but at the same time declare their intention of making up for the reduction by an improvement in equipment. On the side of the budget, the war office declares that the sum of yen 20,060,000 will be saved during the next year by the reduction of the time of ordinary conscription service from two years to one year and eleven months. It is expected that an additional yen 50,000,000 will be saved this year because of the withdrawal of troops from Shantung and Siberia.

An economic factor has acted strongly during the past year as an influence in turning the government in the direction of disarmament. In business, 1922 was the most conservative year since the close of the World War. It was marked by a distinct business depression, by bank failures, by unemployment and by much suffering on the part of rural populations. Communities that have found themselves unable to meet the bills for the education of their children have now discovered a very practical value in disarmament. A Japanese writer in discussing this situation with special reference to the rural districts said, "Teachers were not paid the full amount of their salaries but a certain percentage, as ye 70 on yen 100. Therefore the heads o villages and town petitioned the nationa government for a grant of at least ye 40,000,000 to aid education throughou the country. At present there is no hop that this sum will be granted. Perhap yen 20,000,000 will be granted but tha will not solve the problem. The onl hope for more assistance to educatio from the national treasury is to econ omize in armaments.

Wanted—An Idea

THE Board of Promotion is seeking a suggestion for a poster to be used in the churches during the fall and winter. Have you a suggestion to offer?

Four posters have appeared in previous years entitled, "The New World Movement," "Plough On", "What Shall I Render Unto the Lord?", "Four Important Dates." All were widely distributed and received favorable comment. This is the last year of the New World Movement, and the great task which the denomination at the Denver Convention set out to accomplish remains to be finished. The financial goal for the current year is $12,161,521.67.

In order to stimulate loyal cooperation, the payment of all pledges and the completion of the task, a new postor is desired for display in conventions, conferences, associations, church vestibules, Sunday-school class rooms, etc., and every one is invited to contribute a suggestion.

The following conditions should be carefully followed:

1. The poster should be related to the close of the New World Movement Campaign.
2. It must be brief with a minimum of reading matter and should preferably be based on one outstanding idea.
3. A picture or design or sketch adds attractiveness and if submitted should be in such form as to enable an artist to reproduce effectively the author's idea.
4. Suggestions should be submitted in the form of rough sketches, preferably 8½x11 inches in size.
5. All suggestions must be submitted to the committee not later than Oct. 1. Send all suggestions to Mr. William B. Lipphard, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York, N. Y.

The contest is open to every Baptist and any number of sketches may be submitted.

Volume IV September 29, 1923 No. 35

The Baptist

Published Every Week by the Northe[illegible]nvention

UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS LIBRARY
SEP
Library of the University of Illinois

Lordship and Stewardship

TO accept the principle of the Lordship of Christ and then to forsake the consequent practice of stewardship is to impugn your own intelligence or sincerity.

A simple, direct and primary effect of Christian stewardship is found in the practice of tithing.

—Frederick A. Agar

Fresh from the Field

Dr. Edwin W. Lounsbury, for many years a district secretary of the Foreign Society for the lake district, died at his home in Aurora, Ill., at the age of eighty-two. Doctor Lounsbury was actively engaged as pastor of the Park Place Church.

Rev. W. E. Biederwolf, Homer and J. N. Rodeheaver, Miss Grace Saxe and Miss Florence Hay formed an evangelistic party which recently sailed for the far East. A mission of six weeks has been arranged in Australia. The tour will consume the greater part of a year. The plans for work in Japan of course have been disarranged.

According to the "Baptist Times and Freeman," Rev. Lenton Staines, one of the English delegates to the Baptist World Alliance, had the misfortune of breaking his wrist. He preached at the Devonshire Square Church and innocently chose for the scripture reading Psalm 37, a verse of which reads: "The arms of the wicked shall be broken, but the Lord upholdeth the righteous." It is always well to read the selected scripture passages before going into the pulpit.

Dr. Charles R. Shepherd, general director of Baptist home mission work among the Chinese in America, has given to the American public a timely and vitally important revelation of the secret and devious methods of the Chinese underworld in his book, "The Ways of Ah Sin," published by Revell. Doctor Shepherd was a missionary in China (Province of Canton) and knows the language and the customs of the Chinese at home. For several years he has been under the appointment of the Home Mission Society as a general worker among the Chinese in America with headquarters in San Francisco. In this capacity he has been intimately associated with the general workers of other denominations who are organized in a "council" representing the various missionary enterprises among the Orientals on the Pacific Coast and at the earnest solicitation of the council he has written this book. He has been closely related to the work of Miss Donaldine Cameron (to whom he has dedicated the book) who for many years has devoted herself to the rescue of Chinese slave girls in America. Partly because of his intimate knowledge of the language and his familiarity with the ways of the Chinese, his intimate association with the police of San Francisco, Doctor Shepherd came into first possession of an immense amount of important information concerning the activities of the tongs with their hired gunmen, the high binders and the whole secret, deep intricate and widely ramifying influences. He has been chosen by the Christian Chinese to represent them in their resistance to the imposition of levies by the tongs upon the members of various churches and other illegal and un-American practices which are carried on here in enlightened America.

Albert M. Johnson, president of a large insurance company, speaking before several hundred Boy Scouts told them how to live to ripe old age. He explained to them how an insurance company keeps its satistics and then drew some conclusions from a wide study of longevity under modern conditions of life. One should be neither rich nor poor, should marry young, be religious in a "true way," avoid attempt to become a professional or college athlete on account of undue heart strain, avoid indoor dancing and shun alcoholic liquors and smoking. If smoke one must, wait until at least twenty-one before beginning. Why should insurance companies be interested in having their policy-holders truly religious? Mr. Johnson answered the question when he said "Religious people are happier as a rule and going to church tends to make them regular in their habits."

Rev. Raymond G. Pierson received the following telegram from the Dormont Church, Pittsburgh: "The church extends a unanimous call to you to become its pastor. There was a large vote and a fine feeling." Mr. Pierson will accept. For seven years he has served the First Church, Janesville, Wis., and for eight years he was pastor of the South Church, Milwaukee. He is now in his prime and the Pittsburgh field offers him a splendid opportunity for service.

Mr. Philip Cabot's article in the August Atlantic Monthly, has created considerable comment in the religious press. Its title is "The Conversion of a Sinner." The Continent hails it as the experience of an "old-fashioned" conversion. The Christian Register quotes the Continent and informs us that Mr. Philip Cabot is the "convert" and that he is a Unitarian, active in the work and worship of King's Chapel, Boston. This is interesting to say the least.

The Catholic press is alarmed at the possibilities for harm to its members through "listening in" when Protestant services and sermons are broadcasted. The Observer of Pittsburgh commenting on the practice says: "There certainly is harm, and it is difficult to see that the practice is defensible. We are not permitted to take part in heretical services. One might, indeed, argue that listening on the radio does not constitute presence at those services, but for all practical purposes and intents, one is vitally, though not bodily, present when he listens in on the raido. Moreover, no one is allowed to expose his faith to the danger of being contaminated or lost. Listening in on heretical services may easily constitute such a danger. It is the common teaching of theologians that active, material, public communication in heretical worship is forbidden under pain of grave sin, not only by the law of the Church, but by the very law of nature."

Herman Bernstein, editor of the Jewish Tribune of New York, has recured an attachment of $115,000 in the Corn Exchange Bank of New York. This money belongs to Henry Ford and the action was taken on account of a libel suit against the automobile man for articles appearing in the Dearborn Independent. The sheriff has been instructed to seize copies of the paper sent into the state. The New York folks seem to be bent on helping Henry prove his point that the Hebrews control the country, at least large sections of it.

According to the "London Daily Express" there is a grave shortage of clergy in the Church of England today. Official figures disclose that there are fewer than 13,000 incumbents this year —a shortage of 8,000. This figure is little more than half the number required to carry on the work of the church. The theological colleges, moreover, are nearly empty. "Our full staff should number 21,000," said Canon Partridge, secretary of the Church of England central board of finance, to a Daily Express representative yesterday. "Taking a generation as thirty years, it follows that 700 men should be ordained every year. We have not reached that figure for eleven years. In 1918 there were only 114 ordinations. One of the causes of this shortage is the financial position of the professional classes from whose ranks the priesthood is usually recruited. They cannot now afford to give their sons the long and expensive training required. Another cause is the unattractiveness of the clerical profession as a career. Stipends are rarely more than £300 a year."

During the editor's absence at the Baptist World Alliance, our oldest subscriber, Miss Bashua Cornwell of West Allis, Wis., died at the age of 103 years, three months and ten days. She was baptized at the age of eleven and was therefore a member of a Baptist church for ninety-two years. For seventy-five years she lived in the old Cornwell home near Milwaukee. Who can imagine the changes which have taken place within the limits of one human life?

According to the "Wisconsin Baptist Bulletin" Rev. Norman B. Henderson, pastor of the University Church, Minneapolis, has received a unanimous call to the First Church, Madison, Wis. It is thought that his acceptance is assured on condition that the church await his coming until the spring of 1924. Rev. W. T. Dorward is supplying the Madison Church.

Secretary Charles E. Hughes says: "The American people have been inexpressibly shocked at the terrible disaster suffered in Japan. We have already given voice to our deep sympathy and we shall be prompt and generous in urgent relief measures. The historic friendship between the two peoples was cemented at the Washington conference and the noble attitude of the distinguished representatives of the Japanese government at that conference can never be forgotten. There is a universal desire among us, not only to express our grief at this appalling tragedy, but to lend in every way a helping hand to our friends who are so sorely afflicted."

In the hope of more fully informing and enlisting Baptist laymen of the South in all phases of the work of the denomination, a Southwide convention of men has been arranged to be held in Memphis, Tenn., Feb. 12, 13 and 14 it is announced by Dr. J. T. Henderson of Knoxville, general secretary of the Laymen's Missionary Movement, which is sponsor for the meeting. Memphis Baptists have already begun their preparations for the entertainment of the convention, the second of its kind to be held in the South, the first one having been held ten years ago. It is probable the program committee of the Southern Baptist Convention will arrange to give the men at least a half-day for their program at the next session of that body at Atlanta in May.

The Baptist

Vol. IV Chicago, Ill., Sept. 29, 1923 No. 35

THE BAPTIST, founded in 1919, is published every Saturday by the Northern Baptist Convention at 417 South Dearborn Street, Chicago, Illinois. Entered as second-class matter, February 4, 1920, at the post office at Chicago, Illinois, under the Act of March 3, 1879. Acceptance for mailing at special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized February 4, 1920.

Managing Editor: Edgar L. Killam
Committee on THE BAPTIST
EMORY W. HUNT, Chairman
CLARENCE A. BARBOUR HUGH A. HEATH

RATES: Single subscriptions, $2.50 a year; church clubs equal to 10 per cent of church membership, $2.00; single copies, 10 cents. In foreign countries the postage is $1.04 extra; in Canada, 52 cents extra. CHANGE OF ADDRESS: Both old and new addresses should be in our hands at least two weeks before the change is to go into effect. Always give key number as it appears on your label.

REMITTANCES: Should be made payable to THE BAPTIST. Acknowledgment made through change of label date. If check on local bank is sent, please add exchange.

SPECIAL: Renewal notice will be sent each subscriber previous to the date to which subscription is paid. Subscriber should give attention to notice by sending in renewal promptly, or, if paper is not desired for the coming year, should send in a discontinuance order.

ADVERTISING: Display: Rate per agate line, 30 cents; full page (420 agate lines), $125. No time or space discounts. Classified: 6 cents per word. Obituary notices: One hundred words free; 4 cents per word for additional. Cash to accompany order.

CORRESPONDENCE relating to subscriptions should be addressed to THE BAPTIST, Subscription Department, 417 South Dearborn Street, Chicago, Ill.

BRANCH OFFICES: The office of the state director of promotion in each state is an office of THE BAPTIST.

Table of Contents

| | Page |
|---|---|
| FRESH FROM THE FIELD | 1090 |
| EDITORIAL | 1093 |
| THE STEWARDSHIP OF TIME, BY CHARLES A. COOK | 1096 |
| THE TESTIMONY OF TITHERS | 1100 |
| SOME EXPERIENCE IN TITHING, BY JESSIE BURRALL | 1101 |
| AN EXPERIENCE IN TITHING, BY H. BAINBRIDGE | 1101 |
| THE STEWARDSHIP OF LIFE, BY JOHN A. EARL | 1103 |
| FINANCIAL RESPONSIBILITIES THEN AND NOW, BY H. E. FOSDICK | 1104 |
| CHRISTIAN STEWARDSHIP, BY JAY LAPHAM | 1105 |
| OUR SHATTERED WORK IN JAPAN, BY JAMES H. FRANKLIN | 1106 |
| YOUNG PEOPLE'S WORK | 1107 |
| THE CHIMNEY CORNER | 1108 |
| RELIGIOUS EDUCATION | 1110 |
| OUR OWN FOLKS | 1111 |
| OUR BOOK SHELF | 1116 |
| FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE GENERAL BOARD OF PROMOTION | 1120 |

Extra Special!

The issue of Sept. 29 is devoted to the experiences of men and women who have systematically practiced stewardship, some of them for many years. It is an unusual number. In its preparation we have had the assistance of Dr. F. A. Agar and his committee. We are printing only 5,000 extra copies and orders will be filled in the order of receipt. If you want ten, twenty-five, fifty or more copies we will send them at once, postage prepaid at the special rate of five cents per copy. Please send your check with the order, if possible. Of the Labor Day number we sold more than 2,000 extra copies and could have sold more. It would not be a bad idea to write your order.

Killam's Kollum

An Editor's Invoice

According to the Milwaukee, N. D., Globe, an editor once kept track of his profits and losses during the year, and gave an invoice of his business diary at the end of twelve months of ups and downs in the following manner:

Been broke 361 times.
Praised the public 89 times.
Told lies 720 times.
Missed prayer meeting 52 times.
Been roasted 431 times.
Roasted others 52 times.
Washed office towel 3 times.
Missed meals 0.
Mistaken for a preacher 11 times.
Mistaken for a capitalist 0.
Got whipped 8 times.
Whipped others 0.
Cash on hand at beginning $1.47.
Cash on hand at ending 15c.

If this editor had been running a denominational newspaper the invoices would have been longer and more pathetic. For example as far as this record goes no one ever questioned the editor's orthodoxy. In the third item a little more latitude would have been required. Still, an editor is the most envied of men. He does not even feel sorry for himself.

The New Minister

"Having recently come into the Baptist ministry I shall want THE BAPTIST. Will you please send me the paper beginning with the June number?" writes James W. Esveld of Cadillac, Mich. With pleasure. The man who lines up in this fashion at the commencement of his pastoral work is the kind of minister the denomination needs.

Perfectly True But——

Across the face of an envelope received at the office of THE BAPTIST appeared the following: "Mr. Postman: You may deliver this letter to —THE BAPTIST, 417 S. Dearborn St., Chicago,— But you cannot deliver your soul from hell. Jesus can. Try him." This is one way of preaching the gospel, and far be it from us to attempt to decide on its value in the eyes of other folks. To us it had something of the same effect of the great sign-boards that often face you as you begin an unusually dangerous descent in the mountains. "Prepare to meet thy God." "Last year a number of persons were killed on the curve just ahead. Have you made your peace with God?" Like the apostle of old we try to rejoice that by all means and measures Christ is preached. The thing we started out to say, however, is that it would not look good for you, kind reader, to die with your subscription to THE BAPTIST and Missions in arrears.

Dr. James S. Swartz, former treasurer of the International Mercantile Marine, New York City, has donated to Bucknell University a 600-acre tract of land situated along the Potomac River between Washington, D. C., and Mt. Vernon, Va. The land, traversed by the interurban railway running between these cities, is valued conservatively at $60,000. It is ideally situated in the valley made famous by General Washington and will probably be developed into a suburban residential community. Doctor Swartz has been a member of the university board of trustees for nearly forty years and has been for the past seven years chairman of that body.

The Ten Association are holding their meetings during the month of September. Thus far they have been well attended and a spirit of optimism seems to pervade all branches of the work.

In a recent sermon, Dr. C. F. Aked said that "nothing in the world worth doing has been done without a touch of healthy recklessness." There are times when a pastor must throw caution to the winds and run the risk of pastoral suicide or become the willing victim of local conditions.

"Unity," "a journal of the religion of democracy," quotes from the letter of President Coolidge to the Southern Newspaper Publishers' Association in which he said, "Our institutions, our social organizations, our economic conditions are all of a quality and quantity which are worthy of our highest admiration." The journal is troubled about the "quantity" of our institutions and social organizations. The paper then quotes from the statement of the committee on law enforcement of the American Bar Association in which it is pointed out that in the matter of crime, the situation in the United States is "worse than in any other civilized country." While in 1921, says the report, there were 260 murders in New York City and 137 in Chicago, there were last year in London only seventeen, no one of which remained a "mystery." Here at least is "quantity."

The Tabernacle Church of Chicago is rejoicing in the fact that it has secured a pastor and that this pastor is Dr. S. J. Reid. Reports of good congregations and large plans for the future of the church are coming to this office. If people who need the gospel furnish the kind of a field a Baptist church wants, the Tabernacle Church and Pastor Reid have a great field.

The Old Tent Evangel closed its forty-fourth evangelistic season Sept. 5. One hundred thirteen services were held and were attended by 145,000 persons. Among the speakers we note Congressman Upshaw, J. J. Ross, John Ham and John MacNeill. It is said that during the entire period of service more than 4,000,000 persons have attended these meetings.

A year ago there was wide-spread interest in the case of Rev. J. D. M. Buckner, the Methodist minister, who was retired by the Nebraska Methodist Conference before he wanted to retire. The Congregational church at Chamberlain, S. D., has called Mr. Buckner and he has accepted the call. It is reported that his old church at Aurora, Neb., has secured a petition asking the conference for his return. He will not give his consent to the appointment even though the bishop should heed the request of the church.

(Continued on page 1118)

GONE!!

THE WORK OF YEARS DESTROYED IN A NIGHT

THE TOKYO TABERNACLE
THE MABIE MEMORIAL SCHOOL
FOUR JAPANESE CHURCHES
FIVE MISSIONARY RESIDENCES
THE SARAH CURTIS SCHOOL
THE MARY COLBY SCHOOL(Damaged)

DESTROYED BY THE JAPAN EARTHQUAKE

An Unparalleled Catastrophe in Baptist Foreign Mission Work

Seven missionary families and six women missionaries have lost homes and personal possessions. Japanese workers are in dire distress. The sudden ending of Bible work, Sunday schools, Kindergartens, Preaching services is a calamity.Other property in Tokyo and Yokohama seriously damaged. Prompt help now will save decades of missionary work from total disaster.

TOTAL LOSS NOT LESS THAN $500,000. YOUR HELP IS NEEDED

You have gave generously to the relief work of the Red Cross. Give now with equal generosity for the missionary reconstruction of Japan.

American Baptist Foreign Mission Society
GEORGE B. HUNTINGTON, Treasurer

Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society
ALICE M. HUDSON, Treasurer
276 Fifth Avenue, New York City

Send checks to your State Promotion Director or to the treasurers of the societies designated "Japan Reconstruction."

THE GENERAL BOARD OF PROMOTION OF THE NORTHERN BAPTIST CONVENTION.

The Baptist

An Astonished Editor

MANY elaborate and in general trustworthy calculations have been sent forth from statistical bureaus as to the amount necessary to support a family of five persons. A recent editorial in a metropolitan daily expressed amazement at the fact, which became known through the income tax office, that a certain minister was supporting and educating a family with nine children at an income about half that which the statistical computations had determined to be necessary for the number of persons. Those who know could have told the editor that there are thousands of ministers and Christian laymen who are performing this miracle and also giving a generous share of their seemingly inadequate income to the work of the kingdom of Christ. The editor was sure that the minister could earn ten times his present salary if he could be persuaded to make known the secret of his achievement. The only trouble with that would probably be that the most of those who found out the minister's secret would be like the Scotchman who consulted a physician about his ailments and was told that he must stop drinking whiskey. The Scot hastening from the office was reminded by the doctor that he had not paid for the advice and answered briefly as he vanished through the door, "I'm no takin' it!" Learning the minister's secret would not ensure a general imitation of his economic method.

The sneer of Europeans at Americans as worshippers of wealth and as dollar-mad is misapplied. We do not make presidents of our millionaires. It is in Europe that titles so frequently go to wealthy brewers. The American commonly enjoys money-making. It becomes almost a game to him. We have no "leisure class" in America except our tramps. But the American is not a penny-pincher, nor does he haggle endlessly over a bargain as is done in almost every other nation. The visitor from a foreign land does not find every hand here held out to him for tips, nor are we expert in inventing charges for trifling or imaginary services. We cannot rival the Jew, the Scot and the Chinaman in a reputation for close reckoning and sharp bargaining. No, the characteristic American fault is not so much hard dealing or covetousness as it is our reckless method of seeking money and our carelessness in its spending.

The vastness and still undeveloped resources of our country, the inventive genius and masterly financial ability of American men, the absence of an aristocracy and a large army with titles, offices and other honors as goals for ambition, may account in large part for that urge toward material achievement so characteristic of American men. One sometimes wonders what form or emphasis our Lord's parables might have taken if primarily delivered to a careless, free-spending nation like ours instead of to a nation noted through all the vicissitudes of its hundred generations of history for its acquisitive instinct.

IN many respects America is generous beyond anything known of any other people in human history. and a setting aside of the full portion which should Vast sums will be lavishly poured out in some great emergency like that most dread of historic disasters which has so recently fallen upon unhappy Japan. Millions are given by some single person of wealth for endowment or for a stately memorial structure on a great university campus. Enormous sums are given for libraries or for general education, or for the uplift of humanity. It is comparatively easy also to secure large gifts from people of more moderate means for a local hospital or for a fine church edifice, there being a mingling in such cases of beneficence with personal interest and a desire for the applause of men.

All of these things however fail to touch more than tangentially the principle of Christian stewardship which demands, first the recognition of God's claim upon us and all our resources, then the steady, conscientious and wise devotion of a regular share of our income to the distinctive work of our Lord's kingdom, and in addition an equally conscientious use of the remainder of our resources, though it may be spent for subsistence, for savings, for recreation and for other uses not distinctively religious. The Christian steward will give of his means to a distant need of the kingdom as readily as to one near at hand, to one where his gift will reflect no glory upon himself at least as readily as to a memorial window which would blazon the family name each Sunday before the eyes of himself and his neighbors, and he will give not merely when he feels like it but as regularly and generously and unquestioningly as he would pay his family bills or his taxes. He will give not the mere loose change which he happens to have about him when a call comes but will have carefully and adequately provided for it in advance.

The financing of the kingdom will never be accomplished by the wealthy alone; it will take the multiplied and continuous giving of the millions of moderate means and the tear-stained mite of the widow to make up an offering acceptable to our King and adequate to his stupendous plan for the redemption of the world. It is not so much a question of the size of our incomes; it involves a reckoning and a consecration of every resource, a budgeting of time, strength, influence, of all our earning and spending, and a setting aside of the full portion which should be assigned to the direct work of the kingdom. It is this which must have been the secret of that minister's and of many another devoted Christian home. If every one of us is ultimately to give an account of himself to God, we had better learn to keep accounts here and now.

Our Stewardship Objective

ELSEWHERE we print in full the stewardship section of this year's program as adopted by the Northern Baptist Convention at the Atlantic City meeting last May.

Many people have queried what some of the items have to do with stewardship and have asserted that they belonged to a church efficiency program. They belong both to church efficiency and to stewardship, for church efficiency is just a form of group stewardship; it is the effect of a proper application of stewardship principles. As individuals we are stewards of God's manifold mercies and we shall be held to strict accountability sooner or later concerning the measure of our faithfulness. When we voluntarily associate ourselves with other individual stewards in church membership we not only are accountable for personal stewardship but also for the administration of the group activities and possibilities. We can seem to be faithful stewards in our individual capacity, but can lose the battle for the Lord because, mingling in a group, we have not been faithful stewards of our group responsibilities. Let us cite one glaring example of unfaithfulness in our group stewardship by calling to mind the fact that in the enrolled church membership in the Northern Baptist Convention we have at least 360,000 non-resident members. It is a a well-known fact that a very large per cent of this non-resident membership is committing spiritual suicide on the installment plan and the remainder of the membership is idly watching the non-residents die by inches. Yet it has been proved again and again that a reasonable amount of loving ministry from church officers and members will recover a great portion of those non-resident members and help them into a new church relationship and participation. As a group of individuals our stewardship objective is to be attained by a simple use of church efficiency.

Another fact confronts us in the objectives of this year's stewardship program. We have at least half a million members who contribute practically nothing for our missionary work or other denominational agencies supported by our program unified under the name of the General Board of Promotion of the Northern Baptist Convention. The 400,000 who may be giving money to carry on our work around the world can perhaps claim as individuals to be faithful stewards of the money in their lives. But we say with the utmost certainty that they are not faithful group stewards until they have exhausted the last resource of love and discipline to produce every one in the group as a giver of money for the support of missions and other beneficent denominational work. This group unfaithfulness reacts on individual stewardship. Here again the group stewardship objective is to be obtained by use of some simple church efficiency methods included in our program. No one must be allowed to sneer away a good method by stating, "more machinery," for our program of church efficiency never substitutes machinery in place of spirituality, nor does it put method where ministry needs to be. We know how to help the group to produce every member as givers provided the lay officers and members will use a steward's time, energy, talent and personality to that definite end. Do we lack the courage to do the work, or what is the matter with us?

We desire to emphasize one other point in the stewardship program of the year. We refer to the items which concern church officials. The average church officer is not informed as to his duties, therefore he cannot perform those duties. Here again a simple, common-sense piece of church efficiency enables the individual to become a faithful official steward by means of officers' training councils and clinics. Everywhere church officers welcome such help and profit by it. Pastors also welcome such help for their lay officials.

The stewardship objectives of the year then include individual stewardship, group stewardship and official stewardship. The program for the year is built with those objectives in mind, but a program alone will not produce any results. We must work out the program. We must study the program; we must pray it through this year and in the years to come. We have a long task ahead of us, so must get a good start this year and continue the work in the years ahead of us.

Gone!!

"GONE! The work of years destroyed in a night." What a picture! These words in the announcement of our Foreign Society on another page tell a sorry story of the losses which have come to our work in Japan. The Tokyo Tabernacle, the Mabie Memorial School, four Japanese church buildings, five missionary residences, the Sarah Curtis School are destroyed by the earthquake and the fire which followed. Other property is badly damaged. The material loss will reach $500,000.

The citizens of our country through many agencies have given themselves to the task of providing for the immediate needs of the stricken nation. By September 20 the vast sum of $9,125,000 had been raised. Putting ourselves back of this general movement, we reminded our readers that after bread and shelter has been provided, even after the country as a whole has turned to other tasks, the Christian forces will feel the urge of a Christian obligation to rebuild the schools, churches, hospitals and to increase their ministry.

As human beings we were shocked by the calamity which befell Japan. Tens and even hundreds of thousands of men, women and children suddenly met death. Homes are destroyed, families circles broken and there is sorrow and suffering beyond words to tell. As Christians we have an added responsibility. Bread and shelter will be a blessing to the needy in this hour of distress, but Japanese can no more live by bread alone than can we. The majority of those who perished died without knowing Christ as we know him. The majority of those who now sorrow and suffer are without the comfort Christ brings.

The foreign societies could not foresee this calamity. For these needs there is no provision in their budgets. Their work is already curtailed to meet only the most pressing claims. The call right now to our Baptist men and women is one for special gifts designated for the reconstruction of our missionary equipment in Japan. The gospel must be preached. The schools must be housed, for out of them will come the future leaders of the Christian forces of that country. Our missionaries, whose lives, thank God, have been spared, must be sheltered. Surely to the Christian the call to give the Bread of Life is as compelling as the call to give the bread which meets a passing need. "Gone!" But in this there is a mighty challenge.

A Smoke Screen

THE late terrible world war developed some new devices designed to hamper the defensive operations of an opponent while an offensive operation was being conducted against him. One of those war-time devices was the smoke screen used by a warship to hide itself while it perpetrated an attack or made its escape from an opponent. It was a more or less successful operation, depending quite often upon some other elements that were beyond the control of the user; such, for instance, as the wind.

Lately we heard a well-known man speaking in prayer meeting. He spoke the words of a pious man with ease and apparent gusto, but the countenances of those who heard him and by experience knew him for what he really was, clearly revealed that his speech was to them only a smoke screen. In his case the natural laws governing character made the man's smoke screen of very doubtful value.

We have been hearing a great deal in recent days about theological discussions and we wonder if some of those disputations are not really smoke screens put out by some one who wants to hide while taking a fling at some one else.

Only a small part of a well-balanced Christian life consists of vocal expression and much the larger part of the fruitage of a life that is hidden with God through faith in Jesus Christ must be made up of things that we do, because we love our Lord and Saviour and therefore love each other as brethren.

We wish, therefore, that much of the theological wrangling would disappear and in its place would come a great and Christ-like effort on the part of every one who feels called upon to defend the faith to do so by first helping his own local church to become a Christ-like power in the community where it is placed to serve and to preach the truth.

We also wish that some who seem easily able to produce a flow of accusing words would turn most of them into an earnest effort to produce every member of his church as worshipping, serving, witnessing and giving. Perhaps when the theological disputants have produced their own local church members without spot or blemish, and every one in definite covenant relation with them is living right with God, then rightfully they will be in a position to become leaders, teachers and cleaners-up of the rest of us. In the meanwhile we wonder if many a theological disputant is not just putting down a smoke screen to hide in while getting away from the rest of us. Long ago our Lord himself blew away an ancient as well as the modern smoke screen when he said, "Not everyone that saith unto me Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven, but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven."

The Power Behind Production

THE Northern Baptist Convention has by vote of its delegated constituency confronted the local churches with a budget for this current year of more than twelve millions of dollars. To some people this may seem like a staggering sum when considered in bulk, but when looked at on a per capita basis, it is a reasonable task. An average of $11 per capita per annum would more than produce the needed amount. Figuring three people in the average household would mean that a family would contribute $33 or a tenth, or tithe of $330. The average American family earns more than three times that amount and upon such a basis of missionary giving every good steward of God's monies would still have ample resources out of the tithe with which to maintain the local church and where necessary build a suitable church edifice. We know a number of churches where the per capita giving through the church treasury is over $60 a year and we recently heard of a church in the West where the giving of nearly 1,500 persons averaged more than $100 per year per person.

The New World Movement objective which the General Board of Promotion is leading us to produce, is not primarily a monetary objective. Our people have the money in hand, they are earning the needed resources week by week, they know the needs of the denomination and they have through their representatives from the local churches authorized its production for our work. With all these facts before us we must, however, clearly understand that the money will not be paid into the local church treasuries unless the individual church members are aroused by a real love for their Lord to a fresh sense of accountability. Accountability without love will not move the people to produce a worthy stewardship. Once again every life must see its Saviour and Lord face to face and catch again the glory of his work of redemption for them. To see we must first pray, pray for ourselves and for each other. When we have really prayed we will surely catch the vision. The vision will stir us up to worthy production not alone of money, but of all our other resources of life and love.

The Stewardship of Time

By Charles A. Cook

TIME and life are alike given us of God to use for him as his stewards. We do not create either. They are a divine entrustment as definitely as were the talents placed in the hands of the servants in the parable. Time is so precious, and we are in such danger of being prodigal of it, that we need to pray daily.

"So teach us to number our days that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom." (Ps. 90:12.) "Lord, make me to know mine end, and the measure of my days, what it is." (Ps. 39:4.)

We cannot do with time as we may do with money. We cannot save it by laying it away for use in the future. Time is such a commodity, is of such a character, that if we do not administer and use it as a trust for God and his service immediately, we can never so use it. When the moment has gone it has gone forever.

Time is a sacred trust, as sacred as life itself. God has made every day of our lives precious with opportunities for speaking a kindly word, lending a helping hand, doing some noble deed, rendering some Christ-like service. The moments that are so golden should be valued in the highest degree and made much of for Christ and his church. Time becomes precious to us according to the high and holy uses we make of it. The better the use we make of it the more enhanced in value does it become. Used in winning a soul to Christ, and thereby adding a star to the Saviour's crown that shall shine forever, a few moments of time have a value eternity alone can reveal. One hour's consecrated service for Christ may turn the course of the gospel into new channels of power and blessing unto the salvation of multitudes of souls. A day's doings may affect the destiny of vast empires.

The brevity and uncertainty of time, so far as we are personally concerned, give added emphasis to its preciousness and sacredness. Because our stewardship of time is limited at most to a few short years it is necessary that we be diligent and faithful in the use of each day as it comes. Not a day should pass without some definite service being rendered for Christ. When we stand before our Lord and Master to give an account of our stewardship, it will be a serious loss to us if we have allowed any of our days to pass away without anything having been done in them for him. We have thought too little of time as a sacred entrustment for which we are responsible to God.

STIR me, oh! stir me, Lord,
I care not how,
But stir my heart in passion for the world!
Stir me to give, to go—but most to pray:
Stir, till the blood-red banner be unfurled
O'er lands that still in deepest darkness lie,
O'er deserts where no cross is lifted high.

Stir me, oh! stir me, Lord. Thy heart was stirred
By love's intensest fire, till thou didst give
Thine only Son, thy best beloved One,
Even to the dreadful cross, that I might live.
Stir me to give myself so back to thee,
That thou canst give thyself again through me.

The Value of Moments

An old proverb says, "Save the pennies, and the pounds will take care of themselves." The principle expressed holds true in regard to time. Value and use the minutes, and you will safeguard the hours and the days. Safeguarding them thus they will have greatly increased worth. The aggregate amount of time lost through the period of a life, simply because some profitable use has not been made of the spare moments as they come, would be startling in its magnitude if it could be fully measured. Comparatively few men have learned the art of using the spare moments of life in a beneficial way. Great watchfulness and diligent practice are necessary to success in filling up the many unoccupied spaces in life with useful activities. But he who forms the habit of making the most of his moments greatly enriches his own life and contributes most to the welfare of his fellows. Some of the greatest achievements have resulted from a faithful, well-planned use of the short periods of spare time. A busy merchant became an efficient Bible teacher by mastering a Bible correspondence course on the train as he traveled to and from his business. William H. Ridgway, writing for the Sunday School Times, says in one of his articles: "Nor are these notes an eight-hour product. Every one is written upon a scrap of time. This particular one in the Atlantic City trainshed as I await the belated arrival of a train."

His gems of teaching and truth which have contributed so much to the practical, every-day application of the Sunday-school lessons, have been mined and polished in those precious spare moments. So might multitudes of others gain valuable knowledge to pass on, and thereby impart inspiration and help, by using the opportunties the spare moments furnish. Many a man has qualified himself for greater efficiency in business, and for greater usefulness in Christian work, by snatching the passing moments in a study of the best methods for the one field or the other.

"Remember that time is money," said Benjamin Franklin in his "Advice to a Young Tradesman." Just as truly it may be said, time is knowledge and wisdom, time is opportunity and power, time is skill and achievement. It may be all these, and more, as it is carefully conserved and used to advantage in these or other realms.

Some church members excuse themselves from engaging in any definite Christian work in the church by saying they haven't time. If they are sincere in making this excuse, and their time seems to be so occupied that they cannot give any of it to the Lord's work, it is because they have not learned the secret of using the spare moments of life, or they have not planned their lives with a carefully prepared schedule of daily luties, so that they could give a portion of their time regularly to he Lord's work. One of the busest men in the country, who is at he head of the largest business of ts kind in America, and who is lso on the board of directors of everal great business institutions, inds time for a number of impor- ant positions in the service of his lenomination and in his own local hurch. He seldom fails to be on and promptly in either his busi- ess or church engagements. He loes so much because his time is arefully planned. So might mul- itudes of others do who think they ave no time for Christian work. ailure to accomplish more in life s due all too often to haphazard se of time. A carefully prepared chedule for the day would safe- uard the precious hours and se- ure gratifying results. Many a astor loses out, fails to master is task and win real victories, ecause he dawdles away his time. A carefully prepared program, rayerfully adhered to, would save any a man from failure in his ork for Christ. We need to be ore faithful as stewards of time.

We can, as a rule, find time to o the things we want to do. The xcuse, "Haven't time," is often in- incere because they who make it ave abundance of time for a mul- itude of other less important hings than the work God wants hem to do. When Christians learn o spend less time on minor and nsignificant matters and listen ore attentively to the call of God, nd are gripped more fully by the eeds of humanity, they will de- ote more time to the great press- ng work for the kingdom of God hat needs to be done in the world.

"Far beyond words to tell is the eed of willing and able men and omen who will strive with every ower they possess to serve the ingdom every day by every hought, every word, every act of heir lives."

Using or Misusing

There will be a full and proper tewardship of time only as the life ims of God's servants are high nd God-honoring. The loftier the oal the higher will be the level of he life-plan itself and the holier vill be the use made of the hours nd the days as they pass. In our tewardship of time we must be vatchful not to divorce the use of t from the interests of the king- om of God. We are to honor the ord with our time as well as with our substance. We should conscientiously abstain from devoting our time to any uses in which it would not be possible to glorify God. We need very frequently to examine ourselves and sincerely ask ourselves whether we are making such uses of the time God gives us as he would have us make. No day snould be without its record of something done in real service for Jesus Christ.

More time needs to be devoted by God's children to Bible study and prayer. We can never make the highest uses of time unless we take time to listen to what God has to say to us and to learn his will for our lives. How much we blunder, and how often we get off on some treacherous trail filled with Satan's traps, because we do not pause long enough, or frequently enough, to discover what our heavenly Father's will is concerning the way in which he would have us go. How often we do the wrong thing, or fail to do the right thing, because we hastily choose our own way and work.

"NO time to pray!"
Oh, who so fraught with earthly care,
As not to give to humble prayer
Some part of day?

"No time to pray!"
'Mid each day's dangers, what retreat
More needful than the mercy-seat?
Who need not pray?

"No time to pray!"
Must care or business' urgent call
So press us as to take it all,
Each passing day?

What thought more drear,
Than that our God his face should hide,
And say, through all life's swelling tide,
"No time to hear!"

"There is a way which seemeth right unto a man; but the end thereof are the ways of death." (Prov. 14:12.) "In all thy ways acknowledge him, and he shall direct thy paths." (Prov. 3:6.)

He who takes not time to pray cuts the line of communication with his own base of supplies and soon finds himself without the necessary materials and equipment with which to engage in battle with the enemy. He who takes time to pray makes the highest use of it, and, under the wisdom and power gained through communion with the Lord his God, will perform the task to be done not only more efficiently but in a very much shorter period. Luther used to say of his busiest days that he had so much to do he could not get through without two or three hours of prayer. Ezra the priest and scribe gained both safety and time for the 800-mile journey to Jerusalem by calling together the people who were to go with him for a time of fasting and prayer before they started.

"Then I proclaimed a fast there, at the river Ahava, that we might humble ourselves before our God, to seek of him a straight way for us, and for our little ones, and for all our substance." (Ezra 8:21.)

Individuals and churches would make more rapid progress and accomplish greater things in their work for Christ if they would spend more time in prayer and supplication. There would be fewer debts and deficits if the financial needs of the work, both in the local church and for the great missionary movements, were made more definitely a matter of prayer.

There are many illustrations of the power of prayer in meeting the problems of the church proving that time given to prayer is time saved. While much time may be spent in other efforts without success, when God's people, in full dependence upon him, spread their needs before him in united supplication, deliverance speedily comes.

In all our church work there needs to be more time given to prayer. We are losing ground all along the line because prayer is given so small a place in our lives.

The misuse and wasting of time is one of the most prevalent of the besetting sins of professed Christians. Wasting time in idleness or in foolish trivialities is a vice. "Satan finds some mischief still for idle hands to do." If all the time which is spent by professed followers of Jesus Christ in petty and senseless ways were consecrated to efforts for the salvation of the lost the world might be speedily won to Christ. A Christian man has no more right to divorce his time from the exalted world-saving service of God and devote his time and energy to mere money-making, or pleasure-seeking, than a soldier on the field of battle has to lay down his arms and give his time to chasing butterflies or to making mudpies.

"There are thousands of young men and women in America living dull and petty lives merely because devoted to petty things. There are men sitting all day on a three-legged stool who might be founding an empire. There are women "pouring tea" all winter who might be lifting hundreds of Oriental girls into new womanhood. There are able-bodied Americans without a vision, or a task, useless as chips on the stream, when they might be directing the main currents of life for a province or a nation. Devotion to a great cause makes a great life," says W. H. P. Faunce.

During the war a multitude of the women of the country turned from the superficial butterfly life they were living and committed themselves with fine devotion to a thousand and one activities on behalf of the soldiers and their families. They used their refined abilities in beautiful war-work ministries, and it was hoped they would never return to spending their time in the trivial and profitless occupations of the past. Alas! how soon the reaction came after the war, how complete has been the backsliding to the old sinful waste of time! God has called his people to the most stupendous task in all the world, with issues that are eternal, and it ill becomes them to be spending their precious lifetime in that which is commonplace or useless. The Lord Jesus has a higher claim upon the time of his followers than any one else, or anything else, in all the world. His lordship over our hours and days should be fully acknowledged, and our lives should constantly witness to the faithfulness of our stewardship of time.

If a right use of time is to be made, there will need to be some new adjustments of heart and life to God and a schedule of duties must be prayerfully arranged. No man can make the best use of his time without a program to which he shall work. As we adopt God's program we have the promise of his presence in working it out, and then we cannot fail. Each of us may well ask, "How would my Lord have me use my time?"

Always on Duty

When a person has once enlisted under the banner of Jesus Christ as his Lord, there is no moment in his life when he is free from the obligations and duties of that enlistment. It is not as with the armies of nations in which men enlist for a limited length of time; the Christian's term of enlistment is for life. There is no discharge for him till the Great Captain calls him home. A Christian is therefore always on duty. There is no time in all his life when he can say he is excused from the service of his Lord. Having put on the uniform of a Christian profession he is not at any time to lay that uniform aside and cease to live and act as a true soldier of Jesus Christ. Every hour is made sacred by this fact. This does not mean that every hour must be filled with praying or preaching or teaching, but it does mean that whatever he does, whether in the common household affairs, or in business, in recreation, or in social intercourse, there is never a time when he is not a Christian and when he is not to act as a Christian. He is always under orders and he is always on duty.

"No soldier on service entangleth himself in the affairs of this life that he may please him who enrolled him as a solider." (2 Tim 2:4.)

Blessed is that soldier of Jesus Christ whom his Lord when he cometh shall find on duty, whatever the duty at that particular moment may be. The good soldier of Jesus Christ will live each day so that should his Great Captain come on that day he would find him obeying his orders, doing his will. A faithful stewardship of time will not fall short of this high ideal and stewards are always required to be faithful.

There would be a more regular and constant attendance at the services of God's house, both on the Lord's Day and during the week, on the part of hosts of church members if they remembered their enlistment for Christ and were always true to the fact that they have received no leave of absence from him. Because they are always on duty they should be always on duty.

Procrastination

Procrastination is still the thief of time. A slothful postponing of a service which it is one's clear and imperative duty to perform all too often ends in the work never being done. Procrastination, like a veritable thief, takes the opportunity to act right away and never returns the time he has stolen. It is gone forever. Or if, through the grace of God and some favoring providence, the postponed action may still be performed, it will be without the momentum and power of the original call and inspiration to act. A duty put off is always harder to do when at last

Will a Man Rob God?

WHAT about the matter of God's ownership that lies back of the prophet's cry?

The basal fact upon which Christian stewardship tests is God's ownership. Ownership implies property. And there is no property without ownership. The gold-bearing strata in the age-old mountains have held their precious deposits since the beginning of time, but they did not become property until they were discovered and their ownership established. There is no ownership without personality. Only persons own anything. The pagan god is impersonal. Therefore he cannot own anything. There is no place in pagan philosophy for a God who is the possessor of heaven and earth. But the Christian's God is a person. He is Jehovah the Lord. "The earth is his and the fullness thereof, the world and they that dwell therein." He created all of it. The only logical conception of God for the Christian is that being the creator he is the owner of that which he has created. God never gives away possessions in fee simple. He entrusts them to us as his stewards. What we have put into our hands now will be entrusted to others in years hence. Circumstances change. Divine ownership never changes.

In the beginning, when God put Adam in the garden and reserved a part of its fruits for himself, he put the stamp of his ownership upon all things. The sin of our first parents was that they took of the part that belonged to God. It was for this same sin in a later generation that Malachi cried out "Will a man rob God?" and it is this same sin today that robs the Lord's treasury so that money that belongs to him and that is needed to carry on his work is not available.

—Gilbert N. Brink.

t may be undertaken. A true steward of time will not allow himself to be dominated by a procrastinating spirit. In his activities in the church he will act promptly and will do with his might whatever his hands find to do. He will neither waste his own time nor rob others of its precious moments by being late in getting to any meeting in which he is to have a part. Unpunctuality on the part of church members in meeting their church engagements is, for the most part, wholly inexcusable.

God has written the word "NOW" in large letters in the gospel message and commission. "Behold NOW is the acceptable time, behold NOW is the day of salvation." (2 Cor. 6:2.) The apostle is writing to Christians as workers together with God and is pleading for action on the ground that God's day of salvation is NOW.

Giving Money but Not Time

Sometimes it is harder to give money than it is to do some other things. Many women in our churches, seemingly, would rather work and fuss with church dinners and fairs than give of their substance directly into the treasury of the church. They congratulate themselves on doing a great thing when by these indirect methods they raise a lot of money for the church. The fact is that if they would analyze their activities, and count all the cost of time and labor and materials, and put the value directly into the treasury, they would have contributed quite as much as they raised, and would have saved themselves the headaches and the heartaches, which too often result from such efforts.

But, as a rule, it is easier to give money than it is to give time to the Lord's work. Men will say, "Here is a check for $100, but please do not put me on a committee nor ask me to give my time in any way, I am too busy." The Christian man who realizes that he is always on duty in the Lord's army and that he is God's steward of time, and is therefore under obligation to plan and administer and use the time God gives him for his glory, will not talk that way. A successful business man who was giving liberally of his substance to the business of the kingdom and had made generous provision in his will for Christian missions, gave this testimony, "I am living more than half my time to constructive kingdom affairs, and rejoice that God has honored me by considering me worthy to be used of him in a small way." While this brother is not alone as a business man in devoting time to the affairs of the kingdom business suffers because so few are willing so to serve their Master.

The Mystery of Love

The love of Christ which passeth knowledge—Eph. 3:19

DEEP mysteries of life our minds enshroud,
Science, with searching glass, scarce rifts a cloud,
Human philosophies, though keen and wise,
Can for one's peace of mind no scheme devise:—
Oe'rbridging doubts as rainbows arch above
The Faith Disciple learns in trust to be
At peace within, and for Christ's service free,
"Called to be saints,"—
yet why did Christ call ME?
No condemnation waits the soul renewed;
Led by God's Spirit with God's love imbued,
Forth goes the Faith Disciple to his task,
Nor yet to know God's "hidden things" will ask
Or life's dark mysteries to understand,
Yearning but firm to clasp his Father's hand!
"Whoso hears me, believing God is true,
From death to life hath passed"—life ever new!
Christ's voice thus calls—
has He not so called YOU?
Aye then, not what but whom shall we believe?
Whom shall we trust and with whom choose to walk?
No creeds can bear the shaken, sifting sieve,
Or be perfected by bold critic's talk:
But though I sail in leaking, wave-washed ship
'Mid tempests wild, life's billowy Galilee,
Soon, safely moored, I'll end my anxious trip
Since "Fear not, it is I," sounds o'er the sea!
Life's unsolved mystery, still—
Why Christ loved ME!
—George C. Phipps in "Boston Transcript"

One of the greatest needs of the church, in this day of urgent need and surpassing opportunity, is that a great host of Christian men and women shall recognize their full stewardship and consecrate a certain amount of time to activities directly related to the extension of the kingdom of God in the world. When the church membership is mobilized in this way Christianity will advance by leaps and bounds in the world. We plead for time to be given to Christian work and that the entire church membership be enrolled for some definite work for Christ and his church.

The Importance of the Present

There has probably been no period of time of the same length more momentous than the first quarter of the twentieth century. The world convulsions that have taken place have been staggering in their magnitude and in their overwhelming effects upon the nations. These awful upheavals have changed the entire outlook of history, and have created an imperative call and challenge to the church of Christ exceeding what has come to it in any previous age. The torn and weary world needs the great Physician and Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ. He and he alone can heal the sin-sick world, quiet its passions, and meet its great and distressing need. The church's mission is to proclaim Christ and bring him to men. The present call is for immediate, universal, sacrificial action. "The King's business requires haste."

The present is important as a time for greatly multiplying the efforts of the church to evangelize the world, and thereby hasten the coming of the kingdom, because if the forces of the church were fully brought under the power of the Holy Spirit, and 100 per cent mobilized for service, the ends of the earth could be adequately reached with the gospel message in much less than a single generation.

No Christian can live through these days without incurring great responsibility.

The present is a time to pray, to do, to give. It is a time for the utmost possible service to be rendered. It is a time to fill the hours and the days with self-sacrificing, Christ-like ministries. The days are passing with the swiftness of the wind. Our lifetime will soon be gone. Not a redeemed soul anywhere has enough time at his disposal to justify him in misspending any of it. We are to be faithful stewards of it all.

(From "The Larger Stewardship," published by Judson Press.)

The Testimony of Tithers

"Thy prayers and thine alms are come up for a memorial before God."

Testimony of a Tither

By Edward O. Elliott

I have been a tither for over thirty years and my experience has been that God does literally bless financially, those who tithe, as he has promised; and that a tither is much better off than he would have been by following the usual spasmodic way of giving without system which almost invariably means giving less than is God's share.

Giving has become a genuine pleasure and when calls are urgent, I gladly increase my offering over and above the tithe, if possible. On the other hand, I can with a clear conscience refuse to give where I feel it is not wise or best.

Tithing relieves me of the necessity of spending my time in the many fruitless and inefficient efforts to raise funds usually followed in the average church. This has given me more time for self improvement, resulting in increased earnings and a larger "tenth" for the Lord and time for the other more important work of the local church, denominational, social service and missionary activities.

As a direct result of tithing, I budget my income, reducing to a system, household expenditures, and permitting me to lay aside a substantial sum every year as a saving and capital investment.

Lastly, interest follows gifts and my vision has been broadened to take in the whole world as his kingdom.

Philadelphia.

My Experience

By Winfield S. Booth

I practice Christian stewardship because I believe in it. I am deeply conscious of my indebtedness to God for his saving grace through the gift of Jesus. While I do not possess the gift of prophecy, preaching or healing, I do have the very willing desire to return to God at least a portion of the prosperity he has bestowed upon me.

I was born of Christian parents, who were devoted to the extension of God's kingdom, so that very naturally I was early attracted to the church. During my thirty-nine years of membership, the practice of tithing was not mentioned in our church circles. Fortunately, matrimony brought me a tithing Christian as helpmeet. Then my consciousness was awakened to the fact of stewardship.

The benefits of the acknowledgement were instantaneous. I cite a few.

An unkept promise of the corporation I was with, was promptly executed, bringing an increase of 20 per cent in income. God acknowledged our faithfulness to his trust. This was quickly followed by three substantial increases in one year.

Many harrowing experiences of unfaithfulness on the part of co-workers were before my eyes, but God shielded me from harm and brought to me higher honors and more substantial successes. Frequently when the clouds were darkest, an abiding peace seemed to envelop me and always the clouds dispersed, leaving me with a greater loyalty and faith.

Our corporation consolidated with a rival, and the title and standing for which I had faithfully striven and served thirty-three years to attain, was revoked. I was again in the ranks. In four months the title was restored with 25 per cent added to my income and additional honors and privileges were extended to me. Many difficulties were removed and the work was lifted of objections.

The Testimony of a Tither

By O. R. McKay

After an experience of thirty-five years of tithing, I have been asked to tell why I adopted the custom. I do not recall the particulars of my decision beyond the fact that I felt I ought to do it. I had been led while a student in the seminary, to believe that tithing was God's method and I had no other alternative. I felt it was one way to pay my full obligations to him. Since that time, I have changed my views on that point, and now regard the tithe as the minimum expression of duty while the full obligations can be expressed, but never discharged, by tithes and offerings.

But whatever the theory or motive, I am satisfied and pleased with the results of tithing. It has given me a vested interest in all the great benevolent enterprises of the present day. I have a business interest in local gospel work, in missions far and near, in education, in social service, in relief enterprises, in fact, I have preferred stock in all of the great enterprises of the church.

Indianapolis, Ind.

I simply take these favors as so much added honor to my God and his service. My tithing is practical. I keep strict accounting of all income and expenditures—not only my salary, but income from investments and estate and from whatever other sources it is derived. We thus have ready funds for our benevolences and church, and a consciousness of a square deal with God.

A Concrete Example

By F. A. Agar

If every Christian and church member would separate a minimum of a tenth and use it for gospel purposes, the average local church and its work around the world would make extraordinary progress. Let us examine one case taken from the churches that have been handled by the writer in the course of a wide and long experience. Look thoughtfully at a country field where a rural church was at work.

116 people were enrolled as members.
$1274.40 was paid for current expenses.
$207.11 was paid for all missionary purposes.
46 were listed as regular contributors to one or both funds.
9 of the 46 were not church members.
$303.54 additional was paid for Bible school expenses, young people's work and Women's Union.

A total production of $1,785.04 came from a list of thirty-seven church members and nine non-members. Most of the thirty-seven member contributors represented a family and so included the giving of sixty-one people. That left fifty-five church members who gave nothing of record and as the loose money only amounted to $34 a year, it could truthfully be said they contributed practically nothing, as visitors gave some of the loose change. We now have the situation before us as it was when the field was visited.

A careful survey determined that there were thirty-two heads of families and eleven other wage-earners represented in the church membership; not to mention a few others who picked off a little egg-chicken-butter money on the side, and were not counted because they did not have the head of the family in the church membership.

It was agreed that the average income of thirty-two families was $1,400 net a year, which totals $44,800; and that the eleven others who earned some money would average $275 per year apiece, which foots up to $3,025. The total earnings, therefore, were $47,825. A tenth of that sum would be $4,782, while the total amount that had been contributed the last year was only $1,785.04, which showed that God's people had been withholding more than $2,996.96. A proper every-member campaign produced a number of tithers and a lot more contributors, so that over $3,270 was produced the following year, and listed more than a hundred individual contributors. Current expenses consumed about $2,000 of this total production, and $1,270 went for missionary purposes. The next year the increase in missionary money brought it up on a level with the amount spent for maintaining the local field. God's people were still withholding money required by the Lord to be paid for gospel purposes, but the little story shows what can be done practically anywhere where spiritual methods and teachings are applied to a local situation.

Withholding God's money is destroying the power of many a local church and many an individual Christian.

New York City.

My Experience

By John Ruthven

I BELIEVE in and practice Christian stewardship because in actual trial I have found out it pays.

A few years ago, with a family to educate, I found out that it took more money than I was making. I pondered and prayed over the situation awhile and in some mysterious way there was brought to my attention again—I had heard it before many times but had given it but a passing thought—the verse reading "Give, and it shall be given You." I was deeply in need, and I said I will put that to the test. I said to my Master "Lord, if you will give me more money I will give you more." Now it is strange, but through a chain of circumstances I was given an increase in salary. I kept my word, but did not come to the tenth at that time. Later I wanted to send my oldest daughter to college. I could not see the "wherewith" at all. I went through the same schedule. Why shouldn't I? It worked before, so I said "Lord, give me more money. I need it—you know I need it, and I will give you one-tenth, at least." I began at once, and laid away one-tenth and my income has increased all through the years, enough to provide what was necessary, and my youngest daughter graduated from college the sixth of last June.

In regard to stewardship of time, I have never withheld my time. I have found so much joy, pleasure and profit, mentally and spiritually, in giving thought and time, to the One who has done so much for me, that I have no inclination to withhold it. I give it because I find it pays. It has been my lot to travel over this country quite extensively and I enjoy it. Before I gave my life to Christ I had tried out probably every amusement that the world uses to seek pleasure in and I know now that no amusement compares in any way with the supreme joy of having one, just one, young man or woman, tell you, that they are happier and better because of your witness for Christ. When one really knows what Jesus has done for him, time, energy, talents and money are all joyfully set apart for his service and carefully used.

Washington, D. C.

Some Experiences in Tithing

By Jessie L. Burrall

IN Calvary Baptist Church of Washington, D. C., there is a Sunday-school class composed of business girls. The class was organized in 1917 and grew rapidly to a membership of hundreds. When the attendance reached 300, about half of the girls decided to become practical tithers—to give to the Lord regularly the first tenth of their salaries. The experiences of many of those girls have been remarkable. The average salary was $100 a month, truly a meager one in a city like Washington. Many of the girls were sending money home regularly or were helping younger brothers and sisters through college and were literally compelled to consider carefully the expenditure of every cent. Yet not one of them regretted the step she had taken. All were joyous tithers and reported actual happiness as a by-product of their stewardship of money.

A few cases will illustrate. Miss Blank received a salary of $125 per month. She had always felt poor. She was accustomed to put in a nickel at Sunday-school class, and a dime at church both morning and evening. She was considered a fine type of Christian girl. She had often felt she should be a tither but never actually became one till she joined this class. Soon she was a different girl. She became radiantly happy and found herself interested in the church and in missions as never before. She no longer felt poor, but realized how rich she really was. She felt that the strange new happiness came from joining others through her money in the great task of bringing the world to Christ. She was one of a band of "workers together with him" and felt her communion and fellowship as never before.

Miss Dash was not so fortunate. Her salary was only $85 a month and she was sending $25 a month to a sister in college in the far West. In Washington, that meant real, pinching poverty to get along. She felt she must become a tither, yet lacked the courage. Suddenly she stepped out on faith, realizing that the "law of the Lord is perfect." She trusted him as never before. That meant $8.50 per month for the kingdom, for she did not tithe the leavings of her salary, but brought the first fruits. Nor did she cut down the portion allotted to her little sister. She felt she must not compel another to do her tithing for her. So she had left $51.50 a month to live on. In a few weeks her salary was reduced to $75 a month. She regretted the decrease in her tithe but stood her ground on the principle of stewardship. Now she had only $41.50 for her living expenses. But with happy tears in her eyes she told of the joy of a real steward. She could not understand it, but her money seemed to go so much farther than ever before. She found a nicer room at a lower rent than one would believe possible, and in many other ways she felt the blessing of the Father. Later her salary rose again and is at least $90 a month now. She rejoices in her increased tenth.

These are but two chosen almost at random out of 150 girls who became tithers. How did stewardship affect the class as a whole?

Financially, the results were marvelous. One hundred and fifty tithers on an average salary of $100 a month, gave a staggering total of $1500 a month or $18,000 a year! The girls were strongly encouraged to send the bulk of it to the church in which they held membership, yet the amount was so large that the class through its share, accomplished an unheard of amount of real missionary work. They adopted their own missionary in a neighboring city, and paid her entire salary. In ten minutes one Sunday morning, with no special appeal, except a short explanation and the passing of pledge cards, they pledged $3100 to the missionary budget of the church. And on those pledges they paid $3230! They gave a little bit more for love. They believed not only in the tithe but also in the offering over and above the tithe.

The next question is, "How did they stick by the tithing? Was it just a sudden enthusiasm or did the tithing spirit last?"

After the war many of the girls went home. Many of them spread the good news of tithing in their own churches. Occasionally we still get fine reports from that. But the class continues to grow and prosper. Four or five hundred attend regularly and many new tithers have been added to the list. The class budget is about $10,000 a year and gifts always exceed the budget. The class is deeply spiritual and the Lord is adding to the church regularly from that class. Under the fine loyal teaching of Mrs. Abernethy, the girls are ever reaching new goals.

Why do not all Sunday-school classes adopt tithing as a regular feature of class teaching and activities? Because they have not thought about it. Classes tend to follow their own programs instead of swinging into the big world-keeping work of the entire church and denomination. But to take active part in the far-flung work of our great Baptist denomination gives a thrill secured in no other way.

How shall classes go about it? We need first a series of talks by the teacher on tithing. He or she must secure from headquarters all the leaflets and helps so generously offered. The material must be read and absorbed in order to prepare the scriptural basis for dealing with the tithe and stewardship. Of course tithing is only a little part of the principle of stewardship given by Jesus, so why stumble over such a little part? Begin with the tithe and do not stop with it. It is easy to talk stewardship in general. Paying the tithe is often the first real test of the principle.

Is your class a tithing class? Are you the teacher? Send for the literature today. Are you a pupil? Send for the literature today. Take it to your teacher. If the teacher is not interested, spread the good news yourself. To put tithing into your class is your task.

Stephens College,
Columbia, Mo.

An Experience in Tithing

By H. Bainbridge

COMING to the country nearly forty years ago, the writer considers himself fortunate in finding fellowship with a church, the Union, of South Side, Pittsburgh, in which, after strenuous experiences with festivals, concerts and similar money-raising devices, the giving of the tithe had been but recently adopted as a financial standard to the exclusion of all less worthy money methods.

This governing principle in the providing of funds for the work of the church and its denominational obligations was at that time very generally adopted by the substantial membership of the church and in operation has proved to be the source of much of its prosperity.

